

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2022 with funding from University of Toronto

https://archive.org/details/31761115514150

DOCUMENTS RELATIFS AUX

RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES DU CANADA

DOCUMENTS ON CANADIAN

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

Government Publications

CANADA

DOCUMENTS RELATIFS AUX RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES DU CANADA

DOCUMENTS ON CANADIAN EXTERNAL RELATIONS

VOLUME 13

1947

Compilé par/Edited by Norman Hillmer
Carleton University and Donald Page
Trinity Western University

AFFAIRES EXTÉRIEURES ET COMMERCE EXTÉRIEUR CANADA EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE CANADA

©Minister of Supply and Services Canada 1993

©Ministre des Approvisionnements et Services Canada 1993

Available in Canada through your local bookseller or by mail from Canada Communication Group — Publishing

Ottawa, Canada K1A 0S9

Catalogue No. E2-39/13-1993
ISBN 0-660-57963-4

En vente au Canada chez votre libraire local ou par la poste auprès du

Groupe Communication Canada — Édition
Ottawa (Canada) K1A 0S9

N° de catalogue E2-39/13-1993
ISBN 0-660-57963-4

TABLE DES MATIÈRES
CONTENTS

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xii
PROVENANCE DES DOCUMENTS	xxv
LISTE DES ABRÉVIATIONS	xxvii
LISTE DES PERSONNALITÉS	xxix
ILLUSTRATIONS	xxxix

Chapitre premier

CONDUITE DES RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES

1. Administration
a) Généralités	1
b) Attachés militaires	11
2. Représentation diplomatique et consulaire
a) Généralités	16
b) Autriche	22
c) La mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne	23
d) Brésil	25
e) Colombie, Uruguay, Venezuela	25
f) Cuba	30
g) Tchécoslovaquie et Pologne	33
h) Islande	34
i) Inde	34
j) Italie	42
k) Pays-Bas	44
l) Pakistan	45
m) Portugal	47
n) Union soviétique	49
o) Suède	50
p) Suisse	52
q) Turquie	53
r) États-Unis	53
s) Vatican	63
3. Représentation des provinces	66

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	xiii
LOCATION OF DOCUMENTS	xxv
LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS	xxvii
LIST OF PERSONS	xxix
ILLUSTRATIONS	xxxix

Chapter I

CONDUCT OF EXTERNAL RELATIONS

1. Administration
a) General	1
b) Military Attachés	11
2. Diplomatic and Consular Representation
a) General	16
b) Austria	22
c) Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany	23
d) Brazil	25
e) Colombia, Uruguay, Venezuela	25
f) Cuba	30
g) Czechoslovakia and Poland	33
h) Iceland	34
i) India	34
j) Italy	42
k) The Netherlands	44
l) Pakistan	45
m) Portugal	47
n) Soviet Union	49
o) Sweden	50
p) Switzerland	52
q) Turkey	53
r) United States	53
s) Vatican	63
3. Provincial Representation	66

Chapitre II
RÈGLEMENT DE LA PAIX EN EUROPE

1. Traités conclus par suite de la Conférence de paix de Paris
   - a) Généralités 69
   - b) Bulgarie 81
   - c) Finlande 85
   - d) Italie
     - i) Colonies (Commission d'enquête) 88
     - ii) Secours militaire et aide financière 92
     - iii) Retour des biens 98
2. Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères
   - a) Suppléants spéciaux à Londres (janvier-février) 101
   - b) Réunion de Moscou (mars-avril) ... 133
   - c) Réunion de Londres (novembre-décembre) 145
3. Règlement de la paix
   - a) Autriche 152
   - b) Allemagne
     - i) Politique générale 161
     - ii) Retrait des forces d'occupation 175
     - iii) Rapatriement des Canadiens.... 177
4. Réparations et restitution 182
5. Crimes de guerre..... 192

Chapitre III
RÈGLEMENT DE LA PAIX AVEC LE JAPON

1. Commission sur l'Extrême-Orient..... 195
2. Conférence du Commonwealth, Canberra 200
3. Questions économiques..... 227
4. Réparations et restitution 245
5. Crimes de guerre..... 258
6. Comité du Cabinet sur les problèmes japonais/questions..... 265

Chapter II
EUROPEAN PEACE SETTLEMENT

1. Treaties Resulting from Paris Peace Conference
   - a) General 69
   - b) Bulgaria 81
   - c) Finland 85
   - d) Italy
     - i) Colonies (Commission of Investigation) 88
     - ii) Military Relief and Financial Aid..... 92
     - iii) Return of Assets 98
2. Council of Foreign Ministers
   - a) Special Deputies London (January-February) 101
   - b) Moscow Meeting (March-April) ... 133
   - c) London Meeting (November-December)..... 145
3. Peace Settlements
   - a) Austria..... 152
   - b) Germany
     - i) General Policy 161
     - ii) Withdrawal of Occupation Forces 175
     - iii) Repatriation of Canadians 177
4. Reparations and Restitution 182
5. War Crimes 192

Chapter III
JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT

1. Far Eastern Commission..... 195
2. Commonwealth Conference, Canberra 200
3. Economic Questions 227
4. Reparations and Restitution 245
5. War Crimes 258
6. Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems/Questions 265

Chapitre IV
IMMIGRATION

1. Politique 285
2. Personnes déplacées
   a) Généralités 298
   b) Baltes 320
   c) Vétérans polonais 325
   d) Ukrainiens 329
3. Volksdeutsche 333
4. Scientifiques allemands 337

Chapitre V
LE CANADA ET UN MONDE BIPOLAIRE

..... 342

Chapitre VI
ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE

..... 462

Chapitre VII
AVIATION CIVILE

1. Convention de Varsovie 558
2. Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale 561
3. Négociations bilatérales 613

Chapitre VIII
NATIONS UNIES

1. Secrétariat 632
2. Élections au Conseil de sécurité 637
3. Deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale
   a) Politique 661
   b) Commission intérimaire 669
   c) Pacte d'assistance mutuelle des pays de l'Ouest 678
   d) Afrique du Sud 686
   e) Espagne 689
   f) Nouveaux membres 691
   g) Propagande 695
4. Conseil économique et social
   a) Délégation et politique 702

Chapter IV
IMMIGRATION

1. Policy 285
2. Displaced Persons
   a) General 298
   b) Balts 320
   c) Polish Veterans 325
   d) Ukrainians 329
3. Volksdeutsche 333
4. German Scientists 337

Chapter V
CANADA AND A BIPOLAR WORLD

..... 342

Chapter VI
ATOMIC ENERGY

..... 462

Chapter VII
CIVIL AVIATION

1. Warsaw Convention 558
2. International Civil Aviation Organization 561
3. Bilateral Negotiations 613

Chapter VIII
UNITED NATIONS

1. Secretariat 632
2. Elections to Security Council 637
3. Second Session of the General Assembly
   a) Policy 661
   b) Interim Committee 669
   c) Western Mutual Assistance Pact ... 678
   d) South Africa 686
   e) Spain 689
   f) New Members 691
   g) Propaganda 695
4. Economic and Social Council
   a) Delegation and Policy 702

b) Commission des questions économiques et de l'emploi 719

c) Commission des droits de l'homme 722

d) Commissions économiques pour l'Europe et/ou l'Asie et l'Extrême-Orient 729

e) Commission économique pour l'Amérique latine 739

f) Conférence de La Havane sur le commerce 744

5. Conseil de tutelle 749

6. Cour internationale de justice 757

7. Institutions spécialisées

a) Organisation internationale du travail 763

b) Organisation internationale pour les réfugiés 767

c) Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture 783

d) Administration des Nations Unies pour le secours et la reconstruction 850

e) Organisation mondiale de la santé 901

f) Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'alimentation et l'agriculture 906

8. Comités et commissions temporaires

a) Balkans 908

b) Palestine 914

c) Corée 950

9. La Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement et le Fonds monétaire international 1007

Chapitre IX
ORGANISATIONS ET CONFÉRENCES INTERNATIONALES

1. Union panaméricaine 1023

2. Conférence interaméricaine sur la sécurité sociale 1050

3. Organisation intergouvernementale consultative de la navigation maritime 1055

4. Réunion sur les passeports et les formalités frontalières 1071

b) Economic and Employment Commission 719

c) Commission on Human Rights 722

d) Economic Commissions for Europe and/or Asia and the Far East 729

e) Economic Commission for Latin America 739

f) Havana Trade Conference 744

5. Trusteeship Council 749

6. International Court of Justice 757

7. Specialized Agencies

a) International Labour Organization 763

b) International Refugee Organization 767

c) United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization 783

d) United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration 850

e) World Health Organization 901

f) Food and Agriculture Organization 906

8. Temporary Committees and Commissions

a) Balkans 908

b) Palestine 914

c) Korea 950

9. International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and International Monetary Fund 1007

Chapter IX
INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS AND CONFERENCES

1. Pan-American Union 1023

2. Inter-American Conference on Social Security 1050

3. Inter-Governmental Maritime Consultative Organization 1055

4. Meeting on Passports and Frontier Formalities 1071

5. Conférences internationales des télécommunications 1083
6. Conférence internationale du blé 1098

Chapitre X
ORGANISATION INTERNATIONALE DU COMMERCE ET ACCORD GÉNÉRAL SUR LES TARIFS DOUANIERS ET LE COMMERCE

..... 1124

Chapitre XI
RELATIONS AVEC LE COMMONWEALTH

1. Généralités
   a) Consultation 1211
   b) Mariage royal et réunion éventuelle des premiers ministres 1219
   c) Recherche pour la défense 1234
   d) Union douanière 1237
   e) Nationalité 1243
   f) Télécommunications 1253
2. Royaume-Uni
   a) Commerce et finances 1255
   b) Mission alimentaire Liesching 1329
   c) Transport maritime et migration ... 1360
3. Inde et Pakistan 1368
4. Antilles 1392

Chapitre XII
RELATIONS AVEC LES ÉTATS-UNIS

1. Visites de haut niveau 1401
2. Commerce et finances
   a) Problème du dollar, plan Marshall et libéralisation des échanges 1407
   b) Embargo sur le charbon 1452
   c) Mazout et acier 1470
3. Défense 1482
4. Frontière internationale 1525

5. International Telecommunications Conferences 1083
6. International Wheat Conference 1098

Chapter X
INTERNATIONAL TRADE ORGANIZATION AND GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

..... 1124

Chapter XI
COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

1. General
   a) Consultation 1211
   b) Royal Wedding and Prospective Prime Ministers' Meeting 1219
   c) Defence Research 1234
   d) Customs Union 1237
   e) Nationality 1243
   f) Telecommunications 1253
2. United Kingdom
   a) Trade and Finance 1255
   b) Liesching Food Mission 1329
   c) Shipping and Migration 1360
3. India and Pakistan 1368
4. West Indies 1392

Chapter XII
RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES

1. High Level Visits 1401
2. Trade and Finance
   a) Dollar Problem, Marshall Plan, and Freer Trade 1407
   b) Coal Embargo 1452
   c) Fuel Oil and Steel 1470
3. Defence 1482
4. International Boundary 1525

Chapitre XIII
EUROPE DE L'OUEST

1. Union douanière européenne 1533
2. Italie 1538
3. Grèce 1543
4. Pays-Bas 1546
5. Norvège 1554
6. Espagne 1555
7. Turquie 1556

Chapitre XIV
UNION SOVIÉTIQUE ET EUROPE DE L'EST

1. Contrôle de sécurité pour les immigrants 1557
2. Relations avec l'Union soviétique 1561
3. Relations avec l'Europe de l'Est
   a) Tchécoslovaquie 1572
   b) Pologne 1578

Chapitre XV
EXPORTATIONS D'ARMES

..... 1585

Chapitre XVI
RELATIONS AVEC L'AMÉRIQUE LATINE

1. Argentine 1597
2. République dominicaine 1604
3. Nicaragua 1610

Chapitre XVII RELATIONS AVEC LA CHINE

..... 1612
INDEX 1629

Chapter XIII
WESTERN EUROPE

1. European Customs Union 1533
2. Italy 1538
3. Greece 1543
4. The Netherlands 1546
5. Norway 1554
6. Spain 1555
7. Turkey 1556

Chapter XIV
SOVIET UNION AND EASTERN EUROPE

1. Security Screening for Immigrants 1557
2. Relations with the Soviet Union 1561
3. Relations with Eastern Europe
   a) Czechoslovakia 1572
   b) Poland 1578

Chapter XV
ARMS EXPORTS

..... 1585

Chapter XVI
RELATIONS WITH LATIN AMERICA

1. Argentina 1597
2. Dominican Republic 1604
3. Nicaragua 1610

Chapter XVII RELATIONS WITH CHINA

..... 1612
INDEX 1629

INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

Mil neuf cent quarante-sept fut une année de transition pour la politique étrangère du Canada. Le long règne de William Lyon Mackenzie King à la tête du pays touchait à sa fin comme, par voie de conséquence, sa direction résolue et quasi singulière des affaires extérieures du Canada. King avait déjà cédé le portefeuille de secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à Louis Saint-Laurent qui, en 1946, devint le premier ministre à n'occuper que ce poste; pendant longtemps, King avait été son propre ministre des Affaires étrangères, un arrangement qui eut un impact majeur sur la conduite de la politique extérieure du Canada et sur le développement du ministère. L.B. Pearson assuma ses fonctions de sous-secrétaire à la fin de 1946 et, avec Saint-Laurent, il forma une équipe efficace qui affirma vigoureusement les intérêts et les responsabilités du Canada dans le monde. C'est ainsi qu'au début de 1947, l'un et l'autre insistèrent pour que le Canada ait vraiment voix au chapitre dans la négociation du règlement de paix allemand.

Saint-Laurent exprima ce nouvel activisme dans une allocution clé qu'il prononça en janvier 1947 et dans laquelle il énonça les principes qui gouverneraient les politiques du Canada. Cette approche aurait été tout à fait étrangère à Mackenzie King, pour qui les questions de politique extérieure étaient inévitablement sources de divisions. Moins on en parlait, mieux ça valait. Saint-Laurent insista sur la nécessité primordiale de préserver l'unité nationale, un thème bien connu au Canada, mais son discours consista pour l'essentiel à rejeter implicitement le passé prudent légué par King et à inviter les Canadiens à s'engager à fond dans le monde[1]. C'est dans cet esprit que, plus tard durant l'année, le gouvernement réussit à faire élire le Canada au Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies (voir le document 345). Parfois, Pearson semblait avoir élu domicile à New York, à la recherche de solutions aux graves problèmes en Palestine et en Corée — des régions du monde toutes différentes de celles auxquelles s'étaient toujours intéressés les Canadiens[2]. Pour le diplomate-historien John Holmes, la diplomatie pearsonienne à l'ONU en 1947 donna au Canada son rôle et sa réputation de «puissance moyenne modérée privilégiant la médiation[3]».

Mais l'ONU fut bien davantage source de frustrations que de satisfaction au sein du gouvernement. On reconnaissait un succès relatif au Conseil économique et social et aux institutions spécialisées. Par contre, le Conseil de sécurité — chargé au premier chef de maintenir la sécurité et la paix dans le monde — voyait son action régulièrement entravée par l'Union soviétique, qui usait abondamment de son droit de veto. Le gouvernement ne prit ni aisément ni à la légère la décision de poser la candidature du Canada au Conseil de sécurité qui, de l'avis du Premier ministre et du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, était devenu un «organe

---

[1]The Foundations of Canadian Policy in World Affairs (Duncan and John Gray Memorial Lecture, Toronto, 1947); Ministère des Affaires extérieures, Statements and Speeches, 47/2.

[2]John English, Shadow of Heaven: The Life of Lester Pearson, volume I: 1897-1948 (Toronto, 1989), pp. 324-327; Anne Trowell Hillmer, «'Here I am in the Middle': Lester Pearson and the Origins of Canada's Diplomatic Involvement in the Middle East», in David Taras et David H. Goldberg (sous la direction de), The Domestic Battleground: Canada and the Arab-Israeli Conflict (Kingston et Montréal, 1989), pp. 125-143.

[3]John W. Holmes, The Shaping of Peace: Canada and the Search for World Order (deux volumes; Toronto, 1979 et 1982), volume II, p. 69.

INTRODUCTION

Nineteen forty-seven found Canadian foreign policy in transition. The long premiership of William Lyon Mackenzie King was drawing to an end, and with it his singleminded, almost singlehanded, sway over Canadian external affairs. King had already surrendered the portfolio of Secretary of State for External Affairs to Louis St. Laurent, who in 1946 became the first minister to hold that post exclusively: the Prime Minister had long been his own foreign secretary, an arrangement that had a very considerable impact on the conduct of external policy and the development of the Department of External Affairs. St. Laurent's deputy, L.B. Pearson, had also taken up his duties near the end of 1946, and together they were a potent combination for the assertion of Canadian interests and responsibilities in the world. An immediate case in point was the demand early in 1947 for a real voice in the negotiation of the German peace settlement.

St. Laurent gave voice to the new activism in a major speech in January 1947 deploying the principles that would govern Canadian policies. The very idea of such an exercise would have been foreign to Mackenzie King, who believed that external questions were inevitably divisive. The less said about them the better. St. Laurent emphasized the need to maintain national unity above all else, a well worn Canadian theme, but the bulk of the address was an implicit rejection of the cautious King past, a call for Canadians to accept major international commitment.[1] It was in that spirit that later in the year the Canadian Government successfully pursued a seat on the Security Council of the United Nations (see Document 345). Under-Secretary Pearson seemed at times to take up permanent residence in New York, pursuing solutions to serious problems in Palestine and Korea, a long way from the areas of the world which had always preoccupied Canadians.[2] Diplomat-historian John Holmes saw Pearsonian diplomacy at the U.N. in 1947 as the beginning of Canada's role and reputation as a "moderate mediatory middle power."[3]

The United Nations, however, caused more frustration in Ottawa than it did self-congratulation. The Economic and Social Council and the specialized agencies were judged relatively successful, but the activities of the Security Council — the organ charged with the primary responsibility for the maintenance of international security and peace — were crippled by the Soviet Union's liberal use of its veto power. The Canadian government did not take the decision to seek a seat on the Council lightly or easily; it had become, in the view of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, "a pretty futile body" (Document 344). St. Laurent complained to the General Assembly in September that the "veto privilege, attacked and defended with equal vigour, if it continues to be abused, may well destroy the United Nations . . . ." The deadlock could not be allowed to continue

---

[1]The Foundations of Canadian Policy in World Affairs (Duncan and John Gray Memorial Lecture; Toronto, 1947); Department of External Affairs, Statements and Speeches, 47/2.

[2]John English, Shadow of Heaven: The Life of Lester Pearson, Volume I: 1897-1948 (Toronto, 1989), pp. 324-7; Anne Trowell Hillmer, "'Here I am in the Middle': Lester Pearson and the Origins of Canada's Diplomatic Involvement in the Middle East," in David Taras and David H. Goldberg, eds., The Domestic Battleground: Canada and the Arab-Israeli Conflict (Kingston and Montreal, 1989), pp. 125-43.

[3]John W. Holmes, The Shaping of Peace: Canada and the Search for World Order (2 vols.; Toronto, 1979 and 1982), Volume II, p. 69.

plutôt inutile» (document 344). En septembre, Saint-Laurent avait servi un avertissement à l'Assemblée générale : «ce privilège du veto, attaqué et défendu avec une vigueur égale, si l'on continue à en abuser, pourra bien détruire l'Organisation des Nations Unies . . .» L'impasse ne pouvait durer indéfiniment. Si elles y étaient contraintes, des nations comme le Canada pourraient «rechercher une sécurité plus grande dans une association d'États démocratiques et pacifiques, prêts à accepter des obligations internationales plus précises contre une plus grande sécurité nationale» (document 363). Même si les officiels canadiens continuaient d'avoir confiance en l'ONU, ils ne croyaient à peu près plus à l'implantation d'un régime mondial de sécurité collective, et la recherche de solutions de rechange s'amorçait.

Il y avait de nombreux autres signes de la détérioration des relations entre l'Union soviétique et l'Ouest. Le Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères s'était entendu sur les ébauches finales des traités de paix avec l'Italie et les autres anciens pays satellites en décembre 1946, mais le dossier de la question allemande — qui était au coeur du règlement européen — ne progressait toujours pas. Les membres du Conseil, réunis à Moscou en mars et avril 1947, n'ayant pu s'entendre sur aucune des questions de fond, le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères de Grande-Bretagne, Ernest Bevin, et le secrétaire d'État des États-Unis, George Marshall, quittèrent la capitale soviétique convaincus que la division de l'Allemagne — et, partant, de l'Europe — était inévitable. La session de novembre-décembre du Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères à Londres vint confirmer ce qui était devenu une évidence. L'historienne britannique Elisabeth Barker résuma bien la situation lorsqu'elle dit que 1947 sonna enfin le glas du concept de la primauté des Trois Grands dans les affaires mondiales. Il n'était cependant pas clair quelle serait la solution de rechange[4].

Entre-temps, alors même que s'ouvrait la conférence de Moscou, le Président Truman se livrait dans un discours à une attaque en règle contre l'Union soviétique, s'engageant au nom des États-Unis à venir en aide aux «peuples libres qui résistent aux tentatives de minorités armées ou d'agents de l'extérieur en vue de les asservir[5]». Les historiens américains divergent d'opinion quant à l'importance de la doctrine Truman dans le contexte de la guerre froide naissante[6]. Pour leur part, les diplomates canadiens s'accordèrent à dire qu'elle avait révolutionné l'ordre international des choses. «La conception d'un monde monolithique est révolue, écrivit l'ambassadeur à Washington, Hume Wrong, [. . .] la politique du Président divise le monde entre la sphère soviétique et le reste[7]». Ce discours à l'emporte-pièce prononcé en mars 1947 fut suivi en juin d'une allocution du secrétaire d'État à

---

[4]Elisabeth Barker, The British Between Superpowers, 1945-1950 (Toronto et Londres, 1983), p. 69. Sur Moscou, voir Daniel Yergin, La paix saccagée : les origines de la guerre froide et la division de l'Europe (Paris, 1980), p. 231, et Alan Bullock, Ernest Bevin: Foreign Secretary 1945-1951 (New York et Londres, 1983), pp. 393-394.

[5]Cité dans John Lewis Gaddis, The United States and the Origins of the Cold War 1941-1947 (New York, 1972), p. 350.

[6]Voir Robert A. Pollard, Economic Security and the Origins of the Cold War, 1945-1950 (New York, 1985), pp. 130-131.

[7]Cité dans Denis Smith, Diplomacy of Fear: Canada and the Cold War 1941-1948 (Toronto, 1988), p. 188.

indefinitely. If they were forced, countries such as Canada might "seek greater safety in an association of democratic and peace-loving states willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for a greater measure of national security" (Document 363). Although Canadian officials did not give up on the U.N., the hopes for a universal collective security system were all but extinguished, and the search for alternatives was beginning.

There was abundant other evidence of the deterioration of relations between the Soviet Union and the West. The Council of Foreign Ministers had agreed upon the final drafts of the peace treaties with Italy and the other former satellites in December 1946, but progress on the core of the European settlement, the German question, remained elusive. The Moscow meeting of the Council in March-April 1947 produced no agreement on any issue of substance, and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin and the American Secretary of State, George Marshall, left the Russian capital convinced that the division of Germany and hence of Europe was inevitable. The November-December session of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London confirmed the by now obvious. British historian Elisabeth Barker put it well: 1947 was the year when the concept of the Big Three as the governing factor in world affairs finally perished. It was not yet clear what would replace it.[4]

Meanwhile — even as the Moscow Conference opened — the President of the United States had unleashed the powerful anti-Soviet rhetoric of the Truman Doctrine, which pledged support for "free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures."[5] American historians differ on the significance of the doctrine in the context of an emerging Cold War,[6] but Canadian diplomats were unambiguous that it had revolutionized the international environment. "The one-world conception is laid aside," wrote the ambassador in Washington, Hume Wrong, ". . . the President's policy divides the world between the Soviet sphere and the rest."[7] Truman's "All-Out" speech in March was followed by one in June at Harvard University by the U.S. Secretary of State. Marshall outlined the profound challenges which faced a still-devastated Europe and hinted that the Truman administration would look favourably on a programme for economic assistance. This set in train developments which led to the Marshall Plan for the reconstruction of Western Europe.[8]

As Truman and Marshall and their colleagues moved to halt the march of Communism, Canadian officials debated the nature and implications of a new order

---

[4]Elisabeth Barker, The British Between Superpowers, 1945-1950 (Toronto and London, 1983), p. 69. On Moscow, see Daniel Yergin, Shattered Peace: The Origins of the Cold War and the National Security State (Boston, 1978), p. 301, and Alan Bullock, Ernest Bevin: Foreign Secretary 1945-1951 (New York and London, 1983), pp. 393-4.

[5]Quoted in John Lewis Gaddis, The United States and the Origins of the Cold War 1941-1947 (New York, 1972), p. 350.

[6]See Robert A. Pollard, Economic Security and the Origins of the Cold War, 1945-1950 (New York, 1985), pp. 130-1.

[7]Quoted in Denis Smith, Diplomacy of Fear: Canada and the Cold War 1941-1948 (Toronto, 1988), p. 188.

[8]"The Marshall Plan," Circular A. 146 to Heads of Canadian Missions Abroad, December 10, 1947, National Archives of Canada (NA), Records of the Department of External Affairs, File 9770-A-40, part 5.

l'Université Harvard. Marshall y traita des énormes défis que devrait relever une Europe encore dévastée et donna à entendre que l'administration Truman serait favorable à l'idée d'un programme d'assistance économique. C'est ce qui donna le coup d'envoi au processus devant mener au Plan Marshall d'aide à la reconstruction de l'Europe occidentale[8].

Tandis que Truman, Marshall et les autres membres de l'Administration s'employaient à freiner la marche du communisme, les officiels canadiens débattaient de la nature et des répercussions d'un nouvel ordre mondial dominé par les États-Unis et par l'Union soviétique. Cette fois, ce sont les universitaires canadiens qui ont divergé d'opinion : l'analyse faite par Ottawa de la rivalité américano-soviétique fut-elle équilibrée et modérée, ou les diplomates canadiens ne se révélèrent-ils pas dès lors les plus intraitables des combattants de la guerre froide[9]? Les lecteurs pourront tirer leurs propres conclusions. Les opinions des membres du ministère des Affaires extérieures sont exposées en détail au chapitre V, non seulement parce qu'elles reflètent la structure et la complexité de la perception canadienne des choses à l'époque, mais aussi parce qu'elles donnent une idée de la collégialité dans ce qui était encore essentiellement un petit ministère où les liens étaient étroits.

Pour eux, il était clair que l'accroissement du rôle des États-Unis sur la scène mondiale diminuait les options diplomatiques qui s'offraient au Canada. Appelé à commenter ce que signifiait la doctrine Truman pour le Canada, Dana Wilgress, récemment nommé ambassadeur à Moscou, répondit que, sans aucun doute, elle «accroîtrait notre dépendance à l'égard des États-Unis et nous éloignerait dans une égale mesure du Royaume-Uni [. . .] Durant la seconde moitié du XX^{e} siècle, la pax americana se substituera à la pax britannica du XIX^{e} siècle. Vu notre proximité des États-Unis, cette situation nous crée une foule de problèmes et nous oblige à souscrire aux grandes lignes de la politique américaine» (document 225). Escott Reid, l'un des maîtres à penser du ministère, ajouta que la paix américaine serait tout aussi bienveillante que la précédente, mais que le Canada n'aurait d'autre choix que de prendre immédiatement part à tout éventuel conflit américano-soviétique et n'aurait aucune liberté d'action dans les questions de guerre jugées capitales par les États-Unis. En revanche, il jouirait sans aucun doute d'une marge de manoeuvre limitée en temps de paix. «Nous conserverons la possibilité de nous opposer aux États-Unis sur certains aspects de leurs relations avec l'Union soviétique. Le fait que nous soyons dans la même galère que les États-Unis nous autorise sans conteste à leur dire de cesser de faire des vagues ou de percer des trous dans la cale» (document 226).

Dans l'Introduction au volume XII, les auteurs parlent du rôle dominant joué par la politique économique extérieure dans les affaires internationales du Canada;

---

[8]«The Marshall Plan», circulaire administrative 146 aux chefs des missions canadiennes à l'étranger, 10 décembre 1947, Archives nationales du Canada (ANC), Dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures, dossier 9770-A-40, partie 5.

[9]Don Page et Don Munton, «Canadian Images of the Cold War 1946-7», International Journal, vol. XXXII, n° 3, été 1977, pp. 577-604; David J. Bercuson, «A People So Ruthless as the Soviets: Canadian Images of the Cold War and the Soviet Union — 1946-1950», document présenté à une conférence sur le Canada et l'Union soviétique, Elora (Ontario), août 1987.

dominated by the United States and the Soviet Union. This time it is Canadian scholars who disagree: was Ottawa's analysis of Soviet-American rivalry characterized by balance and moderation, or were its diplomats already the coldest of Cold War warriors?[9] Readers can judge for themselves. The views of the members of the Department of External Affairs are presented in Chapter V in considerable detail, not simply because they convey the texture and complexity of Canadian thinking, but because they offer a glimpse of the collegiality of what was still in its essence a small, tightly-knit department.

It was clear to the members of the Department of External Affairs that the American thrust out into the world diminished Canada's diplomatic options. Asked to comment on the meaning of the Truman Doctrine for Canada, Dana Wilgress, recently the Ambassador in Moscow, had no doubt that it would "bring us into still greater dependence upon the United States and to this extent away from the United Kingdom . . . . The Pax Britannica of the nineteenth century is to be replaced in the later twentieth century by a Pax Americana. On account of our proximity to the United States, this gives rise to all sorts of problems for us and it makes it necessary for us to subscribe to the main lines of United States policy" (Document 225). Escott Reid, one of the department's driving intellectual forces, added that the American peace would be as benevolent as the British one, but Canada would have no choice except to participate immediately in the event of a Soviet-American conflict and no freedom of action whatsoever on war issues that the U.S. considered essential. There was bound to be, however, some limited room to manoeuvre in peacetime. "It will still be open to us to oppose the United States on certain issues in United States-Soviet relations. Indeed the fact that we are in the same boat with the United States makes it wholly proper for us to tell the United States to stop rocking the boat or driving holes in its bottom" (Document 226).

The Introduction to Volume 12 of this series points to the pre-eminence of foreign economic policy in Canada's international affairs, and certainly this was true in 1947. Decision-makers were attempting to devise long-term measures to assist economic revival, primarily through the mechanism of the multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva, but they were also pressed by short-term difficulties which had immediate repercussions on external relationships. One such was the shortage of U.S. dollars. Traditionally Canada ran a current-account deficit with the Americans, but sold much more to the British and Europeans than it bought, with payment coming in funds which could be readily changed into U.S. dollars. After the war, Canadian earnings in Europe were no longer freely convertible into American dollars as before, and in 1947 the shortage of U.S. dollars became sufficiently serious to demand government attention. Canadian officials were dismayed by this "inconvertibility", and were apt to blame the dollar problem on the huge outlays in credits and loans that had been granted to Britain and Western Europe and the slow recovery of those economies.[10] The Canadian High Commissioner in London, [9]Don Page and Don Munton, "Canadian Images of the Cold War 1946-7," International Journal, XXXII, 3 (Summer 1977), pp. 577-604; David J. Bercuson, "A People So Ruthless as the Soviets: Canadian Images of the Cold War and the Soviet Union — 1946-1950," a paper presented to a conference on Canada and the Soviet Union, Elora, Ontario, August 1987.

[10]W.C. Clark to Pearson, September 6, 1947, NA, King Papers, J1, volume 423.

c'était certainement le cas en 1947. Les décideurs étaient à la recherche de mesures à long terme pour stimuler l'économie, principalement par l'entremise des négociations commerciales multilatérales à Genève, mais ils étaient aussi confrontés à des difficultés à court terme, qui avaient un impact immédiat sur les relations extérieures du Canada. Ils étaient notamment aux prises avec une pénurie de devises américaines. Le Canada avait toujours enregistré un déficit du compte courant dans ses échanges avec les États-Unis, mais ses exportations vers la Grande-Bretagne et l'Europe l'emportaient largement sur ses importations et les paiements étaient effectués en devises aisément convertissables en dollars américains. Après la guerre, toutefois, les recettes européennes du Canada n'étaient plus aussi automatiquement convertissables et, en 1947, la pénurie de devises américaines fut suffisamment grave pour exiger une attention immédiate du gouvernement. Consternés par ce problème, les officiels canadiens furent enclins à en imputer la raison aux crédits et aux prêts énormes consentis à la Grande-Bretagne et à l'Europe de l'Ouest ainsi qu'à la lenteur de la reprise économique dans les pays en cause[10]. Le haut-commissaire à Londres, Norman Robertson, recommanda de conclure un accord commercial réciproque avec les États-Unis pour renforcer la position du dollar et éviter d'avoir à se fier indûment aux Européens, qui envisageaient eux-mêmes un accord d'union douanière. Il est difficile de voir comment ce remède aurait pu avoir les résultats escomptés, mais il est révélateur que ce diplomate très respecté ait entrevu une intégration beaucoup plus étroite de l'économie nord-américaine (document 894).

On doit toutefois se garder d'exagérer le rôle des États-Unis dans l'élaboration de la politique extérieure du Canada. «Nous étions tous des hommes de l'Atlantique», se remémora Charles Ritchie au sujet de cette époque[11]; en d'autres termes, les intérêts et les attitudes étaient incontestablement axés sur les États-Unis, mais aussi sur la Grande-Bretagne et sur l'Europe occidentale. Certains décideurs ont parfois avancé que le Canada était une puissance du Pacifique, mais ce n'était pas le cas. En fait, la Grande-Bretagne restait, dans une remarquable mesure, le point de mire de la diplomatie canadienne. De Whitehall venait l'essentiel des renseignements dont disposait Ottawa dans les affaires internationales, et la Grande-Bretagne était pour le Canada la meilleure filière par laquelle il pouvait suivre les délibérations des puissances plus grandes. Mais il y avait beaucoup plus. «La vaste majorité de ceux qui vivaient dans la partie septentrionale de l'Amérique du Nord, a fait observer Kim Nossal, s'étaient toujours sentis unis par des liens transatlantiques tels la naissance, la famille, l'origine nationale, l'inspiration politico-culturelle, le commerce et même, ont prétendu certains, la dépendance psychologique[12]». L'observation était, relativement parlant, moins pertinente en 1947, quoique King n'était pas seul parmi les politiciens et les fonctionnaires à

[10]W.C. Clark à Pearson, 6 septembre 1947, ANC, Documents de King, J1, volume 423.

[11]Allocution à la conférence «Le Canada, les États-Unis et l'Alliance atlantique», Institut polytechnique Ryerson, Toronto, avril 1987.

[12]«A European Nation? The Life and Times of Atlanticism in Canada», in John English et Norman Hillmer (sous la direction de), Making a Difference? Canada's Foreign Policy in a Changing World Order (Toronto, 1992), p. 81.

Norman Robertson, recommended a reciprocal trade agreement with the United States as a means of strengthening the dollar position and avoiding undue reliance on the Europeans, who were themselves contemplating a customs union agreement. It is hard to see how this remedy could have had the desired effect, but it is revealing that this most respected of diplomats looked to a much closer integration of the North American economy (Document 894).

The role of the United States in the shaping of external policy, however, should not be over-dramatized. "We were all Atlantic men," recalled diplomat Charles Ritchie,[11] and by that he meant that Canadian interests and attitudes were concentrated on the United States, of course, but also on Britain and Western Europe. It was said occasionally by policy-makers that Canada was a Pacific power, but it was not. To a remarkable extent, indeed, the focal point of Canadian diplomacy remained as ever in Britain. Whitehall was the source of most of Canada's intelligence in international affairs, and Britain was Ottawa's best channel into the deliberations of the bigger powers. But there was much more to it than that. "The vast majority of those living in the northern half of North America," Kim Nossal has said, "had always felt the transatlantic ties of birth, family, national origin, politico-cultural inspiration, commercial intercourse, and even, it has been argued, psychological dependence."[12] This was less true, relatively speaking, by 1947, but King was not alone among politicians and officials who valued the British connection not simply for its own sake but because it countered the considerable punch of the United States. He was not the only one to be concerned about American activity, for example, in the Canadian Arctic. And the old desire to reconcile the needs and policies of Great Britain with those of the Americans — just so that Canadians could live at peace with themselves — was as strong in the new men as in the old.[13]

King in fact was influential still, suggesting further continuities in Canadian foreign policy. St. Laurent and Pearson controlled detail and decision-making day-to-day, but the Prime Minister could make his presence felt when he thought the occasion warranted. He did so over the Korean issue, and at a crucial moment in the economic negotiations with the British late in the year. King liked to complain that External Affairs had "become so infatuated with having to do with world conditions that they are fast losing all perspective in regard to national affairs" (Document 582), but the domestic content of foreign policy remained high, as a reading of the UNRRA section of Chapter VIII on the United Nations will starkly demonstrate. The apparently mundane politics of food and fish play an important and easy to overlook part in this book.

The Department of External Affairs was growing and changing dramatically. The number of officers went up by thirty per cent to 175 during the year, and the [11]An address to "Canada, the United States and the Atlantic Alliance," a conference at Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, Toronto, April 1987.

---

[12]"A European Nation? The Life and Times of Atlanticism in Canada," in John English and Norman Hillmer, eds., Making a Difference? Canada's Foreign Policy in a Changing World Order (Toronto, 1992), p. 81.

[13]J.L. Granatstein, "The Anglocentrism of Canadian Diplomacy," and Norman Hillmer, "The Canadian Diplomatic Tradition," in Andrew Fenton Cooper, ed., Canadian Culture: International Dimensions (Waterloo and Toronto, 1985), pp. 27-43 and 45-57 respectively.

priser cette relation privilégiée avec la Grande-Bretagne non seulement dans l'absolu mais aussi parce qu'on y voyait un contrepoids à l'influence considérable des États-Unis. Il n'était pas le seul à s'inquiéter des activités américaines, dans la partie canadienne de l'Arctique par exemple. Et le vieil idéal de concilier les besoins et les politiques de la Grande-Bretagne et ceux des États-Unis — ne serait-ce que pour que les Canadiens puissent vivre en paix avec eux-mêmes — était tout aussi présent chez la nouvelle génération que chez celles qui l'avaient précédée[13].

King exerçait encore son influence en proposant une meilleure continuité dans la politique extérieure du Canada. Saint-Laurent et Pearson géraient le détail et les décisions quotidiennes, mais le Premier ministre pouvait faire sentir sa présence quand il le jugeait nécessaire. C'est d'ailleurs ce qu'il fit dans l'affaire de la Corée et à un moment décisif dans les négociations économiques avec les Britanniques à la fin de 1947. King aimait se plaindre que le ministère des Affaires extérieures était «devenu si entiché de sa mission internationale qu'il perdait rapidement toute perspective relativement aux affaires nationales» (document 582). La politique extérieure conservait cependant un contenu national élevé, comme le montrera clairement la section sur l'UNRRA du chapitre VIII sur les Nations Unies. Les préoccupations, en apparence terre-à-terre, des politiques dans les secteurs de l'agriculture et de la pêche jouèrent un rôle important, quoique facile à oublier, dans ce livre.

Le ministère des Affaires extérieures connaissait en 1947 une croissance et une transformation spectaculaires. Le nombre d'agents passa à 175, une hausse de 30 p. 100, et celui des autres employés augmenta de 594 à 827. Le Canada ouvrit une ambassade en Turquie (novembre) et des légations en Tchécoslovaquie et en Suède (mars), en Pologne et en Suisse (mai) ainsi qu'au Danemark et en Italie (septembre). Un haut-commissaire fut affecté en Inde, juste avant l'accession de ce pays à l'indépendance. D'autre part, un consul fut nommé à Sao Paulo, au Brésil, en juin et l'ouverture d'un consulat général à Chicago en septembre vint souligner le lancement du programme d'expansion des services consulaires aux États-Unis. Cette année-là, il y avait 28 missions diplomatiques et sept bureaux consulaires, sans compter la Délégation permanente auprès des Nations Unies, la Mission militaire en Allemagne et la Mission de liaison au Japon. Près de la moitié du personnel du ministère était en affectation à l'étranger. Six femmes accédèrent pour la première fois au rang d'agent du Service extérieur. L'une d'elles, Marjorie McKenzie, avait été la secrétaire d'O. D. Skelton, l'architecte de la modernisation du ministère. Une autre, Elizabeth MacCullum, était déjà reconnue internationalement comme experte du Moyen-Orient. En dépit du recrutement, on roll of other employees increased from 594 to 827. An embassy was opened in Turkey (November) and legations in Czechoslovakia (March), Sweden (March), Poland (May), Switzerland (May), Denmark (September) and Italy (September). A High Commissioner was sent to India in June, just before independence. A Consul was named to Sao Paulo, Brazil (June), and the programme of expansion of the consular service in the United States began with a Consulate General in Chicago (September). There were now 28 diplomatic missions and seven consular offices, in addition to the Permanent Delegation to the United Nations, the Military Mission in Germany and the Liaison Mission in Japan. Nearly half of the department's personnel were posted abroad. The first six women were appointed as foreign service officers. One of them, Marjorie McKenzie, had been the secretary to O. D. Skelton, the architect of the modern department. Another was Elizabeth MacCallum, already a Middle East expert of international reputation. Despite the additions to staff, there were frequent groans about shortages and rapid turnovers in personnel and too many international conferences — Canada was represented at 86 during the year — for too few officers.[14]

[13]J.L. Granatstein, «The Anglocentrism of Canadian Diplomacy», et Norman Hillmer, «The Canadian Diplomatic Tradition», in Andrew Fenton Cooper (sous la direction de), Canadian Culture: International Dimensions (Waterloo et Toronto, 1985), pp. 27-43 et 45-57 respectivement.

In addition to the sources cited in the footnotes to this Introduction, there are a number of books which bear directly on the subjects covered in this volume: David J. Bercuson, Canada and the Birth of Israel (1985); Robert Bothwell, Eldorado: Canada's National Uranium Company (1984); R. D. Cuff and J. L. Granatstein, American Dollars — Canadian Prosperity: Canadian-American Economic Relations 1945-1950; Gerald E. Dirks, Canada's Refugee Policy: Indifference or Opportunism? (Montreal and London, 1977); James Eayrs, In Defence of Canada, Volumes III and IV (1972 and 1980); Shelagh D. Grant, Sovereignty or Security? Government Policy in the Canadian North, 1936-1950 (Vancouver, 1988); J. L. Granatstein, A Man of Influence: Norman A. Robertson and Canadian Statecraft 1929-68 (Ottawa, 1981) and The Ottawa Men: The Civil Service Mandarins 1935-1957 (1982); Joseph T. Jockel, No Boundaries Upstairs: Canada, the United States, and the Origins of North American Air Defence, 1945-1958 (Vancouver, 1987); David MacKenzie, Canada and International Civil Aviation, 1932-1948 (1989); B. W. Muirhead, The Development of Postwar Canadian Trade Policy: The Failure of the Anglo-European Option (Kingston and Montreal, 1992); L. B. Pearson, Mike: The Memoirs of the Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson, Volumes I and II (1972 and 1973); J. W. Pickersgill and D. F. Forster, The Mackenzie King Record, Volume IV (1970); Escott Reid, Time of Fear and Hope: The Making of the North Atlantic Treaty, 1947-1949 (1977) and Radical Mandarin (1989); C. P. Stacey, Canada and the Age of Conflict, Volume II (1981); Robert A. Spencer, Canada in World Affairs: From U.N. to NATO 1946-1949 (1959); Denis Stairs, The Diplomacy of Constraint: Canada, the Korean War, and the United States (1974); and Reg Whitaker, Double Standard: The Secret History of Canadian Immigration (1987). These books were published in Toronto unless otherwise noted.

---

[14]Report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the Year Ended December 1947 (Ottawa, 1948), pp. 23-24, 76-84, 88; John Hilliker and Donald Barry, Canada's Department of External Affairs, Volume 2: Coming of Age, 1946-1968 (forthcoming), Chapter 1.

se plaignait fréquemment de pénuries de personnel et de roulements rapides ainsi que des trop nombreuses conférences internationales — le Canada participa à 86 d'entre elles dans l'année — par rapport au petit nombre d'agents[14].

En plus des sources citées dans les notes de bas de page, plusieurs livres recoupent directement les sujets abordés dans le présent volume : David J. Bercuson, Canada and the Birth of Israel (1985); Robert Bothwell, Eldorado: Canada's National Uranium Company (1984); R. D. Cuff et J. L. Granatstein, American Dollars — Canadian Prosperity: Canadian-American Economic Relations 1945-1950; Gerald E. Dirks, Canada's Refugee Policy: Indifference or Opportunism? (Montréal et Londres, 1977); James Eayrs, In Defence of Canada, volumes III et IV (1972 et 1980); Shelagh D. Grant, Sovereignty or Security? Government Policy in the Canadian North, 1936-1950 (Vancouver, 1988); J. L. Granatstein, A Man of Influence: Norman A. Robertson and Canadian Statecraft 1929-68 (Ottawa, 1981) et The Ottawa Men: The Civil Service Mandarins 1935-1957 (1982); Joseph T. Jockel, No Boundaries Upstairs: Canada, the United States, and the Origins of North American Air Defence, 1945-1958 (Vancouver, 1987); David MacKenzie, Canada and International Civil Aviation, 1932-1948 (1989); B. W. Muirhead, The Development of Postwar Canadian Trade Policy: The Failure of the Anglo-European Option (Kingston et Montréal, 1992); L. B. Pearson, Mike: The Memoirs of the Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson, volumes I et II (1972 et 1973); J. W. Pickersgill et D. F. Forster, The Mackenzie King Record, volume IV (1970); Escott Reid, Time of Fear and Hope: The Making of the North Atlantic Treaty, 1947-1949 (1977) et Radical Mandarin (1989); C. P. Stacey, Canada and the Age of Conflict, volume II (1981); Robert A. Spencer, Canada in World Affairs: From U.N. to NATO 1946-1949 (1959); Denis Stairs, The Diplomacy of Constraint: Canada, the Korean War, and the United States (1974); et Reg Whitaker, Double Standard: The Secret History of Canadian Immigration (1987). Sauf indication contraire, ces livres furent publiés à Toronto.

Les principes directeurs suivis pour sélectionner les documents présentés dans le présent volume sont exposés dans l'Introduction au volume 7 (pp. ix-xi). Les signes conventionnels sont les mêmes que ceux décrits dans l'Introduction au volume 9 (p. xix). Une croix (†) signifie que le document n'est pas reproduit dans le présent volume; des points de suspension [. . .] indiquent une coupure dans le texte. Nous avons eu accès à tous les dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures et aucune restriction n'a été imposée en ce qui concerne la publication de documents. Les éditeurs ont décidé, par ailleurs, de supprimer les noms de certaines personnes de façon à protéger leur vie privée.

Si tous les livres sont le fruit d'un effort collectif, celui-ci l'est plus que la plupart. Secondé par Douglas Waldie, Donald Page s'attela à la tâche il y a plusieurs années et une sélection préliminaire de documents fut faite en complément de leur travail sur le volume précédent. Il y eut d'autres projets et d'autres [14]Rapport du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour l'année terminée en décembre 1947 (Ottawa, 1948), pp. 25-27, 82-91, 94-95; John Hilliker et Donald Barry, Le ministère des Affaires extérieures du Canada, volume 2 : Les années de maturation, 1946-1968 (à paraître), chapitre premier.

The guidelines for the selection of documents in this volume are outlined in the Introduction to Volume 7 (pp. ix-xi). The editorial devices are similar to those described in the Introduction to Volume 9 (p. xix). A dagger (†) indicates that a document has not been printed in this volume; an ellipse (. . .) represents an editorial omission. We were given full access to the records of the Department of External Affairs and no restrictions were placed on the publication of documents. The editors did decide, however, to excise the names of some individuals in order to protect their privacy.

All books are collective efforts, but this one more than most. Donald Page began the task some years ago with the support of Douglas Waldie, and a preliminary selection of documents was made to complement their work on the preceding volumes in this series. Other projects and pressures intervened and Dr. Page moved from his duties as Deputy Director of Historical Division to other consuming responsibilities in the Department of External Affairs and then at Trinity Western University.

In the summer of 1990, Norman Hillmer was asked to complete the volume. He had considerable assistance. Angelika Sauer did the bulk of the further necessary research, and helped in particular to mould Chapters III and IV. The entire book reflects her expertise, drive and enthusiasm. Robert Bothwell generously pointed to the most important documents on and developments in atomic energy. Jacqueline T. Shaw provided information on the Canberra Conference. R. L. Gabrielle Nishiguchi located material on the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions. Anne Hillmer reviewed the Palestine section of the United Nations chapter and Greg Donaghy the British West Indies part of the Commonwealth chapter. The overall editor of the documents series, John Hilliker, was a source of advice and institutional wisdom, as was Hector Mackenzie, who is engaged in the editing of the volumes on 1948 and 1949. We are also grateful to René de Chantal, Ian M. Drummond, Vincent Rigby, Charles Ritchie, Leigh Sarty and Roger Sarty.

The technical production of the volume was ably co-ordinated by Gail Kirkpatrick Devlin. She and Isobel Cameron carried out vital supplementary research, and Mrs. Cameron chose the photographs and prepared the list of persons and the index. Aline Gélineau was responsible for word processing; she managed to decipher even the most unreadable of texts. Other aspects of the technical preparation of the volume were carried out by Carol Burchill, Geneviève de Chantal, Sandra Steiman LaFortune and Islay Mawhinney. E.A. Kelly, assisted by Janet Ritchie, was the cheerful liaison between the production team, the editors, and External Affairs and International Trade Canada.

NORMAN HILLMER
DONALD PAGE
Ottawa, Ontario and Langley, British Columbia
November 24, 1992

priorités et Donald Page quitta ses fonctions de directeur adjoint des Affaires historiques pour assumer d'autres responsabilités accaparantes au ministère des Affaires extérieures et ensuite à l'Université Trinity Western.

À l'été de 1990, Norman Hillmer fut chargé de terminer le volume. Il eut beaucoup d'aide. Angelika Sauer fit l'essentiel de la recherche qu'il restait à faire et contribua tout particulièrement à façonner les chapitres III et IV. Le volume entier témoigne de sa compétence, de son dynamisme et de son enthousiasme. Robert Bothwell ne ménagea pas ses efforts pour signaler les plus importants événements et documents dans le domaine de l'énergie atomique. Jacqueline T. Shaw fournit des renseignements sur la conférence de Canberra. R. L. Gabrielle Nishiguchi localisa des documents relatifs au comité du Cabinet chargé des questions japonaises. Anne Hillmer révisa la section concernant la Palestine dans le chapitre sur les Nations Unies et Greg Donaghy, la partie du chapitre sur le Commonwealth traitant des Indes occidentales britanniques. L'éditeur en chef, John Hilliker, fut une source de conseils et de sagesse institutionnelle, tout comme Hector Mackenzie, qui s'occupe de l'édition des volumes sur les années 1948 et 1949. Nous sommes aussi reconnaissants à René de Chantal, Ian M. Drummond, Vincent Rigby, Charles Ritchie, Leigh Sarty et Roger Sarty.

Gail Kirkpatrick Devlin assura avec compétence la coordination de la production technique du volume, en plus d'effectuer, avec Isobel Cameron, des recherches supplémentaires indispensables. M^me^ Cameron choisit les photographies et établit la liste des personnes et l'index. Aline Gélineau s'occupa du traitement de textes, réussissant à déchiffrer les textes les plus illisibles. La préparation technique du volume fut confiée à Carol Burchill, Geneviève de Chantal, Sandra Steiman LaFortune et Islay Mawhinney. Assistée de Janet Ritchie, E. A. Kelly assura avec sa bonne humeur habituelle la liaison entre l'équipe de production, les éditeurs et Affaires extérieures et Commerce extérieur Canada.

NORMAN HILLMER
DONALD PAGE
Ottawa (Ontario) et Langley (Colombie-Britannique) le 24 novembre 1992

PROVENANCE DES DOCUMENTS[1]
LOCATION OF DOCUMENTS[1]

Documents du général A.G.L. McNaughton, Archives nationales (MG 30 G12)	A.G.L.M.	General A.G.L. McNaughton Papers, National Archives (MG 30 G12)
Documents de Brooke Claxton, Archives nationales (MG 32 B5)	B.C.	Brooke Claxton Papers, National Archives (MG 32 B5)
Documents de C.D. Howe, Archives nationales (MG 27 III B20)	C.D.H.	C.D. Howe Papers, National Archives (MG 27 III B20)
Dossiers de l'ambassade du Canada à Washington, Archives nationales (RG 25 B2)	CEW	Canadian Embassy, Washington, Files, National Archives (RG 25 B2)
Dossiers de Canada House, Londres, Archives nationales (RG 25 A12)	CH	Canada House, London, Files, National Archives (RG 25 A12)
Dossiers du ministère des Affaires extérieures	DEA	Department of External Affairs Files
Dossiers du ministère des Finances, Archives nationales (RG 19)	DF	Department of Finance Files, National Archives (RG 19)
Direction historique, ministère de la Défense nationale	DND	Directorate of History, Department of National Defence
Dossiers du ministère des Mines et Ressources, Archives nationales (RG 26)	DMR	Department of Mines and Resources Files, National Archives (RG 26)
Dossiers du ministère du Commerce, Archives nationales (RG 20)	DTC	Department of Trade and Commerce Files, National Archives (RG 20)
Documents de L.B. Pearson, Archives nationales (MG 26 N1)	L.B.P.	L.B. Pearson Papers, National Archives (MG 26 N1)
Documents de L.S. Saint-Laurent, Archives nationales (MG 26 L)	L.S.L.	L.S. St. Laurent Papers, National Archives (MG 26 L)
Bureau du Conseil privé— conclusions du Cabinet et documents du Cabinet	PCO	Privy Council Office— Cabinet Conclusions and Cabinet Documents

[1]Ceci est une liste des symboles utilisés pour indiquer la provenance des documents. Les cotes des collections déposées aux Archives nationales du Canada sont entre parenthèses.
This is a list of the symbols used to indicate the location of documents. The call numbers of collections deposited at the National Archives of Canada are in parentheses.

Autres documents des archives du BCP	PCO/#	Other documents from PCO records
Documents de W.L. Mackenzie King, Archives nationales (Notes et memoranda: MG 26 J4; lettres: MG 26 J1; journal: MG 26 J13)	W.L.M.K.	W.L. Mackenzie King Papers, National Archives (Notes and memoranda: MG 26 J4; letters: MG 26 J1; diary: MG 26 J13)

LISTE DES ABRÉVIATIONS
LIST OF ABBREVIATIONS

AEC	Atomic Energy Commission
AECB	Atomic Energy Control Board
APAE	Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy
BENELUX	Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg
BIRD	Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement
BNA	British North America
BOAC	British Overseas Airways Corporation
CCRU	Canadian Council for Reconstruction through UNESCO
CDT	Combined Development Trust
CFM	Council of Foreign Ministers
CIS	Canadian Information Service
CN(R)	Canadian National (Railways)
CP(R)	Canadian Pacific (Railway)
CPC	Combined Policy Committee
CPCAD	Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense
CRO	Commonwealth Relations Office
DO	Dominions Office
DP	Displaced Person
ECOSOC	Economic and Social Council of the United Nations
FAO	Food and Agriculture Organization
FEC	Far Eastern Commission
GATT	General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade/Accord général sur les tarifs douaniers et le commerce
IARA	Inter-Allied Reparations Agency
IATB	Inter-Allied Trade Board
IBRD	International Bank for Reconstruction and Development
ICAO	International Civil Aviation Organization
ICEF	International Children's Emergency Fund
IEFC	International Emergency Food Council
IGC(R)	Intergovernmental Committee (on Refugees)
ILO	International Labour Organization
IRO	International Refugee Organization
ITO	International Trade Organization
JIB	Joint Intelligence Board
JIC	Joint Intelligence Committee
MFN	Most Favoured Nation
NRC	National Research Council
OACI	Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale
OIC	Organisation internationale du commerce
ONU	Organisation des Nations Unies
PC	Privy Council
PCIRO	Preparatory Commission of International Refugee Organization
PICAO	Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization
PJBD	Permanent Joint Board on Defence
RAF	Royal Air Force
RCAF	Royal Canadian Air Force
RCMP	Royal Canadian Mounted Police
SCAP	Supreme Commander, Allied Powers, Pacific
TCA	Trans-Canada Airlines
TUC	Trades Union Congress
UK	United Kingdom
UN	United Nations
UNAEC	United Nations Atomic Energy Commission

UNESCO	United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization
UNRRA	United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration
UNSCOP	United Nations Special Committee on Palestine
US(A)	United States (of America)
USAF	United States Air Force
USSR	Union of Soviet Socialist Republics
WHO	World Health Organization
WPTB	Wartime Prices and Trade Board

LISTE DES PERSONNALITÉS[1]
LIST OF PERSONS[1]

ABBOTT, D.C., ministre des Finances.

ACHESON, Dean, sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis (-juin).

ADDISON, vicomte, secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions du Royaume-Uni.

ATHERTON, Ray, ambassadeur des États-Unis.

ATTLEE, Clement, premier ministre du Royaume-Uni.

AUSTIN, Warren R., sénateur (Michigan); représentant, délégation des États-Unis à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies et vice-président, deuxième session spéciale.

BALDWIN, J.R., secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet; chef, délégation à la Conférence de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale (Genève).

BARTON, G.S.H., sous-ministre de l'Agriculture.

BATEMAN, George, directeur général, Bureau de Washington, ministère de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements.

BEASLEY, J.A., haut-commissaire de l'Australie au Royaume-Uni.

BEAUDRY, Laurent, sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures.

BENES, Edvard, président de la Tchécoslovaquie.

BENTON, W., secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Relations publiques et culturelles, Département d'État des États-Unis.

BERTRAND, Ernest, ministre des Postes.

BEVIN, Ernest, secrétaire d'État aux Affaires étrangères du Royaume-Uni.

BIDAULT, Georges, ministre des Affaires étrangères de France.

BRYCE, R.B., directeur, Direction économique, ministère des Finances.

BYRNES, J.F., secrétaire d'État des États-Unis (-21 janvier).

ABBOTT, D.C., Minister of Finance.

ACHESON, Dean, Under-Secretary of State of United States (-Jun.).

ADDISON, Viscount, Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs of United Kingdom.

ATHERTON, Ray, Ambassador of United States.

ATTLEE, Clement, Prime Minister of United Kingdom.

AUSTIN, Warren R., Senator (Michigan); Representative, Delegation of United States to Second Session of General Assembly of United Nations and Vice-President, Second Special Session.

BALDWIN, J.R., Assistant Secretary to Cabinet; Head, Delegation to International Civil Aviation Organization Conference (Geneva).

BARTON, G.S.H., Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

BATEMAN, George, Director General, Washington Office, Department of Reconstruction and Supply.

BEASLEY, J.A., High Commissioner of Australia in United Kingdom.

BEAUDRY, Laurent, Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

BENES, Edvard, President of Czechoslovakia.

BENTON, W., Assistant Secretary of State for Public and Cultural Relations, Department of State of United States.

BERTRAND, Ernest, Postmaster-General.

BEVIN, Ernest, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs of United Kingdom.

BIDAULT, Georges, Minister of Foreign Affairs of France.

BRYCE, R.B., Director, Economic Division, Department of Finance.

BYRNES, J.F., Secretary of State of United States (-Jan. 21).

---

[1]Ceci est une sélection des principales personnalités canadiennes et de certaines personnalités de l'étranger souvent mentionnées dans les documents. Les notices biographiques se limitent aux fonctions qui se rapportent aux documents reproduits dans ce volume.
This is a selection of important Canadian persons and some foreign persons often mentioned in the documents. The biographical details refer only to the positions pertinent to the documents printed herein.

CATTO, Sir T.S., gouverneur de la Banque d'Angleterre.

CHANCE, L.G., chef, Direction des affaires consulaires.

CHEVRIER, Lionel, ministre des Transports.

CHIFLEY, J.B., premier ministre de l'Australie.

CHIPMAN, W.F., ambassadeur en Argentine.

CHURCHILL, W.S., chef de l'opposition au Royaume-Uni.

CLARK, général Mark W., général commandant, Forces armées des États-Unis en Autriche et haut-commissaire pour l'Autriche (–mai); député spécial pour l'Autriche, Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères.

CLARK, W.C., sous-ministre des Finances.

CLAXTON, Brooke, ministre de la Défense nationale.

CLAYTON, W.L., sous-secrétaire d'État pour les Affaires économiques des États-Unis; président, délégation de la deuxième session du Comité préparatoire de la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; gouverneur suppléant, Banque internationale pour la reconstruction et le développement.

CLUTTERBUCK, Sir Alexander, haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni.

COBBOLD, C.F., sous-gouverneur de la Banque d'Angleterre.

COUVE DE MURVILLE, M., directeur général des Affaires politiques, ministère des Affaires étrangères de France; suppléant spécial pour l'Allemagne, Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères.

CRIPPS,Sir Stafford, ministre des Affaires économiques du Royaume-Uni.

DALTON, Hugh, chancelier de l'Échiquier du Royaume-Uni.

DAVIS, T.C., ambassadeur en Chine.

DÉSY, Jean, président, délégation de la Commission préparatoire, Organisation internationale pour les réfugiés; ambassadeur au Brésil (-septembre); ministre en Italie.

DEUTSCH, J.J., directeur, Direction des relations économiques internationales, ministère des Finances.

DE VALERA, Eamon, premier ministre d'Irlande.

DI COSSATO, comte Carlo Fecia, ministre de l'Italie.

CATTO, Sir T.S., Governor, Bank of England.

CHANCE, L.G., Head, Consular Division.

CHEVRIER, Lionel, Minister of Transport.

CHIFLEY, J.B., Prime Minister of Australia.

CHIPMAN, W.F., Ambassador in Argentina.

CHURCHILL, W.S., Leader of Opposition in United Kingdom

CLARK, Gen. Mark W., Commanding General, United States Forces in Austria and High Commissioner for Austria (-May); Special Deputy for Austria, Council of Foreign Ministers.

CLARK, W.C., Deputy Minister of Finance.

CLAXTON, Brooke, Minister of National Defence.

CLAYTON, W.L., Under-Secretary of State for Economic Affairs of United States; Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, Preparatory Committee of United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment; Alternate Governor, International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

CLUTTERBUCK, Sir Alexander, High Commissioner of United Kingdom.

COBBOLD, C.F., Deputy Governor, Bank of England.

COUVE DE MURVILLE, M., Director-General, Political Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France; Special Deputy for Germany, Council of Foreign Ministers.

CRIPPS, Sir Stafford, Minister for Economic Affairs of United Kingdom.

DALTON, Hugh, Chancellor of Exchequer of United Kingdom.

DAVIS, T.C., Ambassador in China.

DÉSY, Jean, Chairman, Delegation to Preparatory Commission, International Refugee Organization; Ambassador in Brazil (–Sep.); Minister in Italy.

DEUTSCH, J.J., Director, Economic Relations Division, Department of Finance.

DE VALERA, Eamon, Prime Minister of Ireland.

DI COSSATO, Count Carlo Fecia, Minister of Italy.

DORÉ, Victor, ambassadeur en Belgique; président, Conseil exécutif, Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture.

DRURY, C.M., première Direction politique.

DUPUY, Pierre, ambassadeur aux Pays-Bas.

EADY, Sir Wilfrid, deuxième secrétaire, ministère des Finances du Royaume-Uni.

EVATT, H.V., vice-premier ministre d'Australie et ministre des Affaires extérieures.

FORD, R.A.D., deuxième secrétaire, haut-commissariat du Royaume-Uni; chargé d'affaires, ambassade en Union soviétique(avril–).

FOSTER, Andrew B., chef adjoint, Direction des Affaires du Commonwealth, Département d'État des États-Unis; secrétaire, section des États-Unis, Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense.

FRASER, Peter, premier ministre de la Nouvelle-Zélande.

GARDINER, J.C., ministre de l'Agriculture.

GARNER, J.J.S., haut-commissaire adjoint du Royaume-Uni.

GLEN, J.A., ministre des Mines et des Ressources.

GORDON, Donald, sous-gouverneur de la Banque du Canada; président, Commission des prix et du commerce en temps de guerre (-mars).

GOUSEV, T., sous-ministre pour les Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique; suppléant spécial pour l'Allemagne, Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères.

GRAYDON, Gordon, député conservateur de Peel (Ont.).

GREENE, K.A., haut-commissaire en Australie.

GROMYKO, Andrei, vice-ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique; représentant au Conseil de sécurité.

HARRINGTON, Julian F., ministre, ambassade des États-Unis.

HEENEY, A.D.P., greffier du Conseil privé et secrétaire du Cabinet.

HELMORE, Sir James, deuxième secrétaire, ministère du Commerce du Royaume-Uni; président, délégation à la deuxième session du Comité préparatoire, Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi.

HENRY, R.A.C., président, Commission des transports aériens.

DORÉ, Victor, Ambassador in Belgium; Chairman, Executive Board, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

DRURY, C.M., First Political Division.

DUPUY, Pierre, Ambassador in the Netherlands.

EADY, Sir Wilfrid, Second Secretary, Treasury of United Kingdom.

EVATT, H.V., Deputy Prime Minister of Australia and Minister for External Affairs.

FORD, R.A.D., Second Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom; Chargé d'Affaires, Embassy in Soviet Union (Apr.-).

FOSTER, Andrew B., Assistant Chief, Division of British Commonwealth Affairs, Department of State of United States; Secretary, United States Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

FRASER, Peter, Prime Minister of New Zealand.

GARDINER, J.G., Minister of Agriculture.

GARNER, J.J.S., Deputy High Commissioner of United Kingdom.

GLEN, J.A., Minister of Mines and Resources.

GORDON, Donald, Deputy Governor, Bank of Canada; Chairman, Wartime Prices and Trade Board (-Mar.).

GOUSEV, T., Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of Soviet Union; Special Deputy for Germany, Council of Foreign Ministers.

GRAYDON, Gordon, Conservative Member of Parliament for Peel (Ont.).

GREENE, K.A., High Commissioner in Australia.

GROMYKO, Andrei, Deputy Foreign Minister of Soviet Union; Representative on Security Council.

HARRINGTON, Julian F., Minister, Embassy of United States.

HEENEY, A.D.P., Clerk of Privy Council and Secretary to Cabinet.

HELMORE, Sir James, Second Secretary, Board of Trade of United Kingdom; Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, Preparatory Committee, United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment.

HENRY, R.A.C., Chairman, Air Transport Board.

HICKERSON, J.D., directeur adjoint, Bureau des affaires européennes, Département d'État des États-Unis (-août); par la suite directeur.

HOLMES, J.W., premier secrétaire, haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni.

HOLMES, Stephen, deuxième secrétaire; ministère du Commerce du Royaume-Uni.

HOPKINS, E.R., chef, Direction juridique.

HOWE, C.D., ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements.

HUXLEY, Julian, directeur général, Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture.

IGNATIEFF, George, premier secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis; conseiller, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies; représentant suppléant, délégation au Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies; membre, délégation à la Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies et au Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies.

ILSLEY, James L., ministre de la Justice; représentant, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

JEBB, H.M. Gladwyn, sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni.

JOHNSON, D.M., chef, Troisième direction politique (Affaires américaines et de l'Extrême-Orient) (mars-); secrétaire, section canadienne, Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense.

JOLLIFFE, A.L., directeur, Direction de l'immigration, et contrôleur en chef, Immigration chinoise, ministère des Mines et des Ressources.

KEARNEY, J.D., haut-commissaire en Inde.

KEENLEYSIDE, H.L., ambassadeur au Mexique (-mai); sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources et commissaire des Territoires du Nord-Ouest.

KENNAN, George F., chef, Personnel de la planification des politiques, Département d'État des États-Unis.

KHAN, voir Liaquat Ali Khan

KING, W.L. Mackenzie, premier ministre.

KIRKWOOD, K.P., Troisième direction politique; chargé d'affaires en Pologne (mai-).

LEPAN, D.V., premier secrétaire, haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni.

HICKERSON, J.D., Deputy Director, Office of European Affairs, Department of State of United States (-Aug.); then Director.

HOLMES, J.W., First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom.

HOLMES, Stephen, Second Secretary, Board of Trade of United Kingdom.

HOPKINS, E.R., Head, Legal Division.

HOWE, C.D., Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

HUXLEY, Julian, Director-General, United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization.

IGNATIEFF, George, First Secretary, Embassy in United States; Adviser, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations; Alternate Representative, Delegation to Security Council of United Nations; Member, Delegation to United Nations Atomic Energy Commission and to Economic and Social Council of United Nations.

ILSLEY, James L., Minister of Justice; Representative, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations.

JEBB, H.M. Gladwyn, Assistant Under-Secretary of State, Foreign Office of United Kingdom.

JOHNSON, D.M., Head, Third Political Division (American and Far Eastern Affairs) (Mar.-); Secretary, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

JOLLIFFE, A.L., Director, Immigration Branch, and Chief Controller, Chinese Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources.

KEARNEY, J.D., High Commissioner in India.

KEENLEYSIDE, H.L., Ambassador in Mexico (-May); Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources and Commissioner of Northwest Territories.

KENNAN, George F., Chief, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State of United States.

KHAN, Liaquat Ali, Prime Minister of Pakistan.

KING, W.L. Mackenzie, Prime Minister.

KIRKWOOD, K.P., Third Political Division; Chargé d'Affaires in Poland (May-).

LEPAN, D.V., First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom.

LIAQUAT Ali Khan, premier ministre du Pakistan.

LIE, Trygve, secrétaire général des Nations Unies.

LIESCHING, Sir Percivale, secrétaire permanent, ministère de l'Alimentation du Royaume-Uni.

LOVETT, R.A., sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis (juillet-).

MACDERMOT, T.W.L., chef, Direction du personnel.

MACDONNELL, R.M., chef, Troisième direction politique (Affaires américaines et de l'Extrême-Orient) (-mars); chargé d'affaires, légation en Tchécoslovaquie.

MACHTIG, Sir Eric, sous-secrétaire d'État permanent pour les Affaires des Dominions (par la suite Relations du Commonwealth) du Royaume-Uni.

MACKAY, R.A., chef, Section du Commonwealth, Deuxième direction politique (par la suite Direction du Commonwealth).

MACKENZIE, C.J, président, Conseil national de recherches.

MACKENZIE, I.A., ministre des Affaires des anciens combattants.

MACKENZIE, M.W., sous-ministre du Commerce.

MACKINNON, J.A., ministre du Commerce.

MACNAMARA, A., sous-ministre du Travail.

MARSHALL, George C., secrétaire d'État des États-Unis (21 janvier-).

MARTIN, Paul, ministre de la Santé nationale et du Bien-être social; délégué à la cinquième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies.

MASARYK, Jan, ministre des Affaires étrangères de la Tchécoslovaquie.

MATTHEWS, H. Freeman, directeur, Bureau des affaires européennes, Département d'État des États-Unis (-juillet).

MATTHEWS, W.D., directeur général.

MAUD, Sir John, secrétaire de l'Éducation du Royaume-Uni.

MCGREER, E.D., haut-commissaire en Afrique du Sud.

MCIVOR, G.H., commissaire en chef, Commission canadienne du blé.

LIE, Trygve, Secretary-General of United Nations.

LIESCHING, Sir Percivale, Permanent Secretary, Ministry of Food of United Kingdom.

LOVETT, R.A., Under-Secretary of State of United States (Jul-).

MACDERMOT, T.W.L., Head, Personnel Division.

MACDONNELL, R.M., Head, Third Political Division (American and Far Eastern Affairs) (-Mar.); Chargé d'Affaires, Legation in Czechoslovakia.

MACHTIG, Sir Eric, Permanent Under-Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs (later Commonwealth Relations) of United Kingdom.

MACKAY, R.A., Head, Commonwealth Section, Second Political Division (later Commonwealth Division).

MACKENZIE, C.J., President, National Research Council.

MACKENZIE, I.A., Minister of Veterans Affairs.

MACKENZIE, M.W., Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.

MACKINNON, J.A., Minister of Trade and Commerce.

MACNAMARA, A., Deputy Minister of Labour.

MARSHALL, George C., Secretary of State of United States (Jan. 21-).

MARTIN, Paul, Minister of National Health and Welfare; Representative, Delegation to Fifth Session, Economic and Social Council of United Nations.

MASARYK, Jan, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Czechoslovakia.

MATTHEWS, H. Freeman, Director, Office of European Affairs, Department of State of United States (-Jul.).

MATTHEWS, W.D., Chief Administrative Officer.

MAUD, Sir John, Secretary of Education of United Kingdom.

MCGREER, E.D., High Commissioner in South Africa.

MCIVOR, G.H., Chief Commissioner, Canadian Wheat Board.

McKIM, A.C., représentant, Conseil intérimaire de l'Organisation provisoire de l'aviation civile internationale (-juillet); vice-président (Administration), Lignes aériennes Trans-Canada.

McKIM, A.C., Representative, Interim Council of Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization (-Jul.); Vice-President (Administration), Trans Canada Airlines.

McKINNON, H.B., président, Commission du tarif; membre, Commission des prix et du commerce en temps de guerre.

McKINNON, H.B., Chairman, Tariff Board; Member, Wartime Prices and Trade Board.

McNAUGHTON, général A.G.L., représentant au Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies; représentant à la Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies; président, section canadienne, Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense.

McNAUGHTON, Gen. A.G.L., Representative to Security Council of United Nations; Representative to United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; Chairman, Canadian Section, Permanent Joint Board on Defence.

McNEIL, Hector, ministre d'État du Royaume-Uni.

McNEIL, Hector, Minister of State of United Kingdom.

MEASURES, W.H., chef, Direction protocolaire et chef du protocole.

MEASURES, W.H., Head, Protocol Division and Chief of Protocol.

MITCHELL, Humphrey, ministre du Travail.

MITCHELL, Humphrey, Minister of Labour.

MOLOTOV, V.M., ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique.

MOLOTOV, V.M., Minister of Foreign Affairs of Soviet Union.

MORAN, H.O., chef, Direction économique (juillet-).

MORAN, H.O., Head, Economic Division (Jul.-).

MURPHY, Robert D., suppléant spécial des États-Unis pour l'Allemagne, Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères.

MURPHY, Robert D., United States Special Deputy for Germany, Council of Foreign Ministers.

NASH, W., vice-premier ministre de la Nouvelle-Zélande; chef, délégation à la Commission préparatoire de la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi.

NASH, W., Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand; Head, Delegation to Preparatory Committee of United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment.

NEHRU, Pandit Jawaharlal, ministre des Affaires étrangères et des Relations du Commonwealth de l'Inde; premier ministre (15 août-).

NEHRU, Pandit Jawaharlal, Minister for External Affairs and Commonwealth Relations of India; Prime Minister (Aug. 15-).

NOEL-BAKER, P.J., secrétaire d'État des relations du Commonwealth du Royaume-Uni.

NOEL-BAKER, P.J., Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations of United Kingdom.

NORMAN, E.H., chef, mission de liaison auprès du commandant suprême des Forces alliées, Japon.

NORMAN, E.H., Head, Liaison Mission to Supreme Allied Commander, Japan.

PEARSON, L.B., sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures; représentant suppléant, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies; représentant suppléant au Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies.

PEARSON, L.B., Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; Alternate Representative, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations; Alternate Representative to Security Council of United Nations.

PIERCE, S.D., chef, Direction économique (-mai); ambassadeur au Mexique (juillet-); représentant suppléant, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies; chef, délégation à la deuxième conférence générale de l'Organisation des Nations Unies pour l'éducation, la science et la culture.

PIERCE, S.D., Head, Economic Division (-May); Ambassador in Mexico (Jul.-); Alternate Representative, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations; Head, Delegation to Second General Conference of United Nations Educational, Social and Cultural Organization.

POPE, lieutenant-général M.A., chef, mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle, Allemagne.

POPE, Lt.-Gen. M.A., Head, Military Mission to Allied Control Commission, Germany.

RAE, S.F., chef, Direction de l'information.

RAE, S.F., Head, Information Division.

RASMINSKY, L., adjoint exécutif auprès du gouverneur de la Banque du Canada; président suppléant, Commission de contrôle du change étranger.

RASMINSKY, L., Executive Assistant to Governor, Bank of Canada; Alternate Chairman, Foreign Exchange Control Board.

REID, Escott M., chef, Deuxième direction politique (Commonwealth et affaires européennes) (par la suite Direction européenne); représentant suppléant, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

REID, Escott M., Head, Second Political Division (Commonwealth and European Affairs); Alternate Representative, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations.

RIDDELL, R.G., chef, Première direction politique (Affaires des Nations Unies, Règlements de l'après-guerre et Conférences internationales); conseiller principal, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies; représentant suppléant au Conseil de sécurité des Nations Unies; conseiller, délégation à la cinquième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies.

RIDDELL, R.G., Head, First Political Division (United Nations Affairs, Post Hostilities Settlements and International Conferences); Principal Adviser, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations; Alternate Representative to Security Council of United Nations; Adviser, Delegation to Fifth Session, United Nations Economic and Social Council.

ROBERTSON, N.A., haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni.

ROBERTSON, N.A., High Commissioner in United Kingdom.

ROBERTSON, R.G., cabinet du premier ministre.

ROBERTSON, R.G., Prime Minister's Office.

RUSK, Dean, directeur, Bureau des affaires politiques spéciales, Département d'État des États-Unis.

RUSK, Dean, Director, Office of Special Political Affairs, Department of State of United States.

SAINT-LAURENT, Louis S., secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures; président, délégation à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

ST. LAURENT, Louis S., Secretary of State for External Affairs; Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations.

SMITH, Arnold C., Direction des affaires économiques; conseiller, délégation à la cinquième session du Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies; membre civil, personnel de direction, Collège de la Défense nationale.

SMITH, Arnold C., Economic Division; Adviser, Delegation to Fifth Session, United Nations Economic and Social Council; Civilian Member, Directing Staff, National Defence College.

SMUTS, maréchal Jan Christiaan, premier ministre de l'Afrique du Sud.

SMUTS, Field Marshal Jan Christiaan, Prime Minister of South Africa.

SNYDER, J.W., secrétaire au Trésor des États-Unis

SNYDER, J.W., Secretary of Treasury of United States.

SOLANDT, O.M., directeur-général, Conseil de recherches pour la défense, ministère de la Défense nationale.

SOUTHARD, F., directeur, Bureau des finances internationales, Trésor des États-Unis.

SPAAK, Paul Henri, premier ministre et ministre des Affaires étrangères de Belgique; président, deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

STALINE, généralissime, J.V., président, Conseil des ministres de l'Union soviétique.

STONE, T.A., ministre, ambassade aux États-Unis; co-secrétaire, Comité politique interallié.

STRACHEY, E.J. St. L., ministre de l'Alimentation du Royaume-Uni.

STRANG, Sir William, conseiller politique du Commandant militaire britannique pour l'Allemagne (-novembre); sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint permanent (responsable de la section allemande), Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni; suppléant spécial pour l'Allemagne, Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères.

TAYLOR, R.W., vice-président, Commission des prix et du commerce en temps de guerre (-mars 19); nommé président.

THORP, Willard L., secrétaire d'État adjoint pour les Affaires économiques, Département d'État des États-Unis.

TITO (Marshal Josip Broz), premier ministre de Yougoslavie.

TOWERS, Graham, gouverneur de la Banque du Canada.

TRUMAN, Harry S, président des États-Unis.

VAILLANCOURT, J.J.J. Émile, ministre à Cuba.

VANIER, major-général G.P., ambassadeur en France.

VANDENBERG, Arthur J., sénateur (Michigan); président de la Commission des relations étrangères du Sénat.

VYCHINSKI, A.I., vice-ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Union soviétique.

WILCOX, Clair, directeur, Bureau de la politique commerciale internationale, Département d'État des États-Unis; vice-président, délégation à la deuxième session de la Commission préparatoire de la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi.

SOLANDT, O.M., Director-General of Defence Research, Department of National Defence.

SOUTHARD, F., Director, Office of International Finance, Treasury of United States.

SPAAK, Paul Henri, Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Belgium; President, Second Session, General Assembly of United Nations.

STALIN, Generalissimo J.V., Chairman, Council of Ministers of Soviet Union.

STONE, T.A., Minister, Embassy in United States; Joint Secretary, Combined Policy Committee.

STRACHEY, E.J. St.L., Minister of Food of United Kingdom.

STRANG, Sir William, Political Adviser to British Military Governor for Germany (-Nov.); Joint Permanent Under-Secretary of State (in charge of German Section), Foreign Office of United Kingdom; Special Deputy for Germany, Council of Foreign Ministers.

TAYLOR, K.W., Deputy Chairman, Wartime Prices and Trade Board (-Mar. 19); then Chairman.

THORP, Willard L., Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs, Department of State of United States.

TITO (Marshal Josip Broz), Premier of Yugoslavia.

TOWERS, Graham, Governor, Bank of Canada.

TRUMAN, Harry S, President of United States.

VAILLANCOURT, J.J.J. Emile, Minister in Cuba.

VANIER, Maj.-Gen. G.P., Ambassador in France.

VANDENBERG, Arthur J., Senator (Michigan); Chairman, Senate Committee on Foreign Relations.

VISHINSKY, A.Y., Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs of Soviet Union.

WILCOX, Clair, Director, Office of International Trade Policy, Department of State of United States; Vice-Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, Preparatory Committee of United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment.

WILGRESS, L.D., ambassadeur en Union soviétique (-avril); ministre (avec rang d'ambassadeur) en Suisse; président, délégation à la deuxième session de la Commission préparatoire à la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; président, délégation à la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi (Havane).

WILLOUGHBY, Woodbury, chef adjoint, Direction de la politique commerciale, Département d'État des États-Unis.

WILSON, Harold, secrétaire du Commerce outremer du Royaume-Uni (-octobre); vice-président, délégation de la deuxième session de la Commission préparatoire de la Conférence des Nations Unies sur le commerce et l'emploi; président, ministère du Commerce (octobre-).

WRONG, H. Hume, ambassadeur aux États-Unis.

WILGRESS, L.D., Ambassador in Soviet Union (-Apr.); Minister (with rank of Ambassador) in Switzerland; Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, Preparatory Committee of United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment; Chairman, Delegation to United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment (Havana).

WILLOUGHBY, Woodbury, Associate Chief, Division of Commercial Policy, Department of State of United States.

WILSON, Harold, Secretary for Overseas Trade of United Kingdom (–Oct.); Deputy Chairman, Delegation to Second Session, Preparatory Committee of United Nations Conference on Trade and Employment; President, Board of Trade (Oct.-).

WRONG, H. Hume, Ambassador in United States.

ILLUSTRATIONS

Toutes les photos proviennent de la Division de l'art documentaire et de la photographie des Archives nationales; le numéro du négatif est inscrit dans le coin inférieur gauche.

All photos are from the Documentary Art and Photography Division of the National Archives and are marked with the negative number in the bottom left-hand corner.

C-88551

La princesse Élisabeth et le duc d'Édimbourg le jour de leur mariage, le 20 novembre 1947.

Princess Elizabeth and the Duke of Edinburgh on their wedding day, November 20, 1947.

PA-110521

Le gouverneur général accueille le président des États-Unis à son arrivée à Ottawa, en juin 1947; de gauche à droite : Margaret Truman, Lady Alexander, M^me^ Truman, W.L. Mackenzie King, Harry S Truman, Lord Alexander.

The Governor-General greeting the President of the United States on his arrival in Ottawa, June, 1947; l. to r.: Margaret Truman, Lady Alexander, Mrs. Truman, W.L. Mackenzie King, Harry S Truman, Lord Alexander.

PA-110522

De gauche à droite : M.J. Coldwell (chef du CCF), John Bracken (chef de l'Opposition), Gaspard Fauteux (président de la Chambre des communes), le Premier ministre W.L. Mackenzie King, le président Harry S Truman, J.H. King (président du Sénat),W.L. Robertson (leader du gouvernement au Sénat), Solon Low (chef du Crédit social), sur les marches de l'Hôtel du Parlement, après l'allocution du président à la Chambre des communes.

L. to r.: M.J. Coldwell (Leader of the CCF), John Bracken (Leader of the Opposition), Gaspard Fauteux (Speaker of the House of Commons), Prime Minister W.L. Mackenzie King, President Harry S Truman, J.H. King (Speaker of the Senate), W.L. Robertson (Government Leader in the Senate), Solon Low (Leader of the Social Credit Party), on the steps of the Parliament Buildings after the President's address in the House of Commons.

PA-113231

De gauche à droite : le président Harry S Truman et W.L. Mackenzie King au Cénotaphe, en juin 1947; à la gauche en arrière-plan, Ray Atherton (ambassadeur des États-Unis).

L. to r.: President Harry S Truman and W.L. Mackenzie King visit the War Memorial, June 1947; in the rear, at left, Ray Atherton (Ambassador of United States).

C-4049

De gauche à droite : Louis St-Laurent et L.B. Pearson durant la seconde session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies à Flushing Meadows, en septembre 1947.

L. to r.: Louis St. Laurent and L.B. Pearson at the Second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations, Flushing Meadows, September 1947.

PA-128989 Royal & Doucette

Escott Reid (président du Comité de la procédure et de l'organisation) à la seconde session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.

Escott Reid (Chairman of the Committee on Procedure and Organization) at the Second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations.

PA-128995 Royal & Doucette

Hume Wrong prononce une allocution au Rockefeller Plaza pendant la semaine des Nations Unies, en septembre 1947.

Hume Wrong making an address at Rockefeller Plaza during United Nations Week, September 1947.

PA-124425

Les délégués à la seconde Assemblée générale de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale; de gauche à droite : le brigadier C.S. Booth, le vice-maréchal de l'Air A. Ferrier, A.B. Rosevear, O.G. Stoner.

Delegates to the Second General Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization; l. to r.: Brigadier C.S. Booth, Air Vice Marshal A. Ferrier, A.B. Rosevear, O.G. Stoner.

PA-112483

Les membres d'une mission commerciale canadienne hissent le drapeau à l'ambassade d'Athènes; de gauche à droite : James George (troisième secrétaire), Don W. Thomson, James A. MacKinnon (ministre du Commerce), L.R. Laflèche (ambassadeur).

Coll: Don Thomson

Members of a Canadian Trade Mission raise the flag at the Embassy in Athens; l. to r.: James George (Third Secretary), Don W. Thomson, James A. MacKinnon (Minister of Trade and Commerce), L.R. LaFlèche (Ambassador).

C-49402

De gauche à droite : Hugh Keenleyside rend visite au président du Mexique, Miguel Alemán, en 1947.

L. to r.: Hugh Keenleyside calling on President Miguel Alemán of Mexico, 1947.

PA-129375

De gauche à droite : A.L. Jolliffe et Yousuf Karsh à la première séance du Bureau de la citoyenneté, en janvier 1947.

Chris Lund

L. to r. : A.L. Jolliffe and Yousuf Karsh at the first sitting of the Citizenship Court, January 1947.

C-81450

Coll: J. Alex Hume

Le ministre des Finances, D.C. Abbott.
D.C. Abbott, Minister of Finance.

C-1775

Roger Coster – Life Magazine

William Lyon Mackenzie King dans son cabinet de travail à la Maison Laurier.

William Lyon Mackenzie King in his study at Laurier House.

CHAPITRE PREMIER/CHAPTER I
CONDUITE DES RELATIONS EXTÉRIEURES
CONDUCT OF EXTERNAL RELATIONS

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
ADMINISTRATION

SECTION A
GÉNÉRALITÉS
GENERAL

1. DEA/9770-B-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
aux chefs de poste à l'étranger

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Heads of Post Abroad

CIRCULAR LETTER NO. B.2 Ottawa, January 9, 1947

Sir,

RE ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

I have the honour to advise you that the organization of the Department of External Affairs has been changed by the establishment of a position of Personnel Officer, by the abolition of the Diplomatic Division and the creation of a Protocol Division and of a Consular Division.

2. Mr. T.W.L. MacDermot has been appointed Personnel Officer and his duties will concern the appointment, posting and promotion of Foreign Service Officers and the general well-being of those officers. Enclosed is a copy of a memorandum defining his duties in more detail.†

3. Mr. W.H. Measures will be Chief of the new Protocol Division and will be designated Chef du Protocole. Mr. L.G. Chance will be Chief of the Consular Division.

4. Enclosed is a memorandum describing the responsibilities of these two new Divisions.

I have etc.
L.B. PEARSON
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

2. PCO

Décret

Order in Council

P.C. 472 Ottawa, February 5, 1947

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Right Honourable W.L. Mackenzie King, the Prime Minister, is pleased to order as follows:

1. Order in Council of the 28th September, 1945, (P.C.6300) whereby the Canadian Information Service was established is hereby revoked.

2. The Department of External Affairs shall do such acts and things as may be considered necessary for distributing abroad information concerning Canada and for co-ordinating and assisting the public information services of the Government in connection with the distribution abroad of information concerning Canada.

3. The functions of the Department of External Affairs with reference to the co-ordinating and assisting of the public information services of the Government in relation to the distribution abroad of information concerning Canada shall be exercised with the assistance of an inter-departmental committee to consist of the following:

One member (who shall be the Chairman) to be appointed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs;

One member to be appointed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce;

One member (to represent the National Film Board) to be appointed by the Minister responsible for the administration of the National Film Act 1939;

One member to be appointed by the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

4. The appropriations of Parliament now payable and available for the specific purposes of the Canadian Information Service shall continue to be payable and available for such specific purposes under the supervision and control of the Department of External Affairs.

5. Where, under any existing order or authority provision has been made for the representation of the Canadian Information Service on any board, commission or other body of the public service of Canada, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is hereby authorized to designate an officer of the Department of External Affairs as a representative, instead of the representative of the said Service, on such board, commission or other body.

A.M. HILL
Asst. Clerk of the Privy Council

3. DEA/2925-B-40

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, April 29, 1947

RE PROCEDURE FOR OBTAINING GOVERNMENT APPROVAL
IN RELATION TO REPRESENTATION AT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES
AND THE NEGOTIATION AND CONCLUSION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

The note enclosed with your memorandum to me of March 31st† has been examined in this department, and we are of the opinion that it sets out satisfactorily principles to govern normal procedure to be followed in submitting to the government matters relating to Canadian representation at international conferences and the negotiation and signature of international agreements.

As you say, it is desirable that the rules be flexible and I believe that as now agreed they will provide a reasonable working code. Obviously, in particular instances, we may have to deviate from them or modify them in certain respects.

I am attaching a retyped copy of the note as circulated to members of this department for their guidance. I would suggest that the same course be followed in External Affairs.

I am sending a copy of this memorandum and the enclosure to the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note pour les membres du Bureau du Conseil privé

Note to Members of Privy Council Office

Ottawa, April 29, 1947

PROCEDURE FOR OBTAINING GOVERNMENT APPROVAL IN RELATION TO REPRESENTATION AT INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES
AND THE NEGOTIATION AND CONCLUSION OF INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENTS

1. Nomination of delegates to represent Canada at important international conferences should be approved by the Cabinet. Nomination of advisers need not be referred to the Cabinet unless the Secretary of State for External Affairs considers that a question of interdepartmental balance is involved or that Cabinet approval is otherwise desirable.

2. Appointment of delegations does not require the sanction of an Order in Council except in cases of outstanding importance or where signing powers are required.

3. Important international agreements should be presented to Cabinet for approval at some stage prior to their coming into force, unless they are within the framework of a decision already taken by Cabinet or approved by Order in Council.

4. International agreements requiring ratification (or its equivalent) should be approved by Order in Council prior to ratification (or its equivalent).

5. Policy matters should be handled by the Cabinet and need not go before Council, except where some legal sanction is required.

A.D.P. HEENEY L.B. PEARSON

4. DEA/2925-B-40

Extrait du rapport d'une réunion des chefs de poste[1]

Extract from Report of a Meeting of Heads of Post[1]

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, October 10, 1947

Chairman
Mr. L.B. Pearson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Heads of Mission present were:
Mr. Warwick Chipman, Ambassador in the Argentine
Mr. Pierre Dupuy, Ambassador in the Netherlands
Mr. E.H. Norman, Head of the Liaison Mission in Tokyo
Mr. S.D. Pierce, Ambassador in Mexico
Mr. N.A. Robertson, High Commissioner in the United Kingdom
Mr. Emile Vaillancourt, Minister in Cuba
Major-General George Vanier, Ambassador in France
Mr. Hume Wrong, Ambassador in the United States

Mr. L.S. St.Laurent, Secretary of State for External Affairs was present at the afternoon session of the meeting. Other members of the Department present were: Mr. Laurent Beaudry, Mr. T.W.L. MacDermot, Mr. W.D. Matthews, Mr. S.D. Hemsley,[2] Mr. Escott Reid, Mr. M. Cadieux[3] and Miss M.Q. Dench (Secretary).

The Chairman welcomed the Heads of Mission present and said that members of the Department in Ottawa were glad of an opportunity to discuss with them matters of mutual interest.

MORNING SESSION — ADMINISTRATIVE AND PERSONNEL MATTERS

I. Finances of the Department for the Current Year

1. Mr. Matthews briefly reviewed the Department's finances for the current year. He drew attention to Circular Document Admin. No. 30 which had been sent to all missions on September 26, 1947,† emphasizing the importance of incurring no expenditures except those which were absolutely essential for the proper conduct of [1]Il s'agissait de la première réunion de cette nature et il y en eut régulièrement par la suite.

This was the first meeting of its kind, and became a regular feature thereafter.
[2]Agent d'administration.
Administrative Officer.
[3]Cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures.
Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

the mission. The expenses entailed in the opening of several new offices and the continuing rise in the cost of supplies and equipment since the preparation of the Estimates had resulted in the need for the utmost economy for at least the balance of the current fiscal year. Even with the Supplementary Estimates no further funds would be available until the end of March 1948.

II. Tentative Policy for the Purchase of New Premises

2. Mr. Matthews reported that the Minister had approved a proposal that in present circumstances expenditures should normally not be incurred for the purchase of premises abroad if United States funds were required. Considerable discussion took place on a suggestion that, in countries where applicable, military relief credits might be used for the purpose of purchasing premises. Mr. R.B. Bryce of the Department of Finance was invited to the meeting to give the views of his Department on this proposal. Mr. Matthews explained to Mr. Bryce that the Minister had agreed in principle to the general policy that where possible the Canadian Government should purchase rather than rent mission premises, but in view of the shortage of United States dollars it would be necessary, for the present, to confine the purchase of premises to countries in the sterling area. It had been suggested that we might approach those countries where we had military relief credits to ascertain if they would agree to the application of these credits to the purchase of premises for the Canadian Government. At the same time it might be desirable to consider if repayments owing to Canada under commercial loan agreements might not be accelerated by applying them for the same purpose.

. . .

4. In conclusion Mr. Bryce said that in view of the recommendations of the Marshall Plan, Canada had a good case for taking property in settlement or partial settlement of these claims. He thought therefore that it would be reasonable for the Department of External Affairs to make a general proposal that the Canadian Government accept where desirable, property for diplomatic missions in foreign countries in settlement or partial settlement of such claims. Mr. Pearson said that if the Department presented a concrete proposal along these lines to the Department of Finance, he hoped it would receive sympathetic consideration. Mr. Bryce suggested that in the present circumstances the general proposition should be brought up in the near future. General Vanier believed that the sooner the military relief credits were used the better. He felt that with the current inflationary trend these credits would deteriorate in value.

. . .

6. It was agreed that within the British Commonwealth, arrangements for the purchase of property could be on a straight financial basis since there was no special reason to restrict expenditures on the grounds of exchange.

7. In discussing the possibility of building official residences abroad, Mr. Matthews pointed out that this would require adequate supervision which at the present time the Department could not provide for more than one or at the most two projects a year. Another complicating factor was mentioned by Mr. Robertson who said that the present dollar position and the desperate shortage of housing in most countries made it unlikely that building equipment would be released for any large scale construction. Mr. Wrong added that the pressure exerted on most governments to balance their budgets provided another obstacle.

8. Mr. Pearson drew attention to the difficulty of deciding on the order of priority; he felt that in a year it might be possible to obtain premises in only one or two countries. Mr. Matthews thought that if premises could be obtained that did not require any substantial alterations or construction, we could consider purchase in additional countries. The timing of purchases would depend to a large extent on the dates of appropriation bills since it would not be possible to include any large sum in our estimates until specific purchases were decided on. Mr. Pearson thought there would be little if any criticism of such expenditures for the Department in view of the growing acceptance evinced in the Canadian press of Canada's increasing responsibilities in international affairs.

III. Proposed New Basis of Allowances for Heads of Mission

9. Mr. Matthews reviewed the system on which allowances for officers other than Heads of Mission were based according to the cost-of-living index computed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for each country where there is a Canadian post. Under the present system no effort is made to relate the allowances granted to the Heads of Mission to the index for the various posts. It has now been decided to adopt a formula similar to that used in computing F.S.O. allowances, in setting the allowances for Heads of Mission. Posts would be grouped on the basis of the representational requirements at the post and while the Canadian dollar amount of the allowances might vary between the allowances for the Heads of Mission in the same group the formula would be intended to keep the purchasing power at all the posts in the same group equal.

10. Another consideration which would be kept in mind in determining allowances was the adjustment which would have to be made for the probable taxation of salary of personnel serving abroad.

11. The Department was considering the possibility of taking over a number of expenses now paid by the Heads of Mission such as the cost of operating an automobile, the upkeep of grounds, and light, heat and telephone for the residence. General Vanier suggested that consideration should also be given to the assumption by the Department of such charges as plumbers' bills, and other running expenses which might be considered as owner's repairs on leased premises.

. . .

VIII. Personnel

19. Referring to the personnel situation, Mr. Pearson said that in posts abroad there was no doubt a feeling that the Department was not aware of the need for more staff. He pointed out however that negative replies did not indicate an estimate of the importance attached to the request but simply that the Department was still understaffed. He asked Mr. MacDermot to outline plans for the next 12 months.

20. Mr. MacDermot said that the Civil Service Commission had recently completed three sets of departmental examinations. There was one for F.S.O.'s Grades 1 and 2; another for F.S.O.'s Grades 3, 4 and 5, and a third for Consular Officers Grades 3, 4 and 5. The results were not as plentiful as had been expected, particularly in the junior grades: this indicated that many of the best men were still in university. Tentative eligible lists showed that 15 F.S.O.'s Grade 1 had qualified, 8 F.S.O.'s Grade 3, and 3 or 4 F.S.O.'s Grade 4. Some of these were already in the Department. With the appointment of all the successful candidates to the Department, the pressure would be somewhat relieved and there would be an opportunity to train the junior men. At the present time, there were eight or ten F.S.O.'s Grade 1 in training who, at the end of the year, might be fitted to go abroad. The Personnel Division was now working out a regular system of training.

21. Mr. MacDermot referred to the form which had been sent out to Heads of Mission for the purpose of reporting on F.S.O.'s serving abroad. He said that this form had been devised after consultation with a number of people. While most Heads of Mission had completed the form, some had found it not entirely satisfactory. It had been agreed, therefore, that the form should be simplified and that provision should be made for reporting on senior officers in order to ensure that their special qualifications for posting were indicated. Reports on junior officers should give some indication of their potentialities. The new form would be reduced in size and more flexible in use.

22. These reports had three objectives. One was to provide the Personnel and Planning Board with reports which could be used in making recommendations for promotion and transfer. One was to determine which F.S.O.'s should be recommended for special training; details on special training were now being worked out with the Civil Service Commission. The third was to assist the Board in posting officers appropriately.

23. Mr. Robertson suggested that it would be useful if some indication could be given on the form as to the purpose for which the information would be used. General Vanier recommended that considerable latitude should be given to the Head of Mission as to the form in which he made his report. He also emphasized the need for maintaining the utmost care in handling the completed report to ensure that it should be accessible only to those who were required in the course of their duties to handle the report. He raised the question of whether or not the officer who was the subject of the report should see the comments made about himself. The general consensus was that this was undesirable. It was agreed, however, that it was a normal responsibility for a Head of Mission to talk to an officer on whom he was reporting, drawing his attention to any deficiency in his work.

24. Mr. Pearson said that the Department was trying to get as many promotions as possible through the Civil Service Commission. In recommending promotions, time spent in war service was taken into account along with time spent in the Department. There were many factors to be considered, however, and the difficulty was increased by the fact that so many juniors had been taken in at the same time and had shown a fairly level standard of proficiency. Mr. Robertson expressed his opinion that promotions from F.S.O. Grade 1 to 2 should be automatic and after Grade 3 had been reached promotions should be selective. Mr. Pearson pointed out that the Civil Service Commission was averse to automatic promotions from one grade to another. Continued attention was being given to the whole question of promotion however, and recommendations in all grades were duly going forward.

25. Mr. MacDermot reported that the Department had taken an active part in bringing the National Defence College in Kingston into being and was anxious to emphasize the civilian aspects of its activities. Mr. Arnold Smith of the Department had been made available as civilian instructor and Mr. Jean Fournier was being posted to the College as a senior student.

26. Mr. Pearson drew attention to the increasing co-operation on personnel and administrative matters between the Departments of Trade and Commerce and External Affairs through the Joint Committee on the Co-ordination and Administration of the two Departments. Difficulties were of course encountered, as for example, over the appointment of Chargés d'Affaires. The Joint Committee had recently agreed that the normal practice in appointing a Chargé d'Affaires should be to appoint any External Affairs officer with a designation of First Secretary or higher, Chargé d'Affaires irrespective of the rank of the Foreign Trade Service Officer at the post, and where junior to that rank the External Affairs officer should be appointed Chargé d'Affaires if both were of the same F.S.O. Grade. Where the senior External Affairs officer was designated as Second or Third Secretary and the senior Foreign Trade Service Officer was of a higher grade, each case should be considered on its merits. Some commercial appointments in the External Affairs service had had good effect on morale, and a Commercial Counsellor usually developed the feeling that he was a part of the diplomatic machinery. In the last six years, owing to rapid expansion, opportunities for promotion in the External Affairs service had been more numerous than in the Department of Trade and Commerce; in that Department many officers of senior standing could not be given the promotion that their service warranted. Trade and Commerce was therefore willing to direct such people to External Affairs. Mr. Pearson said that we were very glad to have some of these, when they were highly qualified, for positions in the External Affairs service although we had to protect the interests of our own officers. Reports on Trade Officers from Heads of Mission were therefore of considerable importance and were also useful when consideration was being given to the appointment of a Chargé d'Affaires. Mr. Robertson pointed out that different qualifications were specified for entering each service and expressed the opinion that since the original entry was through different doors it was normally difficult to use Trade and Commerce people in the External Affairs service. The possibility of a joint or common examination might well be discussed before the next foreign service competition.

Opening of New Offices

27. Mr. Pearson said with the exception of the establishment of new Consulates we were beginning to see the limit of our expansion in 1948. In addition to the opening of a Legation in Belgrade we would probably open one or two offices in South America; it would be difficult to refuse the repeated requests from Colombia; Venezuela came second on our list of obligations in South America. It was possible also that a third Latin-American post might be opened in Uruguay under the supervision of a Chargé d'Affaires. Finland had also sought an agreement for the establishment of a Finnish Legation in Ottawa; we had agreed in principle but we had informed the Finnish Government that owing to lack of staff it would be impossible for us to reciprocate for some time. Since we would soon have to appoint a Minister in Sweden we had suggested that we might accredit him also to Finland if such an arrangement were acceptable to the Finnish Government, but we would not be in a position to open an office in Helsinki. Before long we must appoint Ministers in Poland and Czechoslovakia, an Ambassador in Brazil, and a High Commissioner in Pakistan.

28. Although the opening of new posts would require five or six secretaries, it was the hope of the Department that the staff at some of the existing posts could also be strengthened in 1948. The Consulate-General in Chicago will be opened on November 1 with the appointment of a Consul who would be designated as Consul-General. It was hoped that the Consulate-General in San Francisco would open in January 1948, and that two other Consulates in the United States, for which appropriation had been provided, would be opened later in that year. In the West, Los Angeles would probably be the site, while in the East, Boston was a possibility although preference might be given to one of the border cities such as Cleveland or Detroit. Where Consulates were established there would be no separate trade offices. Mr. MacDermot said that while it was hoped eventually to make the consular service and foreign service interchangeable, separate examinations had been held this year for Consular Officers with a view to obtaining people who did not have university degrees but had special or technical qualifications which would be useful in the Consular Service. It was probable that no further consular examinations would be held.

The Situation in Ottawa

29. Mr. Pearson briefly commented on the work in Ottawa. The responsibilities of the First Political Division which is concerned with international organization are increasing in scope and importance, particularly so with the election of Canada to the Security Council. With the appointment of a permanent representative on the Security Council, we will have to open and staff an office in New York; this will probably require at least six officers. In the Second Political Division, understaffing had been intensified by the rapid movement of personnel. In the past two and one-half years the term of an officer in the Division had averaged eight months. It was planned shortly to separate European and Commonwealth affairs into two Divisions. Mr. Escott Reid would continue in charge of the European Division and Mr. R.A. Mackay would head the Commonwealth Division. The Legal Division needed extra staff, and the present international economic situation placed an especially heavy burden on the Economic Division which was also understaffed; a number of economists should be available from the list of successful candidates in the senior examinations. The Consular Division had accomplished much in the last six months including re-organization of the Passport Office and the issuing of Consular Instructions. The Division's present need for assistance would increase with the opening of the new Consulates. The Information Division, one of the most important in the Department, is now headed by Mr. Saul Rae. Because of the problems arising from the amalgamation of C.I.S. with the Department, it has been operating under some handicap during the past year, but many of these problems have now been straightened out.

30. One of the major problems confronting the Department has been the lack of space. It was now hoped that by the end of the year the Department of Finance would have moved from the East Block and with the exception of the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council Office, all of the East Block would be available to the Department of External Affairs. We would also require the space of four and one-half floors which we now use in the New Post Office.

AFTERNOON SESSION — INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS — THE CANADIAN POSITION

. . .

Canadian Responsibilities as a Member of the Security Council

40. Mr. Pearson reminded the meeting that until now Canada had often been able to avoid taking sides on international questions which were not of direct concern to this country. However, our election to the Security Council changed this situation and would increase our problems. We would be faced with unfamiliar and somewhat remote problems such as the situation in Indonesia. He pointed out that because the Canadian Government would now be faced with the necessity of making decisions on such matters, reports from representatives abroad would be even more necessary and important than in the past.

41. Several Heads of Mission present suggested that advance notice might be sent to them advising of matters on which reports would be useful. They felt if they could be more generally informed concerning problems under discussion in the Department and be given some indication of the general line of thought developing in the Department, they would be in a better position to send in useful and pertinent reports.

42. There was some discussion of the various ways in which this could be accomplished. Mr. Reid said that some consideration might be given to establishing a Policy Committee, the reports of which could be sent to missions abroad. It was pointed out, however, that it would not always be desirable to send out details on matters of policy still under consideration by the Government. Mr. Wrong said that there was considerable merit in the British system of reporting, which specified whether the matter was under consideration on the official level or on the ministerial level.

43. An expansion of the minutes of the weekly meeting of Heads of Division was suggested as one improvement which might be made in keeping Heads of Mission posted on developments in Ottawa. It was also suggested that there should be a wider circulation of important despatches and memoranda. Mr. Pearson pointed out that the inauguration of a circular document series in January of this year provided for a wider and more systematic distribution of such material. There was, however, still room for considerable improvement and he suggested that all Divisions should keep in mind the needs of posts abroad and be alert to see that adequate circulation was given to reports or despatches on subjects with which they were dealing. Mr. Reid said that if periodic commentaries similar to those prepared in the London and Paris offices could be prepared in other posts, they would make a useful addition to the material circulated to all missions.

SECTION B

ATTACHÉS MILITAIRES
MILITARY ATTACHÉS

5. DEA/50037-40-1

Le secrétaire du Comité des chefs d'état-major au secrétaire du Comité mixte du renseignement

Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee to Secretary, Joint Intelligence Committee

SECRET [Ottawa], January 25, 1947

APPOINTMENT OF SERVICE ATTACHÉS

I refer to your memorandum of December 14[4] enclosing the recommendations of the Joint Intelligence Committee with regard to the general principles to be observed in the appointment of attachés and Service requirements and priorities based on these principles.

These proposals were considered by the Chiefs of Staff at their 376th meeting, January 21, and it was agreed:

(a) To approve the general principles outlined by the Joint Intelligence Committee, in particular that the Joint Intelligence Committee should be responsible for the constant review of the requirements for attaché representation abroad and recommendations regarding priorities for appointments between the various Services;

(b) That the Chief of the Air Staff and the Chief of the General Staff discuss the future policy regarding Service representation in Moscow on the understanding that only one Service attaché could be accommodated there at present; and

(c) That the appointments of military attachés to other countries be considered individually at the appropriate time.

The following comments of the Under Secretary of State for External Affairs in regard to the proposed military attaché posts are brought to your attention:

(a) Accommodation in Moscow for one attaché only was available.

(b) Diplomatic Missions to Poland and Czechoslovakia were intended and it was suggested that one Service attaché for each country should be designated and proceed at the same time as the diplomatic representative.

(c) The reasons for the appointment of a Service attaché to China as stated by the Joint Intelligence Committee did not appear valid.

---

[4]Voir le volume 12, document 11./See Volume 12, Document 11.

(d) It was not felt that more than one Service attaché in Norway would be desirable. A representative of another Service if required for the Scandinavian countries, could be appointed to Sweden when that Mission was established.

(e) The reasons for an appointment of a Service attaché to Greece as stated by the Joint Intelligence Committee, did not appear valid, though from many points of view this would be a useful post.

(f) The usefulness of Service attachés in Central and South American countries, other than Mexico would not appear to be great and these countries should therefore be considered as very low in any system of priorities.

(g) The Joint Intelligence Committee had recommended that in the event of diplomatic missions being opened in Czechoslovakia, Sweden, Poland, Yugoslavia, Italy or Turkey, European attaché posts be reviewed. Since it was intended to establish diplomatic missions in these countries, a review would obviously be required.

H.W. BEAN
Group Captain, RCAF

6. DEA/50037-40-1

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au président du Comité mixte du renseignement

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chairman, Joint Intelligence Committee

SECRET Ottawa, January 30, 1947

Dear Mr. [R.G.] Riddell:

I am writing you this note as Chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee. You will recall that at the last meeting of the Chiefs of Staff there was a discussion of a memorandum on appointment of Service Attachés which had been prepared by the Joint Intelligence Committee. In the minutes of this meeting I am reported as having made a number of comments on this memorandum. These comments are listed seriatum and give, I am afraid, an impression that I was generally critical of the memorandum in question. I hope that any such impression can be corrected with the Joint Intelligence Committee because it would not accurately reflect my views. I am in hearty accord with the main recommendations of the memorandum. The points which I mentioned at the meeting were merely by way of observation and were not meant to be dogmatic judgments. I am, for instance, stated as saying the reasons for the appointment of a Service Attaché to China, as stated by the Joint Intelligence Committee, do not appear valid. What I had in mind was merely a doubt that a post in China under the present Chinese Government was of primary importance from the point of view of information that might be gathered concerning the Soviet Union. I had the same doubt in mind when I queried the reason for an appointment to Athens. I would have thought, for instance, that much more could have been learned about Soviet policies and methods in Warsaw and Prague than in Athens or Nanking. That was all I had in mind.

I also did not mean to imply that the usefulness of Service Attachés in all Central and South American countries, other than Mexico, would not appear to be great and that these countries should be considered as very low in any system of priorities. I thought I had observed that Argentina and Brazil might be fairly important countries in this respect but that the other countries should be very low in our system of priorities.

I am sending you these explanatory observations because I would not wish the Joint Intelligence Committee to think I am lacking in appreciation of the hard and intelligent work they have done in preparing this report on the appointment of Service Attachés.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the Secretary of the Chiefs of Staff.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

7. DEA/50037-40-1

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au chef d'état-major de la marine

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chief of the Naval Staff

SECRET Ottawa, March 7, 1947

Dear Admiral Reid,

You will recall that we discussed recently the question of a Naval Attaché to Warsaw. I enclose a copy of a letter† which I have sent to the Chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee containing my views on the question of this appointment. For diplomatic reasons, if on no other grounds, I am most anxious that we do not create the impression that we are appointing diplomatic missions to various countries abroad for the sole purpose of gathering intelligence. You will note that I have suggested to the Chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee that it might be more appropriate if they considered the desirability of appointing a Naval Attaché to Stockholm when a diplomatic mission is set up there, which I expect will be in the near future.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

8. DEA/50037-40-1

Le président du sous-comité du Comité mixte du renseignement au président du Comité mixte du renseignement

Chairman, Sub-Committee, Joint Intelligence Committee to Chairman, Joint Intelligence Committee

SECRET Ottawa, July 3, 1947

The Sub-Committee, appointed by the Joint Intelligence Committee at its 166th meeting on April 30th, has now considered the appointment of Attachés to Poland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark, Yugoslavia, and Turkey. The recommendations for these appointments are made on the basis of priorities between the needs of the three Services, and on the basis of an equitable distribution of representatives of the Services. The following recommendations are made:

1. That a Military Attaché be appointed to Warsaw.

The Polish Army is being re-equipped with Soviet equipment and is being organized and trained largely on the Soviet pattern. There are also a considerable number of Soviet officers operating with the Polish forces. In addition, therefore, to reporting on the Polish Army itself, considerable information should be available as to Soviet training methods, organization and equipment. It seems reasonable to expect that more information concerning the Soviet Army would, in fact, be obtained in Poland than could be obtained in Moscow itself.

2. That an Air Attaché be appointed to Stockholm.

Since local administrative conditions preclude the appointment of more than one Service Attaché, it is considered that an Air Attaché should be appointed, for the reasons stated below, although it is noted that the Canadian Army is vitally interested in studying the operations of the Swedish Army in Arctic conditions:

(a) Sweden has extensive scientific research and developmental facilities and is emphasizing the study of nuclear physics and aeronautical research at the present time;

(b) With the exception of Great Britain, France and the Soviet Union, Sweden has the most active Air Force of any other European nation at the present time. There would be opportunities for the study of the operation of the Swedish Air Force in Arctic conditions.

(c) The most recent appreciation of the Joint Intelligence Committee of the possible scale of attack against the North American continent by the Soviet Union concludes that an attack across the polar cap would be the most feasible route by the end of the next ten years. In these circumstances, the study of flying conditions in northern Sweden, which would be similar to the conditions under which the forces of the Soviet Union would have to operate, makes the appointment of an Air Attaché of additional importance.

3. While it is considered that a Naval Attaché should be appointed to Norway and Denmark, no recommendation is made at the present time as it is unlikely that the Navy will have a candidate available for some time.

4. That a Military Attaché be appointed to Yugoslavia.

The reasons for recommending this appointment are similar to the reasons outlined in the case of Poland. In this connection, it is of some interest to note that the present strength of the three Services in Yugoslavia are as follows:

Army	300,000
Air Force	5,900
Security Troops	80,000
Navy	3,000

5. That a Naval Attaché be appointed to Turkey.

The Turkish Navy at present consists of 1,000 officers and 15,000 ratings, and it is being rapidly expanded. The Navy now comprises the following units:

1	Battle Cruiser
2	Cruisers
12	Destroyers
14	Submarines
40	Minesweepers

as well as other small craft. In addition the Soviet Black Sea Fleet is of considerable importance, and from its composition it would appear that the U.S.S.R. visualizes its eventual use in waters beyond the Black Sea. The importance, therefore, of the maintenance of the status quo in the Dardanelles is substantial from a naval point of view.

However, it might be of interest to note the relative strength of the three Services in Turkey:

Army	489,000
Security Troops	47,000
Air Force	26,000
Navy	16,000

In view of this and the fact that the defence of Turkey and therefore the defence of the strategic land-bridge, between Europe and the Near-East, is largely the responsibility of the Turkish Army, the Canadian Army has a pronounced interest in Turkey.

However, although Turkey's strategic position would justify the appointment of Naval, Military and Air Attachés, the initial size of the diplomatic Mission at Ankara would limit, at the outset at least, the number of Attaché appointments to one. In the circumstances, it is considered that a Naval Attaché to Ankara should be appointed, although the equal priority of military and air interest is recognized.

G.G. CREAN

2e PARTIE/PART 2

REPRÉSENTATION DIPLOMATIQUE ET CONSULAIRE
DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR REPRESENTATION

SECTION A

GÉNÉRALITÉS
GENERAL

9. DEA/9323-D-40

Note du chef de la Direction consulaire

Memorandum by Head, Consular Division

[Ottawa], April 14, 1947

EXPANSION CANADIAN CONSULAR SERVICE

Purpose

Decision having been taken to expand the Canadian Consular Service, it is the purpose of this paper to discuss the circumstances prompting the decision, to make proposals regarding personnel, scales of pay, recruitment, etcetera, and to estimate staff requirements.

Circumstances

Historically, from the time of Confederation and largely until the present, consular functions on behalf of Canadians in foreign lands have been performed by H.B.M.[5] Consuls. Until the Imperial Conference of 1926, from which sprang the Statute of Westminster, they alone provided protection for Canadians abroad, helped them in their difficulties with foreign governments, issued their passports, secured their visas, notarized their documents, registered the birth of their children, looked after their estates when they died and, in general, discharged those manifold responsibilities which by international custom and usage are recognized as the duties of a Consul.

Even to-day it is the British Consuls who, under the law of Canada, perform all the consular duties which are necessary in ports abroad for Canadian seamen and merchant ships flying the Canadian flag.

Between the wars a beginning was made with Canadian representation abroad. A few diplomatic missions were established under the Department of External Affairs and the Trade Commissioner Service of the Department of Trade and Commerce was developed. At the diplomatic missions there were officers duly accredited for consular duties and the Trade Commissioners found that, though they were not accredited as consular officers to the countries in which they were serving, they could not in fact escape a measure of consular responsibility.

[5]His Britannic Majesty.

This was the position at the outbreak of war in 1939. Since the end of the war in Europe there has been a very rapid development of Canadian representation in foreign countries. To-day there are diplomatic missions in the following countries:

Argentina,	Czechoslovakia,	Norway,
Belgium,	Denmark,	Peru,
Brazil,	France,	Poland,
Chile,	Greece,	Switzerland,
China,	Mexico,	Union of Soviet
Cuba,	The Netherlands,	Socialist Republics, and United States of America.

It is expected that other missions will shortly be opened at Rome and Ankara.

There are Consulates General at New York, Lisbon and Caracas, a Consulate at Sao Paulo, and Vice Consulates at Shanghai and Portland Me. [Oregon]

Thus there are more than twenty diplomatic posts in foreign countries all of which have offices of consular rank and responsibility, in addition to the Canadian Military Mission in Germany and the Canadian Liaison Mission to Japan, which also perform consular functions.

The above does not take into account the Offices of the High Commissioners in the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Ireland, Newfoundland and India, where technically such Officers are not described as Consuls but none the less perform consular functions.

It has now been decided that further development of Canadian consular representation cannot be postponed and that it is for various reasons desirable to accelerate the process of relieving British Consuls of Canadian responsibilities at points outside the capitals of foreign countries. The Department has been impelled to this decision particularly because of the situation which exists in the United States of America. In that country, with the exception of the District of Columbia and the City of New York, Canadian consular work is done almost entirely by British Consuls. The essentially close association which exists between the two countries, the large Canadian population in the United States — particularly in New England, the border cities and California, the common interests coupled to increasing specific Canadian problems, such as those which arise from the new Canadian Citizenship Act, the vast interchange of tourist population, all contribute to a need for direct Canadian consular representation. It is no longer compatible with our Canadian status that our affairs should continue to be the responsibility of United Kingdom representatives; nor in the economic circumstances of the present day can it be thought very fair that we should expect the United Kingdom to bear the cost (estimated at $250,000. per annum) of doing purely Canadian work in the territory of our nearest neighbour.

With these facts in mind, it is intended to open four new Canadian Consulates (one or two of which may be Consulates General) in the United States by the close of the present year, with the expectation that three more may be necessary in succeeding months, making with the Consulate General in New York a total of eight consular posts in the United States outside the capital at Washington.

It will, therefore, be seen that in the course of the next twelve months it may be expected that there will be more than forty Canadian diplomatic offices abroad doing Canadian consular work. This will call for an addition of some twenty-five to thirty-five officers of rank equivalent to that of F.S.O. Beyond that it is scarcely possible to forecast; it seems, however, more and more likely that wherever there is substantial Canadian consular work to be done it will be proper for the Department to assume the responsibility, which will in some measure at least depend upon the extension of Canadian trade and shipping into world markets.

Duties General

It is desirable here to set out in general what a Consul does; reference will be made later to particular and detailed duties. The tasks of the Consul vary in some measure with his particular location; i.e., whether he is a member of a diplomatic mission situated at a capital, or at a post outside the capital in a country where a diplomatic mission is established, or at a post in a country where he is the only representative of his own country.

Wherever he may be, he is the representative of Canada. "Whether he is assigned to a large or small country, the majority of people who have never visited his own land will judge the nation by its representative; just as surely as those who have visited it will be quick to notice if he lacks the right qualifications." (Sir G. Campbell 'Of True Experience'). His representational responsibilities are the same as those of any other Foreign Service Officer of equivalent rank.

It is impossible to lay too much emphasis on this representational aspect. Whenever he is the officer in charge of his post, he must take his place as the recognized and accredited leader of the local Canadian community. It is his duty to promote satisfactory relations and to report all matters of interest to the Government of Canada occurring within his allotted territory.

Requirements General

There are three classes of consular officers:

Consuls General,
Consuls,
Vice-Consuls.

Consuls General

Since Consuls General will usually be appointed by ministerial selection rather than by Civil Service process, this paper does not discuss their duties, qualifications, or emoluments.

Consuls Duties

To represent Canada at a post abroad, to promote Canadian interests in the country to which he is posted, to maintain registers of Canadians living in the area under his jurisdiction, to encourage Canadian tourist trades, to handle applications for immigration to Canada, to prepare political and commercial reports, to look after the interests of Canadian Merchant Seamen and shipping abroad, to issue travel documents and grant visas, to render assistance to distressed Canadian nationals, to prepare and notarize documents, to conduct correspondence, to maintain records and accounts, and to perform such other related duties as may from time to time be prescribed.

It should be noted that though the representational duties of a Consul will vary with the post at which he may be stationed, his particular responsibilities as defined above remain fairly constant.

When a Consul is stationed at a capital where there is a diplomatic mission, he will be responsible to the Head of Mission for all the consular activities at the post. When he is at a Consulate General, he will be responsible in the same manner to the Consul General. At an independent post he will be in sole charge.

Consuls Qualifications

Age, not less than forty years. Education, graduation from a university of recognized standing or its equivalent in experience in an administrative capacity in official, business or professional life. He should be a man of good bearing, breeding and dignity, having extensive experience as noted above. He should have the general ability to acquire at least a working knowledge of international law and customs concerning consular practices, and a complete and detailed knowledge of all Canadian instructions and regulations dealing with consular and related matters. He should possess facility in public speaking, tact and ability to meet the public.

Vice-Consuls Duties

The duties of a Vice-Consul vary only in degree with those of a Consul. He will be required to deal with the same wide range of subjects, but usually under the supervision of a Consul to whom he will be responsible.

Vice-Consuls Qualifications

Age, not less than twenty-five years. Education, graduation from a university of recognized standing — proven capacity and suitability by service in the Department of External Affairs may be accepted in lieu of university graduation, good family background, general cultivation and pleasant personality, experience — either post-graduate, academic, business, professional or Departmental.

Consuls and Vice-Consuls Emoluments

Consuls Grade I:	—	$6300.,	$6600.,	$6900.,	$7200.;
Consuls Grade II:	—	$5400.,	$5640.,	$5880.,	$6000.;
Consuls Grade III:	—	$4500.,	$4680.,	$5040.,	$5220.,	$5400.;
Vice-Consuls Grade I:	—	$3900.,	$4080.,	$4260.,	$4440.,	$4500.;
Vice-Consuls Grade II:	—	$3300.,	$3420.,	$3540.,	$3780.,	$3900.;
Vice-Consuls Grade III:	—	$2700.,	$2820.,	$2940.,	$3060.,	$3120.

Salaries as above would be supplemented while on post by such allowances as might be approved.

Recruitment of Consuls and Vice-Consuls

It will be noted that the salary ranges proposed for Consuls and Vice-Consuls are the same as those already approved for Foreign Service Officers Grades I to VI.

This is because of the importance in the Departmental view of ensuring that as far as possible there should be maximum interchangeability within the Department.

It will, however, be observed that the educational qualifications for Consuls differ from those demanded for Foreign Service Officers in that for the former there is a measure of relaxation of the university graduation requirement. It is necessary to emphasize that there is no intention that this relaxation should be widely, or at all generally, applied. Ordinarily the Department would hope to provide its Consuls and Vice-Consuls from the ranks of the Foreign Service Officers. In the present circumstances, however, there are no Foreign Service Officers of suitable seniority available for appointment as Consuls, and it is not thought that advertisement would produce the necessary desirable graduate applicants. Moreover, with the passing of the years and the acquisition of general business, professional, or official experience, the technical qualification of university graduation diminishes in importance to the general suitability of the candidate. In the particular classes of Consuls Grades I, II and III, as suggested above, it will be seen that the Department is seeking men with a minimum age of forty years, and in the more senior appointments some candidates over fifty may be the most suitably equipped all round. If a senior candidate with unusual qualifications, but without a university degree, is available, at this stage when the matter is urgent, it would be only good business to employ him.

A second and compelling reason for relaxing the university graduation requirement is that of providing an avenue of promotion in the Foreign Service of Canada for men and women who have proved their capacity and all round suitability for advancement by service in the Department of External Affairs.

It is not expected that there will be any large number of appointments made to consular posts from either of the two classes mentioned above. As stated, the normal source of recruitment would be the F.S.O. classes. The sole purpose of the proposal now made is — first to take care of the initial needs of a relatively few senior consular posts — and second to provide a more distant horizon for really able people in the lower ranks of the Departmental service.

It is, therefore, proposed that Consuls and Vice-Consuls, as above, should be drawn from two classes:

a) F.S.O. Grades I to VI, and
b) Administrative Officers External Affairs, which latter class already exists in part but should be extended to parallel in emoluments and Grades those of the existing Foreign Service classes, thus:

F.S.O. Grade VI	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade VI
F.S.O. Grade V	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade V
F.S.O. Grade IV	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade IV
F.S.O. Grade III	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade III
F.S.O. Grade II	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade II
F.S.O. Grade I	=	A.O. Dept. of External Affairs Grade I

Anticipated Quantitive Requirements

A survey is about to be undertaken, by actual visit of a senior officer, of the requirements at various points in the United States of America. When that survey is completed, it will be possible to speak with much greater definition. However, it may be expected that in the course of the next twelve months the requirements of the Consular Service may absorb as many as twenty-four officers of rank equivalent to Foreign Service Officer Grades IV, V, and VI and forty-four officers of rank equivalent to Foreign Service Officer Grades II, III, and I. Of this number it seems probable that approximately one half will be required between July 1st and September 30th, 1947, and that the remainder may be absorbed during the period October 1st, 1947 to March 1948. This admittedly very rough estimate is based on the assumption that at rock bottom the requirements of the Head Office establishment and of eight consular posts in the United States would absorb approximately forty officers of the above ranks. The estimate of an additional twenty-eight is based on the belief that Canadian consular responsibilities are constantly expanding and the knowledge that posts abroad are at present, in many cases, seriously understaffed with trained consular personnel.

It is estimated that the following will be required as a minimum Headquarters establishment:

1 F.S.O. Grade V or VI, or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade IV or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade III or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade II or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade I or equivalent rank
2 Principal Clerks or equivalent rank
4 Clerks Grade IVor equivalent rank

As some indication of order of magnitude, it is very roughly estimated that a Consulate General or large Consulate in the United States might absorb:

2 F.S.O.'s Grade V or VI, or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade IV or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade II or equivalent rank
1 F.S.O. Grade I or equivalent rank
1 Principal Clerk or equivalent rank
2 Clerks Grade IV or equivalent rank.

SECTION B

AUTRICHE
AUSTRIA

10. CH/Vol. 2094

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1626 London, October 24, 1947

SECRET

Dr. H. Schmid, Austrian Minister in London, who has just returned from Austria, has been asked by the Austrian Foreign Minister officially to take up with us the question of the appointment of an Austrian representative in Canada.

2. During the conversation we had, I explained to Dr. Schmid that as Canada, unlike the United Kingdom, had never recognized the incorporation of Austria within the German Reich, it might not be necessary formally to terminate the state of war with his country. I also told him that due to the shortage of diplomatic personnel it would be extremely difficult for Canada to reciprocate in the immediate future if it were decided to receive an Austrian Representative in Ottawa. Dr. Schmid said that he understood this point, and that the Foreign Office would be willing to accept this situation for the time being as they were eager to send a representative immediately. He added that they had already made their choice, and would like us to give our agreement to Dr. Herbert Schallenberg-Krassl, who could be appointed either as Chargé d'Affaires, or whatever sort of Austrian Representative we might suggest.

3. A curriculum vitae left with us gives the following information on Dr. Schallenberg-Krassl:

Born March 29th, 1901, in Vienna;

Secondary and University studies in Great Britain, France and Italy, 1921-1925;

Honorary Austrian Consul-General in Prague, 1936-1938;

Since May 7th, 1945, attached to the Office of the Austrian Political Representative in Prague;

Since July 1st, 1947, Counsellor of Legation at the Austrian Legation in Prague.

4. Dr. Schmid explained that his Government was most anxious for an urgent and favourable reply, and I should be glad to receive your comments on the question whether or not the Canadian Government would be prepared to accept an Austrian Representative, and if so, whether Dr. Schallenberg-Krassl would be acceptable.

SECTION C

LA MISSION MILITAIRE AUPRÈS DE LA COMMISSION ALLIÉE DE CONTRÔLE EN ALLEMAGNE MILITARY MISSION TO THE ALLIED CONTROL COMMISSION, GERMANY

11. L.B.P./Vol. 11

Extrait d'une lettre du chef, la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Letter from Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL AND MOST CONFIDENTIAL Berlin, March 10, 1947

My Dear Mike [Pearson],

Your letter of the 19th of February, which mark you, only reached me on the 8th of March, ordering the civilianization of this Mission has pretty well disembowelled me.

. . .

As for your general plan of administration, I shall write you a 'Dear Mr. Pearson' letter to go out by the bag at the end of the week. The only irksome thing about it is that you have imposed upon me the obligation to write a book which nobody will read. Take heart, however, because at the moment I plan to give it a succinct conclusion, which perhaps might catch somebody's eye.

In the first place, let me say that whereas a large measure of civilianization in this outfit is quite feasible, our circumstances are such that the retention of some military people is essential, and this beyond question, and in spite of what the Army at home may think about it. This is a view with which I am sure Mr. Brooke Claxton will eventually agree. There is a qualification to this for so long as I can retain some of my present helpers in military guise the end result will be the same.

For my part, having suffered crucifixion during the '30s on Slater Street at the hands of External, I am at a loss to understand your pusillanimity in this Year of Grace 1947, two years nearly after the cessation of hostilities. I am afraid the old Department ain't what she used to be, for long since should you have been able to regain your former authoritarian position which, while usually benificently exercised, was sometimes unfortunately mis-directed.

. . .

I said earlier that this Mission cannot be completely civilianized. Its Head could well be any one of your Foreign Service Officers, provided he have slapped on him some fictitious military rank. But it so happens that we live in and by the military machine which no one but a soldier can work. I have with me at the moment

McQueen[6] and Clabon,[7] the former my Deputy, the latter my Administrative Officer. If I must reduce, let me hasten to say that reduction is possible. Of my own volition in the interests of due economy, I sent five soldiers home last month, and I can cut down some more. The job of Military Deputy and Administrative Officer might in one way or another be combined. Again it might not, in which case I could repatriate my Sergeant-Major. McQueen has been here 18 months, and believe me, the Quadripartite machinery of Berlin is very complicated. A stranger wouldn't get it in 6 months, nor would the Archangel Gabriel. So much that we do must be on the 'old boy' basis, and to do this one must be an 'old boy'. And so I know that the continued service of McQueen is essential for the well-being of this outfit, and to prevent it from developing creaks in every joint. For myself, I have passed the age, nor, if you will bear with me, would it be fitting for me to run my legs off in garages, supply depots, the offices of third secretaries and the like.

You have intimated that you wish to send me Hurley,[8] and I gather that McQueen and Clabon should disappear. Let me come back at you and earnestly recommend that McQueen be retained and Hurley be posted elsewhere. I have yet to hear that you have a superfluity of officers (unless perhaps it be Ambassadors, with whom at the moment I am not concerned). But let me repeat, you cannot completely civilianize this Mission with success. If you do this with new blood I can guarantee that the weepings and wailings that you will get from whoever may be trying to run it at the time will outdo the lamentations of Jeremiah at the service of Tenebrae during Holy Week. Believe it or not, they will fully measure up to those that were emanating from 72, Avenue Foch, some eighteen months ago.

All this from the heart. The laboriously compiled book will be dispatched to Mr. Pearson by the next bag.

Sincerely,

MAURICE POPE

[6]Le colonel/Col. J.G. McQueen.
[7]Le capitaine/Capt. A.W. Clabon.
[8]Le colonel/Colonel J.J. Hurley.

SECTION D

BRÉSIL
BRAZIL

12. DEA/2446-A-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], January 29, 1947

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; OFFICES IN BRAZIL, CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND POLAND

At the meeting of the Cabinet on January 29th, the Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that it was intended to appoint the Trade Commissioner at Sao Paolo, Brazil, to the rank of Consul; this had been agreed with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

It was also intended to establish offices in Prague and Warsaw under Counsellors who would act as Chargé d'Affaires. The officers concerned would be R.M. Macdonnell (Czechoslovakia) and K.P. Kirkwood (Poland).

The Cabinet noted with approval the Minister's intentions in these respects.

J. S[TARNES]
for L.B. Pearson

SECTION E

COLOMBIE, URUGUAY, VENEZUELA
COLOMBIA, URUGUAY, VENEZUELA

13. DEA/1082-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], May 27, 1947

PROPOSALS FOR EXCHANGE OF DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVES BETWEEN CANADA AND URUGUAY

During my absence in New York Mr. Beaudry sent you a memorandum† reviewing our negotiations with Uruguay for the exchange of diplomatic representatives. The memorandum recommended that Mr. Chipman be instructed to inform the Uruguayan Foreign Minister that our position remains the same as in October, 1944, namely, that we would welcome the establishment of a Uruguayan Mission in Canada even if we see no hope of establishing a Canadian Mission in Uruguay for at least a year. I am attaching a copy of the memorandum hereto.

Mr. Chipman has sent a further communication, telegram No. 77 of May 24, attached,† stating that he has been approached once more by the Uruguayan Ambassador on this matter.

If we agree to accept a Uruguayan Diplomatic Mission here in Ottawa, I think we must be prepared to accept missions from Colombia and Venezuela with the ultimate obligation of establishing Canadian Missions in those countries. While I am reluctant to extend our commitments for opening new missions because of our lack of suitable personnel to staff such missions, I do not see how we can go back on our commitment of October, 1944, when the British Ambassador at Montevideo told the Uruguayan Foreign Minister on our behalf that the Canadian Government would be glad to receive a Minister from Uruguay on the understanding that we should reciprocate when circumstances permitted.

I would recommend, therefore, that we ask Mr. Chipman to inform the Uruguayan Minister that we would welcome the establishment of a Uruguayan Diplomatic Mission in Canada on the understanding that we will establish a Canadian Mission in Uruguay as soon as conveniently possible but that we can give no assurances at this time with regard to the date for establishment of the mission.[9]

L.B. P[EARSON]

14. DEA/3104-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, July 31, 1947

I think the time has come now when we should consider making plans to open missions in Colombia and Venezuela in 1948.

2. These two countries are more important to us than Peru or Chile. Our trade with them (18 millions with Colombia and 37 millions with Venezuela) is developing and was exceeded in 1946 by countries in this area only in the case of Brazil (38 millions), Argentina (28 millions) and Mexico (25 millions).

Your colleague, Mr. MacKinnon, feels that there are great possibilities for further expansion, particularly in the case of Colombia.

Mr. Stewart,[10] the Canadian Trade Commissioner at Bogota from 1943 until recently, has on more than one occasion observed that Colombia is worthy of real

[9]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Mr. Pearson is aware of the views expressed by the P[rime] M[inister] to him and to me on June 2nd and which are in accord with above recommendation. St. L[aurent] consideration in the extension of our diplomatic relations. In his opinion, Colombia, with the exception of Brazil, will develop more rapidly in the next ten years than any other Latin America country. We already have a considerable stake in Colombia in the Royal Bank and the Imperial Oil Company.

[10]W.T. Stewart.

3. In the course of the last few years, both countries have made numerous and very pressing requests for exchanging diplomatic representatives with this country. Further delay in establishing diplomatic relations will cause offence.

4. I suggest, therefore, that we inform both countries that we would welcome now their diplomatic representatives on the understanding that we would not reciprocate before 1948.

5. We know that the Government of Colombia would be prepared to accept the dual accreditation of Canadian representation to Colombia and Venezuela. If you consider that this would be a desirable solution in view of our shortage of trained personnel, we could make enquiries as to the reaction of the Government of Venezuela to this plan.[11]

L.B. P[EARSON]

15. DEA/1082-40

Note de la Troisième direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Third Political Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, September 5, 1947

RE ESTABLISHMENT OF URUGUAYAN LEGATION IN OTTAWA

Our Chargé d'Affaires in Buenos Aires has telegraphed us that he has received a note from the Uruguayan Ambassador to the Argentine informing him that the Uruguayan Government proposes to accredit Senor Don Cesarous Montero Bustamante as Minister to Canada and requesting the agrément of the Canadian Government.

2. You will recall that Mr. Chipman by our telegram of June 17, 1947, was instructed to reply to the request of the Uruguayan Government for an exchange of diplomatic missions along the following lines:

"The Canadian Government would welcome the establishment of a Uruguayan diplomatic mission in Ottawa on the understanding that a Canadian diplomatic mission in Montevideo would be established as soon as conveniently possible, but that the Canadian Government could give no assurances at this time with regard to the date of the establishment of such a mission."

---

[11]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Mr. [W.L.M.] King has agreed. St. L[aurent]

3. Previously in October 1944 we had requested the United Kingdom Ambassador to Uruguay to make a similar statement to the Uruguayan Government.

4. It seems to me that in view of the commitments we have given to the Uruguayan Government in the past, we must now allow them to establish a mission in Canada. Once a Uruguayan mission is established here I presume that we will be bound to reciprocate before opening any other mission in South America. As it is more important for us to exchange missions with Colombia and Venezuela than with Uruguay we should, I think, endeavour to establish missions in all three countries at the same time and, if they wish it, allow Colombia and Venezuela to establish missions here before we are ready to reciprocate.

5. Senor Bustamante is a career diplomat. He has served in the Uruguayan Foreign Service since 1910 and held posts in the United States, United Kingdom and France. There seems to be no objection to his appointment.

D.M. JOHNSON

16. DEA/1082-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, September 9, 1947

RE URUGUAY AND COLOMBIA

Confirming our conversation, I suggest that we begin to plan for the opening of a Legation in Uruguay in 1948. If the Uruguayans agree, and if this is not objectionable on other grounds, we could put our new mission in charge of our Ambassador to the Argentine, with a Chargé d'Affaires in Montevideo. I do not think that we could open other Latin American missions without reciprocating in some form with Uruguay, but this does not need to be done during the present year.

I think also that we should establish, in 1948, an Embassy in Colombia or Venezuela. As you know, we had hoped to have one Ambassador for both countries, but that is now impossible and, even if it were possible, it might be undesirable. We could, therefore, choose between the above two countries. I had thought, myself, that Colombia would have the prior claim, but I understand that this matter is being given further consideration. I would be glad if you would look after this matter also, in consultation with the Divisions concerned.

L.B. P[EARSON]

17. DEA/3104-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour la Troisième direction politique

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Third Political Division

[Ottawa], September 10, 1947

RE URUGUAY AND COLOMBIA

With reference to my conversation with you over the telephone this morning, I enclose a copy of a memorandum of the 9th September from the Under-Secretary on the matter.[12]

As regards Uruguay, it seems from the file, which I saw yesterday, that the Uruguayans have taken strong objections to our putting our new Mission in Uruguay in charge of our Ambassador to the Argentine, with a Chargé d'Affaires in Montevideo.

It seems to me, therefore, that we might plan for the opening of a Canadian Legation in Uruguay in 1948, with a separate Chargé d'Affaires, as we have done in the case of Sweden.

Meanwhile, we can proceed with the formalities required for the agreement of Mr. Bustamente, whose name has been put forward to us.

LAURENT BEAUDRY

18. DEA/3104-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], November 6, 1947

RE EXCHANGE OF DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS WITH COLOMBIA

With reference to Mr. Pearson's memorandum of July 31st, you will recall that the Prime Minister agreed that we should consider the establishment of diplomatic relations with Colombia and Venezuela if their governments would be willing to share one Ambassador.

As a result of further enquiries we have learned that such a suggestion would be unacceptable to both governments unless the Ambassador were permanently resident in their respective capitals.

---

[12]Le document précédent./The preceding document.

I would suggest, therefore, that we consider an exchange of missions with Colombia only, at this time, and attach for your approval, a draft teletype† to the Canadian Ambassador in Washington asking him to inform the Colombian Chargé d'Affaires that we would be willing to receive a diplomatic mission from his government in Ottawa at any time now, on the understanding that we will be unable to reciprocate before the latter half of 1948.

The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce would prefer simultaneous establishment of missions in Colombia and Venezuela, but, failing this, he agrees that a priority should be given to Colombia. At the time we establish our mission in Colombia next year it would appease the Venezuelans if we could then give them a definite date for opening our mission in Caracas.[13]

LAURENT BEAUDRY

SECTION F

CUBA

19. DEA/7590-P-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], September 9, 1947

RE MR. VAILLANCOURT

We should now proceed with the formalities required to elevate our Legation in Cuba to an Embassy. If they are completed while Mr. Vaillancourt is still in Havana, then he would be the first Ambassador to Cuba and transferred to Yugoslavia as Minister, with the personal rank of Ambassador. If the formalities are not completed, then Mr. Vaillancourt's successor would be the first Ambassador. Mr. Vaillancourt could be appointed to Yugoslavia as Minister to Yugoslavia, with the personal rank of Ambassador, which would be granted him on transfer, or, alternatively, we could tell him that the personal rank of Ambassador is not appropriate in the circumstances, but that, before long, the Legation in Belgrade would be elevated to an Embassy.

L.B. P[EARSON]

[13]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Yes. St. L[aurent]

20. DEA/7590-P-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au ministre à Cuba

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister in Cuba

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, November 19, 1947

Dear Mr. Vaillancourt,

I enclose a copy of a telegram sent to you today† in connection with your messages of November 3rd† and 12th† concerning the proposal to raise the rank of our Mission in Havana to that of Embassy.

When we first contemplated taking this step and seeking the King's approval for your appointment as Ambassador we had it in mind as an appropriate recognition of your outstanding services and of the desirability of uniformity in our diplomatic representation in the countries of Latin America in so far as rank of Mission is concerned. It seemed to us anomalous that our Mission in Cuba, where our commercial and other interests are very considerable, should have a status lower than that of countries whose relations with us are not as close or as varied.

Events seem to have occasioned the necessity of re-considering the effect which the announcement of your appointment to Yugoslavia,[14] and the almost simultaneous report of your appointment as Ambassador at Havana, would have, not only in those two countries but also in the mind of the public in Canada. The inordinate length of time required in obtaining the Yugoslav agrément, the further time necessary to secure the approval of His Majesty the King and the probable delay in confirmation by the Cuban Congress of the Cuban Foreign Office's anticipated willingness to approve the reciprocal raising of the Legations in Havana and Ottawa to the rank of Embassy, make it unwise, in our opinion, to proceed with arrangements for your appointment as Canadian Ambassador in Cuba. For example, it seems to us that if you were now to proceed with an official request of the Cuban authorities for the raising of the rank of our Mission at Havana it would be necessary for you at the same time to mention that you have been appointed Canadian Minister in Belgrade. This combination of notification would constitute a strange and inexplicable communication to the Cuban authorities. Furthermore they would, we feel, be puzzled by our action in accrediting you as Ambassador and then taking you away at once.

Looking at it from the view point of the Yugoslavs, we feel that they would think it rather strange if, after having pressed them continuously for a reply to our request for your appointment there as Minister, and after having just received their agrément, we were to announce your appointment as Ambassador in Havana, thus, in effect enlarging and confirming your appointment at your present post.

---

[14]La nomination de Vaillancourt en Yougoslavie fut annoncée le 2 janvier 1948.
The appointment of Vaillancourt to Yugoslavia was announced on January 2, 1948.

In addition to the above considerations there is an even more serious aspect. Having obtained the Yugoslav agrément, we have recommended that the King appoint you as His Canadian Minister in Belgrade and it is expected that His Majesty's approval will be signified at once. It seems to us that we cannot now ask His Majesty the King to accept a recommendation from His Canadian Ministers for your appointment as Ambassador at Havana, particularly as His Majesty would have to be asked to sign a Letter of Credence for you as Canadian Minister in Belgrade, and immediately afterwards a Letter of Credence for you as Ambassador at Havana.

Finally we are somewhat apprehensive regarding the effect which this juxtaposition of appointments would have in the minds of the public in Canada. You and we are well aware of the objective and the motive for the proposal to appoint you Ambassador at Havana, but we do not like to contemplate the effect upon the high regard in which you are held if there were to be confusion and speculation in the public press. Conflicting comment in the press here and in Yugoslavia regarding your appointment to Belgrade and your subsequent appointment as Ambassador in Havana might jeopardize the success of your mission in Belgrade.

It occurs to us that you might like to consider whether there is the possibility of a reflection on your own excellent service in Cuba if you were to make an official request for the raising of the Mission to Embassy and then, owing to unavoidable delaying factors, you were to find it impossible to remain at Havana to take up your duties as the first Canadian Ambassador.

After careful consideration of all the circumstances we have come to the conclusion that it would be preferable to allow the question of the raising of the Canadian Legation to the rank of Embassy to rest on the basis of the informal inquiry which was made in Ottawa through the Cuban Minister here, rather than to press it upon the Cuban authorities by an official request in Havana. We do not know, of course, what the official Cuban reply might be, nor can we anticipate how long the Cuban Congress would take to confirm the anticipated decision of the President.

Even though we cannot proceed with your appointment as Ambassador at Havana at the present time, it may not be very long before you will have that designation, because the Canadian Legation in Belgrade might be elevated to the rank of Embassy when conditions make this step possible. Of course, you may realize that this would have to be examined in the light of the position as to other Canadian Missions in Europe which have not been raised to the rank of Embassy.

I should be most grateful if you would write and inform me of your views after you have considered these aspects.

With kindest regards,
Yours very sincerely,
LAURENT BEAUDRY

SECTION G

TCHÉCOSLOVAQUIE ET POLOGNE
CZECHOSLOVAKIA AND POLAND

21. DEA/9390-K-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], December 15, 1947

DIPLOMATIC MISSIONS IN WARSAW AND PRAGUE

I think I should make it clear in regard to the proposal that we should appoint Kirkwood as Minister to Warsaw and Macdonnell as Minister to Prague, that this arises out of the undesirability of retaining, indefinitely, missions in two such important countries under Chargés d'Affaires.[15] That is a more important consideration, I think than the particular persons involved. Both the Czech Government and the Polish Government are a little restive at our inability to appoint full heads of missions. If it is decided that, in principle, this should be done, then the question arises as to whom should be appointed. I thought that it would be more economical, simpler and more appropriate to promote the men on the spot, though I would like to emphasize that this does not mean any promotion for them in the grades of our Service. In other words, they retain exactly the same grade that they had before, and they would be required, if moved back to Ottawa, to do Departmental work in exactly the same way as other officers of their grade do. I think that it is useful to establish this principle, that senior officers of the Department can become heads of missions, and heads of missions can be moved back to the Department as heads of Division, something that we have not yet done.

As for Mr. Kirkwood, he is one of the most senior men in our Service, having joined it in 1928, and he is, I think, well qualified to be Minister to Poland. One advantage is that he is a bachelor, and Warsaw is not a comfortable place for a wife and family, in view of the difficulties of accommodation, etc. However, if it is felt that Mr. Kirkwood should not be promoted, we could attempt to secure someone else, and Mr. Kirkwood could be made available for another post, possibly as High Commissioner in Pakistan. In any event, I do not think it is necessary to have a Minister and a Counsellor in Warsaw.

As for Mr. Macdonnell in Prague, he has not been in the Service as long as Mr. Kirkwood, but is a very experienced Foreign Service Officer and one of our most intelligent. He has already done very good work indeed at Prague in establishing our Legation there, and would, I feel certain, be a successful Minister. However,

---

[15]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Council has agreed. Feb[ruary] 12/1948. L.S. St. L[aurent]
Voir aussi le document 12./See also Document 12.

there again, if it is not considered desirable to make him Minister at Prague, we could transfer him to some other post and appoint a new Minister. What I am particularly interested in is that these posts should not remain indefinitely without Ministers.

L.B. PEARSON

SECTION H

ISLANDE
ICELAND

22. DEA/8508-40

Extrait du procès-verbal de la réunion des chefs de direction

Extract from Minutes of Meeting of Heads of Divisions

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], September 9, 1947

. . .

2. Mr. Measures reported that by a direct exchange of telegrams with Reykjavik, the Government of Canada had agreed to the appointment of Mr. Thor Thors as Icelandic Minister to Canada. Mr. Thors already serves as Icelandic Minister to the United States. The arrangement by which he is accredited in both Washington and Ottawa is not to be considered as a precedent with regard to foreign diplomatic representation in Canada. It has been accepted in this particular case only because Iceland is so small a state that it is obviously not in a position to make separate appointments in every country to which it desires to accredit representatives. The King's approval of Mr. Thors' appointment has been requested.

. . .

SECTION I

INDE
INDIA

23. DEA/1617-A-40

Projet de lettre du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire désigné en Inde

Draft letter from Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner Designate in India

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 25, 1947

Dear Mr. Kearney:

It is our practice to give a Chief of Mission proceeding to a post in the Canadian external service an informal letter outlining some of the questions which will be the special concern of the mission, and mentioning matters in which the Department of External Affairs has a particular interest.

2. The main purposes which the Canadian mission in India may be expected to serve appear to be:

(1) Maintaining and strengthening friendly relations between the Government and people of Canada and the Government and people of India;

(2) Fostering advantageous economic relations between the two countries;

(3) Transmitting to the Canadian Government information on India's internal political, social, and economic problems, and, when desirable, informing the Indian Government and people of Canadian political, social, and economic problems;

(4) Exchange of information and views on problems of external relations which may be of common concern.

3. It may be helpful, as a preliminary step, to outline for your consideration, in very general terms, certain aspects of the Indian situation as seen from here, and some features of Canadian experience which might prove interesting and useful to Indians.

(1) The two major political problems which face India are the attainment of a satisfactory international status, and the evolution of a political system which can combine respect for the appropriate autonomy of territorial and religious minorities with national unity. There is, I think, a tendency in India to over-emphasize the first of these two problems and to forget that the second is, in a democracy, the more important and, as the experience of the United States, of Canada, and of Australia shows, by far the more difficult of solution.

(2) Of the three countries mentioned, Canada's experience may be of particular value to India because:

(a) Canadian political evolution has been continuous and (during the last 100 years) peaceful;

(b) Canadian statesmen have dealt with both problems concurrently and have avoided the dangerous interval which occurred in the United States before a federal constitution was adopted;

(c) The minority problem has been of peculiar importance in Canada;

(d) Canada is not likely to be suspected either, on the one hand, of designs to promote imperialist ambitions, or, on the other, of pursuing interests antagonistic to those of the United Kingdom or the Commonwealth in general;

(e) Canada, as the closely associated North American neighbour of the United States, may find that the prestige which that country enjoys among Indian politicians has a certain favourable influence upon their attitude towards Canada as well.

(3) In these circumstances a representative of Canada may find opportunities to be of real service to the Indian people in their political evolution. It is, as I know you will appreciate, essential to this end that he should:

(a) Refrain scrupulously from becoming entangled in Indian politics;

(b) Keep on good terms with British official society in India, while not becoming identified with it;

(c) Cultivate Indians of the various political parties and make personal friendships among them;

(d) Make it clear that, while Canada would welcome a decision by India to remain a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, this is recognised to be a matter for determination by India herself;

(e) Take advantage of any suitable occasion to make clear the lines along which Canada has developed politically, and the way in which Canadian statesmanship has achieved national unity without infringing upon the appropriate autonomy of a substantial minority;

(f) Emphasise the value in world reconstruction of the willing collaboration of India and of the positive and inspiring "historical mission" which lies before India;

(g) Keep the Canadian Government informed of possible opportunities to assist Indian development in various spheres, such as education, industry and commerce, or the development of social services.

4. Your formal relations will be with the Government of India; while there may be occasion for contacts with the governments of the provinces or with the Indian States, these would be of a purely informal nature.

5. It may be useful to have some indication of the kind of reporting which is desired from the mission.

6. In general, in deciding what subjects are, and what are not, suitable for reporting, two considerations might be borne in mind: first, that any matters of significance in India, so long as they are not minor events of purely local importance, are of interest as explaining the course of events in that country; second, that a development in Indian affairs may throw light on Canadian problems of a similar nature.

7. I do not wish to go into detail in suggesting subjects for reports to the Department, but I might supplement the general observations made above by listing a few topics for your consideration. These fall into three main headings — external relations, internal policy, and trade and economic questions.

8. External Relations:

(1) We will be very glad to receive from you critical and interpretative analyses of trends in India's external relations, with particular reference to members of the Commonwealth, to the United States, and to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

(2) In this connection I might add that India's relations with the Soviet Union will be of special interest during the present period in Indian development, and will require the most careful attention.

(3) We should like to receive from time to time information on Indian views about the problems and organization of the United Nations, in which India has taken an active interest, particularly the future activities of the United Nations in the fields of human rights, trusteeship (especially Palestine), and non-self-governing territories. We should also be glad to be kept informed of any further developments in the question of the treatment of Indians in South Africa, which was recently brought before the General Assembly of the United Nations by the Indian Government, and on whether India is likely to raise at future United Nations

Assemblies similar complaints against the treatment of Indians in other countries. We should be interested to learn whether India intends to be a candidate for the Security Council of the United Nations in September, 1947.

(4) Information on the structure and organization of the Indian Foreign Office and Foreign Service would be appreciated when available.

(5) Among other questions which you may find occasion to report on are India's relations with countries of the Near East; Indian views on the future roles of Japan and China; and trends towards autonomy among subject peoples of Southeast Asia.

9. Internal Policy:

(1) The study of political trends within India will be of major interest and value. From time to time we should be glad to have your appreciation of the character, policies, and influence of the main political parties.

(2) It would be useful to have information on Indian postwar plans for industrial reconstruction and agricultural development.

(3) Indian developments in the constitutional field will be of considerable interest to this and other departments of the Canadian government. I am sure that your reports on India's approach to certain problems, similar to our own, in civil, criminal, or constitutional law would be of special value.

(4) Notes on outstanding Indian political leaders and on Commonwealth or foreign representatives in New Delhi will always be welcome to the Department. From time to time an appreciation of the Indian press might be useful.

(5) Other questions of internal affairs on which you may wish to report include plans for defence forces, strength and influence of the Communist party, demands and activities of Indian trade unions.

10. Trade and Economic Questions:

(1) The table which follows indicates the development of trade between Canada and India during the past ten years:

	Canadian exports to India	Canadian imports from India
1935	$ 3,505,230	$ 6,954,124
1936	2,475,446	8,345,104
1937	4,551,994	7,469,000
1938	2,863,068	8,181,470
1939	5,185,873	9,807,576
1940	11,241,674	16,040,369
1941	36,037,046	17,667,366
1942	167,683,730	21,346,332
1943	134,576,758	17,090,405
1944	174,754,243	27,878,433
1945	307,460,947	30,367,646
1946	49,045,773	37,877,376

(2) The tremendous increase in Canadian exports to India was, in part, war material for the Allied forces. Thus over $125,000,000 of the Canadian exports of $307,000,000 to India in 1945 was spent for trucks, automobiles, and parts, locomotives and railway cars and parts. A large percentage of these exports was undoubtedly used for war purposes. Another $23,000,000 was spent for cartridges and $30,000,000 for wheat. The second main reason for this increase in Canadian exports is the inability of the United Kingdom to produce for export a sufficient quantity of automobiles and locomotives and their parts. The result has been that this trade has been diverted to Canada.

(3) Canada's Reciprocal Tariff of 1897 was extended to British India, as the Indian tariff of that time, 5% ad valorem on all goods, was regarded as reciprocal in character. In 1898, when the Canadian Reciprocal Tariff took the name of British Preferential Tariff, the preference to India was maintained, and has never been withdrawn. On the other hand, India has not accorded Canadian goods any tariff preference. Negotiations between Canada and India have been proceeding intermittently since 1932 but so far have not resulted in a trade agreement. In 1927 India created preferences for United Kingdom steel products, in 1930 for cotton textiles, and in 1932, under a trade agreement, granted the United Kingdom a 10% ad valorem advantage on many commodities and 7½% on a few others. The trade agreement preferences to the United Kingdom were reduced in number in 1932. Indian tariff rates, most of them called "revenue" but some "protective", have saved imports from the old 5% ad valorem tariff.

(4) India adopted an import license system which became effective on May 28, 1940. The system favours Canada and other Empire countries, except Hong Kong, as compared with foreign countries. The only goods of Canadian origin requiring import license are: canned or bottled jams, jellies, pickles, sauces, and condiments; patent medicines; motor vehicles and parts; tires and tubes and miscellaneous rubber goods, but not footwear, or apparel; greeting cards, calendars, copy books and some other stationery. Concerning the preserved goods in the first group, it was announced that no licenses would be issued for imports from non-sterling countries, but with regard to the others, licenses are to be issued on a percentage of prewar normal imports. In addition to the goods already mentioned, the following goods, (in all, a total of 60 tariff items) require import licence when imported from any foreign country: jewellery, silk, soup, toilet requisites, bicycles, gramophones, radios, lead pencils, beer, tobacco, confectionery, furs, some leathers, furniture, draperies, apparel, umbrellas, toys and games, hardware, enamelled ware, cutlery.

(5) A limited form of exchange control is in effect but involves no delay or uncertainty of payments for properly authorized imports from Canada. The opening of letters of credit in payment of imports from various countries into India requires the approval of the exchange authorities in London.

(6) There is in India a disposition to favour a protectionist policy in order to proceed with a programme for raising the standard of living of the Indian masses by progressive industrialisation as well as by agrarian development. This growth of protectionist sentiment is by no means peculiar to India, and is perhaps inevitable there until India's competitive position in world markets improves. It appears, however, to be in the interest of Canada, and in the long-range interest of all countries, including India, to encourage the promotion of multilateral trade, on the basis of equality, through international agreements, and maximum collaboration between nations in their domestic economic policies. If, therefore, without appearing to intervene in the determination by India of its own tariff policies, it seems possible at any time to assist discreetly in ensuring that this aspect of the situation is not overlooked, advantage might be taken of the opportunity.

(7) The Department will be glad to be kept informed of any tendencies in India towards multilateralism, or alternately, of any tendencies towards bilateral methods and more restrictive devices.

(8) While the Canadian Government Trade Commissioner Service, in India as elsewhere, forwards detailed reports on trade matters to the Department of Trade and Commerce, it will be of advantage for the Department of External Affairs to have your personal appreciation of general developments affecting Canadian trade with India.

(9) It would be useful also, both for this Department and for the Department of Finance, to have reports on India's financial position, on its budgeting, and on its balance of payments position.

(10) Information would be welcome, too, on exchange controls, price controls, and any arrangements for rationing.

11. You may wish to send us an interpretative despatch now and then on general political and economic developments in India. Such a despatch would review the main internal and external policies and developments of the period and analyse the trends in public opinion. These reports would summarise and supplement despatches on particular questions. It is hoped that in your despatches, in addition to including factual material, you will give us the benefit of your own opinions and your appreciation of a situation.

12. (a) It might be useful occasionally to examine the extent and effect of Canadian publicity in India, and the value of developing closer cultural relations. By encouraging the use by Indian newspapers and periodicals of Canadian information, both news and background material, much can be done to strengthen common interests and to increase the knowledge and understanding of Canadian affairs in India.

(b) The usual information material, including Canadian Information Service publications and government reports as well as miscellaneous items, will be sent to the Canadian mission in India, but special material for special purposes can always be prepared at your request. It is sometimes possible for missions to obtain Canadian films, paintings, and other graphic publicity material for display.

13. British East Indians in Canada:

It may be useful for you to have some observations on the position of British East Indians in Canada. Clarification seems desirable on three distinct points: (1) immigration rules; (2) national status rules; (3) civic rights.

(1) The immigration regulations still place restrictions on any Asiatics, including Indians. Order in Council P.C. 2115 of Sept. 16, 1930, prohibits the entry into Canada as immigrants of Asiatics, except the wives and unmarried children under 18 years of age of Canadian citizens legally resident in Canada and in a position to care for their dependents. This provision applies to British Indians among other Asiatics. It is a form of discriminatory legislation which Indians resent. It may be observed that a general reaction against specific discriminatory immigration legislation on racial grounds appears to be taking shape in Canada; the repeal of the present Chinese Immigration Act will remove a conspicuous example of discrimination against Asiatics from a single country.

(2) (a) After legal entry into Canada under the immigration regulations, there is no discrimination against Indians as to nationality or citizenship. It may be useful to outline the status in Canada, under the recent Canadian Citizenship Act, of British East Indians. The Act contains no discrimination of any sort on a racial basis. Indians who have the status of British subject continue, under the new Act, to be regarded as British subjects for purposes of Canadian law. Any Indian in Canada who entered the country legally, who had the status of British subject, and who had been domiciled in Canada for at least 5 years prior to January 1, 1947, became a Canadian citizen automatically on that date. For Indians who entered Canada prior to January 1 but had not acquired domicile here on that date, or who have entered or may enter since January 1, formal acquisition of a certificate is necessary before they become Canadian citizens. The requirements are the same as for any other British subject and include residence of 5 years in Canada, except in the case of wives of Canadian citizens, where one year of residence is sufficient.

(b) It may be noted that the Canadian Citizenship Act, in listing the countries of the British Commonwealth of Nations, omits in Schedule I the name of India. Attention should be drawn to the phrase "for purposes of this Act"; and also to Article 28, which refers to British subjects "under the laws of any country of the British Commonwealth." India has no separate nationality laws (those of the United Kingdom apply), and consequently has not been listed in the Schedule. As soon as India prescribes nationality laws of its own, India will be included in Schedule I, not by an amendment to the Act, but "by proclamation under the Act."

(3) (a) In the matter of civil rights, there is discrimination in only one province, British Columbia; and there is some prospect that the British Columbia Legislature may shortly take steps towards removing this.

(b) There are about 1,800 British East Indians in Canada; approximately 92% of them live in the province of British Columbia. Legally, they have certain political rights in common with other Canadian citizens: they are eligible for appointment to the Senate, and may be candidates for election to the House of Commons; they may be members of the Cabinet, and are eligible for any office or appointment in the public service of Canada. The Dominion Elections Act provides, however, that persons disqualified from the provincial franchise on grounds of race in the province in which they reside cannot vote in federal elections. Persons of Asiatic race are so disfranchised in British Columbia by provincial law; consequently, in that province Indians can vote in a federal election only if they served in the armed forces of Canada.

(c) During the past 25 years there have been numerous representations to the Canadian Government from Indian societies in Canada, and prominent Indians connected with the Government of India, for the removal of those political discriminations. In December, 1946, the Government of India brought the matter officially to our attention, "urging upon the Canadian Government the desirability of persuading the British Columbia Government to avail of the present opportunity and take steps to confer franchise on the small Indian community in that province and thus rectify the present anomalous position which is a source of humiliation to Indians." The Prime Minister of Canada has brought the views of the Indian Government to the attention of the Premier of British Columbia. A special committee of the British Columbia Legislature, which has been studying the provincial Elections Act with a view to modifying its provisions, has recommended extension of the franchise to Canadian-born East Indians and Chinese. It is expected that a bill based on the committee's report will shortly be introduced into the provincial Legislature.

(d) In British Columbia Asiatics, including Indians, may not be candidates at a provincial election. They may not vote at municipal or school elections, though it is thought they could legally be candidates. They may not serve as jurors, nor be admitted to the professions of law and pharmacy; they are excluded (in practice) from the provincial civil service; they may not participate in public works contracts, obtain a license for hand-logging, nor be employed in the sale of Crown timber.

14. Miscellaneous Administrative Items:

(1) In addition to the annual report of a mission, which is forwarded each year to reach Ottawa before the end of December, an annual Post Report on living conditions should also be furnished. This matter will be the subject of a special despatch at a later date.

(2) In the past some missions have sent many newspaper clippings. These are of limited value and should be sent only rarely. They should not take the place of a despatch, and a despatch accompanied by clippings should read intelligibly without reference to them.

(3) When missions abroad wish a matter to be taken up with any particular department or agency in Ottawa, they should communicate with the Department of External Affairs. Similarly, if offices abroad receive communications from other Departments or agencies in Ottawa they should, generally speaking, either reply through the Department of External Affairs or forward copies of the correspondence and inform the Department of any action taken. There may be exceptions to the above rule. In the past, certain routine matters have been handled by correspondence which does not pass through the Department. In such cases it is desired that missions should inform this Department of the existence of this correspondence and of its general character.

(4) A separate set of instructions and regulations will be prepared covering that part of the work of the mission which has to do with immigration matters and duties similar to those performed in foreign countries by consular officers.

15. In conclusion, I should repeat that this letter is intended to be only a general indication of some of the issues and topics in which we are interested. If there are any points which you would like to have expanded, we shall be glad to go into them with you at any time.

SECTION J

ITALIE
ITALY

24. DEA/9676-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, January 17, 1947

On January 10 the Italian Representative called to see me and stated that on the signing of the Peace Treaty with Italy in February the Italian Government would like to establish formal diplomatic relations with this country. They hoped that we would, in due course, be able to take similar action. I told Count di Cossato that we could appreciate their desire in this matter, and that if an Italian Legation were established here we would no doubt wish to be represented diplomatically in Rome.

2. Count di Cossato said that his Government also wished to open certain consular offices in Canada as soon as possible, even before the signing of the Peace Treaty. They would desire to open only Vice Consulates in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, cities with comparatively large Italian populations, and five or six consular agencies in other Canadian cities where there are Italian communities.

3. In 1939 Italy had consular offices or agencies in eleven Canadian cities: Fort William, Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Quebec, Saint John, Sudbury, Sydney, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg; only the Consul-General and Vice-Consul in Ottawa, the Consul in Montreal, and the Vice-Consul in Toronto were career officers.

4. At present Italy has only the Office of the Representative in Ottawa. The Representative holds the personal rank of Consul-General; his First and Second Assistant Representatives have the personal rank of Vice-Consul.

5. I think that once our relations with Italy are legally established on a peaceful basis we should agree to reciprocal diplomatic representation, but I see no reason for opening consular offices before the signing of the Peace Treaty, or indeed for any particular haste in the matter. We shall presumably be in no hurry to establish consulates in Italy. There has been no immigration from Italy since the war, and our Italian communities now consist of people who have already passed through the more difficult stages of adjustment to a new environment. It will probably be some time yet before Italian shipping is very considerable.

6. Aside from the time factor, however, there are arguments both for and against the opening of a large number of consular offices. Much depends, of course, on the character of the Government represented and of the representative selected. Good consuls from democratic countries can do a great deal to raise the morale of the immigrant, to ease the strain of adjustment to new conditions, and to keep him reminded of the best traditions of his native land out of which he has something of real value to contribute to the country of his adoption. Another type of consul from another type of Government can retard the process of assimilation by promoting a divided loyalty, by injecting into the Canadian scene controversial issues from the old country which serve only to unsettle the immigrant, and even by exerting pressure for the financial support of causes that should no longer concern him. Evidence of such activities was not lacking before the war and there are some indications of resumption at the present time.

7. Many countries have extensive consular services in Canada. As relations with Italy revert to normal, we shall probably not wish to distinguish between the Italians and other countries in this regard. But in their case their record provides some excuse for making haste slowly. I suggest, therefore, that we might begin by allowing them to open consular offices in the seaports which handle the bulk of Italian shipping. Further expansion of Italian consular representation here can be made from time to time. It is likely to involve requests for the appointment of non-career officers — Italian-Canadian businessmen eager for the prestige and influence attached to such office in their communities — and these can be considered on their merits as they are received.[16]

L.B. PEARSON

25. DEA/9520-J-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], July 18, 1947

We have been considering the immediate opening of a mission in Italy and the appointment of Mr. Désy as Canadian Minister in Italy. On June 25th, 1947, Cabinet approved your proposal to establish a Legation in Italy "Upon ratification of the Peace Treaty with Italy". In view of the facts that by virtue of its co-belligerency since 1943, Italy has not been regarded as an enemy in the strict sense of the word, it would appear that in practice, that country has been, since we have accepted her as a co-belligerent, considered as a friendly power. On that basis, in view of International Law which gives us a justification for doing so, since a sovereign cannot, without urgent reasons, refuse to admit the Minister of a friendly power, we wish to initiate at once the procedure for the appointment of Mr. Désy as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Canada in Italy.

2. In view of the previous decision of the Cabinet, may I suggest that at the next Cabinet meeting you might obtain Cabinet approval to the establishment of a Lega-

[16]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[aurent]

tion in Italy and the appointment of Mr. Désy as Minister before ratification of the Peace Treaty.[17]

3. In view of a possible technical objection to the King signing a Letter of Credence in the present circumstances, we believe that Mr. Désy could be appointed and with the concurrence of the Italian Government, be received and accredited while postponing the presentation of his Letter of Credence until after the final ratification of the Peace Treaty. I will approach the Italian Government in order to obtain their informal agrément.

4. Similarly, the Italian Government, wishing to appoint a Minister Plenipotentiary to Canada before the ratification of the Treaty, we will request that they also withhold the presentation of the Letter of Credence of their Envoy until after final ratification.

L.B. P[EARSON]

SECTION K

PAYS-BAS
NETHERLANDS

26. DEA/9238-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au roi

Secretary of State for External Affairs to The King

Ottawa, January 3, 1947

The Secretary of State for External Affairs of Canada presents his humble duty to His Majesty the King.

His Majesty's Government in Canada have under consideration the raising of the Canadian Legation in The Hague to the status of Embassy and the appointment of Pierre Dupuy, Esquire, C.M.G., at present His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary for Canada in the Netherlands, as His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary for Canada in the Netherlands, and it is desired to ascertain whether the establishment of a Canadian Embassy in The Hague and the appointment of Mr. Pierre Dupuy as His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary for Canada in the Netherlands would be agreeable to His Majesty.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, accordingly, humbly petitions His Majesty to approve the establishment of a Canadian Embassy in The Hague, and the issuance of a Commission under the Great Seal of Canada and under the signature of His Excellency the Governor General appointing Pierre Dupuy, Esquire,

[17]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Please have Mr. Heeney place this on agenda. [St. Laurent]
Désy fut nommé le 13 août./Désy was appointed on August 13.

C.M.G., as His Majesty's Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary for Canada in the Netherlands.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs remains His Majesty's most faithful and obedient servant.

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

27. DEA/9238-40

Le sous-secrétaire du gouverneur général
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Assistant Secretary to Governor General
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, January 6, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Referring to your secret letter of the 28th ultimo, I desire to inform you that The King has been pleased to give informal approval for the promotion of the Netherlands Legation at Ottawa to the rank of Embassy, and for the appointment of Dr. J.H. van Royen as Netherlands Ambassador at Ottawa. His Majesty has also approved the elevation of the Canadian Legation at The Hague to the rank of Embassy, and the appointment of Pierre Dupuy, Esquire, C.M.G., at present Canadian Minister there, as Canadian Ambassador.

Yours sincerely,
F.L.C. PEREIRA

SECTION L

PAKISTAN

28. DTC/20-82A

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-ministre du Commerce

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce

SECRET Ottawa, July 28, 1947

Dear Mr. Mackenzie:

I enclose a copy of despatch No. 15 of July 12† from New Delhi regarding possible appointment of a trade commissioner in Pakistan. You will note that Mr.

Kearney has been discussing with Mr. Jinnah[18] the question of whether Canada and Pakistan should exchange representatives, and that Mr. Jinnah was inclined to think that consuls might first be exchanged, but on Mr. Kearney's suggestion agreed that trade commissioners would be more in keeping with Commonwealth relations.

Some consideration has been given in the Department of External Affairs to the question of whether arrangements should be made for the exchange of High Commissioners with Pakistan, but no approach has been made to Mr. Jinnah. It appears that Mr. Jinnah has himself taken the initiative in proposing an exchange of trade commissioners. The proposal seems to have much to commend it from our point of view, and I should be glad to know whether it commends itself to you.

I note, by the way, that we have already referred to you another despatch from New Delhi, No. 22 of July 15,† transmitting a suggestion from the Marwari Chamber of Commerce, in Calcutta, that "one of our Deputy Commissioners" should be located there, in view of the prospects for sales of Canadian agricultural machinery to the surrounding jute-producing area.

As you will see, Mr. Kearney considers that if it is decided to open an office in Karachi somebody should go there at once to try to find premises, as there is much competition.

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT REID
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

29. DTC/20-82A

Le sous-ministre du Commerce
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET Ottawa, August 11, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I have your letter of the 8th,† which has further reference to your letter of July 28 and despatch No. 15, of July 12,† from New Delhi, regarding the appointment of a Trade Commissioner to Pakistan.

I have read with considerable interest the despatch in question and your own remarks thereon. The receipt of the despatch coincided with the receipt of a cablegram from our Trade Commissioner in Bombay, copy of which I enclose as a matter of interest.†

---

[18]Muhammad Ali Jinnah, président de la Ligue musulmane; gouverneur général du Dominion du Pakistan (15 août) et président de l'Assemblée constituante.
Mahomed Ali Jinnah, President, Moslem League; Governor General, Dominion of Pakistan (Aug. 15) and President, Constituent Assembly.

Personally, I am inclined to look upon the appointment as having more political importance than trade importance, but, nevertheless, I am not unmindful of the fact that in the last year, pre-war, some $50,000,000 of merchandise moved through the port of Karachi, and I note also that Mr. Grew,[19] in his cablegram, emphasizes that trade matters would be of first importance. I am, accordingly, prepared to accept Mr. Grew's suggestion that Mr. G.A. Browne, our Assistant Trade Commissioner in Bombay at present, be instructed to establish an office in Karachi at the earliest possible date.

I have discussed this matter with Mr. MacKinnon, who concurs, and I will be grateful if you will let me know immediately the decision that is taken by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in order that we may make a suitable announcement here.[20]

Yours faithfully,
M.W. MACKENZIE

SECTION M

PORTUGAL

30. DEA/9233-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au consul général par intérim au Portugal

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting Consul General in Portugal

DESPATCH 5 Ottawa, February 12, 1947

SECRET

Sir:

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 107, dated December 23rd, 1946,† in which you report your conversation with the Secretary General of the Portugal Ministry of Foreign Affairs who intimated to you that Portugal was anxious to establish a diplomatic mission in Canada.

2. I understand from the tenor of your despatch that Dr. Matias may expect that you will give him an indication of the Canadian Government's reaction to his statement to you.

3. For the present at least, it will be in order for you to answer informally on the lines indicated below any inquiries from the Portuguese authorities on our views.

4. The present position is as follows:

---

[19]Richard Grew, secrétaire commercial, haut-commissariat en Inde (Bombay).
Richard Grew, Commercial Secretary, High Commission in India (Bombay).

[20]Le Cabinet approuva cette nomination le 3 septembre.
The appointment was agreed to by Cabinet on September 3.

a) We have in the past refrained from accepting a diplomatic mission from a country unless we were prepared to reciprocate, in due course, by appointing a Canadian diplomatic mission in the country concerned;

b) The Canadian diplomatic service, despite the number of men from the Armed Forces who have entered the Department during the last two years is still short of trained staff, and this has limited our ability to increase our diplomatic representation abroad;

c) A number of countries which were our allies during the war, as well as a number of neutral countries, have had diplomatic missions in Ottawa for some time; in creating diplomatic establishments abroad, we are under an obligation to give preference to those countries.

d) Although we appreciate the desire of the Portuguese authorities to establish a diplomatic mission here, we note that Portugal has at present no career consular representatives in Canada, while Canada has a Consulate General staffed with career men in Lisbon; it would seem to us that before considering the establishment of a diplomatic mission in Ottawa, the Portuguese authorities might find it appropriate or advantageous to reciprocate on a parallel basis by appointing a career Consul General, either at Ottawa or Montreal. (I attach hereto a list of the honorary Consular representatives of Portugal in Canada).†

5. It will be some time before we can establish our diplomatic representation in all the countries mentioned in paragraph 4(c) above and it seems at present to be unlikely that Canada will be able to exchange diplomatic missions with Portugal in the near future.

I have etc.

L.B. PEARSON
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

31. DEA/9233-40

Le consul général par intérim au Portugal
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Acting Consul General in Portugal
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 59 Lisbon, June 19, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to report that in the official Gazette of Friday, 13th June, there was published a Ministerial Order creating a Consulate General in Montreal. The Order in question translates as follows:

"Ministry of Foreign Affairs Director-General of Political Negotiations and Internal Administration.

In accordance with Article 2 of Decree Law N° 32431 of the 24th November, 1942, there is created a Consulate General in Montreal, Canada, with an allowance of 135 contes ($5,400.00) for residential expenses."

Although it is not yet confirmed officially, I understand that Dr. Vasco Vieira Garin, who was recently promoted to the rank of Minister of the Portuguese Diplomatic Service will be chosen to fill the post. I spoke to Dr. Garin personally today and he confirmed the information but remarked that it was still unofficial and it would be some time before a decision was finally taken.

Dr. Garin is not a stranger to Canada, as he has served on the Portuguese delegations to the PICAO and the ICAO. He is a very pleasant gentleman and is looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the prospect of an appointment in Montreal. He is married and his wife, I believe, is English.

I have etc.

LESTER S. GLASS

SECTION N

UNION SOVIÉTIQUE
SOVIET UNION

32. DEA/2462-B-40

Note de l'ambassadeur en Union soviétique pour le chef de la Direction consulaire

Memorandum from Ambassador in Soviet Union to Head, Consular Division

SECRET Ottawa, February 27, 1947

With reference to the memorandum which you received from Mr. Cleveland[21] dated February 26th, I do not think that we should under present conditions risk a rebuff by asking for the establishment of Canadian Consulates in the Soviet Union.

Canadian Consulates in other places of the Soviet Union would be useful as observation points but apart from this there would be little for them to do. The governing consideration at the present time, however, is that the Soviet Government are not likely to accede to any requests for the opening of Canadian Consular Offices in the Soviet Union. They have not agreed to the United Kingdom re-establishing their Consulate at Leningrad. The United States have recently been asked to withdraw their Naval representatives from Archangel and Odessa and the only Consulate they are allowed to have outside of Moscow is that at Vladivostok.

Because the Soviet Government is reluctant to allow the opening of additional Consulates in the Soviet Union, they are not likely to request us for permission to open an additional Consulate in Canada. If they do, however, we should refuse [21]J.H. Cleveland, Direction consulaire.

J.H. Cleveland, Consular Division.

their request unless the Soviet Government is prepared to give reciprocal treatment. In the unlikely event of the Soviet Government acceding to our request for reciprocal treatment, we could then reconsider the whole question and possibly select either Vladivostok, Odessa or Leningrad, in the order mentioned, as the most likely points at which we would wish to establish Canadian Consulates.

In view of the Soviet Government monopoly of trade and the extreme centralization of trading operations in Moscow, a Canadian Consulate in any other city of the Soviet Union would be of little or no use for commercial purposes. On the other hand, a Canadian Consulate at Vladivostok or Odessa might be of assistance in connection with shipping although this would depend on the extent to which Canadian vessels called at these Soviet ports.

L.D. WILGRESS

SECTION O

SUÈDE
SWEDEN

33. DEA/9370-J-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], January 31, 1947

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AT STOCKHOLM

Pending the nomination of a Minister to Sweden it might be desirable to adopt the same course there that we have at Warsaw and Prague and appoint a Chargé d'Affaires ad intérim. This is particularly desirable in the case of Stockholm as we already have there a Trade Commissioner, Mr. F.H. Palmer who is well qualified to act as Chargé d'Affaires pending the appointment of a Minister. This would facilitate his Trade and Commerce work and also enable him to handle the Canadian consular work in Sweden which is already considerable.

If you agree with this course it would be necessary:

(a) To obtain the approval of the King for the establishment of a Canadian Legation in Stockholm;

(b) To call the Swedish Minister to the Department and explain to him that the Canadian Government is desirous of establishing a diplomatic mission in Stockholm and that pending the appointment of a Minister, they would like to appoint Mr. Palmer as Chargé d'Affaires ad intérim;

(c) To request the Swedish Minister to enquire informally from his Government as to whether this proposed action is agreeable to it.

It is not considered necessary to request the King formally to approve the appointment of Mr. Palmer as Chargé d'Affaires.

I would be glad to have your view as to whether we can go ahead on the present basis.[22]

L.B. P[EARSON]

34. DEA/11336-50-40

Note du chef de la Direction diplomatique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Diplomatic Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], February 10, 1947

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES AD INTÉRIM AT STOCKHOLM

In accordance with your memorandum of January 31, I asked the Swedish Minister to call regarding the above matter.

I informed Mr. Wijkman that the Canadian Government desired to establish a diplomatic mission in Stockholm, and that pending the appointment of a Canadian Minister Plenipotentiary, the Canadian Government would like to appoint Mr. F.H. Palmer, who is at present Canadian Government Trade Commissioner in Sweden as Chargé d'Affaires ad intérim. I said that we would be glad if he would regard the present approach as informal, and that later, if the Swedish Government welcomed our proposal, we would then communicate through him a formal request for the establishment of a Canadian Legation and for the appointment of Mr. Palmer as Chargé d'Affaires ad intérim pending the appointment of a Minister Plenipotentiary.

I said that Mr. Palmer's designation would be Chargé d'Affaires ad intérim and not Chargé d'Affaires "en titre".

I mentioned to the Minister that we would like this matter to be regarded as confidential for the time being and that when we had received his Government's formal reply and the approval also of our own sovereign, we could then inform him of the date on which we would be ready to make an announcement.

I have just received a telephone message from Mr. Pereira[23] at Government House to say that the King has approved the establishment of a Canadian Legation in Sweden. (This reply from Government House indicates that our channel of com-

---

[22]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[aurent]

[23]F.L.C. Pereira, sous-secrétaire du gouverneur général.
F.L.C. Pereira, Assistant Secretary to Governor-General.

munication with the King during his absence from London is expeditious. Our letter to General Letson[24] went forward on Thursday, February 6.)

W.H. MEASURES

SECTION P

SUISSE
SWITZERLAND

35. DEA/3358-R-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], March 24, 1947

As you know, we will shortly be opening a diplomatic mission in Switzerland. In this regard a decision will have to be taken whether it should be an Embassy or a Legation. Our general policy is to have Embassies, only in order to remove the now completely artificial distinction between them and Legations and make easier the transfer of Heads from one post to another. There are, however, certain difficulties in respect of Switzerland. Swiss Missions are all Legations and they have let us know that whatever we may do they propose to continue a Legation in Ottawa. They do not object to the establishment of a Canadian Embassy in Berne but they point out that there is at present only one Embassy there, the French, and that all other missions are Legations.

The advantages of having an Embassy are: (1) Uniformity within our service, as mentioned above; (2) Mr. Wilgress is already an Ambassador and it would be simpler if he could retain that title in his new post.

The disadvantages are: (1) We would start off in a rather over-conspicuous fashion; (2) our mission would in status be senior to that of the United Kingdom, United States, and U.S.S.R.; (3) the size and importance of our mission would not justify this superior status.

I suggest, therefore, that we establish in Berne a Legation, not an Embassy, but that, if and when other Legations are raised to Embassies there, we should alter ours accordingly.

I suggest also that while Mr. Wilgress would be appointed to a Legation, he should retain his personal rank of Ambassador which he could use when representing Canada at international meetings.

L.B. PEARSON

---

[24]Major-général H.F.G. Letson, secrétaire du gouverneur général.
Maj.-Gen. H.F.G. Letson, Secretary to Governor-General.

SECTION Q

TURQUIE
TURKEY

36. DEA/9515-J-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], June 25, 1947

DIPLOMATIC APPOINTMENTS; TURKEY; ITALY

At the meeting of the Cabinet on June 25th, the Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that it was proposed to appoint General Victor Odlum, former Ambassador to China, as the first Canadian Ambassador to Turkey.

It was also proposed, upon ratification of the Peace Treaty with Italy, to establish a Legation in Italy and to appoint Mr. Jean Désy, presently Ambassador to Brazil, first Canadian Minister to Italy, with the personal rank of Ambassador.

If these proposals were acceptable the usual steps would be taken to obtain the King's approval and inform the governments concerned before the actual appointments were made.

The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's proposals.

SECTION R

ÉTATS-UNIS
UNITED STATES

37. DEA/9323-B-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], April 14, 1947

In a note, dated 6th February 1947, prepared in the Department for your use in connection with a resolution in the name of Mr. Tremblay[25] on the subject of [25]Peut-être L.-D.S. Tremblay, député libéral à la Chambre des communes (Dorchester, Québec).

Possibly L.-D.S. Tremblay, Liberal Member of Parliament (Dorchester, P.Q.).

expansion of the Canadian Consular Service the following statement appears at paragraph 10:

"It may well be that before long we shall be able to begin relieving the British Consuls, especially in the United States, of the work they do so admirably on our behalf."

2. Successive Canadian Ministers and Ambassadors at Washington have on many occasions urged upon the Department the necessity of increased Canadian consular representation in the United States. The present Ambassador has recently added his voice to this demand. However at this time with the exception of Washington and New York practically all our consular work in the United States is done by British Consuls.

3. It has for years been anomalous that our own Canadian problems should be the responsibility, in the territory of our nearest neighbour, of United Kingdom officials. It has been argued, not without cogency, that from the standpoint of practical utility and service to Canada and Canadians extension of consular representation in the United States might well have taken precedence over the despatch of new diplomatic missions to some other parts of the world. In any event, until the present there has been little opportunity to deal with the question except in the realm of general discussion.

4. It will be recalled however that at the beginning of this year a new Division was set up in the Department charged expressly with the responsibility for dealing with consular affairs. The organization of the Consular Division has now reached a point at which it is possible to make a thorough examination of the whole position in the United States, with a view to a programme of expansion there. Moreover an element of urgency has been injected by a decision of the Department of Trade and Commerce to close certain of its offices in the United States on the ground that while necessity exists for consular representation at the points concerned, viz, Chicago and Los Angeles, there is no need for trade officers at those places. The Department of Trade and Commerce naturally enquires what action in the premises the Department of External Affairs may wish to take.

5. Another element in these considerations arises from the fact that there has been some loose chatter in the United States about Canada taking over its own consular representation from the British. Exaggerated reports have given rise to some uneasiness, on the part of the British Consuls, which it is desirable to allay.

6. It is the practice of the United Kingdom service to hold semi-annual conferences of Consuls, the next of which is to take place at Washington from April 29th to May 3rd next. The Canadian Ambassador at Washington has been able to arrange with the British Ambassador there for the Chief of our Consular Division to attend the conference and sit in with the British Consuls in their discussions. By no other means could we get a better opportunity of explaining to the British Consuls what is in our mind, getting to know the persons concerned and obtaining a picture of the problem in general terms. It is the ideal platform from which to launch a detailed investigation.

7. It is therefore proposed that at the conclusion of the conference the Chief of the Consular Division should undertake a tour of those cities of the United States which, from our general knowledge and from more detailed information gathered from the British Consuls, seem to be the most likely sites for Canadian Consulates. At each of these he will spend a few days with the British Consul and/or the Canadian Trade Commissioner making a detailed appraisal of the situation. As at present contemplated this tour embraces New York, Boston, Buffalo, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and possibly, New Orleans and Miami.

8. It is expected that on his return to Ottawa towards the middle of June the Department will be able with some accuracy to assess the needs, estimate the costs, establish an order of priority for opening of Consulates and otherwise proceed on firm ground in accordance with an orderly plan.

9. It is tentatively estimated that adequate Canadian consular representation in the United States might ultimately require a total of eight Consulates including the existing post at New York. An immediate practical programme might contemplate four new offices by the end of this year.

10. On the assumption that a programme of four new offices this year will be achieved, preliminary staffing discussions are proceeding between the Department and the Civil Service Commission.

11. In view of the importance of the matter, it is requested that general approval may be given to the plans outlined above.[26]

L.B. P[EARSON]

38. DEA/9323-B-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], July 2, 1947

Attached[27] is the general report of Mr. Chance, Head of the Consular Division, who, under your authority has successfully completed a detailed inquiry into the need for further Canadian consular representation in the United States. Herewith, also for your perusal, are the individual reports on each of the United States cities visited in the course of this inquiry. Mr. Chance's visit to the United States has been most useful and I think you will find his reports interesting.

2. The salient point which emerges from all these reports is that the present situation in which our work is done for us by United Kingdom Consuls, while conscientiously trying to do both our routine and representational work, are obviously unable to impart to them any distinct Canadian flavour. Canadians in the United

[26]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I fully agree. L.S. St. L[aurent]
[27]Le document suivant./The immediately following document.

States feel a certain humiliation from the absence of representation of their own. Our prestige inevitably suffers, particularly in the great centres where many countries are represented by consular officers but not Canada. The prevailing American confusion and ignorance as to our world place and independence are deepened and the whole Commonwealth position is obscured by representation which is not in accordance with present day facts.

3. The report recommends that:

(a) The gradual assumption by Canadians of all consular representation required by Canada in the United States;

(b) The urgent establishment of two Consulates General — first at Chicago and secondly at San Francisco;

(c) The two new Consulates General thus established should, together with that at New York, form three main bases from which Consulates should be set out at other points as circumstances demand and permit;

(d) The proposed Consulates General at Chicago and San Francisco should be conducted on a scale appropriate to Canada's position;

(e) Having in mind that Consuls General of British countries in the great United States centres are to-day virtually Ministers resident, and that the United Kingdom representatives hold the rank of Minister in the British Foreign Service, the utmost care should be taken in the choice of personnel since upon it success or failure inevitably depends.

4. With these recommendations I fully concur and, in commending the report to your consideration, request that early authority may be given for the Department to proceed with the establishment of Consulates General at Chicago and San Francisco.

5. You may wish to bring the matter to the attention of Council.

L.B. P[EARSON]

39. DEA/9323-B-40

Note du chef de la Direction consulaire pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Consular Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], July 2, 1947

The undersigned reports that following the lines of a memorandum dated 14th April, 1947, copy herewith for ready reference, he has completed an inquiry into Canadian consular representation in the following cities of the United States:

Washington, D. C.
New York
Boston
Buffalo

Detroit
Chicago
Seattle
Portland, Oregon
San Francisco
Los Angeles
Norfolk, Virginia.

Full reports on conditions existing at each of the above places have been submitted with the exception of Portland, Oregon, and Norfolk, Va., — in the first there is no need for Canadian consular representation in the foreseeable future and the second presents a specialized problem (shipping), which should be discussed in its own context.

2. It is not proposed here to attempt a summary of the mass of detail which has been accumulated in the course of an inquiry which occupied eight weeks of continuous effort and involved more than 10,000 miles of travel. Rather it is intended to draw broad conclusions and to make definite recommendations as to the manner and method of addressing the residual problem.

3. At the present time Canada has satisfactory consular representation at only two points in the whole United States — Washington, D. C., and New York. At all other points Canada is represented by the British Consuls. These officials do our routine work very well indeed and are conscientious in attempting our representational duties as well. They are, however, very conscious of their own quite natural inadequacy for such representational work. They feel the incongruity of the situation as much as we do. Without exception they were exceedingly helpful in this inquiry and would welcome Canadian colleagues. Canadians of all schools of thought generally feel a certain degree of humiliation and even resentment that they have no official representation of their own.

4. At the outset of the inquiry there was a very strong impression, based upon wartime conditions, that the work done by the British Consulates on Canadian account constituted a very high proportion of the total work of some posts. This proved to be a fallacy under present conditions. Our routine work of all kinds is not inconsiderable but it is not as onerous as expected. It is for the great part taken in stride and our official appearance in all the cities visited would not seriously affect the British staff situation. Relief which we might afford would in all probability accrue more to the Heads of Posts than to their juniors, since the former would then be absolved from attendance at meetings of Canadian organizations and similar duties which they now perform as conscientiously as may be.

5. While the actual volume of routine duties performed by the British Consulates on Canadian account can perhaps be taken as a measure of bare essential needs, it would be most unwise to accept it as any criterion of the volume of work that distinctively Canadian offices would be called upon to handle. Our own experience in New York and the Australian experience at San Francisco is a much surer guide. Americans seldom have any great appreciation of the limitations of consular function and responsibility. A foreign government office is expected to be the repository of all information on the life of its own country. It is in consequence of great importance that courteous, competent and well-informed people are available to deal with these manifold inquiries. It is not possible to measure the results which may accrue in trade, business or otherwise from consular representation — there is simply no yard-stick of the amount of bread which, being cast upon the waters, returns after many days.

6. The development of career consular services has brought a very marked change in the nature of consular duty and responsibility. It is no longer possible to regard a Consul as one who merely sits in his office and deals with matters which are brought to him. In the United States he could not escape representational duties, entertaining, public speaking, etc., even if he tried. In all this sort of thing the British Consuls are well ahead of the field. The pitch has been set and unless we are prepared to accept in the great centres of the United States a position in this respect inferior to that of the United Kingdom or (as at San Francisco) the Commonwealth of Australia, we have to ensure that we are worthily represented. Our officers must be people able to mingle in all ranks of society, to command the respect of Americans and engender pride in the members of the Canadian community. Their emoluments must be sufficient to sustain them in a modest, but nonetheless adequate standard of life. From every point of view, and not least from that of our national prestige and self-respect, better no representation at all than unworthy representation.

7. It has been said that American ignorance of Canada is appalling. This is undoubtedly true though probably the Americans have no monopoly in this respect. We have in any event done singularly little to counteract it. Americans are at least willing to learn. There is an immense fund of goodwill upon which to draw — and a very great deal could be done by the application of imagination in the vast educational establishments which flourish in and about every great centre of population and at which there are almost always Canadian students. Any Canadian representation in the United States which does not recognize this problem of ignorance, misconception and confusion would fall short and the choice of personnel for such representation must be affected accordingly.

8. The speed with which Canadians disappear into the general background of the United States scene is remarkable and in a sense distressing. Perhaps for practical reasons of keeping their jobs or making good in business, they tend at best to keep quiet about their origin. The numbers of Canadians living in the United States according both to accurate published figures and highly speculative estimates should be accepted with reserve. The vast majority even of first generation Canadians "take out papers" and the second generation are really quite indistinguishable from other Americans of similar racial stock.

9. To sum up — Canadians in the United States need only the minimum of consular protection in the ordinary sense. They are under no serious disabilities. Trade relations are so close that it seems probable that important events could only be influenced at a high level of representation. The tourist business could be stimulated to some extent and consular offices should be in a position to deal with inquiries. It is questionable, however, if Consulates can combine their functions with those of Tourist Bureaux, if only that the latter in the nature of things require ground-floor space which at present is exceedingly expensive in suitable locations. On the other hand, the need for truly Canadian representation in the United States worthy of this country and the veritable colossus at our gates is so apparent that it needs no advocate. The present situation is prejudicial to Canadian national interests and humiliating to Canadian national pride and prestige; it contributes immensely to American confusion as to our place in the world, and, last but not least, it is anything but a reflection of the political facts of the British Commonwealth of Nations as it is to-day.

10. It is therefore recommended that an immediate start be made towards the ultimate assumption of all Canadian representation in the United States by Canadians. To do this it is suggested that the orderly and wise course is the early establishment of three main bases across the country which can be used as training grounds for personnel and from which sub-offices can be pushed out as circumstances permit. It will be best to make haste slowly and make certain that our bases are themselves first-rate before undertaking rapid expansion. There is already the Consulate General at New York: it is recommended that Canada proceed forthwith with the establishment of two more Consulates General; first at Chicago and immediately thereafter at San Francisco. Reasons for selecting these two cities for new representational offices have been fully discussed in the individual reports made concerning them. They are, it is submitted, the obvious centres from which to radiate over the Middle West and Pacific Coast areas. Gradually thereafter Consulates might be established at Los Angeles, Boston and Seattle; and eventually it will be necessary to provide for the Central Border, perhaps basing representation on Cleveland; and finally for the general requirements of the South, possibly centred on New Orleans.

11. Some indication of the costs of representation in the great cities of the United States may be derived from the experience of the British and Australians in Chicago and San Francisco respectively.

Chicago — (British) Total overall cost of Consul General for fiscal year ending March 31st, 1947 — $102,087.15; total staff twenty-one persons. The total annual emoluments of the Consul General were $22,200, free of tax, including a rental allowance of $4,200. The Consul received $10,600, including $3,600 rental allowance, and this figure is regarded as inadequate. The above costs do not include those of the British Information Services and Film units at Chicago.

San Francisco — (Australian) Estimated overall cost for ensuing fiscal year $99,000; total staff at present fourteen, next year expected nineteen. The total emoluments of the Consul General, free of tax, were $15,000, and general scales of pay may be realized from the following: Trade Commissioner $10,000, Press Attaché $9,500, Assistant Trade Commissioner $6,500, three Vice Consuls $6,000 each.

12. The importance placed on representation in the continental United States by other countries, and the Canadian position by comparison may be judged from the following:

Country	Consulates General	Consulates & Vice Consulates
Canada	1	2(including 1 Honorary)
Mexico	7	41(including 9 Honorary)
Brazil	3	13(including 6 Honorary)
The Netherlands	4	30(including 24 Honorary)
France	4	20(including 16 Honorary)
United Kingdom	9	18

Of the total United Kingdom Foreign Office vote of some £7,000,000 nearly £900,000 per annum is at present spent in the United States.

13. The United States maintains in Canada 5 Consulates General and 15 Consulates or Vice Consulates (including 1 Honorary).

14. In the final analysis, the whole success or failure depends on choice of personnel — the suitability of men and their wives for particular posts is the real touch-stone. The posts of Consuls General at New York, Chicago and San Francisco are virtually those of Ministers resident. The British incumbents of the posts hold the rank of Minister in the British Foreign Service. In the course of this inquiry one heard constantly the advice, "Don't do it at all unless you are going to do it right." Canada does not need to vie with United Kingdom or other British representation, still less try to outshine it — but it would be lamentable if we suffered by comparison.

LESLIE CHANCE

40. DEA/9323-B-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], August 8, 1947

On July 2nd I sent you a memorandum regarding the opening of Consulates in the United States, and mentioned that you might wish to bring this matter to the attention of Council. We have now appropriations which would make it possible to open these Consulates, and I am anxious to proceed to that end, if you agree, with the least possible delay. I would be grateful if you would give consideration to this matter.[28]

L.B. P[EARSON]

[28]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Council agreed we can proceed. 14-8-47 St. L[aurent]

41. DEA/9323-B-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], August 22, 1947

Pursuant to the decision of Cabinet on Canadian consular representation in the United States the following steps are being taken:

(a) Formal agreement is being sought of the United States Government to our opening Consulates General at Chicago and San Francisco on November 1st and January 1st next respectively.

(b) The Foreign Office is being advised of the decision and necessary arrangements for the transfer of responsibility are being made. In this regard it will be necessary to work out with the British Consulates in each area the extent to which they will refer matters to our new offices and the measure of future co-operation. Merchant seamen and shipping will, continue to be looked after by the British, at least for the present. The Head of the Consular Division, Mr. Chance, will go to Washington next month to complete arrangements with the British Embassy there.

(c) As soon as we have the two Consulates General established as above we can proceed to open the two additional Consulates for which funds have been appropriated by Parliament. By the end of the fiscal year, therefore, we ought to have six consular offices operating in the United States, i.e., Washington, D.C., New York, Chicago, San Francisco and two other posts yet to be determined. The last two posts would be Consulates as distinct from Consulates General and the present indications are that their location should be Los Angeles and Boston, Massachusetts.

(d) In order to avoid the rather haphazard methods which we are sometimes compelled to follow in opening offices abroad, we are intending to send an officer of the Consular Division to Chicago well in advance of the proposed opening date to make all the necessary arrangements so that the office can be opened for business on the first of November in a thoroughly workmanlike way. As soon as this officer has finished his job at Chicago he will proceed to San Francisco to do the same thing. The officer we have in mind is Mr. B.G. Sivertz, a First Secretary, who has done such an excellent organizational job in the Passport Office.

2. I have formed the opinion that the overall salaries and allowances of the Consuls General at Chicago and San Francisco should not vary very much from those we have established for New York.

We are intending that the three Consulates General should be the main anchors of our consular representation in the United States. The areas that they will cover must necessarily be very large and the amount of representational work which the Consuls General will have to undertake will be important. I may say that Mr.

Wrong has observed that numerous desirable speaking engagements which he cannot now accept will devolve upon the Consuls General on his behalf.

The salary of the Consul General at New York is $9,000 and his allowances $10,000. I think that the salaries of the Consuls General at Chicago and San Francisco should be on the basis of $8,000 to $10,000, that is, starting at $8,000 and increasing to $10,000 on the basis of recommendation for good service. The overall allowances at both places should be $10,000 per annum in addition to the salary. These rates would be rather less than those paid to United Kingdom representatives but somewhat higher than those paid to the Australian representative at San Francisco.

3. The initial establishment in personnel of each of these offices would be:

1 Consul General — estimated overall emolument approximately $18,000
1 Consul or Vice Consul — estimated overall emolument approximately $7,500 to $10,000
1 Information Officer — estimated overall emolument approximately $5,000, plus necessary clerks, stenographers, etc.

It is estimated that the overall salary and allowance cost per annum would be approximately $55,000 to which rent would have to be added. This is estimated at approximately $8,000 per annum. It is necessary also to make a rough overall estimate for all additional expenses (except initial furniture) of probably $10,000 per annum. On this basis it may be expected that the annual cost at the outset of each of the two new Consulates General will be about $75,000. We budgeted on the basis of $90,000 per annum in the estimates.

4. I should be glad of your general approval of the lines upon which we are proceeding and specifically with regard to paragraph 2 above. I am making you a separate note about possible appointees for the posts of Consuls-General.[29]

L.B. PEARSON

42. DEA/9323-B-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

DESPATCH 2356 Ottawa, November 29, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 1637 of August 22nd, 1947, and your subsequent reply concerning the proposed expansion of Canadian consular representation in the United States of America.

---

[29]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[aurent]

2. You will recall that our original programme visualized the establishment of Consulates General at Chicago and San Francisco by the 1st of November, 1947, and the 1st of January, 1948, respectively. A Consulate General at Chicago was duly established in accordance with this programme at the beginning of November. For various reasons, however, not the least of which is the difficulty of finding trained staff, it has been found impossible to meet the proposed date for opening the Consulate General in San Francisco.

3. Accordingly, a revision has been made of the programme and our present plans involve opening posts at the following places on the dates shown:

Detroit (Consulate)	— April 1st, 1948,
San Francisco (Consulate General)	— July 1st, 1948,
Boston (Consulate)	— October 1st, 1948,
Los Angeles (Consulate)	— January 1st, 1949.

4. The actual choice of Detroit is not yet firm but should Detroit not finally be selected it will be some point in what may be described as the central border area of the United States.

5. Will you be so good as to communicate the above to the Foreign Office with the advice that the British Embassy, Washington, and the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa, have been separately informed.

I have etc.

LESLIE G. CHANCE
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

SECTION S

VATICAN

43. DEA/7951-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], January 15, 1947

I think you will be interested in the attached letter from Wrong† concerning United States representation at the Vatican. We will presumably be appointing a diplomatic representative before long in Rome, accredited to the Italian Government. This will inevitably bring up the question of representation at the Vatican as well; a question which, of course, in Canada, as in the United States, arouses religious feelings, pro and con. When I last talked to the Italian Representative, I inquired as to the attitude of his Government towards the Representative to the Quirinal being also the Representative to the Vatican. He said that they still opposed that procedure, as in the past, but that their opposition might not extend to a Representative accredited to another country being also accredited to the Vatican. For instance, if the Government desired to have a Representative at the Vatican, he could not be the Canadian Ambassador to Italy, but he might be the Canadian Ambassador to France.[30]

L.B. P[EARSON]

44. DEA/7951-40

Note de la Deuxième direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], February 3, 1947

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION TO THE VATICAN

1. During the last year and a half, we have received many letters requesting the appointment of a Canadian representative to the Vatican and others opposing such representation. Some of the letters are from individuals but most of them express the views of religious organizations such as the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste, the Ligue du Sacré-Coeur, the Catholic Women's League on the one side, and the Protestant Federation of Patriotic Women, the United Church, the Baptist Church and the Orange Order, on the other.

2. The main arguments advanced in these letters in favour of representation are:

(a) Over 40% of Canada's population is Catholic and no other country with so large a proportion of Catholics is without diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

(b) The U.K. has a Minister.

(c) The U.S. President has a Personal Representative with ambassadorial status.

(d) The U.S.S.R. and Mexico have no representation.

(e) Canada and the Vatican have many problems of common interest.

(f) Nearly all Canadian religious orders and congregations have their headquarters in Rome.

(g) It would tend to unite Canada, because it would ensure the active interest of the Catholic, and especially the French Catholic, population in our foreign policy.

3. The main arguments advanced in opposition to representation are:

(a) It would violate the principle of the separation of church and state.

(b) It would be an unwarranted recognition of one section of the religious life of Canada.

(c) It would mean recognition of the temporal sovereign power of the Pope.

---

[30]Saint-Laurent a paraphé la note sans commentaire.
The memorandum was initialled without comment by St. Laurent.

(d) It would tend to divide Canada, because of the special privileges it would confer on a single religious denomination.

4. As the Vatican has a very extensive and efficient foreign service, the Vatican City is an important centre for information from all over the world. If we were to appoint a Mission there, we should doubtless wish to follow the example of the U.K. and the U.S. in selecting a highly qualified representative. Presumably, we should wish to follow their example further, by insisting on the appointment of a non-Catholic, who would be a sympathetic but impartial observer.

5. The appointment of a Canadian representative to the Vatican at the present time might serve to widen the breach that now exists between the U.S.S.R. and the western powers. Later, when this situation has improved or when the U.S.S.R. has appointed a representative to the Vatican, this objection would no longer apply.

6. Although proportionately the Catholic population of the U.S. is only about half our own, the Catholic Church with 26,000,000 members is, nevertheless, the strongest religious denomination in the U.S. Moreover, the Democratic Party is always extremely sensitive to Catholic opinion on the most diverse and unlikely issues, because the Catholic vote is decisive in several key states. According to recent information from our Embassy in Washington, however, the President has promised Protestant leaders that Mr. Myron C. Taylor's mission, justifiable as a war measure, will soon be terminated and the State Department is reluctantly planning its gradual liquidation. In return the Protestants have agreed not to press their demand for diplomatic representation to the headquarters of the World Federation of Churches in Geneva, (which, whatever nuisance value it may have, seems inconsistent with their principle of the separation of church and state). At the same time Catholic pressure for the establishment of a permanent diplomatic mission to the Vatican and for the elevation of the Apostolic Delegate in Washington to the standing of Nuncio is increasing. It will be interesting to observe what means the President's advisers and the State Department devise to get him out of this dilemma.

7. Canada can perhaps afford to wait and see what happens in the U.S. As Mr. Measures has pointed out in his memorandum on this subject, we are still behind in our commitments to reciprocate with countries that have had missions in Ottawa for some time. We can hardly be expected to invite the opening of more missions in the circumstances. In the meantime we can be thinking of reasons for not sending a representative to the World Federation of Churches headquarters in Geneva.

8. The presence of an Apostolic Delegate in Ottawa does not affect the question of diplomatic representation as the Delegate is purely an ecclesiastical official and enjoys no diplomatic status or privileges. It is not certain that even if a Canadian diplomatic appointment were made, the Delegate would be replaced by a Nuncio. The U.K. has had a Minister to the Vatican since 1914, but there is only an Apostolic Delegate in London and even this appointment was not made until 1938.

J.B.C. W[ATKINS]

45. DEA/7951-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL. CONFIDENTIAL. [Ottawa], March 31, 1947

I attach a note to the Minister about Canadian representation to the Vatican.† I am sure that he does not want to be constantly bombarded by suggestions that we appoint a representative to the Vatican. Do you think you might suggest to him that he inform some of the advocates of Canadian representation to the Vatican, very informally and orally, that it is obvious that a Canadian representative, if appointed, would have to be a Protestant. I think that the pressure for representation would sensibly diminish if this knowledge were spread.[31]

ESCOTT REID

3e PARTIE/PART 3

LA REPRÉSENTATION DES PROVINCES
PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION

46. DEA/8963-A-40

Le ministre de la Coopération et du Développement des coopératives de Saskatchewan au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Co-operation and Co-operative Development of Saskatchewan to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Regina, January 20, 1947

Dear Mr. St. Laurent:

May I inform you that by Order-in-Council No. 47† adopted on January 10th, the Government of Saskatchewan has appointed Mr. Graham Spry representative of the Province of Saskatchewan in the United Kingdom and in Europe. Mr. Spry's duties will be primarily concerned with the promotion of trade between this Province and the United Kingdom and Europe, but he will generally represent the interests of the Government and for this purpose will have the status of an Agent-General.

In taking this step, the Government of Saskatchewan has no other desire than to co-operate with the various departments of the Government of Canada represented overseas. Mr. Spry will be instructed to keep your own and other Departments informed and he will largely rely on them for information and guidance.

[31]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Yes. L.B. P[earson]

I would be glad to be advised if there are any formalities which should be observed in making this appointment and in establishing relations with departments of the United Kingdom or of other Governments in Europe.

Mr. Spry will proceed to London in the middle of February. I should be glad if you will allow him to call on you, when he is in Ottawa.

Yours truly,

L.F. McINTOSH

47. DEA/169 (S)

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 26, 1947

Dear Norman [Robertson]:

I was in Toronto over the week-end, giving the inevitable speech, and spent Sunday afternoon with the Micheners.[32] Rollie brought up the question of the status and activities of their Agent-General in London. In contrast with the attitude of his Chief toward Provincial and Dominion relationships in Ottawa, Rollie is most anxious that those relationships in London should be on the friendliest possible basis and that Ontario House should not overlap or get in the way of the work which can be more effectively and appropriately done at Canada House. I told him I would write you a personal and confidential note in order to find out how things were going between Ontario and Canada in London and whether there was, in fact, overlapping of activities. If you can reply to me on the same basis, I will see that it is sent confidentially to Michener.

With the arrival of Graham Spry you will have, I suppose, four Provincial representatives in London. No doubt you are considering the establishment of a Dominion-Provincial Council to meet every Saturday morning at Canada House.

Yours sincerely,

MIKE [PEARSON]

[32]D.R. Michener, secrétaire provincial, gouvernement de l'Ontario.
D.R. Michener, Provincial Secretary, Government of Ontario.

48. DEA/169 (S)

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL London, March 5, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

You need have no hesitation about sending a reassuring word to Rollie Michener about Armstrong's[33] relations with Canada House. He is friendly, accommodating, much liked in London, and anxious to be helpful in every way he can. He entertains handsomely in a very nice house on Chapel Street, where he gave a large and pleasant party for us on our first arrival — a compliment we partly returned by having all the Ontario House staff, as well as the B.C. House staff, at the Canada House Christmas party.

I have been fairly busy the last few months getting the economic and service sides of our representation in London in more cooperative shape, but haven't yet done what I feel should be done along these lines in the immigration field. When I do, I'll probably find a good deal of overlapping and some confusion between the activities of the Dominion and Provincial agencies in London.

The delicate question of their status and immunities still stands in fairly satisfactory abeyance. Armstrong has never raised it with me, and McAdam[34] only in respect of a club bag presented to him by the Prisoners-of-War Relatives' Association in Victoria, in token recognition of much good work he did for the prisoners-of-war during the war years. This little present looks like costing him about £10 in customs duty despite all our efforts to get an exemption for it as a bona fide gift.

Generally speaking, indeed without exception, relations with the Provincial Offices have been exceedingly cordial. They are well disposed and most cooperative. I am sometimes a little puzzled about the purpose they serve in the absence of either administrative or representative duties, but, as far as the present officers are concerned, their presence here does not constitute any real problem or complication in the representation of Canada in the United Kingdom.

Yours sincerely,

N.A. ROBERTSON

---

[33]Major J.S.P. Armstrong, agent général de l'Ontario au Royaume-Uni.
Maj. J.S.P. Armstrong, Agent-General of Ontario in United Kingdom.

[34]W.A. McAdam, agent général de la Colombie-Britannique au Royaume-Uni.
W.A. McAdam, Agent-General of British Columbia in United Kingdom.

CHAPITRE II/CHAPTER II
LE RÈGLEMENT DE LA PAIX EN EUROPE
EUROPEAN PEACE SETTLEMENT

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
LES TRAITÉS CONCLUS PAR SUITE DE LA CONFÉRENCE DE PAIX DE PARIS
TREATIES RESULTING FROM PARIS PEACE CONFERENCE

SECTION A
GÉNÉRALITÉS
GENERAL

49. DEA/4697-G-40

Note du chef de la Première direction politique pour la Direction économique[1]

Memorandum from Head, First Political Division to Economic Division[1]

SECRET Ottawa, January 17, 1947

I attach, for your information, copy of telegram No. WA-156 of January 16th,† from the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, and of telegram No. 73 of January 15th† from the High Commissioner in London. You will see from these telegrams that the final texts of the treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Finland are likely to be received within the next few days, and that signature of the treaties is scheduled to take place in Paris on February 10th.

It is, I think, essential that before these treaties are signed on Canadian behalf, they should be thoroughly examined by the various interested departments and agencies of the Canadian Government. With this in mind I hope to pass copies of the treaties to you in the very near future, and I would be grateful if you would have them examined in your Division, and let me have any comments you may wish to make. It should, of course, be borne in mind that the treaties are not at this stage subject to alteration, and it would therefore seem that any objections which may be raised to the texts of the treaties would have to be of a relatively serious nature before any Canadian refusal to sign could be considered.

R.G. RIDDELL

---

[1]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:
The following was typed on this copy of the document:
Similar letters have been sent to: Deputy Ministers, Departments of Trade & Commerce, Finance, Justice, National Defence (Army), (Navy), (Air), Deputy Custodian, Commissioner of Patents, and Legal and Pol. II Divisions.

50.

L'ambassadeur en France
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in France
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 72 Paris, February 10, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Have just returned accompanied by Ritchie,[2] Chapdelaine[3] and Beaulieu[4] from signature of the Peace Treaty with Italy which took place in the "Salon de l'Horloge" of the Quai d'Orsay at eleven a.m. The ceremony was brief but dignified. M. Bidault made a short speech of a formal character; there were no other speeches. The Italian Plenipotentiary was Soragna, an ex-Ambassador apparently chosen by the Italian Government in order to avoid sending an important political personality. M. Bidault rose to greet the Italian delegation when they entered the room, other Plenipotentiaries remaining seated. Unfortunately, in my view, the special position of the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers was underlined in small details of the ceremony such as order for seating and priority in signing the Treaty.

The Yugoslav delegation signed the Treaty although there was doubt until the last moment as to whether they would do so.

51. DEA/9376-A-40

Le sous-ministre du Commerce
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

RE TREATIES OF PEACE BETWEEN THE ALLIED AND ASSOCIATED POWERS ON THE ONE HAND AND ITALY, HUNGARY, BULGARIA, ROUMANIA, AND FINLAND ON THE OTHER, SIGNED IN PARIS, FEB. 10, 1947

With reference to your letter of January 24th,† now that these five treaties have been signed, certain consequent decisions and actions should be taken in Canada. It will be necessary to decide in particular whether most-favoured-nation treatment should be extended to the five countries in question.

Most favoured nation treatment. All the treaties provide that the allied and associated powers are entitled to most favoured nation treatment for a period of 18

[2]C.S.A. Ritchie, conseiller, ambassade en France.
C.S.A. Ritchie, Counsellor, Embassy in France.
[3]J.A. Chapdelaine, premier secrétaire, ambassade en France.
J.A. Chapdelaine, First Secretary, Embassy in France.
[4]Paul Beaulieu, deuxième secrétaire, ambassade en France.
Paul Beaulieu, Second Secretary, Embassy in France.

months following the signing of the treaties if they in fact bestow similar treatment upon the former enemy countries. If they do not grant these countries most favoured nation treatment, they are therefore presumably not entitled to receive such treatment. This question arises immediately in connection with the relations between Canada and Italy. For a number of months after the conclusion of hostilities, Canada received most favoured nation treatment from Italy while conceding only the General tariff in exchange. More recently, arrangements were made by Order in Council whereby the benefits of the Intermediate tariff were extended to Italy. This, however, falls a little short of most favoured nation treatment, and accordingly, unless Canada concedes most favoured nation treatment to Italy, Italy will not be obligated after the 10th of February, 1947 to continue extending most favoured nation treatment to this country.

With regard to the other four countries, namely Hungary, Bulgaria, Roumania and Finland, a decision must also be made whether to extend most favoured nation treatment to them on and after February 10th and to receive like treatment in return, or whether to take no such action and receive no such privilege.

In deciding upon the policy that should be followed it is appropriate to consider the trade possibilities involved, pre-war relationships, and broader questions of economic reconstruction and revival of world trade involved.

1. The importance of these five countries as potential customers for Canadian exports for a number of years to come will be reduced not only by reason of the wartime loss and damage which they have experienced, but also because of their obligation, imposed by these peace treaties, to pay reparations amounting to $1,330 millions (at the rate of $35 for one ounce of gold). It will of course be noted that Canada is not to receive any part of this sum. Of the total amount of reparations, Italy pays 360 millions, Hungary pays 300 millions, Bulgaria pays 70 millions, Roumania pays 300 millions, and Finland pays 300 millions. Of the total, the Soviet Union receives 900 millions, Yugoslavia 200 millions, Greece 150 millions, Czechoslovakia 50 millions, Ethiopia 25 millions, Albania 5 millions, making up the grand total of 1,330 millions. (See attached table for distribution in detail.)†

While it is probably good to achieve a final settlement of reparations as soon as possible, the short time allowed for payment (a matter of seven or eight years compared with the fifty years allowed to the United Kingdom for the repayment of postwar loans) and the extreme deterioration in productive capacities in the former enemy countries indicate that their ability to import will be severely restricted. It is also probable that the weight of their obligations to pay reparations will tend to keep them at least for some years to a considerable degree under the influence of their chief reparations creditor (the Soviet Union) and render them subservient to any trade policy that that country may wish to impose upon them. Canadian exporters cannot expect for several years to enjoy in these countries anything more than a very limited market for such instruments of production, raw materials and foodstuffs as they may find it indispensable to buy from this country.

2. Italy, Hungary, Roumania and Finland all before the war exchanged most favoured nation treatment with Canada and Bulgaria was the only country among the five which did not. All these most favoured nation arrangements were of course terminated by the war and have not been restored on Canada's side.

3. From a broader point of view, although the possibilities of trade with the five countries mentioned are limited, there is much to be said for exchanging most favoured nation treatment with them for at least a limited period on the ground that the people of this country desire to make mutually advantageous arrangements with a view to the removal of wartime animosities, the restoration of international trade, the promotion of Canadian exports, and the reconstruction of the war-shattered economies of Europe. In conformity with this view we have recently exchanged most favoured nation treatment by trade agreements with several countries, have offered to do so with others, and have in no case refused to consider such a step. We are also about to negotiate a multilateral agreement with sixteen or seventeen countries on the principle of a general and mutual interchange of most-favoured nation treatment. In these negotiations it is contemplated that the advantages of the concessions which may be exchanged among the members should also be freely extended to non-members for a trial period of possibly one year, after which, if they desired to continue to enjoy the benefits of membership, they would be required to assume its obligations including that of making suitable reciprocal concessions.

The exchange of most favoured nation treatment with the five countries above mentioned might raise the objection that we have not yet done this with all the countries which were our allies in the war: but in every instance where such a proposal has been made, we have indicated our willingness to negotiate on this basis. To the criticism that we might become involved in at least a logical commitment to exchange most favoured nation treatment in the future with other countries where the advantages might be more dubious, it may be replied that the draft charter for the I.T.O. in its present form provides ample escape clauses for use in the event that prospective trade agreements should be followed by unexpected undesirable consequences.

In view of these considerations, it is the recommendation of the Department of Trade and Commerce that action might well be taken by Canada to exchange most favoured nation treatment with the five countries above mentioned for a period of 18 months and thereafter subject to termination on three months' notice, an arrangement which would secure to all the countries concerned, for the time being, the contemplated benefits, while at the same time leaving it possible to terminate the exchange on short notice in the event of unexpected difficulties or conflict with future arrangements to be made under the I.T.O.

If such action meets with your approval, it might be taken at the time of ratification of the treaties in Ottawa or as soon as conveniently possible thereafter.

M.W. MACKENZIE

52. DEA/9558-A-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à la mission commerciale en Suisse

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Trade Delegation in Switzerland

TELEGRAM 55 Ottawa, May 16, 1947

SECRET

GRANT OF MOST-FAVOURED-NATION TARIFF TREATMENT TO ITALY, ROUMANIA, HUNGARY, BULGARIA AND FINLAND

You will recall that it was agreed some weeks ago on an official level by the Departments of External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, Finance and National Revenue that Canada should accord most-favoured-nation treatment to the above countries as soon as the Treaties of Peace are ratified, on condition that these countries reciprocate as they are obliged to do under the terms of the Peace Treaties.

2. Since we may be in a position to proceed with this matter shortly, will you please advise if you consider there is any reason why the action contemplated should not be taken. I appreciate that generally we would not wish to give any country a "free ride" on the concessions which may be granted at Geneva. However, in the case of these countries, we would probably receive compensating advantages in our trade and political relations with them.

53. DEA/9558-A-40

La mission commerciale en Suisse
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Trade Delegation in Switzerland
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 72 Geneva, May 20, 1947

SECRET

Following from Wilgress, Begins: Your telegram No. 55 of May 16th.

The question first raised in your telegram was discussed at our delegation meeting today and we are in agreement that action contemplated should be taken. Ends.

54. DEA/4697-G-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1319 Ottawa, August 16, 1947

Your telegram No. 1083 of July 5, 1947,† concerning Instruments of Ratification of Peace Treaties.

Assistant Secretary to Governor General advises that Governor General has sent Submission for signature of Instruments of Ratification to King's Private Secretary. Would you transmit the Instruments of Ratification to the King's Secretary after having made following corrections to each Instrument.

2. The words "Emperor of India" in the King's title should be neatly lined out several times in India ink, so that historians who may be so inclined will still be able to understand sense of deletion. His Majesty has been asked to agree that for all Royal Instruments in respect of Canada the title "Emperor of India" need not be used after August 15, though the legal change will not be effective until the necessary executive action has been taken following the approval of the several Commonwealth Parliaments.

3. We have asked the Assistant Secretary to ensure that after the Instruments have been signed by His Majesty they are returned to you. Would you take necessary steps to obtain these instruments and retain them in your possession until you receive further instructions concerning their deposit.

55. DEA/4697-G-1-40

Communiqué de presse du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Press Release by Department of External Affairs

NO. 37 Ottawa, September 20, 1947

FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION

The Department of External Affairs announced today that the Canadian Instruments of Ratification of the Peace Treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland had been deposited, thus terminating the state of war existing between Canada and these countries. The Instruments of Ratification were signed by His Majesty the King on the recommendation of the Canadian Government, after approval had been given by the Parliament of Canada.

2. The Instruments of Ratification of the Peace Treaties with Roumania, Hungary and Finland were deposited by the Canadian Embassy in Moscow with the Soviet Foreign Ministry at 6 p.m., Moscow time, September 19th. The Instrument of Ratification of the Peace Treaty with Italy was deposited by the Canadian Embassy in Paris with the French Foreign Office at 6 p.m., Paris time, on September 15th. The Peace Treaties came into force, as between Canada and each enemy state, on the date of the deposit of the Canadian Instrument of Ratification.

3. The Instruments of Ratification executed by the enemy states and by the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Soviet Union and France, were deposited on September 15th.

4. The deposit of the Canadian Instruments of Ratification brings to a close the process of peace making with the ex-Axis satellite states of Europe and is the final step in the procedure which, as far as Canada is concerned, commenced with its participation in the Paris Conference, July 29th to October 15th, 1946. The Treaties were signed by Major General G.P. Vanier, Canadian Ambassador to France, on February 10th, 1947.

5. Canada is still legally in a state of war with Germany and Japan, with whom peace treaties have not yet been completed.

56. DEA/4697-G-1-40

Procès-verbal d'une réunion de la Direction juridique

Minutes of Meeting of Legal Division

[Ottawa], November 27, 1947

A meeting of officers of the Legal Division was held in Mr. Hopkins' office on Saturday, November 22, 1947, at 10 a.m.

Those present were:

E. R. Hopkins (Chairman)
M. H. Wershof
F. B. Roger
R. Chaput
K. J. Burbridge

The meeting was called to review Mr. Burbridge's memorandum† dated November 18, 1947, on the subject of the implementation of the four Peace Treaties recently signed by Canada. It was agreed that:

1. Inquiries should be made from our Embassy in Washington and from Canada House concerning the effective hour of the Peace Treaties in so far as the United States and United Kingdom Governments are concerned. Although it was realized that this information is not of paramount importance, it would be useful in order to complete the Department's file in the event that either the Government or this Department should be questioned about this in the future.

2. On the subject of the renewal or revival of bilateral Treaties, each of the Peace Treaties contained identical clauses. The Treaty Section is to immediately prepare a revised list of all such Treaties for each ex-enemy country concerned. If the subject matter of the Treaty unquestionably concerns economic matters or matters which come within the scope of one of the divisions of this Department, the matter will be referred to that particular division by Legal with the request to consult the appropriate government department as to the advisability of renewing the particular Treaty. (Once the matter has been cleared up with the appropriate government department and the government policy determined by the appropriate division of this Department, it would be immediately referred back to the Legal Division.) If it is decided that the Treaty is not the concern of any particular division in this Department, it will be dealt with by the Legal Division and the appropriate government departments, if necessary, will be consulted. When all the Treaties have been cleared in this way the Legal Division will then draft an omnibus submission to Council to be submitted under a covering memo to the Minister, which memo should be in the hands of the Minister not later than February 15, 1948. The views of all government departments and divisions of this Department should be obtained by the Legal Division not later than February 1, 1948.

3. On the repatriation of enemy prisoners of war and the withdrawal of Canadian forces from enemy territory, it was decided that this Department should write to the Department of National Defence, at Deputy Minister level, bringing the relevant sections of the Treaties to the attention of that Department and, in a general way, asking whether in the opinion of National Defence any steps need be taken to fully implement these sections of the Treaties. In correspondence with other departments and divisions the relevant provisions of the Treaties should be made known and the time limit for action stressed.

4. On the subject of the restitution clauses contained in the various Treaties, it was felt that it was very unlikely that Canadian citizens would be involved to any great extent by reason of the fact that restitution was confined to property removed from the territory of one of the United Nations and is presently located in Italy. However, since a considerable number of refugees were now in Canada these sections should be brought to the attention of Canadian citizens in order that they may be advised of any rights or privileges they may have. It was decided that there was no need, at least at the present time, for the establishment of a new Inter-Departmental Committee but that this Department could use as a "sounding board" the existing Inter-Departmental Sub-Committee on Reparations Claims. It was subsequently decided that this matter could be referred to this Sub-Committee in order to determine whether the Government should advertise. If the Sub-Committee decided that advertising was advisable, a recommendation to this effect could be given in the form of a memo to this Minister.

5. The question of what constituted sufficient notice to the Canadian public was discussed. In September of this year the Economic Division brought this matter to the attention of the Minister. At that time the question concerned the legislation of certain foreign governments which affected the rights of Canadian citizens and dealt specifically with the registration of Canadian-held securities in order to avoid confiscatory measures. The Minister decided, in order to sufficiently advise Canadians on these matters, that a press release by the Department would suffice. The meeting held the view that so far as the rights and obligations of Canadian citizens under all Peace Treaties were concerned a press release would also be sufficient. However, it was decided that, before presenting the matter to the Minister, the views of the Inter-Departmental Sub-Committee should be obtained.

6. On the subject of Canadian property rights in enemy territory, it was decided that the property sections of all the Treaties should be brought to the attention of the Canadian public.[5] Before doing this inquiries should be made through our Missions in London and Washington concerning the steps taken by the U.K. and U.S.A. to advise their citizens of their rights arising under these sections of the Treaties and, at the same time, asking for the name and address of the particular Commission set up by the enemy government in order to handle claims of this nature. The meeting was told that the Italian Government had already established this Commission and it was agreed that Mr. Migone from the Italian Representative's Office should be called in to discuss the details of the procedure his Government wishes to follow.

[7.] On the subject of industrial, literary, and artistic property rights the meeting agreed with the recommendations contained in the memorandum of November 18th. It was suggested that in view of the fact that these particular matters came within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State Department we should ask the Under-Secretary of State to sponsor a press release advising Canadians of their rights under this section.

8. On the subject of insurance, the meeting thought that the Department's obligation would be discharged if the Under-Secretary of State wrote to the Superintendent of Insurance bringing the relevant sections of the Treaties to his attention and, at the same time, requesting him to notify Canadian insurance organizations; the method of so doing to be left to his discretion.

9. The meeting agreed with the recommendations concerning periods of prescription.

10. The meeting agreed with the recommendation concerning judgments but it was decided that all that would be necessary would be to advise the Canadian Bar Association, which body would have the machinery to bring the matter to the attention of the various Provincial Bar Associations.

General Conclusions

1. It was agreed that this Department should seek the opinion of the Department of Justice as to whether existing federal legislation is sufficient to fully implement Peace Treaties and, at the same time, External Affairs should write to the various government departments concerned with certain sections of the Treaties asking those particular departments for their views. In the letter to Justice we should indicate, wherever possible, the particular sections of the Treaties which are doubtful. The meeting felt that Justice might be reluctant to give a blanket opinion in the whole field of Canadian legislation so far as it might be affected by the Peace Treaties. In view of this, External Affairs could point out to Justice that the Legal Division was contacting certain government agencies, for instance, the Custodian, and this question put up to that particular agency but it would be unfortunate if this Department overlooked some phase of the Treaties which would require new legislation. In this matter, therefore, the responsibility might rest finally with the Department of Justice.

2. It was decided that this Department should make inquiries from Canada's High Commissioner's Office, London, and from our High Commissioners' Offices in Australia and South Africa concerning the steps that have been taken by those respective governments to implement the Treaties already signed. In this connection we might ask for all legislation enacted to date and the steps taken by those governments to advise their citizens of rights and obligations under the Treaties. However, before doing this a careful check is to be made in our own files and records in order to see that all this information, or some of it, might not have already been given by these Missions to the Canadian Government.

[5]Voir aussi les documents 139-140./See also Documents 139-40.

3. About six months ago the British Commonwealth Relations Office in a despatch to this Department requested Canada's views as to the advisability of the establishment of a Commonwealth Committee in order to discuss problems of mutual interest arising out of the signing of the various Peace Treaties. External Affairs consulted a number of interested government departments the result of which was that the consensus of opinion strongly favoured the establishment of a Commonwealth Committee of this kind. This view of the Canadian Government was then made known to the British Commonwealth Relations Office but it appears that nothing further has been done in regard to the establishment of such a committee or the holding of a Commonwealth Conference. The meeting decided that this matter should immediately be followed up by a despatch to the Commonwealth Relations Office, London.

57. DEA/4697-G-1-40

Le sous-ministre de la Justice
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Justice
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, December 9, 1947

RE TREATIES OF PEACE WITH ITALY, ROUMANIA, HUNGARY AND FINLAND

I have to refer to your letter of November 26th† respecting the Treaties of Peace with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland. You ask my opinion whether any Canadian legislation is necessary in order to ensure that Canada's obligations under the four Treaties can be implemented and you also seek my views as to the character of any such legislation.

In my opinion legislation is necessary. In the case of the Italian Treaty, for example, provision is made in Article 79 for the liquidation and disposition of Italian property in accordance with the law of the Allied or Associated Power concerned. So far as I know there is at the present time no law pursuant to which Italian property can be liquidated and disposed of. Article 81 of this Treaty defines the status of debts and insofar as this definition is at variance with the present law, legislation is necessary. Finally legislation would be required to give effect to Annex XVI of the Italian Treaty.

The Treaties with Roumania, Finland and Hungary are, in this respect, in substantially the same terms and the remarks above apply.

I have not had an opportunity of considering the precise terms of any legislation necessary to implement these Treaties but in a general way the legislation would have to be along the lines of the Treaty of Peace (Germany) Order, 1920, and the Treaties of Peace (Austria and Bulgaria) Order, 1921. These Orders were made by the Governor in Council pursuant to general statutes authorizing the Governor in Council to make Orders giving effect to the provisions of the Treaties. See chapter 36 of the statutes of 1919, second session, and chapter 4 of the statutes of 1920.

Parliament could adopt a similar course with respect to the present Treaties. A general empowering statute could be enacted and the necessary Orders could be made by the Governor in Council. This apparently is the method that has been adopted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom with reference to the Treaties under discussion.

F.P. VARCOE

58. DEA/4697-G-1-40

Le sous-ministre du Commerce
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, December 23, 1947

This will acknowledge your letter of December 9th respecting the provision in the Peace Treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland for the revival of prewar bilateral treaties.

(1) Italy — The Convention signed at London in 1923 superseded the Commercial Agreement of 1910 which accordingly lapsed. At the present time Italy extends to Canada the benefits of its conventional tariff which is tantamount to most-favoured-nation treatment and Canada extends the benefits of the intermediate tariff (i.e. less than full most-favoured-nation treatment on some items) to Italian products. The extension of full most-favoured-nation treatment to Italy has however been under consideration for some time. There are two ways in which this might be done: either by revival of the prewar treaty or, under the recent treaty of peace. As you know the Peace Treaty imposes an obligation on Italy to grant most-favoured-nation treatment to Canada for a period of eighteen months, provided Canada reciprocates.

While we do not now recommend the revival of the prewar treaty, which might appear to involve a permanent commitment, there does not appear to be any very good reason for further postponement of the temporary exchange of m.f.n. treatment with Italy under the terms of the Peace Treaty which both Canada and Italy have signed. The Italians are anxious for this step to be taken and have repeatedly made representations to us about it. They are anxious to increase their imports of Canadian products and are short of Canadian dollars with which to do so. The world is short of products of every kind and it is desirable that in the obstacles to the use of Italian manpower for increased production those which can be removed without injury be eliminated. If the democratic Western countries refuse to enter into improved relations with Italy, they are to that extent forcing her into closer economic and political contacts elsewhere. Canada has already re-established an Embassy in Rome and is maintaining trade representation there. The exchange of most-favoured-nation treatment under the Treaty of Peace would be a logical continuation of existing policy, and the sooner it is done the more goodwill such an action is likely to create. Continuance of most-favoured-nation treatment would depend upon the course pursued by Italy in connection with the I.T.O.

(2) As in the case of Italy, the Peace Treaties which Canada has signed with Finland, Roumania and Hungary require these countries to exchange most-favoured-nation treatment with Canada for a period of eighteen months, if requested, but we are not aware that they have as yet made any request of Canada in this connection. If the I.T.O. is established, and these countries adhere, trade negotiations with them will be undertaken as in the case of Italy. Any agreements which may result from such negotiations will unlike the pre-war arrangements be independent of any agreements between the countries in question and the United Kingdom. Even if the I.T.O. negotiations were not in prospect, Canada would doubtless wish to replace the pre-war arrangement with agreements directly concluded with the respective countries. We would suggest that the prewar treaties with Finland, Roumania and Hungary be allowed to lapse. As in the case of Italy, it would appear desirable to concede an exchange of m.f.n. treatment to the other countries mentioned in this paragraph, whenever this can conveniently be done, its continuance to depend on their policy in regard to I.T.O.

The following additional points may be noted in regard to the treaties mentioned in your letter -

a) Since the United Kingdom has replaced its pre-war treaty with Finland by a new agreement which contains no provision for accession by Canada, it is not clear that we could revive the old treaty, which was not directly made with us, and it would seem desirable that any action that we might take in connection with treaty relationships with Finland should be done directly in the name of Canada.

b) In section five of your letter, it is stated that Canada took no action under the provisions of the United Kingdom-Roumania Treaty of 1930. Our records, however, contain a telegram dated 26th September 1930 requesting the British Minister at Bucharest to notify the Roumanian Government of Canada's wish to exchange most-favoured-nation treatment under the new treaty. A reply of the 2nd October 1930 from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs states that the Roumanian Government had agreed to this. If you should care to have copies of this correspondence, we should be glad to have them made for you from our records.

c) We have no specific information concerning the arrangement in respect of Roumanian consular fees, mentioned in section six of your letter. Since however the Roumanian Government does all the foreign purchasing for that country, the matter is not of practical importance at the present time.

M.W. MACKENZIE

SECTION B

BULGARIE
BULGARIA

59. DEA/4697-G-6-40

Note de la Direction juridique
pour la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum from Legal Division to Second Political Division

[Ottawa], April 22, 1947

Under P.C. 1561 the Custodian has been vested with property in Canada belonging to persons residing in Bulgaria. The property thereunder vested amounts to $66,950.98. On the other hand, the Custodian's records show registration of property interests located in Bulgaria on the part of Canadian residents amounting to $196,190.30. Under the terms of the Peace Treaty with Bulgaria, each of the Allied and Associated Powers have the right to retain all properties which are within its territory and belonging to Bulgaria or Bulgarian nationals and may dispose of them within the limits of its claims and those of its nationals against Bulgaria or Bulgarian nationals including debts other than claims fully satisfied under other articles of the Treaty.

Canada is not one of the Allied or Associated Powers enumerated in the preamble. However, under Article 37, any member of the United Nations not signatory to the Treaty which was at war with Bulgaria may accede to the Treaty and, upon accession, should be deemed to be an Associated Power for the purposes of the Treaty.

With respect to the future conduct of the Custodian regarding the vested property and the claims, it seems essential to know whether or not Canada was at war with Bulgaria. Declaration of war by any state is not the only means of ascertaining whether a state of war exists between two countries.

On August 28, 1944, we advised the Dominions Office that Canada did not declare war on Bulgaria and our formal position was that of a country which had broken diplomatic relations but had not declared war.

However, if Canada has taken hostile steps against Bulgaria, or if Bulgaria has officially acted as if she considered herself at war with Canada, there is a possibility that a state of war existed between the two countries.

In order to ascertain the position, I have examined the following files:

2983-40C - Commencement of War with Bulgaria

97(s) - Occupation and Control of Bulgaria.

There is no indication in these files that Canada has taken hostile steps against Bulgaria, nor is there any indication that the Bulgarian Government has passed any legislation or regulations which would indicate that it considered itself at war with Canada. In fact, there is no reference to this matter except for a Post Scriptum in a despatch sent by Mr. Wrong on 27th January, 1944, to Mr. Ritchie, which reads as follows:

"One aspect of the problem should not be overlooked. The Bulgarians are unaware of our inaction and are under the mistaken impression that they are at war with us."

There is the possibility that Bulgaria has taken legislative measures showing that she considered herself at war with Canada. If that is the case, although Canada is not mentioned among the Allied and Associated Powers, we could, however, under Article 37 of the Treaty, as a member of the United Nations at war with Bulgaria, accede to the Treaty and thereby benefit from the obligations undertaken by Bulgaria or from the advantages granted by the Treaty, particularly in connection with the property seized by the Custodian and which belonged to persons residing in Bulgaria.

At the Paris Conference on the Peace Treaties Canada had no representatives on the committees but sent an observer. I think we there took the position that we had not declared war on Bulgaria and thus could not be a party to the Treaty.

Political II might think it advisable to ascertain if Bulgaria was at war with Canada. Consideration will have to be given to the expediency, if any facts disclose that Bulgaria was at war with Canada, of Canada acceding now to the Treaty, after having taken the position that we were not at war with Bulgaria.

If Political II believes that no enquiries are now necessary and that Canada is satisfied that we should take the position that there was never a state of war between us and Bulgaria, then further consideration shall have to be given to the policy to be adopted with respect to monies held here by the Custodian under P.C. 1561.[6]

E.R. HOPKINS

60.

DEA/4697-G-6-40

Note de la Direction juridique pour la Section des traités

Memorandum from Legal Division to Treaty Section

[Ottawa], August 20, 1947

RE TREATY OF PEACE — BULGARIA
RESTORATION OF PROPERTY AND COMPENSATION

Under P.C. 1561, the Custodian has been vested with property in Canada, belonging to persons residing in Bulgaria, valued at $66,950.98. The Custodian's

[6]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
In view of the position we took at Paris I think we would look rather silly if we were now to claim that a state of war has existed between Canada and Bulgaria and were to accede to a treaty in order to lay our hands on $67,000. Mr. Pearson agrees but says we should put the question before the Minister giving him our opinion and asking for his concurrence. Escott Reid Pol[itical Division] II April 25/47 records show registration of property interests, located in Bulgaria, on the part of persons residing in Canada amounting to $196,190.00. This sum of money in Canada and amount of claims in Bulgaria have created a thorny problem respecting the proper procedure to pursue.

2. Canada did not declare war on Bulgaria and is, therefore, not a party to the Peace Treaty. It was found impracticable to ascertain whether Bulgaria took any active war measures against Canada. The question was then raised as to whether Canada could benefit from the terms of the Peace Treaty without being a party to it but under the clauses affording benefit to United Nations. In a memorandum from the Treaty Division, dated March 4, 1947,† the conclusion was reached that Canada could benefit as one of the United Nations under the economic clauses of the Treaty regarding property claims.

3. It would appear, however, that in rendering this opinion the effect of Article 32 of the Treaty has been overlooked, as it reads as follows:

"articles 22, 23, 29, and annex VI of the present Treaty shall apply to the Allied and Associated Powers and France and to those of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Bulgaria have been broken off during the war."

It would seem that this Article has the effect of restricting the size of the group known as the United Nations, but, at the same time, enlarging the group of those who might benefit under the Treaty, notwithstanding that the individual nations concerned might not have declared war, or considered themselves in a state of war with Bulgaria.

4. The question now raised is whether Canada has in fact broken off diplomatic relations with Bulgaria since we did not have our own permanent representative accredited to that country.

6.[sic] In a telegram dated August 28, 1944, on file No. 97(S), drafted by Mr. Wrong and approved by Mr. Robertson, the following statement is made:

"Canada did not declare war on Bulgaria and our formal position is that of a country which has broken diplomatic relations but not declared war."

There is no information on the file showing the basis of Mr. Wrong's opinion concerning our rupture of diplomatic relations. It is possible that there is some agreement between Canada and Great Britain concerning our representation in situations such as this, and the question to be determined is whether withdrawal of the United Kingdom representative automatically gave Canada the privileges accorded in the Treaty, flowing from the fact of having broken off diplomatic relations.

7. In the event that there is no arrangement, agreement, or Treaty covering the situation of Commonwealth relations, two further questions arise.

1. Under the Treaty, can Canada pursue the claims for compensation and restitution of property of Canadians located in Bulgaria?

2. What is to happen to the property seized by the Custodian of Enemy Property here in Canada following the declaration that Bulgaria was a prescribed area?

F.B. R[OGER]

61. DEA/4697-G-6-40

Note de la Section des traités pour la Direction juridique
Memorandum from Treaty Section to Legal Division

[Ottawa], September 10, 1947

RE YOUR MEMO OF AUGUST 20, 1947
RUPTURE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH BULGARIA

I doubt whether this matter comes within the purview of the Treaty Section as it now operates. Nevertheless, I venture to submit the following.

2. Canada had no diplomatic or consular officer or trade commissioner in Bulgaria before the war. On the other hand Bulgaria did not have any representative here. Nevertheless, Canada took the formal position that she had broken diplomatic relations. I think the last expression should be interpretated in its broadest sense. By taking this stand, Canada intimated that she did not see fit to declare war on Bulgaria but that she considered herself to be on unfriendly relations with that country. In other words, the state of the relations between the two countries was similar to that which prevails when, as a result of an acute disagreement, diplomats are presented with their passports and asked to leave. The inference is that if Canada had had representatives in Bulgaria in the spring of 1941, they would have been recalled. Similarly, if Bulgaria had had a consulate in Montreal at that time, its staff would have been withdrawn as in the case of the Roumanian and Hungarian Consulates. There is no doubt that Canada would have acted thus in both cases.

3. The Canadian action in this case amounted to the broadening of the meaning normally attached to the expression "rupture of diplomatic relations" so as to cover a static situation. The main question is whether in the eyes of the world at large the Canadian interpretation can enable Canada to take advantage of Article 32 of the Bulgarian Peace Treaty. I am inclined to think that there is a fair chance that the question would be answered in the affirmative by an international tribunal. Article 32 would, no doubt, have to be interpretated as meaning more than its letter says. It remains to be seen whether the interests at stake would warrant taking such a risk. In view of the doubt existing, the matter might be conveniently dealt with by informal negotiations. This aspect should be considered by Political Divisions I and II.

4. With reference to paragraph 6 of your memorandum, the Treaty Section has no record of any relevant agreement with the United Kingdom. On the other hand, in the light of the correspondence exchanged between Mr. Read and Mr. Ewart in the spring of 1941 (see File No. 1744-40), it seems doubtful whether the United Kingdom acted on behalf of Canada when severing relations with Bulgaria. Indeed, this approach would not be in line with the Canadian policy of taking independent action in such matters which developed during the war.

5. The answer to paragraph 7(1) of your memorandum will be found in paragraph 3 above. I am not at all familiar with matters relating to the question raised in paragraph 7(2) of your memorandum. This, I think, should be dealt with by the Legal Division (excluding the Treaty Section) in consultation with the Custodian. I suppose the property should normally be returned to the owners, provided we are satisfied that Canadian property in Bulgaria was properly handled.

ROGER CHAPUT

SECTION C

FINLANDE
FINLAND

62. CH/Vol. 2085

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [London], February 19, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

Ford has sent me a copy of his Despatch No. 77 of February 11th,† reporting the Soviet request for the revision of the Petsamo Agreement.[7] Since I had a good deal to do with these negotiations from the Ottawa end, I think I should let you know that the present Soviet request for extending the period over which compensation payments are to be transferred from six years to eight does not strike me as unreasonable. The quantum of compensation secured for the International Nickel Company was relatively generous, certainly more substantial than the company had any reason to hope for. It is true, as Ford observes in the final paragraph of his despatch, that there was never any direct relationship contemplated between payments of compensation by the Soviet Government for the nickel plant in Petsamo, and the rate of payments which the U.S.S.R. might have expected to get in reparations from Finland. However, the prolongation of the period of Finnish reparations payments from six to eight years probably represents a substantial easement of the Finnish economic position, and was in itself a desirable development.

In all the circumstances I should be inclined not to argue the question of the connection between the Petsamo Protocol and the Finnish reparations agreement, and to agree to the requested extension in the time limit for payments under the Protocol, which as far as I know have been coming through punctually on the appointed days.

Sincerely yours,

N.A. ROBERTSON

[7]Voir le volume 12, le document 58./See Volume 12, Document 58.

63. CH/Vol. 2085

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 652 Ottawa, April 15, 1947

SECRET

Following for your information is text of telegram No. 89 of April 15th to the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires Moscow, Begins: My immediately preceding telegram regarding Petsamo, Begins: Following is text of reply which is Note No. 5 of April 11, 1947 to the Chargé d'Affaires of the Soviet Embassy and is signed by me, Begins: I have the honour to refer to the Note No. E5-011-30/F1 of February 8th, 1947† sent by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR to the Canadian Embassy at Moscow with regard to the Protocol of October 8, 1944 under which the Soviet Government agreed to pay to the Canadian Government during the course of six years from the date of signing of the Protocol in equal instalments the sum of twenty million United States dollars as full and final compensation for the taking over by the Soviet Government of the nickel mines including all property and installations appertaining thereto operated in the territory of Petsamo (Petchenga) for the benefit of the Mond Nickel Company and the International Nickel Company of Canada. In this Note the Soviet Government requested in view of the prolongation from six to eight years of the term of payment of reparations by Finland to the USSR that negotiations be commenced for the conclusion of a supplementary Protocol to the Protocol of October 8, 1944, providing for prolongation from six to eight years of the period for payment of compensation to the Canadian Government.

2. In the view of the Canadian Government the Protocol of October 8th 1944 is unconditional. The value of the Nickel Mines for which the Soviet Government has agreed to pay compensation is in no way affected by the arrangements for reparations. During course of the negotiations leading to the conclusion of the Protocol, the Canadian Government finds itself unable to subscribe to the contention that the payment of compensation was connected with the receipt of reparations from Finland. Consequently the Canadian Government is unable to agree to any modification of the clauses of the Protocol if this would be regarded as establishing in any way a precedent for further modifications in the event of future changes in provisions governing the delivery of reparations by Finland to the USSR.

3. However in view of the general dislocation of economic conditions which has complicated and may continue to complicate the task of bringing the Nickel Mines into full operation, the Canadian Government is prepared to negotiate an amendment to the Protocol of October 8, 1944 on the basis that:

(A) The April 1, 1947 instalment which has already matured, be paid in full in accordance with the terms of the existing agreement;

(B) The remaining sum payable, amounting to a total of 11,666,500 dollars now scheduled for payment in seven equal instalments during the period from Oct. 1 1947 to October 1, 1950, be paid instead in ten equal instalments of 1,166,650 dollars each payable on October 1, 1947; April 1, 1948; October 1, 1948; April 1, 1949, October 1, 1949, April 1, 1950, October 1, 1950, April 1, 1951, October 1, 1951 and December 31st 1951.

4. The Canadian Government further proposes that the negotiations concerning this question be conducted in Ottawa.

5. I should be grateful if the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the USSR would consider carefully the above proposal. Ends.

64. DEA/4697-G-5-40

Note de la Direction juridique pour la Direction économique

Memorandum from Legal Division to Economic Division

[Ottawa], December 9, 1947

RE RETURN OF ASSETS UNDER THE PEACE TREATY WITH FINLAND

In our work of reviewing the Peace Treaties with a view to ensuring their implementation by Canada, I would like to bring to the attention of your Division, Article 27 of the Peace Treaty with Finland, which, so far as Canada is concerned, came into force on the 19th of September of this year. This Article reads as follows:

"In so far as any such rights were restricted on account of Finland's participation in the war on Germany's side, the rights of the Finnish Government and of any Finnish nationals, including juridical persons, relating to Finnish property or other Finnish assets on the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers shall be restored after the coming into force of the present Treaty."

2. Unlike the other three Treaties which Canada has signed, it would appear that the Canadian Government, under the Finnish Treaty, is obliged to return immediately, all Finnish property which is vested in the Custodian. In this connection, no reference is made to Canadian claims against Finland or Finnish nationals. It would seem therefore that the return of such property is not contingent upon the satisfaction of these claims.

3. No doubt you will wish to consult the Department of Finance on this before the matter is referred to the Custodian. Considering the desirability of channelling of correspondence between this Department and the Custodian, through your Division, I would suggest that you be good enough to bring this matter to the Custodian's attention with the least possible delay. This Division would appreciate being advised of any important developments and will be anxious to give any assistance which might be necessary.

4. I might add that we have already enquired from United Kingdom and U.S. Governments concerning the steps taken in those two countries to implement this particular article of the Finnish Treaty. We shall advise you of the replies when received.

E.R. HOPKINS

SECTION D

ITALIE
ITALY

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

COLONIES (COMMISSION D'ENQUÊTE) COLONIES (COMMISSION OF INVESTIGATION)

65. CH/Vol. 2094

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

SECRET Ottawa, June 13, 1947

Dear Mr. Hudd,

I am interested to learn from your telegram No. 944 of June 10th† that the question of disposing of the Italian Colonies has been discussed again in meetings at the Dominions Office. I am inclined to agree with Mr. Robertson's view, to which you have referred, that the disposal of the Italian Colonies is not a subject in which we have an immediate and direct concern. Although small Canadian Units participated in the African campaigns, it is doubtful whether we would wish to present a claim for participation in the negotiations of the Big Four concerning the disposal of Italy's African possessions.

On grounds of their direct concern in this question we sympathize with the South African and Australian claims to association. We also share their dissatisfaction with the position of the smaller powers vis-a-vis procedures adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers for the resolution of peace treaty problems. It would be unfortunate, however, if this general support were interpreted by the Australian representatives to mean that Canada concurs in the proposals put forward by Mr. Evatt and Mr. Beasley[8] for representation on international matters of common interest through a Commonwealth Panel.

I understand that the United Kingdom has now undertaken to support the claims of Australia and South Africa to appear before the Deputies before a decision is taken on the terms of reference for any Commission of Investigation which may be established and also to support Australia's claim to make representations to the Commission, and to receive copies of relevant documents. This decision appears reasonable to us, particularly since it seems unlikely that claims for more direct participation of Commonwealth countries would meet with the approval of other members of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

[8]J.A. Beasley, haut-commissaire d'Australie au Royaume-Uni.
J.A. Beasley, High Commissioner of Australia in United Kingdom.

Pending further consideration of our interest in these questions, I think you should continue in your discussions with the Dominions Office and other Commonwealth representatives, to follow the general line indicated in paragraph 3 of your telegram. In this connection it would be well to avoid giving the impression that Canada would be prepared to give other than general support to the principle that "interested governments" should participate directly in the Four Power negotiations for the disposal of the Colonies. In particular, we would not wish to give any appearance of supporting the Australian accusation that the United Kingdom is prepared to bargain Commonwealth interest for concessions from other states, an accusation which in our view is most unjust. We should be careful also not to concur in what appears to be the Australian assumption that it can insist of right that the United Kingdom Government present and support Australian views in meetings of the Council of Foreign Ministers and its subsidiary bodies.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

66. CH/Vol. 2094

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1533 Ottawa, October 2, 1947

SECRET

Reference your telegram No. 1510 of Sept. 29th. Italian Colonies†
Following from Warren, Begins: 171. As presaged in your message Garner left an Aide Mémoire with the Dept. on Sept. 30th outlining the proposal of the United Kingdom authorities for excluding Soviet Satellites from the Category of "Interested Governments" for purposes of the disposal of the Italian Colonies. The Aide Mémoire suggested that this could be accomplished by restricting "Interested Governments" to those which participated with substantially armed forces in the African campaign. Garner indicated that the United Kingdom would not wish to propose this definition if Canada objected to being excluded from the category of "Interested Governments".

2. This question was brought to the attention of the Minister and Mr. Pearson and it was agreed that while in practice we would not object to being excluded from the procedure for the disposal of the Italian Colonies we did not think that the principle implicit in the United Kingdom definition of interested Governments was a good one. It was thought that a preferable definition of such Governments would be those which participated with substantial forces in the "Italian and African campaigns" or alternatively in the "Mediterranean Theatre". Either of these definitions would include in the category of "Interested Governments" those states having a direct concern in the disposition of the Italian Colonies and would also preserve our right to be associated if in the future it were decided that Canada should take an active role in the settlement of this question.

3. As has been indicated in previous correspondence it is not our intention to take any active part in the procedure for disposing of the Colonies. We would be glad however to be kept informed of developments on this subject. Ends.

67.

CH/Vol. 2094

Le haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire général de la Conférence des suppléants spéciaux

Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom to Secretary-General of Conference of Deputies

[London], November 3, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your communication of October 20th† enquiring on behalf of the Conference of Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers whether the Canadian Government would wish to be accorded facilities to present its views regarding the disposal of the Italian Colonies.

I have been authorized to inform you that at this initial stage the Government of Canada does not wish to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to present the Canadian viewpoint on this question. The Canadian Government may, however, wish to make known its views on the disposal of Italy's former African possessions at a later date when the reports are available of the Commission of Investigation, which it is anticipated will be sent out to the former Italian Colonies in accordance with the terms of the joint resolution of the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and France, contained in Annex XI of the Peace Treaty with Italy.

In the meantime, the Canadian Government would appreciate being kept informed to the fullest extent practicable, of all important developments in the consideration of this question by the Conference of Deputies, including the substance of any opinions on the final disposal of the Colonies which may be presented by other interested Governments.

I have etc.

FREDERIC HUDD

Copies sent to: High Commissioners in London for:
South Africa,
Australia,
New Zealand,
India,
Pakistan.

68. CH/Vol. 2094

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1707 London, November 14, 1947

SECRET

Your telegram No. 1681 of November 1st.† Disposal of former Italian Colonies. Following is text of reply received from Secretary-General of Conference of Deputies to message addressed to him on behalf of Canadian government, Begins: I am instructed by the Deputies to refer to your letter of 3rd November, in which you drew the attention of the Deputies to the part played by the armed forces of Canada in the conquest of Cyrenaica and Tripolitania.

I am to state in reply that the Canadian Government will be afforded an opportunity of expressing their views to the Deputies on the disposal of the former Italian Colonies both before and after the Four-Power Commission of Investigation have presented their reports. The Canadian Government may on the recommendation of the Deputies and with the consent of the Council of Foreign Ministers be given the opportunity to present their views directly to the Council of Foreign Ministers at any session on the agenda of which appears the question of the disposal of the former Italian Colonies.

With regard to the enquiry of the Canadian Government regarding the documentation to be supplied to other interested Governments, I am to state that a copy of the reports of the Commission of Investigation will be made available to them. Ends.

2. The reference to the "part played by the armed forces of Canada in the conquest of Cyrenaica and Tripolitania" in the first paragraph of the Secretary-General's communication is completely irrelevant, as no mention was made of part played by Canadian armed forces in our communication to him, which was but a transcription of the text you sent in your telegram under reference.

3. Now that the Deputies have agreed that Canadian Government will be afforded opportunity of expressing their views both before and after the Commission have presented their reports, there appears to be no need to take any further action, and you may wish to disregard my request for instructions on this point made in my letter to Mr. Pearson of November 12th.†

69. DEA/4697-G-2-40

Note de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum by Second Political Division

SECRET [Ottawa], December 13, 1947

On Wednesday, December 10, the Italian Minister, Count Carlo Fecia di Cossato, and his Commercial Attaché, Mr. Pietro Magone, discussed with Mr. Pearson, certain questions of mutual interest to both countries. At the meeting, which was later presided over by Mr. Moran, of the Economic Division, representatives from Political I, Political II, Consular and Legal Divisions attended to hear what the Italian Representative had to say.

The only question raised regarding the Italian Peace Treaty was the anxiety of the Italian representative to have all Italian property vested in the Custodian returned as quickly as possible. He was told that this matter was now receiving active consideration of the different departments concerned. Mention was also made of Canada's attitude regarding Italian colonies. It seems that this is a matter which is being dealt with by Political I Division. In this respect, the Italian representative was told that the Canadian Government had not adopted a definite policy on the matter of Italian colonies, but that the primary consideration to be given to the adoption of any policy by Canada would be its concern to have political and economic stability in those particular geographical areas.

K.J. B[URBRIDGE]

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

SECOURS MILITAIRE ET AIDE FINANCIÈRE
MILITARY RELIEF AND FINANCIAL AID

70. CEW/Vol. 17

Note de l'ambassade aux États-Unis pour le Département d'État des États-Unis

Memorandum from Embassy in United States to Department of State of United States

Washington, January 13, 1947

The Canadian Embassy refers to the Department of State's memorandum of October 16 and to subsequent discussions on the policy to be followed with respect to settlement of the bills for civilian supplies furnished to Italy and Greece on a combined basis through the military authorities of the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada.

2. The Canadian Government recognizes that Italy and Greece are in fact unable to make more than nominal settlement for these claims, and appreciates the reasons which have led the United States Government as well as the United Kingdom Government to wish to cancel their claims on Italy and Greece for Plan A supplies. In view of these considerations the Canadian Government will not seek more than a nominal settlement for its share of these claims against Italy and Greece.

3. The willingness of the Canadian Government to seek no more than a nominal settlement of its share of the bills for civilian supplies furnished to Italy is conditional upon the signature by Italy of the peace treaty in its present form, at least in respect of those clauses relating to financial relations between Italy and the United States, United Kingdom and Canada. The Canadian Government does not intend to inform Italy of its attitude until Italy subscribes to the peace treaty.

4. A copy of this memorandum is being furnished to the United Kingdom Embassy.

71. DEA/8799-40

Le ministre des Finances
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Finance
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, April 2, 1947

My dear Colleague:

RE MILITARY RELIEF CLAIMS ON ITALY

I understand that during the conversation which Mr. Beaudry had on Mr. Pearson's behalf with Count Cossato last week to inform him regarding our decision to make no further payments to Italy in respect of Allied military lire received for the use of the Canadian forces and the obligation to redeem which Italy has now undertaken, Mr. Bryce, who was present, informed Count Cossato that Canada did not propose to request more than nominal settlement from Italy in respect of any claims arising out of Military Relief obligations. Mr. Bryce made this statement at that time after previous consultation with your Department and in accordance with the decision to which you and I agreed in January when we were being pressed by the United Kingdom and the United States to cancel these claims on Italy and Greece. Mr. Bryce informs me that he thought, and your Department agreed, that the information regarding our attitude on this matter would serve to soften the shock to the Italians of our decision to make no further payments in respect of lire. In answer to a question, Mr. Bryce stated that while he could not say what the amount of the claim would have been if presented, he thought it would probably be upwards of $25,000,000.

I am writing to confirm my approval of this action and to suggest that it would be well if your Department, if you concur, could inform the Italians in writing that in view of their general financial position, we do not propose to request more than a nominal settlement from them in respect of these claims on Military Relief. I would suggest that such message might indicate that we would propose at a later stage to take up with them the question of making such nominal settlement, but that we wished them to know at this time that we would not propose to press them for more than this.[9]

Yours very truly,
D.C. ABBOTT

72.

DEA/8799-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], April 15, 1947

CONVERSATION WITH THE REPRESENTATIVE OF ITALY, COUNT DI COSSATO — CANADIAN PAYMENTS UNDER THE LIRE ACCOUNT — FINANCIAL SITUATION OF ITALY — QUESTION OF PURCHASING FLOUR IN CANADA — ARTICLE 79 OF ITALIAN TREATY ETC.

Count di Cossato came to see me by appointment this afternoon and left with me the attached summary† of what he had in mind to talk about in relation to the question of further payments under the lire account. He opened the conversation by a reference to the cordial conversation which he has had recently with Mr. St. Laurent on the financial situation of Italy. In this connection, he said Mr. St. Laurent was fully aware of this situation. He referred also to his recent conversation with you during which you were good enough to suggest that he might write you a personal letter listing and stating all the items which the Italian Government would wish to place before the Canadian authorities for consideration and decision. He said that before preparing and presenting this personal letter, he wished to await further information from his own Government.

As regards the attached summary of what he wanted to talk about — which he did not wish to present as either an official note or a note verbale — he took the occasion of his call to mention the following points:

---

[9]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
For appropriate letter. St. L[aurent]
Voir le document 73./See Document 73.

1. While he appreciated that the Canadian Government had stated in making a payment of some $3,900,000. under the lire account, that they did not consider themselves, according to international law, under any obligation to do so, he had not himself referred to this aspect in his reply to us, adding that in spite of what he referred to as the unilateral attitude taken by the Canadian Government on the subject, the aspect in question might be, to some extent, a juridical one.

2. While he realized, however, that probably the matter of further payments under the lire account was now closed, the decision not to make any further payments had apparently been taken before it was conveyed to him by myself, Mr. Moran and Mr. Bryce.

3. He wished to refer to the fact that according to information he had received from the United States, the United States authorities themselves had decided yesterday to make a further payment of $25,000,000. to Italy.

4. He said he understood the Anglo-Italian Agreement was to be finally concluded tomorrow and that while the Agreement was an all embracing one, he was sure that, in the setting off of the accounts between the two countries during the negotiation of the Agreement, the United Kingdom authorities had taken into consideration a substantial amount (possibly $100,000,000.) going to Italy under the lire account, although it is not specifically mentioned in the Agreement.

5. He mentioned also the fact that some $20,000,000. in U.S. funds had been spent in Canada. These funds had been provided by the Italian mission in the United States.

6. He placed some emphasis on the fact that the Italian people were badly in need of flour, which he could purchase in Canada if he had the means of purchasing it for his country.

The main point of Mr. di Cossato's call relates obviously to the hope of his Government to obtain some financial assistance from Canada. I understood him to say that Mr. St. Laurent was to have a word with Mr. Abbott on the subject. He appreciated that the Canadian Government had seriously in mind to ask only a nominal payment from Italy for military relief but, as he said, this would not give him the means of purchasing flour in Canada.

Towards the close of the conversation, he informed me that the United Kingdom authorities had waived their claims against Italy under Article 79 of the Italian Treaty relating to Italian property and so forth. I understood him to say he had also mentioned this aspect to you as regards the Canadian position as to Article 79.

From the above, it may be seen that the general purpose of Mr. di Cossato's call was again to bring to our attention the financial needs of the Italian people in a further endeavour to ensure, if possible, that, if we are disposed and in a position to do something for them under existing circumstances, the Italian situation is carefully kept in mind by the Canadian authorities concerned.

He made it clear he did not wish to press the Italian situation unduly upon Mr. St. Laurent and yourself, by whom he had already been received, but in view of the fact that you had advised him he could get in touch with me at any time he had some matter to put forward, he had considered it useful to come and have this conversation with me.

I received him cordially and, without committing the Department by way of any particular assurance, told him that I would be glad to bear this conversation in mind and report it to you.

I am sending a copy of this to Mr. Moran and to Records.

LAURENT BEAUDRY

73. DEA/8799-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au représentant de l'Italie

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Representative of Italy

Ottawa, April 15, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your recent conversations with Mr. Laurent Beaudry on the subject of the sums remaining in the Canadian allied military lire account.

In accordance with your request, I wish now to confirm in writing our understanding that the Government of Canada, having made available $3,900,000 for the purchase of Canadian goods and services, is not in a position to make further payments against this account for which, you will recall, the Italian Government assumed responsibility under the terms of the Treaty of Peace.

My Government fully recognizes, however, the serious economic difficulties which face the Italian Government at this time and wishes to do anything in its power to make possible an easier transition to conditions of peace. In this connection, I am glad to be able to inform you that it is our intention to ask for a nominal payment only against the sum of approximately $25,000,000 expended by us in furnishing civilian relief goods before the responsibility for their provision was assumed by the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration. At some later date we shall wish to discuss the details of this claim, but for the present it appears desirable to inform you that, in view of the difficult financial position of the Italian Government, it is proposed to request no more than a nominal settlement.

I have etc.

L.B. PEARSON

74. DEA/8799-40

Le directeur de la Direction économique du ministère des Finances au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Director, Economic Division, Department of Finance to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, October 17, 1947

Dear Sir:

ATTENTION: MR. MORAN

I regret the delay in replying to your letters of August 28th† and September 15th† concerning the suggestion in teletype WA-2729† from Washington that the Canadian Government should postpone collection of its claim on the Italian Government for a nominal payment on Military Relief account in order to permit the release to the Italian Government of a five billion lira fund now constitutionally "frozen" until all claims upon the fund have been cancelled.

It is difficult to suggest an immediate solution to this problem. On the one hand we are not yet ready to indicate the size and nature of the nominal payment we would expect to receive in settlement of our claim against Italy, while on the other we are not conversant with the constitutional limitations faced by the Italian Government in securing the release of these funds.

If, however, Canada could release her claim against this particular fund (so permitting its use by the Italian Government) without in any way relinquishing or prejudicing her claim against the Italian Government for payment when the amount to be claimed is finally determined, I would feel that we should accommodate the Italian Government to that extent.

I am not certain of the exact procedure which could be utilized to give effect to this suggestion but it is possible that an exchange of letters in which we would release our claim against this particular fund while the Italian Government would in turn indicate that in so doing we were not in any way reducing our right to payment later would suffice. It would of course be necessary for you to obtain the appropriate authority before arranging for this exchange of letters.

Yours truly,

R.B. BRYCE

75. DEA/8799-40

Le ministre en Italie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister in Italy
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 41 Rome, December 30, 1947

Your telegram No. 27 of December 18th about military relief supplies.

Italian Government accounts for period not yet published but understand proceeds from sale of relief supplies bought by Italian Government are in a special account which is being kept separate pending waiving of claims against it. I understand this fund would be placed in general revenue at the time of final settlement about military relief supplies. I therefore suggest you do not waive claim against it unless you specifically reserve your claim to a token payment for all shares of supplies when so doing. I do not see that such an attitude will cause great difficulty for the Italian authorities.

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

RETOUR DES BIENS
RETURN OF ASSETS

76. DEA/9676-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au sous-séquestre adjoint des biens ennemis

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Assistant Deputy Custodian of Enemy Property

Ottawa, May 15, 1947

RELEASE OF ITALIAN ASSETS AND ARTICLE 79 OF THE TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Representative of Italy in Canada has recently raised with the Department the question of the release of Italian assets under the Custodian's control and Article 79 of the Treaty of Peace with Italy.

It is the view of this Department that the Canadian Government may, if it so desires, decide before the Treaty of Peace is ratified whether or not it will release Italian assets and whether or not it will exercise the rights granted by Article 79 of the Peace Treaty.

I feel that the question of releasing Italian assets will be dependent on the total value of private Canadian claims against Italy and Italian nationals, including debts. If the total value of such claims is in excess of the value of the Italian assets, it would seem to me unlikely that the Government would agree to releasing any of the assets for by so doing they would prejudice the position of individual Canadian claimants. On the other hand, if the total value of the claims is less than that of the assets, I think it would be open to the Government to release Italian assets in excess of the value of the claims.

You will, of course, appreciate that it is desirable for Canada to give whatever measure of assistance is possible in this matter to the Italian Government in view of the very pressing foreign exchange difficulties Italy is experiencing at the present time. I would accordingly recommend that action be taken now to ascertain the value of the Canadian claims against Italy by calling through public advertisement for registration of all such claims with your office. When this registration has been completed, the Government would then be in a position to consider releasing the excess Italian assets if any are found to exist. Such a release might be made subject to the condition that the Italian Government guarantees the payment of any private Canadian claims which for some bona fide reason are not registered with your office and as a result do not enter into the calculation of the total value of Canadian claims.

You may be aware that the United Kingdom Government has recently agreed to release Italian assets under their control subject to the condition that the Italian Government undertakes to liquidate outstanding United Kingdom claims against Italy and Italian nationals. The United States Government, I understand, is prepared to release all Italian assets in excess of the value of claims of United States nationals against Italy.

I should appreciate your comments on the proposal made in this letter and your advice as to whether or not we can proceed in the manner I have suggested. I feel that we shall at some time have to consider this problem of the disposal of Italian assets and that it is advisable to proceed with it now rather than leave it to some later date.

H.O. MORAN
for Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

77. CH/Vol. 2094

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 987 Ottawa, June 12, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

RELEASE OF ITALIAN ASSETS AND ART. 79 OF THE PEACE TREATY WITH ITALY

Consideration is being given to the question of whether or not Canada should elect to exercise the right given to the Allied and Associated Powers by Art. 79 of the Treaty of Peace with Italy to use Italian assets in Canada to pay claims of Canadian Nationals against Italy or Italian Nationals, including debts. The problem is of some importance in view of the substantial volume of private Canadian claims and the fact that the Italian Government is pressing for a release of the assets vested in the Canadian Custodian.

2. Although no policy has yet been determined it is felt that the Government would not be justified in releasing all the assets since such action would probably prejudice the position of Canadian Nationals with claims against Italy or Italian Nationals.

3. We have received reports from you and other sources that the United Kingdom has agreed to release Italian assets in the United Kingdom subject to the payment out of them of United Kingdom claims against Italy and Italian Nationals. I should be grateful if you will ascertain and report the details of the procedure being followed by the United Kingdom and Italian Governments in this respect.

78. DEA/4697-G-2-40

Extrait d'une note du chef de la Direction économique au sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Memorandum from Head, Economic Division to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, September 23, 1947

I refer to your memorandum of September 22nd† concerning the Italian matters.

. . .

(1) Article 79 of the Peace Treaty

We are not at the present time in a position to advise the total amount of Canadian claims against Italy, nor will we be in possession of this figure until we have advertised, asking Canadian nationals to file their claims with this Department. No

Cabinet authority has yet been obtained for such advertisement, and in any event, under the terms of the Treaty, we have one year from the date of its ratification in which to register our claims with the Italian Government. Consequently, I am inclined to think that di Cossato is somewhat premature in seeking this figure from us.

. . .

H.O. MORAN

2e PARTIE/PART 2

CONSEIL DES MINISTRES DES AFFAIRES ÉTRANGÈRES
COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

SECTION A

RÉUNION DES SUPPLÉANTS SPÉCIAUX À LONDRES (JANVIER-FÉVRIER)
MEETING OF SPECIAL DEPUTIES IN LONDON (JANUARY-FEBRUARY)

79. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 6 London, January 3, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson. Reference my telegram No. 2446 of December 31st.†

You will have already received through the Washington Embassy the invitation issued on behalf of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I had been assured earlier in the day that no invitations were likely to go out until after the Deputies[10] had met in London to determine their own procedure. I suggested that if this was in fact the case, the other Governments should be notified of the position at once. I have only now received the text of the invitation, which was in fact despatched three days ago. Its terms confirm the fears expressed in your telegram No. 2186 of December 21st,† and make our position anything but easy.

2. I had put our case as plainly as I could to Lord Addison and to Hector McNeil, as well as to Machtig and Sir Oliver Harvey, who is the Under-Secretary in charge of German questions in the Foreign Office. They all professed to take our point, and McNeil undertook to see whether the other members of the Big Four would agree that the invitation should take the form of an invitation "to consult with" the Deputies, rather than "to submit observations" to them. Such language, I thought, would make the invitation more acceptable to our Government.

[10]Les suppléants pour l'Allemagne étaient : M. Couve de Murville, France; F. Gousev, Union Soviétique; Sir William Strang, Royaume-Uni; R.D. Murphy, États-Unis.
The Deputies for Germany were: M. Couve de Murville, France; F. Gousev, Soviet Union; Sir William Strang, United Kingdom; R.D. Murphy, United States.

3. It now begins to look however as if the text had already been agreed in New York before the Ministers here had an opportunity of commenting on it, for the United Kingdom Ministers and officials with whom I talked all recognized the difficulty of our position and were anxious to do what they could to meet it. They do not relish a repetition of the procedures followed at the first meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London in September 1945, nor of the procedure of the Paris Conference, but they are at a loss to suggest methods of consultation and association which would avoid the objectionable features of these two precedents.

4. The Foreign Secretary, the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, and the Minister of State are meeting on Tuesday afternoon with the High Commissioners, to explain the United Kingdom conception of how the German and Austrian settlements will be worked out. I think it likely that what they will have to say will follow the lines of my immediately succeeding telegram, No. 7, which is based on a conversation with Sir Oliver Harvey.

80. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 7 London, January 3, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson. Reference my telegram No. 6 of today's date.

Harvey gave the following picture of the way in which he expected the treaty-making procedure would work out:

(a) The Deputies who would begin work on January 14th in London would be concerned only with matters of procedure and with assembling the views of the other Allies. They were not empowered to discuss the substance of the Treaties. During this first stage other Powers would be invited to associate themselves in some way with the work of the Deputies. He did not think this would just be a matter of representatives of other Powers appearing to speak their piece and depart. We should probably be invited to submit memoranda giving our general views, but also be given an opportunity to explain and support them.

(b) The Deputies would then report to the Council of Foreign Ministers in Moscow. There was no question of other Powers being represented at the Moscow meeting. The Council might, he expected, meet for about three weeks. They would then give the Deputies further instructions to continue their work.

(c) From then on the Deputies would probably be in almost continuous session, and the Council of Foreign Ministers would also meet from time to time to hear the reports from the Deputies and give them fresh instructions. During this time he hoped that a satisfactory formula would be worked out for discussing and taking into account the views of the other Allies.

(d) There would be no question of a Peace Conference to draw up a Peace Treaty in the immediately foreseeable future. The Deputies and the Council of Foreign Ministers would gradually, and in instalments, work out the future of Germany, its Government, its boundaries, etc. The Treaty, which would eventually come when there was a German Government to sign it, would be declaratory.

2. Harvey was fairly hopeful about the prospects of a satisfactory arrangement with the other Powers, and said the Russians had said nothing in New York which indicated that they would prove difficult. He envisaged possibilities of our working with Sub-Committees on functional lines as outlined in your telegram. He had recently seen the Dutch Ambassador, who seemed not dissatisfied with the prospective arrangements. Spaak, however, he understood, was not enthusiastic.

3. In the course of the conversation I stressed the importance of setting up a flexible arrangement which would allow more satisfactory procedures to be worked out for the association of the smaller Powers with the peace settlements, and suggested that any official statements about the method of this association which had to be made in the meantime should be in pretty vague and general language. If the arrangements now contemplated were spelt out too precisely, they would undoubtedly seem unsatisfactory to public opinion in the smaller countries. If they were described in general terms as "consultations", immediate misgivings might be allayed and we could have a longer opportunity to work out some feasible and mutually satisfactory methods of association.

81. PCO/W-22-5-G

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 25 London, January 8, 1947

TOP SECRET

Your telegram No. 18 of January 4th.† High Commissioners met Tuesday with Addison, McNeil and Bevin to discuss association of smaller Powers in drafting German and Austrian Treaties. It was not a very profitable meeting. The Australian, New Zealand and South African High Commissioners had had no instructions from their Governments, and Bevin, who had been delayed by another engagement, was in a rather impatient mood. McNeil who seemed to understand our point of view, was helpful.

2. Beasley thought countries invited to submit views on German Settlement should have an opportunity of commenting on, supporting or opposing views submitted to the Deputies by other countries consulted. This would require the more or less continuous presence of their representatives at the meetings of the Council of Deputies.

3. McNeil explained that under the procedure contemplated, the other powers would meet with the Deputies one at a time, and admitted that this did not give them the opportunity for participation in the drafting stage that Beasley wished to see. He argued, however, that the only alternative to this procedure was a repetition of Paris set-up. He said also that it was clear in the United Kingdom mind that Canada or any other of the smaller Powers might make representations to the Deputies concerning procedural questions such as the method of associating the smaller Powers with the work of drafting.

4. Bevin's attitude was that he had done his very best for the smaller Powers in New York. Byrnes had wished the Deputies to commence work immediately on the substance of the Treaties without hearing the Allies, and Molotov had wanted nothing discussed before the meeting in Moscow. Bevin had insisted that when the Council of Foreign Ministers met in Moscow they should have before them not only the views of their own countries on the Treaties, but also the views of the other countries which had fought against Germany. He insisted that he would do his best for the smaller countries and suggested at times that he expected rather our gratitude than our criticism of the present proposals. It was United Kingdom, he pointed out at one stage, who was footing the large bill for Germany, and he was primarily concerned therefore, that there be no unnecessary complications or delays in completing the Treaties. He said that he had never thought of these pre-Moscow meetings of the Deputies as "the discussion stage".

5. With regard to the invitations, McNeil said that Bevin had realized that it might seem unusual for invitations to other Governments to come from the Secretariat of the Council of Foreign Ministers, but he had hoped from his experience that the Secretariat would be more efficient than the host State. McNeil did not know why the invitations had been delayed, but he thought it probable that the other Powers concerned might have made slight drafting changes. Bevin revealed that he had rejected a suggestion that United Kingdom might invite the Dominions because he did not want to accept a procedure which could have made us all look like satellites of the United Kingdom.

6. I endeavoured to present our case as reasonably as possible, making clear that we were not anxious to complicate unnecessarily the treaty making, but that we wished rather to consider along with them possible ways and means of association between the small and Great Powers to their mutual satisfaction. The other High Commissioners seemed to share this point of view, and Beasley was far from being unreasonable. I said that the form of association suggested in the invitation was more suitable for the limitrophe States which wished to plead special cases. Canada had no special interest to set forth in a memorandum but a general interest in the securing of a fair and durable settlement. Although Bevin seemed to agree with the suggestion that for time being at least the methods proposed for associating the other Powers with the settlement should not be defined specifically in public statements, he did not appear to appreciate our worry lest unsatisfactory arrangements would embarrass and irritate the peoples and Governments of the smaller Powers.

82. CH/Vol. 2087

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 48 Ottawa, January 9, 1947

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following from Pearson, Begins: Your telegram No. 25 of January 8th, Peace Settlement with Germany.

My immediately following telegram† contains the text of a draft statement for presentation to Special Deputies of Council of Foreign Ministers on January 14th. This draft statement has been prepared in the Department[11] and will probably be submitted to the Government within the next 24 hours. I regret that we have not had time to consult you previously about the text. There might still be opportunity to incorporate any suggestions you may care to make if you reply immediately.

2. We have no idea what attitude Cabinet will adopt in regard to invitation from Council of Foreign Ministers to present our views to Special Deputies. It seemed to [11]On trouvera le procès-verbal d'une réunion tenue dans le bureau du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures sous la cote 7-DG (S).

Minutes of a meeting in the office of the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs on January 9 are on file 7-DG (S).

us, however, that if any statement were to be made, it should be along lines of that contained in my immediately following telegram. Ends.

83. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 35 London, January 10, 1947

TOP SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Reference your telegrams No. 48 and No. 49† of January 9th:

I should like to see us pursue the question of how the other Allies can best be associated with the preparation of the German settlement a little further through diplomatic channels before committing ourselves to a formal communication to the Council of Deputies.

2. Nobody disputes the reasonableness of our request for appropriate association in the preparation of the German settlement, but nobody yet sees exactly how it can be translated into practicable working arrangements which would permit the process of peacemaking to go forward with reasonable speed.

3. It seems to me we should be clear in our own minds whether we are going to press for a modification of the present arrangements which would perhaps meet the special position and interests of Canada, or whether we regard our representation as applicable mutatis mutandis to the position of the other Allies. My own view is that the Great Powers will say that it is politically impossible for them to agree on any principle of differentiation between the 18 countries which have been invited to submit their views on the German settlement to the Council of Deputies, and that they will answer our representations not by reference to the justice or equity of a Canadian claim to special consideration, but by the test of whether the modified procedure which we suggest would be workable if 18 countries were to "work with the Deputies and take a full part in discussions both on questions of procedure and of substance relating to the German Treaty". They would contend that this would mean the reconstitution of the Paris Conference, plus one additional member, with terms of reference which no body of this size could possibly discharge.

4. We are in a difficult but a familiar dilemma, essentially similar to that presented by the wartime problems of membership in the Combined Boards and of participation in the promulgation of the Articles of Surrender for Italy and Germany. In the first case we ultimately managed to get an agreed and more or less acceptable solution on functional lines. In the second, which is historically a closer precedent to our present predicament, we got nowhere at all.

5. On grounds of general Governmental policy — both home and foreign — I should be reluctant to see Canada ask formally and publicly for more than it is likely to get. I realize this is rather negative and unhelpful comment, but I shall try to send you shortly some half-thought out suggestions for an alternative approach which may have some merit in them.

84. CH/Vol. 2087

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 69 Ottawa, January 13, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference German Settlement. My immediately preceding telegram No. 68.† Following is text of teletype WA-111 of Jan. 13th from the Canadian Ambassador, Washington, Begins: Negotiation of German Settlement. Reference my immediately preceding teletype.

In handing me the State Department's reply,[12] Mr. Matthews apologized for the delay, which he said had been due to the absence from Washington of several persons who had to be consulted. I observed that the answer was in very general terms and that it would be helpful if he could give me further information on their expectations of the London meeting of the Deputies and the Moscow meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers. I pointed out that the interests of the 18 Allied States which had been invited to present views to the Deputies were very diverse and that a flexible arrangement seemed necessary to give reasonable satisfaction to all of them.

2. Mr. Matthews emphasized the desire of the United States Government for the development of better arrangements for consultation with the Allies than those which had been employed for the Italian Treaty. It was certainly intended that all the Allied Governments concerned should have full opportunity to put forward their views before decisions of substance were taken by the Council, and the London meeting would only be the first stage. At it the Deputies were charged only to receive the views of the other Allies on the German settlement and to put forward proposals for future procedure. They would he was sure be glad to receive proposals on procedure as well as on the substance of the settlement. In the case of Austria however the Deputies would be concerned with the drafting of the actual Treaty since it was hoped that the Austrian settlement could be completed without much delay.

3. I said that it was difficult to decide what representations the Canadian Government should make to the Deputies except in the light of the subsequent proceedings of the Council in Moscow. Mr. Matthews answered that they supposed here that the Council would give the Deputies further terms of reference which would guide their discussions when they reached the drafting stage. He thought it probable that such instructions to the Deputies would be brief but that they would nevertheless deal with matters of substance including guidance on the boundary problems the future political organisation of Germany the position of the Ruhr and the Rhineland long term demilitarisation and so on. Thus the general pattern of the settlement might be laid down in Moscow. They anticipated in the State Department that the Moscow meeting would last for not less than three weeks and not more than six weeks.

[12]Pour le texte de l'aide-mémoire, voir le volume 12, le document 96; le texte de la réponse, WA-110, n'est pas reproduit.
For the text of the aide-mémoire, see Volume 12, Document 96; the text of the reply, WA-110, is not printed.

4. I asked him whether he thought the Deputies would receive the representatives of other Governments in London singly or whether they might request the presence of groups especially of those who had similar interests. He said that they had given no instructions on this point to Mr. Murphy and that it was for the Deputies themselves to decide. He thought it would be useful for Mr. Robertson to have a private talk with Mr. Murphy as soon as possible and he assured me that the United States representative would always be prepared to hear our views.

5. I told Mr. Matthews that we might confine our approach to the Deputies to questions of procedure only. Since our interest in the settlement was general we did not feel inclined to put in a written statement of general principles. He urged emphatically that we should not let this opportunity pass without expressing a view on some of the central problems such as the political organization of Germany and the position of the Ruhr and the Rhineland. He thought it might be very helpful at Moscow if countries such as Canada with no special axe to grind had gone on record to the Deputies either in writing or orally on these central questions particularly if there was a serious conflict on them between the Western Powers and Russia. He returned to this theme at the end of our discussion and I undertook to pass on his views for your consideration.

6. On procedure I told him that it seemed to me that the most satisfactory outcome after the meeting of the Council would be to hold what would amount to the commission stage of a formal conference in informal meetings between representatives of the four major Powers and such of the other allies as were specially concerned with the portions of the settlement under discussion. This should be done, if possible, before final decisions were taken by the Council. The negotiations could then take place without the glare of publicity attending a formal conference, and the varying interests of the different Allies could be taken into consideration. While he seemed attracted by this idea, he was non-commital as to its possibility.

7. He expressed disappointment that Mr. Gusev had been named as the Russian Deputy, commenting that the lesson of success in the Soviet service was to refuse to alter a comma without instructions. Ends.

85. W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET [Ottawa], January 13, 1947

DISCUSSIONS IN LONDON REGARDING THE GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN PEACE TREATIES

You will have received from Mr. St. Laurent the draft statement† which we have cabled to the High Commissioner in London, and which we thought might be used (after your approval) as a basis for submission to the meeting of the Deputies of the Foreign Ministers in London tomorrow, January 14th. When this statement was received by Mr. Robertson, he had some doubts as to the wisdom of the procedure envisaged. Most of those doubts have been removed by subsequent explanatory telegrams and by a telephone conversation which I had with him on Saturday morning last, and which I reported to Mr. St. Laurent before he left Ottawa.

Our main purpose in asking for approval of a formal submission which might, if necessary, be made tomorrow was to make sure that the absence of any submission on our part would not prejudice our position later. The formal invitation that was addressed to the Canadian Government seemed to make it quite clear that we should appear, if only to question the procedure suggested; otherwise, our non-appearance might indicate a lack of desire to participate in this most important post-war development. At the same time, the invitation laid down a procedure which the Canadian Government could not accept if it were to be interpreted literally. Therefore, it seemed desirable to remove any impression that such a literal interpretation was acceptable to us, while keeping the door open to negotiate a more satisfactory procedure. That was the purpose behind the submission which we have sent to the High Commissioner. It was, of course, not intended to make this, or any other submission, in such a way that any request from us would be formally rejected. That has been made clear to Mr. Robertson. On his part, he now appreciates the situation here and has removed some of our fears by reassuring us that if we do not make a formal statement of our case at the first meeting, this will not prejudice our position in subsequent discussions.

Mr. Robertson has thought it would be desirable if, in view of changing circumstances in London, where the Deputies themselves are not quite sure what procedure should be followed, he might be given a certain latitude to alter the form of any submission, oral or otherwise, which he may be required to make. After discussing the matter with Mr. St. Laurent, Mr. Robertson was given this permission.

I think the matter is pretty well in hand now, and that we are in a position to avoid two dangers. First, accepting a procedure for participation which is not appropriate for a country which has made the contribution that Canada has to the winning of the war and which would be condemned by our people, and second, taking up at this stage a hard and fast position which we would not later be able to maintain.

We do not, of course, have to make the running in this matter, as there are other countries, neighbouring to Germany, whose interest in the political settlement is more immediate than ours. They can be expected to press that interest. Australia, also, will undoubtedly adopt a vociferous and vigorous opposition line, as is its custom.

You may be interested in the attached memorandum,[13] which gives, in somewhat more detail than earlier ones, the considerations which the Department had in mind in its recommendations on this matter.

L.B. PEARSON

86. W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

TOP SECRET Ottawa, January 13, 1947

PEACE TREATIES WITH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been informed by the Dominions Office that special Deputies have been appointed by the Council of Foreign Ministers to hear the views of the Governments of allied states neighbouring on Germany and of other allied states which participated with their armed forces in the war against Germany, on the German settlement. The Deputies are also to discuss procedure for drawing up a Peace Treaty for Germany, but in accordance with their terms of reference will not consult with smaller nations on this question. The Council of Foreign Ministers will meet in Moscow in March to consider inter alia the report of the Deputies, on procedure for preparing the German Treaty, and on the views expressed to them about the German problem by representatives of the lesser Allies. The Council of Foreign Ministers will then proceed with the preparation of a Peace Treaty for Germany. The special Deputies are to meet in London on January 14th and are to submit their report to the Council of Foreign Ministers by February 25th.

2. Special Deputies have also been appointed by the Council of Foreign Ministers to proceed with the drafting of a treaty recognizing the independence of Austria. These Deputies have been instructed to hear the views of neighbouring allied states and other allied states which participated in the common struggle against Germany. Proposals arising from these discussions are to be submitted to the Council of Foreign Ministers in February 1947.

[13]Le document suivant./The immediately following document.

3. From the procedure thus far adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers it would appear that Canada, as well as other smaller nations interested in the German settlement, would be given little opportunity to participate effectively in the early stages of drawing up the German and Austrian Peace Treaties. The right to appear before the Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers to "express views" would seem to give Canada even less opportunity to play an effective role in drawing up a peace treaty with Germany, than was the case in the preparation of treaties with Italy and other enemy satellite states.

4. Prior to the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London in September 1945, consideration was given by the United Kingdom Government to the form of association of the Dominions with the preparation of treaties with the enemy satellites. Mr. Attlee proposed to the Dominions Prime Ministers that there should be Commonwealth discussions in London during the meeting. In reply the Canadian Government reminded the United Kingdom Government that they had from time to time felt impelled "to take exception to the operation of wartime arrangements under which responsibility for major decisions on the direction of the allied war effort had been concentrated in a very few hands" and that "this centralization of authority, defensible in wartime, would at once become harder to accept and to explain when the fighting was over". The Canadian Government further expressed concern lest the Council of Foreign Ministers should continue this wartime pattern into the framing of the peace settlement, and therefore welcomed the success of any efforts to "bring about a direct participation in the Council of Foreign Ministers of Dominion representatives and also of representatives of other closely interested smaller countries". When, during this meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers, Canada was invited to submit its views in writing in connection with the Italian peace settlement the Canadian Government replied that "effective participation in the framing of the treaty required that interested Governments should take a real and direct part in the negotiation". The Canadian Government suggested that instead of summoning representatives of certain governments to the meetings of the Foreign Ministers, it might be better to emphasize the preliminary and tentative nature of the draft proposals produced by the Council which might later be considered at a larger gathering.

5. On the assumption that the procedure now suggested by the Council of Foreign Ministers for drawing up the settlements with Germany and Austria is not subject to substantial or immediate revision, there appeared to be three alternatives which the Canadian government might adopt:

(1) It could accept the suggestion that Canadian views on the German question be presented to the Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers in London on January 14th.

(2) It could refuse to present its views before the Special Deputies on the ground that the form of Canadian association proposed was inadequate and not commensurate with the part played by Canada in the defeat of Germany.

(3) An effort could be made to have the terms of reference of the Special Deputies for Germany interpreted to mean that they would be able not only to hear

Canadian views, but also to discuss with the Canadian representatives the whole question of procedure for drawing up the German peace treaty.

6. Of these alternatives the first did not commend itself, having regard to the attitude of the Canadian Government when similar questions were discussed in connection with the preparation of the Italian and other treaties, and on the ground that Canadian interest is more real in the German settlement than was the case with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland.

7. The second alternative, that of refusing to appear before the Deputies, would have opened the Canadian Government to the criticism that while it was prepared to send Canadian troops to fight in Europe, it exhibited no real interest in the settlement with Germany on which might depend the future peace of Europe.

8. The third possibility, acceptance of the procedure proposed by the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the endeavour to have it interpreted to mean that Canada could be associated with the Deputies of the Foreign Ministers not only "to express views" but to participate in the discussions on procedure for the preparation of the two treaties, as well as on questions of substance, seemed to offer the best solution from the Canadian point of view. The Canadian representatives in London and Washington were instructed to advance this suggestion to the United Kingdom and United States Governments and were authorized to let it be known that the Canadian Government was not prepared merely to appear before special Deputies in London to present views and then withdraw. If efforts initiated along this line are fruitful some opportunity might be given for Canadian representations to be made on matters of substance in the German and Austrian settlements, on the question of procedure for preparing the peace treaty with Germany, as well as on the form of association in this work which lesser allies might assume.

9. If Canadian efforts to obtain a wider role in formulating the settlements meet with success, the Canadian representative would be expected to advance some concrete plan, both concerning procedure for drawing up the settlements and the form of association by which the lesser allies might be linked in this work. By clarifying procedural issues at an early date, it might be possible to avoid differences of opinion on this matter at a later stage, similar to those which were so damaging to the Paris Conference. The Canadian representative might suggest some form of continuing association on the working level with the Council of Foreign Ministers and their Deputies in preparing the substance of the treaties. Early collaboration of this nature would have the advantage of acquainting the lesser allies in an intimate way with the problems being met, with the essential compromises which might have to be made to maintain Big Four unity, and might avoid the situation encountered by the smaller powers at the Paris Conference, of being faced with previously drafted treaties most of the articles of which the four Foreign Ministers were already committed to support. The Canadian representative might be authorized to suggest that the lesser powers be associated in the work of drawing up the treaties on a functional basis. Under this plan Canada might ask for representation on committees or sub-committees, under the Council of Foreign Ministers, dealing with the economic and political aspects of the German and Austrian treaties but would not be required to supply personnel on committees dealing with subjects such as the eastern boundaries of Germany in which Canada is not directly concerned.

10. It is possible that support for procedural proposals along these lines would be forthcoming from most of the smaller allies interested in these two settlements.

L.B. P[EARSON]

87. DEA/7-CA-17 (S)

Déclaration destinée à être présentée aux suppléants spéciaux du Conseil des ministres des Affaires étrangères

Statement for Presentation to Special Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers

[London], January 14, 1947

The essential interest of Canada, as of other countries, in the terms of the German settlement, is that it should provide the basis for a lasting peace. The Canadian Government hope to submit later a statement of principles which, in their view, would contribute to this end, and on which detailed political, territorial, and economic provisions of the settlement could be based. The Canadian Government is, however, limiting its submission at this initial stage to the question of procedure and, in this connection, proposes that appropriate provision should be made by the Council of Foreign Ministers for the continued association of Canada, as an active participant in two wars against Germany, in the preparation of the German Treaty.

The detailed application of this proposal would, of course, have to be worked out. To this end, it is suggested that Canada and other interested Allies might, with advantage, work with the Deputies, and take a full part in discussions both on questions of procedure and of substance relating to the German Treaty. If this principle were accepted, it should be applied in a manner which would allow the various allied countries to assist in drafting those sections of the settlement in which they were most directly concerned. Collaboration of this nature at an early stage would have the advantage of acquainting all the allies in an intimate way with the problems which might arise during the preparation of the Treaty. This procedure would also prevent the recurrence of the situation at the Paris Conference, where the smaller powers were faced with previously drafted treaties, the details of which were unfamiliar to them, and which were difficult to change. It would be possible also by clarifying in a satisfactory manner the procedure for drawing up this settlement to avoid differences of opinion on procedural matters at a later time, such as those which took up so many sessions of the Paris Conference.

The adoption of proposals of this nature would place the Canadian Government in a position to participate in the German settlement in an appropriate manner. If a procedure were devised which would make it possible for representatives of the smaller powers to be associated in the actual drafting of the treaty through work on the Committees, and if the treaty so drafted were accepted without major changes when it was referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, it might then be possible to provide for the final acceptance of the treaty in the brief and formal Conference, thus avoiding the necessity for a prolonged Conference such as that in Paris, at which the Italian and other treaties were reviewed.

88.

CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 96

London, January 17, 1947

SECRET

Addison called meeting of High Commissioners this morning for discussion of peace settlement procedures. Strang outlined status of discussions of procedure by the Deputies which still stands as reported in my telegram No. 84 of January 16th.†

2. Gousev's argument on nature of submissions by other Allies has not yet been conceded by his colleagues, but Strang has consented to begin hearing Allied States next week. Poland is invited to appear on Monday, Netherlands Tuesday, Yugoslavia Wednesday, Australia Thursday, South Africa Friday, and Canada on Saturday.

3. Beasley expressed strong dissatisfaction with the way events were developing, and said that he expected his Government to protest vigorously. He complained without much justification that at meeting with Bevin (reported in my telegram No. 25 of January 8th), neither Bevin nor McNeil had indicated that the Deputies were bound by strict instructions, and gave the impression that he had never seen Dominions Office telegram No. 1166 of December 13th which contained the text of those instructions.

4. The United Kingdom view, put by Strang and McNeil, may be summarized as follows: Deputies were bound by their instructions, and Gousev was on good legal ground when he based his restrictive interpretation of the powers of the Deputies on those instructions. The instructions were admittedly defective from the point of view of the Commonwealth countries, but they were the best that could be obtained in the Council of Foreign Ministers in New York. In fact they represented a considerable advance on the Italian procedure in that they provided for Allied participation at a much earlier stage. This was not the stage for discussion, but the stage for assembling views.

5. McNeil emphasized that United Kingdom had constantly to keep in mind the necessity of concluding a German settlement as soon as possible. They could not take the responsibility of holding up the Council of Deputies on a question of procedure. The Russians did not care if a treaty was never drawn up, but the United Kingdom could not risk delay. If the Council began meeting in Moscow without any preliminary work having been accomplished by the Deputies, progress towards a settlement would have a severe setback. McNeil also emphasized that United Kingdom did not wish to be committed to agreeing to proposals which meant a drafting committee of twenty-two, as the South African paper seemed to suggest.

6. Strang, in contending that present procedures though unsatisfactory were workable, cited attitude of Dutch and Belgians, who had accepted the participation offered them and intended to make the most of it. He thought that if Commonwealth countries would take a similar line the representatives of France, the United Kingdom and the United States would be strengthened within the Deputies in their efforts to assure a more satisfactory method of associating the other Allies with the settlement. The South African representatives indicated that they expected this would be their Government's view. Strang seemed fairly confident that representatives appearing next week would in fact be able to put their views on procedure into the record, certainly on procedures to be followed subsequent to the Moscow meeting. Gousev will be Chairman next week, but is not likely to go so far as to rule them out of order. McNeil said that whatever Gousev's attitude, the fact that Allied States raised procedural questions would be noted and reported to the Foreign Ministers. Strang said that Deputies' instructions were that if they could not agree on procedure they would present to the Foreign Ministers a record of their discussions.

7. The difference between our approach and that of Australia and South Africa was, I thought, primarily a matter of tactics. In their initial submissions they had committed themselves to certain specific recommendations, each of which we should consider a desirable improvement on present procedures. It seemed to me, however, unwise at this stage to put ourselves in a position in which we could be fobbed off with one or two technical concessions about circulation of documents, etc. The central problem was a political one of finding a method of association which would satisfy the legitimate expectations of a country like Canada for an adequate part in concluding the war. Perhaps Gousev was our best friend among the Deputies in that he was obstructing the crystallization at this stage of procedures which could not be more than half-satisfactory at best.

8. I suggested that what seemed to be needed was a new approach to the question and perhaps the invention of new procedures. The immediate difficulty, as I saw it, was that Deputies, as agents of their principals, were bound by the inadequate instructions agreed between members of the Council of Foreign Ministers in New York, and repeated in the wording of the invitation sent to other Governments. A strict construction of this invitation supports the Soviet view that Deputies can only, first, hear views of invited Governments on "aspects of German problem in which they are interested", and second, consider among themselves questions of procedure related to the preparation of the Peace Treaties. If the Deputies were in agreement among themselves, they could of course take a more liberal view of the meaning of their instructions and discuss procedural questions with the other countries which have requested such a discussion. However, in view of Soviet attitude already disclosed and of reluctance of others to proceed except by unanimous agreement, there seemed to me little likelihood that Deputies would reply to our representations in any constructive way.

9. In these circumstances our Governments might wish to consider raising the whole question, perhaps through the diplomatic channel, with the members of the Big Four prior to the Moscow Conference, inviting them to amend the instructions they had given their Deputies in New York.

10. It might be that a partial solution of our difficulties could be found in departing from the formal treaty making procedure, which was in some respects inapplicable anyway to the unique and unprecedented present position of Germany. An international Statute establishing and guaranteeing the postwar status and structure of Germany might be a more appropriate instrument than a treaty which implied a German party to it, and such a statute might be easier to draft. It would not necessarily raise questions of great power and little power prestige in quite the acute and sensitive form inescapable under procedures now contemplated.

11. This was a purely personal and speculative line of approach. I did not know whether it was promising or not, or whether my Government would think well of it. The others at the meeting thought it worth exploring and are arranging a meeting for Tuesday when Strang returns from Berlin.

89.

W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Extrait d'une note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Extract from Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET

[Ottawa], January 18, 1947

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN PEACE SETTLEMENT

There are two points in the telegrams from London that we have sent you in the last 24 hours on the above subject that I would like to bring to your attention. They are, in fact, related:

(1) we have been invited to present "such views as the Canadian Government may wish to present on the German problem" on Saturday, January 25th;

(2) no satisfactory procedure was agreed on at the first meeting of the Deputies for hearing the views of other powers. On the contrary, the Russian representative held fast to the view that the Deputies could only hear Allied views on the substance of the Treaties, given individually and without discussion. No views on procedure or discussion of this matter could be admitted at this stage.

I feel, myself, that unless some satisfactory agreement is reached in respect of point (2) above, there would be little point in presenting our views on substance. If we did so, it might be interpreted as acceptance, on our part, of the procedure laid down in the invitation and exclude us from all further participation in the German Peace Settlement. That would put us in an impossible position.

I would recommend, therefore, that before Mr. Robertson replies to the invitation to present Canadian views on the substance of the German Settlement, he attempt to secure satisfaction on the question of procedure. For that purpose, I am attaching a draft telegram for your consideration.† It should, I think, go off not later than Monday, if it meets with your approval.[14]

I have discussed this matter with Mr. Robertson over the trans-Atlantic telephone, and he assured me that a telegram of this kind would strengthen his hand.

I have also discussed the matter with Mr. Wrong over the telephone, who has, in turn, been in touch with the State Department concerning it. He was assured that the Canadian position is understood and approved in Washington, and that they would support it at the meeting of Deputies. It is quite clear, however, that the Russians will object and it is very doubtful whether either United States or United Kingdom support will be strong enough to overcome this objection.

I think we are on pretty solid ground in all this. It is not a question merely of prestige but of fundamental justice and a recognition of Canada's interest and importance in this matter. In our earlier submission we were scrupulously moderate and unprovocative, and we tried to be constructive. If, however, our efforts to work out a satisfactory procedure meet a flat negative, I should think that public opinion in this country would not support an acceptance of the invitation to appear to present our statement and walk out.

The press reaction to our press announcement of Thursday last has been very favourable, though one or two newspapers attempt, unfairly, to relate our firm attitude in London to the reduction of our defence forces in Canada.

. . .

L.B. PEARSON

90. PCO/W-22-5-G

Extrait d'un télégramme du haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from telegram from High Commissioner in United Kingdom to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 119 London, January 21, 1947

SECRET

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN SETTLEMENTS

The High Commissioners met again today with Lord Addison, Strang and McNeil. Strang appeared to be considerably encouraged by the development in Gousev's attitude towards the association of other countries with the German settlement, revealed by his use of the words "consultation" and "discussion" in paragraph 5 (b) and (c) of telegram Circular D. 41 of January 18th. He thought those words went some way at least to give us satisfaction.

---

[14]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
approved verbally by P[rime] M[inister] 18/1/47 J.B[oyce]
Les instructions à Robertson ne sont pas reproduites.
The instruction to Robertson is not printed.

2. I pointed out, however, that Gousev's language related to post Moscow procedures and, in any case, would be tested by the paper he had promised to put in on the subject. I thought the test case for us was whether or not we could have an opportunity at this stage to discuss procedural questions. Referring to our latest representations to the Deputies, Strang and McNeil pointed out that Canada had asked the Deputies for an assurance on procedure which they were not, in fact, in a position to give. They could do no more than make recommendations to Council of Foreign Ministers on matters of procedure, and they could not even go this far until they had completed their consideration of item B of their instructions. Strang seemed to think it unlikely that they could give us a formal assurance on procedure which would enable us to appear before them to give our views under item A on Saturday.

. . .

91.

PCO/W-22-5-G

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 140

Ottawa, January 24, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Re our telephone conversation on the German peace settlement. Our position in respect of the invitation to appear before the Deputies is, I think, a simple one, and there should be no room for misunderstanding concerning it. The Government's attitude is that it cannot accept the invitation until assurances are received from the Deputies that our submission on this occasion will not be construed later as constituting Canada's final participation in the making of peace with Germany. That is the first assurance which we require and it should be easy enough for the Deputies to give it! If they have no instructions permitting them to do so, they should be able to secure such instructions from their Governments without difficulty or delay. Their inability to obtain a satisfactory reply would be a confirmation of our fears that our appearance now might prejudice the working out of satisfactory procedures later. Until the government receives a satisfactory assurance on this question, I think it doubtful if any submission can be made.

2. There remains the other aspect of the question, namely procedure for negotiating a settlement so as to make appropriate provision for our participation. This should not be confused with the point referred to above. We have not been unaware of the difficulty the Special Deputies might have in assuring us definitely that procedures of the kind we recommend would be adopted though we do not think that any strained interpretation of their instructions is necessary to enable them to discuss procedures with us. If, however, they are unwilling or unable to do this, can they not state that they have taken note of our recommendations on procedure, that these raise important questions beyond their competence to answer; that they would take our suggestions into consideration in their own procedural discussions and also pass them on, with any additional observations we might care to make and with their own recommendations to their principals.

3. We are not necessarily asking for immediate participation. In fact, something in the nature of Commissions of states with special interests, meeting at the post-Moscow stage in private and with as much informality as possible, would meet our views. Some such idea seems to be in the minds of the Special Deputies themselves, judging from circular telegram D.O. Circ. 55 of January 22.†

4. A specific assurance, then, on our first point and a general assurance of consideration and report on our second, would make it possible, I should think, for the government to present its submission next week.

5. In short, an answer to our question which would, I hope, satisfy the government here might be somewhat as follows:

6. "Any submission made by the government of Canada now to the Special Deputies will not prejudice in any way, or be construed as completing, Canada's participation in the work of making peace with Germany for which we assume appropriate provision will later be made by the Foreign Ministers. The important views put forward by Canada on the nature and form of its participation in the German settlement will be given consideration by us and reported to the Foreign Ministers.

7. The government of Canada will no doubt have an opportunity of discussing this question with the Foreign Ministers themselves or with deputies who may have received instructions from them for that purpose." Ends.

92. W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

[Ottawa], January 25, 1947

I am enclosing herewith telegram No. 144† from the High Commissioner's Office in London, which reports on the difficulties there regarding our appearance before the Special Deputies in connection with the German and Austrian Treaties. I am also enclosing a copy of our telegram No. 140† (which I read to you over the telephone and which it is hoped will remove some of these difficulties).

If we receive a satisfactory reply from the Deputies to the question which we addressed to them, then we should be able to make our submission. It might be accompanied by a short letter of submission, explaining in a very few words, but clearly, our position in respect of subsequent discussions. Also, in view of the fact that the Australian and other representatives have been able to discuss procedure while making their submission on substance, Mr. Robertson would also be able to explain, orally, our views in this regard.

If, however, the Special Deputies remain completely intransigeant and send us a reply which is entirely unsatisfactory, then I think we should do two things:

(1) put our case before the Foreign Ministers themselves; and

(2) make known our views on the substance of the German Peace Settlement (as expressed in the submission) in a statement to Parliament. A copy of this statement could be sent to the Foreign Ministers of the four powers, or to their Deputies in London. This would have the same result as handing the submission to the Deputies in London and would be a course more appropriate to the dignity and importance of Canada, if no satisfactory reply is received to our question.

It is, of course, to be hoped that we will not have to adopt plan (2) above. If, however, we are forced to, we should, I think, instruct Mr. Robertson to tell the Special Deputies that we have no submission to make at this time[15] because of the fact that we have received no assurance of any subsequent participation of Canada in the German Peace Settlement; that the Prime Minister[16] will be making a statement of the views of the Canadian Government on that Settlement shortly, and that a copy of it will be sent to the Foreign Ministers (or their Special Deputies) in the hope that it may be of some assistance to them in their work.

In the above contingency, it will also be necessary to issue a short press statement explaining the Canadian position. A draft of such a statement† is attached for your consideration.

L.B. PEARSON

93. W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET [Ottawa], January 27, 1947

With reference to the attached telegram from Mr. Robertson, which has just arrived, I am of the opinion that, if the Deputies' reply to our enquiry is not satisfactory, our best course would be merely to submit our views on the German Treaty in writing to the Deputies with a covering note pointing out that we do so on the distinct understanding that this submission does not prejudice in any way our subsequent appropriate association with other powers in the making of peace with Germany. We might also point out in the covering note that the submission in question embodies only the preliminary views of the Government which may, of course,

[15]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree [WLMK]

[16]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
or Secretary of State for External Affairs [WLMK] require to be altered later in the light of discussions with other powers at the conference or committee table. Consideration should also be given to the possibility of making our submission public in Canada at the same time, or even slightly before,[17] it is made in London. Indeed, if our submission could be postponed until the end of the week, it could be tabled in the House of Commons, after which Mr. Robertson could be authorized to send it to the Special Deputies as a document which has been so tabled.

I agree with Mr. Robertson that it should not be accompanied, at this time, by any supplementary oral as I do not think that, in the circumstances, anything would be gained by this. The main burden of our case is that we will be later associated in an appropriate way with further discussions on the German Peace Settlement. Therefore, we can reserve our oral statement until then.

L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

W.L.M.K./Vol. 370

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 155 London, January 27, 1947

SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 146 of January 25th, German settlement.

In considering what action, if any, Cabinet should be asked to authorize at today's meeting, it should be borne in mind:

(1) Though all other invited States share in degree our dislike of the method of consultation presently offered by the Great Powers, none has refused the invitation to submit views on the German and Austrian settlement.

(2) The fact that the Netherlands, Belgium, Australia, South Africa and New Zealand have already appeared or agreed to appear before the Council of Deputies would give a strong talking point to persons disposed to criticize a decision on our part to abstain.

(3) The three western members of the Big Four, though sympathetic with our point of view, are clearly not prepared to back it to the point of interrupting such limited progress as the Council of Deputies is making under its present procedure.

---

[17]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
put[?] it first if possible [WLMK]

(4) Recent diplomatic developments, in particular the Stalin-Bevin exchange of views about the future of the Anglo-Soviet Treaty, make me feel sure that point three is a correct appreciation of the attitude of the three western Powers.

(5) The continuous emphasis in all public statements on the preliminary character of this pre-Moscow meeting of the Deputies, the insistence that it is designed for the collection and assembling of views and the fact that even the Russians appear to contemplate a post-Moscow consultation of the other Powers during the drafting of the German Treaty all make me feel that we are not at the moment on the strongest possible ground for publicly challenging the procedures laid down by the Council of Foreign Ministers in New York for the guidance of the Council of Deputies in the present stage of their work.

For these reasons, I should be sorry to see Canada take up a public position at this time which might be misunderstood both at home and abroad and which would probably make our post-Moscow association with the German settlement more difficult to work out.

In all the circumstances, I am inclined to think that the least unsatisfactory course of action open to us is simply to communicate, towards the end of this week, our statement of views about the German settlement to the Council of Deputies in writing for the record. In view of the very straitened terms of reference under which the Deputies feel they are operating, I should not think it either dignified or worthwhile to ask for an opportunity to support the statement orally, but should indicate to the Council of Deputies that if they wish a Canadian representative to explain any point in our memorandum, we should, as a matter of courtesy and without prejudice to our views on the general procedure for associating other countries with the settlement; be prepared to do this. Ends.

94. CH/Vol. 2088

Extrait d'un télégramme du haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Telegram from High Commissioner in United Kingdom to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 163 London, January 28, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN SETTLEMENTS

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: I have talked over our present position very frankly with Strang and Murphy, having in mind the considerations set forth in your telegram No. 140 of January 24th, and my telegram No. 155 of January 27th. Both agreed emphatically that there was no chance at all of our getting from the Deputies an answer to our second note which we could consider at all satisfactory. Incidentally, they each expressed the opinion that from our own point of view as well as from theirs, we should be best advised to take this opportunity of stating our case and making the most of it.

2. Murphy was somewhat more forthcoming than Strang in his advice. He recognized the valid reasons for our not wanting to appear, but he doubted if we should gain anything by refusing. The Australians and South Africans, he seemed to think, had made good use of their appearances to get their views on procedure recorded, and he said that if Gousev attempted to prevent us from talking on procedural matters he would not be allowed to get away with it. He emphasized that the United States delegation was anxious that Canadian views on the German settlement should be expressed. He assumed that we should add support to the Western approach.

. . .

95. PCO/W-22-5-G

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-355 Washington, January 29, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Wrong, Begins: German and Austrian settlements. This will confirm the information given you by telephone this afternoon concerning my discussion with Matthews and Riddleberger [sic][18] at the Department of State.

I began by outlining the situation which had developed in the Deputies and the impossibility of our accepting it as satisfactory, and I read them some extracts from Robertson's telegram No. 163 of January 28th. I then asked whether it would cause any difficulties to them if the Canadian representative did not appear personally before the Deputies but instead forwarded a written submission which might at the same time be made public in Canada. They both argued that there were advantages of great publicity if a personal appearance were made followed by a press conference, and said that they would welcome as wide publicity as possible for our views on both substance and procedure. I pointed out that, in view of the negative answer returned to our request to the Deputies for an assurance, there were serious difficulties in the way of our authorizing an oral submission at this stage, which could in fact contain no more than a written communication. I think that their attitude will not be affected at all by our decision on the matter.

2. I then said it would be helpful if they could give me an assurance that the United States Government would continue to press for a far more satisfactory procedure of consultation with the other Allies. This they gave most readily and emphatically, saying that the subject would undoubtedly be one of the major issues at the Moscow meeting and that we could count on their insistence on a more satisfactory outcome than that proposed by Gousev or adopted during the Italian negotiations. I am satisfied, after numerous conversations at the State Department, that they are quite sincere in this. They think that Gousev will not receive any new instructions during the present session of the Deputies and that, therefore, there will not be a unanimous recommendation on procedure for consideration by the Council.

---

[18]H. Freeman Matthews, directeur, Bureau des affaires européennes, Département d'État des États-Unis (-juillet).
J.W. Riddleburger, chef, Direction des affaires d'Europe centrale, Département d'État des États-Unis (-juillet).
H. Freeman Matthews, Director, Office of European Affairs, Department of State of United States (-Jul.).
J.W. Riddleburger, Chief, Division of Central European Affairs, Department of State of United States, (-Jul.).

3. The central issue, of course, is the Russian fear that they will be jockeyed into a position in which they have surrendered or modified their power of veto, which can be exercised much more readily in the Council and the Deputies than in a larger gathering. Matthews, Riddleberger and Thorp[19] have all expressed to me in the last two days their appreciation of the constructive attitude of the Canadian delegation at Paris and their desire that we should secure a greater voice in the German settlement. Ends.

96. PCO/Vol. 2639

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], January 29, 1947

. . .

GERMAN PEACE SETTLEMENT; CANADIAN PARTICIPATION

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of January 27th, reported that the Chairman of the Deputies to the Foreign Ministers had replied orally to the Canadian High Commissioner, stating that the instructions of the Deputies gave them no power to give the desired assurances with respect to subsequent appropriate association of Canada in the peace settlement with Germany.

This was not satisfactory. While we did not wish to do anything that would render a solution more difficult, it was felt that, in the circumstances, there would be no advantage in having a Canadian representative make a formal appearance before the Deputies. Accordingly, it was proposed to have the memorandum setting out the views of the Canadian government tabled in the House of Commons at the opening of the Session the following day, and to instruct the High Commissioner to make the document available to the Deputies in London immediately thereafter. In a covering letter Mr. Robertson would say that, in submitting their views, the government desired to emphasize their preliminary character and that they would be affected by the views of other governments and by subsequent discussions. The letter would express the hope that a procedure would be worked out for such later discussions which would be satisfactory to all countries concerned. The presentation of this submission was without prejudice to Canada's subsequent appropriate association in the making of peace with Germany. Despite the Deputies' reply to the Canadian request, the government hoped that the Deputies would report favourably to the Council of Foreign Ministers the suggestions respecting procedure which had already been put forward.

[19]Willard L. Thorp, secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires économiques, États-Unis.
Willard L. Thorp, Assistant Secretary of State for Economic Affairs of United States.

A draft statement† along these lines, to accompany tabling of the submission, was at present before the Prime Minister; it included a draft communication to the Deputies to the above effect.

. . .

8. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the course recommended by the Minister and agreed that the Canadian submission be tabled in Parliament the following day[20] (with an appropriate statement by the Prime Minister of the nature indicated) and that the High Commissioner in London be instructed to communicate the Canadian submission to the Deputies in the manner suggested.

. . .

97.

PCO/W-22-5-G

Extrait d'un télégramme de l'ambassadeur en France au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Telegram from Ambassador in France to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 52

Paris, February 1, 1947

SECRET

Repeated to Dominion London as No. 4, Begins: Your telegram No. 39 of January 28th,† Peace settlement with Germany.

. . .

3. In connection with the central question of the association of the middle and smaller Powers with the negotiations of the Treaty, the following among other considerations seem to arise.

4. In view of the Soviet attitude, it is improbable that an adequate opportunity will be given to middle and smaller Powers to work with the Deputies on questions of substance.

5. It is highly unlikely, also, that the Soviet Government would concur in any proposal for the association of the middle and smaller Powers with the work of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Moscow.

6. There remains the suggestion contained in your telegram under reference for association at the post-Moscow stage. This would appear to have the following advantages (which would also apply to association with the work of the Deputies if this can still be secured).

(a) The preparatory work which could be done at this stage would be invaluable in smoothing the way for the subsequent Conference. Such preparatory consultations should cover matters of substance and also the procedure to be followed at the Conference itself with the object of securing partial agreement at least before the [20]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume I, p. 7.

See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Vol. I, p. 7.

Conference opens. The Soviet Government must be aware of the danger of public discussion at the Peace Conference. Nothing could be more calculated to undermine, in the eyes of the German people, the authority of the Treaty (or Statute) eventually agreed upon. The dangers attendant on such public dissension at the Conference either between the Great Powers themselves or between the Small and Great Powers are obviously much graver than they were in the case of Italy and the satellite countries.

(b) The Treaty would undoubtedly benefit by constructive suggestions as the result of the association of the middle and smaller Powers at the preparatory stage. Valuable practical proposals may be forthcoming if the experience of the smaller Powers is drawn upon on preparing the text.

7. With regard to procedure to be followed during this preparatory stage, the meetings should be secret; no system of voting should be adopted. The method employed should rather be that of negotiations than of counting heads. The Great Powers would not be asked to accept the majority view, but rather to give consideration to proposals put forward and receiving substantial support. The middle and smaller Powers, for their part, would no doubt wish to reserve the right to raise at the Conference any question which had not been satisfactorily disposed of at this stage.

8. It is suggested in your telegram under reference that the consultative discussions would be undertaken by "Commissions of States with special interests". No doubt Commissions would have to be set up to examine various aspects of the Treaty (or Statute) for Germany. The conception of Commissions composed of States with special interests, though attractive from our point of view, may be expected to encounter certain difficulties. It is possible that the middle and smaller European Allies may wish to have an opportunity to express their views on all aspects of the German Treaty. Australia may take the same attitude. In this case, it may prove difficult to secure agreement on the composition of Commissions of States set up on a functional basis.

9. It is very difficult to look so far forward and to advance at this stage detailed suggestions for the post-Moscow period. Too many factors are still unknown. For instance, it may be that the members of the Council of Foreign Ministers will not be able to agree on the text of a Treaty (or Statute) for Germany at the forthcoming Moscow meeting or, alternatively, that, as at later meetings of Council of Foreign Ministers prior to the Paris Conference, they will agree on a partial text only, with certain questions left outstanding for discussion at the Conference. Is it too much to hope that the Conference will mark the final stage of the Peace Treaty with Germany and there will not be a repetition of the pattern by which the Treaties with Italy and the satellite countries were referred from the Conference to a final meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers. This point, so far as we know, has not been made clear.

10. In any event, these uncertainties do not affect the necessity for adequate preparatory work to be accomplished before the Conference meets and for the association in that work of the middle and smaller Allied countries. Ends.

98. W.L.M.K./Vol. 430

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CIRCULAR TELEGRAM D.117 London, February 8, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

My telegram of February 6th, Circular D.108.† Procedure for preparation of Peace Treaty with Germany.

In the light of discussions at meeting of Deputies we feel it tactically very desirable that we shall now put forward in the Council of Deputies definite plan in hope of securing an agreed report by Deputies to Council of Foreign Ministers or, at any rate, by United Kingdom, United States and French Deputies. Question is to be further discussed at Deputies meeting on Tuesday afternoon next, February 11th. We have, therefore, instructed United Kingdom Deputy to present to his colleagues at that meeting memorandum of which text is set out in my immediately following telegram.†

2. You will see from this that we have made efforts to meet desire which Dominion Governments have expressed to us that they should be brought into consultation at all stages. We recognize that memorandum does not in certain important respects fully meet views put forward by Dominion Governments. On the other hand, from draft proposed by French representative and from information which we have as to United States attitude, we think that our memorandum represents furthest we can go in direction of meeting views of Dominion and other Allied Governments while at same time carrying French and United States with us. There seems no advantage in submitting at this stage proposals which would not command their support. Indeed, to do so might only prejudice such prospect as there is of securing acceptance of proposals contained in our draft.

99. PCO/W-22-5-G

Extrait d'un télégramme du haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Telegram from High Commissioner in United Kingdom to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 230 London, February 10, 1947

SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference Dominions Office telegrams Circular D.117 and Circular D.118† of February 8th.

. . .

2. Strang feels strongly that these proposals provide for the largest measure of association of other countries with the peace making which offers any hope of the Russians accepting. I would have preferred a formula establishing "association and consultation" in general terms which, with common sense and good will, could be translated into appropriate specific procedures in the successive stages of peace making. It is true, however, that we have no right to assume common sense and good will and therefore may be driven back to the alternative method of spelling out precisely and in advance of the occasion the specific rights and privileges to be assured to the smaller Powers in the several stages envisaged for the peace settlement. As I have indicated on earlier occasions, I do not like this petition of right approach to the problem adumbrated in the submissions of the other Commonwealth countries and now confirmed and carried as far as is probably feasible in the United Kingdom memorandum. In the present circumstances, however, I am not hopeful of an agreement being reached on an alternative approach.

3. Murphy is sending me this morning a copy of an American paper on procedure which has been communicated to the Deputies but not yet considered by them. I gathered from him that it does not attempt to define post Moscow procedure with the precision of the French and British drafts but emphasizes instead the importance of associating the other countries with the actual processes of treaty drafting. The Americans feel that if the other countries were given an adequate opportunity to state their views in this phase and stage of the peace making it might be possible to dispense with the general Peace Conference on the Paris model which the British and French plans both contemplate. They feel that the opportunity of participating in another Paris Conference is a poor sop to self respecting States and that the act of association of other States in the drafting processes would be a more appropriate and more acceptable recognition of their interest in the German settlement.

4. I shall cable you the text of the American memorandum as soon as it comes to hand. Ends.

100. CH/Vol. 2087

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 282 Ottawa, February 19, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Pearson.

Reference my immediately preceding telegram 281 of February 19th.†

Following are excerpts from memorandum which has been prepared on proposals for procedure with Germany. Full memorandum will be forwarded by air.

2. All four plans, while they provide for consultation and study by varying methods, are alike in making no provision whatever for factual participation by the associated states in the drafting of the treaties. In none of the plans is it contemplated that any part of the draft settlement shall be placed at the disposal of the associated powers for review and revision at any stage prior to the summoning of a formal peace conference, although the United States proposals provide that the texts shall be communicated by the Special Deputies to the other allies.

3. The United Kingdom plan assumes that a formal peace conference will eventually be held for the consideration of a peace treaty as prepared by the Council of Foreign Ministers. The United Kingdom Deputy, however, has indicated that his Government is not finally committed to a procedure leading inevitably to a conference on the model of that held in Paris. He would be prepared to consider a more flexible procedure, if such could be made acceptable.

4. The United Kingdom plan is, in its present form, the most simple and workable of the four. Like the others, however, it makes no provision for effective participation in the work of drafting. Committees on particular subjects could, on the other hand, be made to serve a useful and constructive purpose if the terms of reference of these committees were made sufficiently precise and if at the same time the committees were given the opportunity to work on the actual texts of the draft treaties.

5. The French plan also assumes that at a later stage in the process of peace making there shall be a formal conference to the Conventional pattern. The form in which provision is made for a peace conference in the French plan seems to indicate that the French Government regards this conference as the occasion on which the associated powers would have their first real opportunity to examine the text of the draft settlement. Specific reference is made to the precedent established by the Paris Conference in 1946. As in 1946 the Council of Foreign Ministers would review the results of the Conference. A development in the functions of the political and economic committees which are to be formed under the conference of Deputies might transform the French plan into a more effective instrument for the association of the smaller powers. The information and consultation committees do not seem to have very important functions in either the French or United Kingdom proposals, but in the French plan it is at least an advantage that a committee of this nature will be set up directly under the Council of Foreign Ministers.

6. In spite of its elaborate structure the United States plan fails to provide a fully satisfactory method for associating the smaller powers in the settlement. The terms of reference do not indicate that draft sections of the settlement would be under consideration in the committees or sub-committees. The method of composition of the committees seems arbitrary, and might very well lead to unsatisfactory representation. Essentially, however, provision for committees and sub-committees in the United States plan is simply an elaboration of that section of the United Kingdom plan calling for committees on particular subjects. The actual structure of these committees is something which could quite easily be worked out once agreement in principle has been reached.

7. The most novel, and from the Canadian point of view, most objectionable proposal in the Soviet plan is the distinction which it contains between associated states with 'direct' interest and others which presumably lack a direct interest. The 'directly interested countries' are to take part in the discussion and study of subjects assigned them by the Special Deputies. The other states may witness these discussions.

8. The Soviet plan, like those of France and the United Kingdom, provides specifically for an eventual Peace conference. In the Soviet view this conference should not take place until there is a German Government which should be invited to make comments on the treaty and to sign it. The actual drafts would at that stage only be submitted for comment and revision by the associated powers.

9. Comment.

In its comments on procedure for the German Settlement the Canadian Government has had two general objects in view one is to provide for a more satisfactory participation of the Associated Powers at a stage when their views could have some effect. The second has been to avoid a repetition of the unfruitful and humiliating process by which the allies were assembled in Paris to discuss the terms of a settlement with Italy and the other Satellite States which at that time could be altered only with great difficulty.

10. In the Canadian view the procedure best suited to achieve these objects would give the associated powers the opportunity to consider and comment on the draft settlement at an early stage. The Canadian Government recognises the primary interest in the settlement of the Great Powers and realises that the general principles of the peace will be established by the Council of Foreign Ministers. It realises also that the Council of Foreign Ministers may insist upon the right to review the settlement before it is finally adopted. On the other hand, between the meetings at which the Council of Foreign Ministers indicates the general principles of the settlement and that at which it reviews the completed draft agreement, there should be ample opportunity for the associated powers to make their contribution to the process of drafting.

11. At the Paris Conference of 1946, the Conference, after a preliminary debate on procedure, separated into a number of commissions in which various aspects of the draft treaties were considered. It was in these commissions that the most effective work of the conference was done. Indeed, it was here only that the associated states had any real opportunity to undertake revisions in the text. The Canadian Government believes that a process similar to the commission stage of the Paris Conference should be introduced at a much earlier period in the preparation of the settlement with Germany. In other words, commissions of various states on special topics should be established as soon as the Council of Foreign Ministers had determined the general principles of the settlement at Moscow. These commissions should then set about the detailed work of drafting sections of the settlement. There should be four commissions, as follows

1. Political Commission,
2. Territorial Commission,
3. Economic Commission,
4. Juridicial Commission.

There should be a wide membership of states who participated in the war against Germany on each commission, though all States need not be represented on every commission. These commissions should meet as informally as possible, and provision should be made for them to meet in private when necessary.

12. It is also the view of the Canadian Government that consideration should be given to bringing about a settlement with Germany gradually and in terms of a settlement for Europe as a whole, rather than through a single peace treaty. In this way, matters of immediate urgency could be disposed of at once, before a German Government comes into existence, while other questions could be worked out over a period of months. By this means also greater flexibility could be secured in the preparation of the settlement and greater permanence in the eventual result.

13. These are the attributes which the Canadian Government regards as the minimum requirements of adequate procedure. None of the proposals of the Special Deputies in London fully meets them. The three suggestions for a Committee for Information and Consultation are merely extensions of the present unsatisfactory arrangement by which the associated powers remain on the periphery of the amphitheatre in which this settlement is being made, and learn, indirectly and without opportunity for immediate comment, of the events which are taking place. In none of the suggested terms does this committee provide for the associated states an opportunity for participation in the settlement commensurate with their contribution to the war. This is especially true of the Soviet proposal, in which the associated states are not even members of the Standing Committee which is to perform this function.

14. Nor is the Canadian objective fully met in any of the plans for committees to study and discuss various aspects of the settlement. The Soviet plan specifically excludes from this process some countries which entered the war without delay in 1939 and continued in it without respite to the end. The other proposals admit interested associated states on a basis of equal partnership, but only for purposes of study and discussion which are inadequately defined. If, however, the United Kingdom proposal for "committees on particular subjects", or the United States proposal for four standing committees, were developed so that the associated powers included on these committees would have the opportunity to work on the actual draft settlement, then a great deal would have been accomplished toward providing an adequate method of participation for all states.

If, at this early stage, the associated powers were given a satisfactory opportunity to take part in the settlement, then a formal and lengthy peace conference on the model of that held in Paris might prove unnecessary. Agreement in commission, together with agreement in the council of Foreign Ministers on the terms of the draft agreements, should make it possible materially to reduce the concluding stages of the process both in duration and complexity. Ends.

SECTION B

RÉUNION DE MOSCOU (MARS-AVRIL)
MOSCOW MEETING (MARCH-APRIL)

101. DEA/7-CA-17 (S)

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

SECRET [Ottawa], March 4, 1947

GERMAN PEACE SETTLEMENT

The Special Deputies for Germany concluded their meetings in London without having reached agreement as to procedure for associating the other allied states in the preparation of a German settlement. In the discussions on this subject which took place in the meetings of the Special Deputies there was general agreement that consultation with the other Allies should take place in two ways:

1. Through an Information and Consultation Committee consisting of representatives of the big four plus representations of other belligerent allies. Information in regard to progress being made in the Council of Foreign Ministers would be transmitted to the other Powers through this committee. The views of the associated Allies would also be transmitted to the Council of Foreign Ministers by this means.

2. A series of Working Committees on particular subjects. There were various proposals for the establishment of Working Committees consisting of the representatives of the big four and of selected other states which would prepare papers on particular subjects.

The Special Deputies failed to reach agreement in regard either to the composition of the terms of reference of these Committees and there will not, therefore, be any agreed report in this regard sent forward to the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers in Moscow.

The Commonwealth High Commissioners and United Kingdom authorities have, meanwhile, been carrying on subsequent discussions on the subject of procedure. As a result of these conversations, the United Kingdom authorities have now circulated a revised plan for procedure which they are prepared to put forward in Moscow. This plan makes the following provisions for participation in the preparation of the settlement by the associated states:

1. Allied states would be given full opportunity to present their views on the German problem to the Ministers or the Deputies;

2. An Information and Consultation Committee would be set up during sessions of the Council or Deputies, composed of representatives of Foreign Ministers and representatives of allied states wishing to take part. The purpose of this committee would be to inform Governments of the Allied states on the work of the Council in the preparation of the settlement and to communicate the principal documentation of the Council in this regard. It would also provide for the circulation amongst allies of their views on the subject, and for the communication of these views to the Foreign Ministers. It would, as well, be a forum for the discussion of questions of general interest;

3. Committees and Sub-committees for the discussion and study (including the preparation of preliminary draft articles) of questions arising in connection with the preparation of the peace treaty. Such Committees and Sub-committees would be composed of representatives of the four powers and, on the invitation of the Council of Foreign Ministers or of the Deputies, of a convenient number of representatives drawn from allied states, including those with direct interest in the particular matter under study;

4. Commissions of Enquiry to conduct studies in particular areas might be appointed by the Deputies.

The revised United Kingdom plan goes further to meet the Canadian point of view than any of the proposals considered by the Special Deputies. We have always recognized that the Council of Foreign Ministers must, in practice, take primary though not exclusive responsibility for initiating the process of peace making. The revised United Kingdom plan provides, however, that representatives of the Allied states may be fully informed concerning the work of drafting and that they may also be included in the actual preparation of draft articles through the work of the Committees or Sub-committees. It is true that the composition of these Committees remains within the control of the Council of Foreign Ministers. If, however, the terms of reference as set forth in the United Kingdom plan were adopted, the allies would have an opportunity to do effective and useful work at an early stage in the preparation of the settlement.

The revised United Kingdom plan appears to have commended itself to the other Commonwealth Governments with the exception of Australia, which is profoundly dissatisfied with all the proposals.

Recommendation[21]

It is suggested that the High Commissioner for Canada in London be authorized to continue discussions with the United Kingdom authorities and with other Commonwealth countries concerning the proposals contained in the revised United Kingdom proposals described above. It is also suggested that he be authorized to indicate to the United Kingdom Government that Canada will not refuse to accept the procedure set forth in these proposals, if nothing better can be secured. He should state, at the same time that they appear to provide the minimum of participation with which this Government could be satisfied.

It should be understood that if the United Kingdom plan is accepted, a number of Canadian experts would have to be made available for work on the proposed committee, probably for a period of some months.

102. CH/Vol. 2088

L'ambassade en Union soviétique
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Embassy in Soviet Union
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 85 Moscow, March 14, 1947

MEETING OF COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Accompanied by Ford I attended on March 12th and March 13th informal meetings of Commonwealth representatives at which Bevin outlined results previous day's meeting of Council. There is nothing to report which you will not receive from other sources.

2. At our first meeting I asked when Deputies were likely to discuss procedure for associating other Powers in preparation of Peace Settlement. Seeing my interest in this question Bevin reverted to it at second meeting. He said he had talked to Strang and they had decided they could not accept suggestion of Robertson that words "Powers primarily responsible" be substituted for Council of Foreign Ministers because this might lead to later misunderstandings with Russians. He then said they proposed to concentrate on making Committees as broadly representative as possible, with sub-committees dealing with special topics confined to countries directly interested. At this stage my New Zealand colleague interjected to say he was not familiar with background. This led Bevin to propose a meeting with Strang. However before we broke up I was able to explain that while we regarded Strang's compromise proposal of Feb. 27th as minimum acceptable to us we would like to see committees established comparable to commissions at Paris conference.

[21]Le Cabinet approuva la recommandation le 6 mars.
The recommendation was approved by Cabinet on March 6.

3. After meeting Boyd Shannon[22] suggested I prepare a statement on our views for use when we met Strang. I followed this suggestion by drafting a statement[23] embodying paragraphs 16 to 22 of Departmental memorandum abbreviated where possible. Between paragraphs 18 and 19 I added specific references to commissions electing their own officers, establishing their own rules of procedure and form of their reports and also brought in my suggestion that commissions might meet in different places. A copy of this statement was given to Strang last night.

4. We met with Strang this morning. He said the Deputies were coming to grips with this question today. It has been decided to start with a discussion of proposed committee for information and consultation. He did not intend to submit his compromise proposal of Feb. 27th. He regarded this as his working paper. He intended going out for more. He would propose that each main committee be open to membership of any Allied State desirous of participating on that committee. This was only satisfactory method he saw of securing wide representation. He thanked me for my statement which he described as most useful. He could not be optimistic of bringing the Russians as far as his compromise proposal but felt the best tactics were to support United States in their proposal for committee with real functions and to make these committees as broadly representative as possible.

5. Strang did not think agreement could be obtained for committees to elect their own officers as my statement had proposed. He said United States had agreed to Chairmanship of committees rotating among the Big Four. If you have any strong views on this point I should appreciate being advised.

6. Strang has promised to keep us informed.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note de l'ambassade en Union soviétique

Memorandum by Embassy in Soviet Union

SECRET

Moscow, March 13, 1947

PROCEDURE FOR GERMAN PEACE SETTLEMENT

Two general objects should be kept in view in determining the procedure for working out the German peace settlement. One is to provide for a more satisfactory participation of the associated powers at a stage when their views could have some effect. The second is to avoid a repetition of the unfruitful and humiliating process by which the allies were assembled in Paris to discuss the terms of a settlement with Italy and the other satellite states which at that time could be altered only with great difficulty.

2. In the Canadian view the procedure best suited to achieve these objects would give the associated powers the opportunity to consider and comment on the draft

[22]G.E.B. Shannon, secrétaire adjoint, Bureau des Dominions.
G.E.B. Shannon, Assistant Secretary, Dominions Office.
[23]Voir la pièce jointe à ce document.
See enclosure of this document.

settlement at an early stage. The Canadian Government recognizes the primary interest in the settlement of the great powers and realizes that the general principles of the peace will be established by the Council of Foreign Ministers. It realizes also that the Council of Foreign Ministers may insist upon the right to review the settlement before it is finally adopted. On the other hand, between the meetings at which the Council of Foreign Ministers indicates the general principles of the settlement and that at which it reviews the completed draft agreement or treaty, there should be ample opportunity for the associated powers to make their contribution to the process of drafting.

3. At the Paris Conference of 1946, the Conference, after a preliminary and pointless debate on procedure, separated into a number of commissions in which various aspects of the draft Treaties were considered. It was in these commissions that the most effective work of the Conference was done. Indeed, it was here only that the associated states had any real opportunity to propose revisions in the text. The Canadian Government believes that a process similar to the commission stage of the Paris Conference should be introduced at a much earlier period in the preparation of the German settlement. In other words, commissions should be established as soon as the Council of Foreign Ministers determines at Moscow the general principles of the settlement. These commissions should then set about the detailed work of drafting sections of the settlement on the basis of proposals referred to them by the Council of Foreign Ministers.

4. There could be four commissions, as follows:

(1) Political Commission
(2) Territorial Commission
(3) Economic Commission
(4) Military Commission

Consideration might also be given to the desirability of setting up a Juridical Commission.

5. These commissions should meet as informally as possible, and provision should be made for them to meet in private when necessary. Each commission should elect its own chairman, vice-chairman and rapporteur. It should establish its own rules of procedure and decide the form which its reports to the Council of Foreign Ministers should take. It should have the right to set up ad hoc sub-committees to examine special topics.

6. An advantage might be found in having the commissions meet at different places. This would enable them to work more unobtrusively without the full blaze of publicity and would overcome possible objections that the setting up of the commissions is equivalent to the convening of a peace conference.

7. No doubt, the Council of Foreign Ministers would continue to be peripatetic and meet alternatively in the different capitals of the powers represented on the Council. The deputies might find it to their advantage to establish their headquarters in Berlin where they would function continuously, except when the Council of Foreign Ministers was meeting in one of the capitals of the powers represented on the Council.

8. The four commissions would also function continuously and if the deputies establish their headquarters in Berlin the best location for the commissions might be different places on the periphery of Germany. Thus the Political Commission could meet at Spa, Belgium; the Territorial Commission at Marianske Lazne (Marienbad), Czechoslovakia; the Economic Commission at Basle, Switzerland (if the Swiss Government would be agreeable); and the Military Commission at Esbjerg or some similar place in Jutland, Denmark.

9. It is also the view of the Canadian Government that consideration should be given to bringing about a settlement with Germany gradually, and in terms of a settlement for Europe as a whole, rather than through a single peace treaty. In this way, matters of immediate urgency could be disposed of at once, before a German Government comes into existence, while other questions could be worked out over a period of months. By this means also greater flexibility could be secured in the preparation of the settlement and greater permanence in the eventual result.

10. These are the attributes which the Canadian Government regards as the minimum requirements of an adequate procedure. None of the proposals advanced in London fully meets them. The three suggestions for a Committee for Information and Consultation are merely extensions of the present unsatisfactory arrangement by which the associated powers remain on the periphery of the amphitheatre in which the settlement is being made, and learn, indirectly and without opportunity for immediate comment, of the events which are taking place. In none of the suggested forms does this committee provide for the associated states an opportunity for participation in the settlement commensurate with their contribution to the war.

11. Nor is the Canadian objective fully met in any of the plans for committees to study and discuss various aspects of the settlement. Certain of the proposals admit interested associated states on a basis of equal partnership, but only for purposes of study and discussion which are inadequately defined. If these proposals were developed so that the associated powers included on these committees would have the opportunity to work on the actual draft settlement, then a great deal would have been accomplished towards providing an adequate method of participation for all states.

12. If, at this early stage, the associated powers were given a satisfactory opportunity to take part in the settlement, then a formal and lengthy peace conference on the model of that held in Paris might prove unnecessary. Agreement in Commission, together with agreement in the Council of Foreign Ministers, on the terms of the draft agreements or treaty, should make it possible materially to reduce the concluding stages both in duration and complexity.

103. DEA/7-DE (S)

L'ambassadeur en Union soviétique
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in Soviet Union
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 95 Moscow, March 19, 1947

SECRET

Repeated to London.

My telegram No. 85 of March 14th regarding participation of other States in preparation of German peace settlement.

Strang told me yesterday that he had gone all out on our line of comprehensive discussion of subject of Committees. Murphy had been unable to [prevent ?] him sticking close to original United States proposal. He had reminded Strang that in fulfilling this, latter had referred to Committees being composed of "convenient number of States". Strang had to withdraw suggestion of Committees electing their own officers but otherwise had not retreated from advance position he had taken largely on basis of our views. He is seeking instructions from Bevin today but thinks probably four definite proposals will go forward on Thursday from Deputies to Ministers.

2. I told Strang I was worried that we might be left with information and consultation conferences and nothing else of real value. From our point of view participation in the drafting work of the Committees was vital. He said he agreed and he would put matter to Bevin in this light.

3. I also told Strang I did not like the phrase "the four Powers will act in concert in the Conference." I said this reminded me of the ganging up at Paris Peace Conference. He said French were responsible for this phrase and it meant that the four Powers would act in unison in explaining matters to other States. The minutes, however, would show that it was understood there should be the greatest freedom in debate in the Conference. This explanation made me more mistrustful than ever of the whole proposal regarding the Conference and it is clear that everything depends on outcome of discussions about the Committees.

4. Murphy argues that United States proposal should give Canada reasonable assurance of representation on two of Committees. I am seeing him this afternoon and, if course of discussion seems to warrant it, I shall hand him for his private use copy of statement I gave Strang last week.

104. DEA/7-DE (S)

L'ambassadeur en Union soviétique
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in Soviet Union
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 110 Moscow, March 27, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

PROCEDURE FOR GERMAN SETTLEMENT

Repeated to London.

We are meeting Bevin tomorrow morning to discuss the order of priority for association of other Allied States in the making of the peace. This is occasioned partly by the insistence of Marshall on participation of other States in the Western Hemisphere, although we are not clear yet as to exactly what States he has in mind.

2. I assume we would wish to confine participation in the four main Committees to the eighteen named States but would have no objection to inclusion of States in the second category, including the ex-enemy co-belligerents, in work of the Information and Consultation Conference. I also assume we would have no objection to further broadening of representation at Peace Conference to comprise all States that were technically at any time in a state of war or belligerency with Germany. In other words, there would be three categories of States depending on degree of participation in the war and main Committees of Information and Consultation Conference and Peace Conference would represent three stages at which each category could be brought into the making of the peace.

3. We should not exclude, however, possibility of compromise whereby Soviet acceptance of other States in the work of the main Committees might be secured through agreement to broaden number of States as indicated in my telegram No. 106.† I have prepared statement which shows each Committees compromised of fifteen States with the four Powers on all four Committees, Canada on three, other seventeen on two and seven doubtful States each on one Committee.

4. Your views on these questions before meeting tomorrow morning would be greatly appreciated.

105. CH/Vol. 2088

L'ambassade en Union soviétique
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Embassy in Soviet Union
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 9 Moscow, March 28, 1947

SECRET

Repeated to Ottawa. Please repeat to Paris.
My telegram 110 27th March Procedure for German Settlement.

Had a most useful conversation today with Couve de Murville French Deputy for Germany. I mentioned we had been disappointed that France had not supported United Kingdom and United States proposals for participation of other States in work of main Committees. He replied that France had taken the initiative in proposing the Information and Consultation Conference which was a great advance over the Paris procedure. I agreed but said it still left us on the periphery and we attached more importance to participation [sic] actual work of drafting in committees. He said France had accepted the Potsdam Declaration as basis but twice he had expressed in meetings of Deputies French willingness to liberalize procedure if other Powers would agree to depart from Potsdam basis.

2. He then referred to French resolution for representation of States directly concerned on sub-committees and indicated that this was to meet wishes of Belgium and The Netherlands. I said that this could not satisfy us as we were generally but not directly interested in a number of economic and political questions and wanted to participate in consideration of these questions in main committees. I stressed that we did not want representation on all four committees and mentioned that European countries were best fitted to consider the territorial questions.

3. I outlined our general approach and he indicated France might agree if a formula could be found which would restrict the number of States on committees to a workable number. He criticized the United States proposal of a convenient number as being too vague and difficult to interpret.

4. He thought it might help if it could be agreed that reports to Council of Ministers would go forward from Four representatives of Great Powers rather than from the whole Committee. I mentioned our views on rotation of Chairman among the Big Four to illustrate that we were concentrating on immediate requirements of Canadian participation in work of some of the Committees.

5. I believe my talk may do some good although prospects for any agreement on procedure at this Conference are not bright.

106. DEA/7-DE (S)

L'ambassadeur en Union soviétique
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in Soviet Union
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 138 Moscow, April 7, 1947

SECRET

COUNCIL OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Repeated to London as No. 32. Repeat to Washington.

When I saw Molotov on April 5th he asked me if I had been following the proceedings of Council of Foreign Ministers. I replied I had been following them closely. Canada was very interested in Germany because twice we had had to intervene to help stop German aggression. We were interested particularly in economic questions and structure of future German Government, but our immediate interest was degree of participation we were to have in shaping of settlement. We attached great importance to participation in work of main Committees.

2. Molotov replied by referring to Potsdam decision that drafting of Peace Treaty would be responsibility of Four Great Powers. He asked me if we did not agree with this decision. I replied by stating that we did not dispute right of Four Powers primarily responsible to establish the basic principles of settlement and also to review the Draft Treaty before it is submitted to Peace Conference, but between these two stages there was the drafting stage or translation of basic principles into concrete terms. We felt that Canada as a country that had participated fully and effectively in the war had the right to participate not only in fourth or Peace Conference stage but also in second or drafting stage.

3. Molotov then taking over asked me if I could recall one case in history where a Peace Treaty had been drafted by more than a few Powers. He asked if I could remember one case where 18 or 24 countries had participated in the drafting. I countered by stating that now conditions were different and these different conditions required a new form of procedure. In this war Canada, although far removed from scene of operations, had intervened from the first, had participated to full extent of her resources and had made an effective contribution to victory. Molotov at once observed that Canada certainly had contributed a great deal to the winning of the war and he repeated this phrase again at a later stage of our discussion.

4. He then referred to provision for consultation in proposed Information and Consultation Conference. He said here we would have ample opportunity of putting forward our views and then again at Peace Conference. He asked if provision for consultation was not an improvement over Paris Peace Conference procedure. I agreed there was an improvement but not enough to satisfy our just claims to participate in a manner whereby our views could have an influence before it was too late to change materially the provisions of Draft Treaty. The Information and Consultation Conference would merely hear, discuss and report views through representatives of Four Powers and would not submit recommendations. We did not consider that this conformed to right we had earned of participating in active work of shaping Peace Settlement. I mentioned here that we did not wish to be on all four of the Committees but only on those that particularly interested us and where we could make a contribution of value. Molotov at this point observed that while the proposed arrangements in our view were an improvement over Paris procedure we still did not consider them "enough". Feeling at this time that I had exhausted the subject I took leave of him, at which he again expressed his regrets that I was leaving Moscow.

107. CH/Vol. 2088

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union

TELEGRAM 96 Ottawa, April 16, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

PROCEDURE FOR GERMAN SETTLEMENT, COMPOSITION OF PERMANENT COMMITTEES

Reference your telegrams No. 160 of April 15th† and No. 162 of April 16th.† Following for Ford from Pearson: While acceptance by Molotov of French suggestion that allied states of the priority group, concerned in a problem under discussion, may be invited to take part in its study and discussion in the Permanent Committees, and that reports of the Committees will take into account proposals submitted by allied states invited to take part in the discussions, is a considerable concession, it fails to provide for membership of other allies most concerned in the committee. It is unlikely that participation by invitation would permit other states to effectively influence subsequent drafting of reports, and articles of the settlement by representatives of the Four Powers.

While Marshall's new formula would provide for membership of the other allies in the main committees, we are disappointed with his suggestion that for drafting purposes the Committees should consist of representatives of the Four Powers only. Canadian participation in Committee work for purposes of deliberation and consultation without the right to take part in the drafting does not seem adequate.

For these reasons we consider that if the United Kingdom position is untenable the United States original proposal providing for membership in the main Committees of representatives of the Four Powers and of a convenient number of the other eighteen allied states would be preferable.

Although as you suggest the principal difference in practice between the original United States proposal and the New French plan may be a question of participation by invitation or by right of membership, we do not agree with the British suggestion that participation in the Committees would make it worth while to accept representation by invitation rather than by formal membership, particularly when the participation envisaged would exclude us from the drafting.

You should again let the British and Americans know of the importance we attach to membership in at least some of these Permanent Committees and to the provision of an adequate opportunity to play an effective part in the Committee drafting.

These views are preliminary only and have not yet been cleared with the Minister or other members of the Cabinet.

108. DEA/7-DE (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union

TELEGRAM 105 Ottawa, April 22, 1947

SECRET

FORMATION OF INFORMATION AND CONSULTATION CONFERENCE

Following from Pearson, Begins: Reference your telegram No. 169 of April 19th.† Procedure for German Settlement.

As you know, we do not attach as much importance to the proposals for setting up an Information and Consultation Conference as to actual membership in certain of the main committees. The following, however, are the Departmental views on the formation of this Conference, which have not so far been given ministerial approval.

United States suggestion that the Information and Consultation Conference be made up of representatives of all states at war with Germany, including the five ex-enemies, would in our view make the proposed Conference unwieldy and workable only when a measure of agreement could be reached between all or at least a majority of the members. It seems unlikely that documentation supplied to a Conference made up of so many members would be as complete as that which might be given to a workable Conference composed of the more important allies.

The latest Russian proposal in this regard, that the Conference be composed of the nineteen named states is, however, perhaps too restrictive and their suggestion concerning Iran and a restricted number of other states appears only to offer opportunity for such states to make expressions of views to the Conference.

The implications of the United Kingdom proposal to split the Conference into two sections, one for information and the other for consultation are not entirely clear, but do not seem to be far away from the French proposal which has recommended itself to us. The French figure of twenty one allied states would probably let in those of the allies whose claims to participation are most justified. As we understand it, the allied states outside this group would participate only as regards information, that is to say, they would be kept informed of the work of the Council, and would have the right to present in writing their opinions on questions of interest to them and their observations on documents communicated. They would not, however, participate in the consultation stage. This proposal would avoid the necessity of forming two conferences, as suggested by the British, and would permit consultation of a minimum number of states outside of the eighteen of the priority group.

SECTION C

RÉUNION DE LONDRES (NOVEMBRE-DÉCEMBRE)
LONDON MEETING (NOVEMBER-DECEMBER)

109. DEA/7-DE-1 (S)

La mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 317 Berlin, October 22, 1947

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

While undoubtedly Wrong has been keeping you posted from Washington, it seems just possible that it would be useful for me to report there is good reason to believe that on 17th October Strang had an important talk with Hickerson on agenda and tactics for forthcoming Council of Foreign Ministers.

2. Hickerson began by saying that while Marshall had not yet given the subject much thought, State Department were of opinion that such a talk on pick and shovel level would prove most useful (what delightful Hickersonian memories the phrase recalls).

3. He then asked if Bevin was really so optimistic that success might still be achieved as some of his public utterances might lead one to believe. Strang replied that while he did not think that Secretary of State was very hopeful, he was anxious not to say or do anything that might prove a bar to a fruitful outcome. Marshall, Hickerson said, was not hopeful and had no taste for a repetition of the Moscow Conference. It was not his intention to remain in London for much more than a fortnight unless developments were really promising. State Department therefore felt Conference should probe three or four important items such as economic principles, economic unity, freedom of travel and of association and in the event that soundings under these heads showed no change in Soviet attitude to adjourn Conference sine die.

4. Hickerson then said that his information was that for propaganda purposes Soviets might spring a proposal for both east and west to withdraw their occupation forces from Germany. State Department did not much like idea because a Soviet reoccupation not only of the east but of the whole of Germany would be easy, while a return by the west would be very difficult. He did not think proposal should be rejected out of hand, but should be agreed to as being desirable provided Russians also withdraw their troops from Austria and the lines of communication leading thereto, agreed to joint export import programme and freedom of travel throughout Germany to which he felt sure Molotov would not agree. Strang agreed.

5. They also both agreed that Soviets would do everything in their power to get a foothold in the management of the Ruhr so as to bar progress in carrying out the Marshall Plan should this come into effect.

6. Hickerson felt that tasks thrown to Deputies, namely procedure for Peace Treaty and form of Central German Government, were academic pending agreement on economic unity. Difference of view between United Kingdom and United States regarding organization of Central Government remains unresolved.

7. In event of failure of Council of Foreign Ministers, Hickerson thought a provisional western German organization should be set up which, while having considerable executive powers should not be called a Parliament or a Government. Western technique of control should be modified by granting Germans far more executive responsibility than heretofore, the occupying Powers contenting themselves with ensuring compliance with Directives and of course security. Western presence in Berlin should be fought for to the last ditch. The Control Council must continue to meet. We did not think Russians would tear up Protocol which established them here. Both sides agree that former are building up a case of western violations that could be used as justification for doing so.

8. Parties are to meet again this week.

110.

DEA/50130-40

Note du haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni

Memorandum by High Commission in United Kingdom

SECRET

[London], October 28, 1947

MEETING HELD AT COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS OFFICE ON OCTOBER 27TH, 1947, TO DISCUSS GERMAN PEACE TREATY PROCEDURE

A meeting was held at the Commonwealth Relations Office, attended by Commonwealth representatives, Sir John Stephenson and Mr. K.D. Jamieson of the German Political Section of the Foreign Office, to discuss German Peace Treaty procedure.

Jamieson gave us an idea of the line the Foreign Office intend to take during the discussions which are to begin between the deputies of the Foreign Ministers on November 6th in preparation for the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers commencing on November 25th.

The main point of disagreement between the United States and the United Kingdom at Moscow was the membership of the proposed Information and Consultation Conference and of the Peace Conference. The United Kingdom, in order to meet the United States suggestion that all allied states at war with Germany should be included, are to introduce a new category of states called "half-way" states which could be added to the Big Four and the eighteen active belligerent allies. Jamieson said that the countries of that new list have not been selected yet, but that a good example of what they had in mind was Iran. He thought that the United Kingdom could not accept the United States thesis that all allied states at war with Germany should be included as the eighteen priority states would then be completely outweighted.

Jamieson added that this idea had not been discussed with the United States authorities, but that Sir William Strang, who was now in Washington, would probably take it up with them informally.

The main points of disagreement with the U.S.S.R. centre around the membership of the proposed four permanent committees and of the sub-committees.

Jamieson remarked first, while discussing the points of disagreement, that the Foreign Office felt strongly that the break-down in the Conference of Foreign Ministers, if it had to come at all, should not come over an academic question of procedure, but over a clear-cut issue of major substance. In order to avoid a break-down over procedure, the Foreign Office were therefore willing to make some concessions to the Soviet approach to this problem. These concessions are listed in paragraphs 9—15 of the attached document.† In short, the Foreign Office would discuss on the following lines:

(a) Pakistan is to be added to the priority group of active allies, bringing their members to nineteen, without Albania;

(b) If the Soviets agree to the suggestion of the "half-way" states, then the United Kingdom might agree to the inclusion also of Albania;

(c) The Information and Consultation Conference would consist of the priority group enlarged by the "half-way" states and Albania; and

(d) Each permanent committee would consist of representatives of the four Powers together with a maximum of ten of the states of the original unexpanded priority group.

J. L[ÉGER]

111. DEA/7-DE (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-3471 Washington, November 1, 1947

SECRET

With reference to your messages EX-2760 of October 25th† and EX-2811 of October 30th† repeating telegram from General Pope.

We have not been making a special effort to secure information on the discussions in Washington in preparation for the Council of Foreign Ministers since they do not directly concern the Canadian Government. The chief talks have been between Strang and Hickerson, who will almost certainly accompany the Secretary of State to London for the meeting.

2. Hickerson tells me that General Marshall is ready to give as much time as necessary to the meeting, provided that there is a real prospect of agreement. If, on the other hand, he becomes satisfied that there is no such prospect, he will not waste his time in London in futile discussion. They think here that there is a possibility of a sharp change in Soviet policy. This might, however, only be a change in method of obstruction. For instance, they might agree on a sensible-looking scheme of economic unification and then proceed to wreck it in practice.

3. I gather that the United States-United Kingdom talks here have been going pretty well. On both sides they are satisfied that this meeting of the Council will provide the last opportunity for getting on with the German settlement by an accord between the Four Powers, and that if the Council fails the division between east and west will last for a long time.

4. Because of the dim prospects of success in London we have not recently reminded the State Department of our concern with the problems of procedure in preparing the Treaty of Peace.

112. DEA/50130-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2877 Ottawa, November 7, 1947

SECRET

Reference your WA-3471 of Nov. 1st. German Settlement.

Although the possibility of the Council of Foreign Ministers agreeing at the forthcoming London meeting to proceed with the settlement for Germany as a whole, appears slim, this development cannot be entirely ruled out. In the event that it is decided to continue negotiations, the question of obtaining for Canada an effective role in the preparation of the German Treaty will undoubtedly arise again. It would therefore be appreciated if you would keep the Department informed of important developments concerning the German settlement of which you may be advised in Washington.

113. DEA/7-DE-1 (S)

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1855 London, December 12, 1947

SECRET

CONFERENCE OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

There is little to add to press reports on proceedings of Conference. In high official circles no one seems to know when and how Conference is to end. Mr. Marshall, although restive at times, has made no sign yet of early return to United States, but it would be surprising if he were to remain in London for Christmas.

2. Mr. Bevin is puzzled by Mr. Molotov's behaviour. He thinks that Soviet Foreign Minister favours German unity if Communist control can be extended over whole country. What concessions he is willing to make to achieve such unity no one knows. He would rather have a divided Germany, part of it well under control, than a united Germany over which his control would be much weaker.

3. There seems to be little hope that substantial progress will be made over Austrian Treaty, which has been referred back to Deputies.

4. Mr. Bevin is still maintaining strong stand on rights of Allied States to participate in framing of Peace Treaty through membership on Committees, but feels that he will encounter great difficulty in having his formula accepted by United States and U.S.S.R.

114. DEA/7-DE-1 (S)

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1876 London, December 20, 1947

SECRET

BREAKDOWN OF CONFERENCE OF FOREIGN MINISTERS

Repeat Washington.

Mr. Bevin was completely taken by surprise by Mr. Marshall's initiative in calling for adjournment sine die. Mr. Marshall had not intimated to his western colleagues that he would take such a drastic move.

2. United Kingdom have given little thought to what steps they should now take. Mr. Bevin is still working on a report he is to submit to Cabinet at the beginning of next week. From conversations with McNeil and Noel-Baker it appears that thinking on the future of Germany is at the present on the following lines:

(1) In the economic field steps will be taken to strengthen Western Germany through closer co-operation with the United States and France.

(2) In the political field no decision will be taken which would give the U.S.S.R. grounds to believe that the division between East and West in Germany is irrevocable. The United Kingdom will probably await United States and/or French initiative in this field, not only as far as the future of Western Germany is concerned, but also for the whole of Western Europe.

(3) It is still expected that the Soviets will launch a serious propaganda and strife offensive in Western Europe during the spring.

3. Much less thought seems to have been given to the consequences of a breakdown of the Council of Foreign Ministers than was to be expected, and it appears that consultations between the United Kingdom, the United States and France have not been seriously conducted.

4. The Australians are thinking in terms of possibility of separate Peace Treaty for Western Germany in which all active belligerents would have their say. United Kingdom are not yet ready to entertain this idea.

5. Mr. Bevin still hopes it will be possible to secure Soviet agreement for Peace Treaty with Austria through existing machinery.

115. DEA/7-DE-1 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-21 Washington, January 5, 1948

SECRET

Repeat London.

Your EX-3205 of December 22nd repeating Mr. Robertson's telegram No. 1876 of December 20th about the breakdown of the Council of Foreign Ministers.

I have spoken to Mr. Hickerson (who was with General Marshall in London) about the way in which the session of the Council was brought to a close, telling him that we had been informed that the Secretary of State had taken Mr. Bevin completely by surprise in moving for adjournment sine die. Hickerson was greatly concerned that a report to this effect should be circulating in London, apparently on high authority. He said that it was completely contrary to the facts and described in some detail the consultations which had taken place between the United States delegations and those of the United Kingdom and France for several days up to the opening of the final meeting. He assured me that neither Mr. Bevin nor Mr. Bidault was taken in the least by surprise and that they had agreed that Mr. Marshall's proposal was the best way to end the impasse.

2. He added that it was true that Mr. Marshall had not taken the matter up personally with Mr. Bevin, because meetings between them always attracted a lot of public notice. Every day, however, during the session, including the final day, representatives of the delegations had got together after the delegation meetings held each morning.

3. The London Times on the morning after the breakup had published a report that Mr. Marshall had called for adjournment without consulting Mr. Bevin. This had irritated Mr. Marshall very much as a complete untruth, and he had expressed himself strongly to Hickerson. Hickerson thinks that he mentioned it to Mr. Bevin at his final interview before leaving London.

4. Will you please inform Mr. Robertson of the contents of this message?

3e PARTIE/PART 3

RÈGLEMENT DE LA PAIX
PEACE SETTLEMENTS

SECTION A

AUTRICHE
AUSTRIA

116. DEA/7-DG (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-125 Washington, January 14, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

NEGOTIATION OF AUSTRIAN SETTLEMENT

As a supplement to my message WA-111 of January 13th,[24] it is to be remembered that the Deputies for Austria are instructed "to proceed with the preparation of a treaty recognizing the independence of Austria." They will, therefore, have to prepare a draft treaty at the London meetings for submission to the Council of Foreign Ministers, presumably in the hope that the Austrian settlement may be completed within the next three or four months. If, therefore, we wish to put forward any proposals on the substance of the Austrian settlement, this may be our only opportunity to do so before decisions are taken by the Council of Foreign Ministers. Mr. Matthews made this clear in my discussion with him yesterday and expressed the hope that we should have something to say about Austria as well as about Germany.

2. The Austrian Minister, in conversation a few days ago, emphasized the urgency of the conclusion of the Austrian settlement. He was not sure whether it would prove possible to complete the settlement in all respects in advance of the preparation of the German settlement, but thought that at least a preliminary settlement should be completed in the near future, even though an additional instrument might be required later. Ends.

[24]Document 84.

117. DEA/7-DG (S)

Le haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commission in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 279 London, February 18, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

AUSTRIAN SETTLEMENT

The United Kingdom authorities are showing some anxiety lest, by our failure to show much interest in the Austrian Settlement, we might be weakening our position with regard to signature of the eventual Treaty. They assure us that they will support our rights firmly, but I think we should give them as soon as possible a clear statement of our wishes in the matter.

2. A discussion took place at the 17th Meeting of the Deputies for Austria which indicates the trend of opinion. Couve de Murville asked if it was considered that there should be a full Peace Conference, if there were to be other signatory Powers as the United Kingdom Delegation wished, or merely that the text should be communicated to the other Allied Governments for signature. Hood[25] said that he did not think a Peace Conference was necessary, but that communication of the text would be sufficient. Gousev said that of the sixteen states invited to state their views only eight had answered the invitation and appeared, and of these only four had indicated their desire to be parties to the Treaty. None of them was one of the neighbouring Allied states which were the most directly interested. He could not understand why the British Delegate persisted in his attitude. He agreed, however, that a full Peace Conference was not necessary. [Gen. Mark] Clark agreed that a Conference was not necessary but insisted on the necessity of having an adherence clause so that the other Allies could ratify the Treaty if they desired.

3. Hood said the British viewpoint was rather different. Although they did not feel a formal conference was necessary he thought the Deputies should hold consultations with the Allied Governments further to those already held so that the Treaty could be prepared in the most general way possible. He suggested that the report submitted to the C.F.M. should also be sent to those Allied Governments which had been invited to express their views. After the report was sent out on February 25th the Allied Governments would be able to make their comments and possibly take part in further oral discussion at Moscow. In that way they could submit to the Foreign Ministers a draft which contained a very wide measure of allied approval.

---

[25]Le vicomte Samuel Hood, secrétaire d'État suppléant aux Affaires étrangères pour le traité de paix avec l'Autriche, Royaume-Uni.
Viscount Samuel Hood, Deputy to Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs for the Peace Treaty with Austria, of United Kingdom.

4. Hood said he was not wedded to his proposed list of signatories, but that States which wished to sign the Treaty should be given that right. He thought that many States had not mentioned their desire to sign because they had assumed that they were going to do so.

5. In the light of these discussions which have been proceeding between the Deputies for Austria I think we should try to decide now whether we wish:

(i) to be listed in the preamble and sign the Treaty on the basis of nominal equality with all other active belligerents;

(ii) To adhere to the Treaty later under an adherence clause, as proposed by the United States Delegate, or

(iii) To dissociate ourselves from the C.F.M. procedure in respect of Austria and make peace with that country separately as soon as the Austrian Treaty comes into force, in the usual way, after ratification by the Big Four.

6. I should be glad, if possible, to have your views before the meeting on Friday.

118. DEA/7-DG (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 290 Ottawa, February 20, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Repeat to Washington.

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Your telegram No. 279 of February 18th. Austrian Settlement.

We have not yet placed any formal proposals before the Government concerning Austria. In an answer to a question by Mr. Graydon in the House on February 6th Mr. St. Laurent said that the question of making a submission in regard to Austria was still under consideration. He also said that the Department felt that Canada was more particularly concerned with the German settlement, which seemed to us pivotal in the settlement of European policy.

2. In view of the fact that we have no substantive interests in the Austrian settlement, and that it is of much less importance than the German settlement, I would be inclined to advise the Government to follow course III of paragraph 5 in your telegram under reference, unless at some stage in the preparation of the Austrian settlement, we are given an opportunity to consider the draft treaty and make recommendations on it in a manner that is at least as satisfactory as the Paris Conference was in relation to the Italian settlement.

3. Our views concerning the future of Austria may be indicated in very general terms. In a public statement on January 30, 1946, the Prime Minister said that the Canadian Government noted with satisfaction the re-establishment of an autonomous Austrian state and of an independent Austrian Government. He said that the elections held in Austria in November 1945 and the consequent re-organization of the Austrian Government in accordance with the wishes of the people were a welcome restoration of the democratic practice of government by consent in that country. In general, therefore, we may be said to be in favour of an independent viable and democratic Austrian state.

4. No decision has been taken to place these views before the Special Deputies, but a short general statement on the above lines may be authorized shortly for this purpose, following the same procedure as in the case of the German settlement. Meanwhile you may wish to indicate the above views in your conversation with other Commonwealth representatives. Ends.

119. DEA/7-DG (S)

Extrait d'un télégramme du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Extract from Telegram from Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 314 Ottawa, February 24, 1947

SECRET. MOST IMMEDIATE.

Reference peace treaty with Austria.

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Following is text of Canadian statement on the proposed treaty for re-establishment of an Independent and Democratic Austria, for communication to the Special Deputies for Austria of the Council of Foreign Ministers. Text of statement has been approved by Mr. St. Laurent, Begins:

. . .

The intention of the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the Soviet Union, and France to see re-established a free and independent Austria, which was stated in the Moscow Declaration of November 1943 and in the subsequent Declaration at Algiers of the French Committee of National Liberation, is one which earns the full support of the people of Canada. On January 30th of last year the Canadian Government noted with satisfaction the steps which had been taken in Austria and which had resulted in the reestablishment of an autonomous Austrian state and of an independent Austrian Government. At that time Mr. Mackenzie King stated that the elections which had been held in Austria in November 1945, and the consequent re-organization of the Austrian Government in accordance with the wishes of the people, were a welcome restoration of the democratic practice of government by consent, in a country liberated from the German invader.

The Canadian Government now wishes to see a satisfactory settlement concluded between Austria and all the allies at the earliest possible date. It is in the Canadian view of vital importance that this settlement be of a nature to contribute to a set of circumstances most likely to ensure a permanent European peace. With this main principle in mind, Canada supports the recognition of a free and independent Austrian state within the boundaries it possessed before the Anschluss was imposed by Germany. The Canadian Government considers that formal recognition of the newly constituted Austria, by ratification of the proposed Treaty, should be followed, at the earliest possible date, by the withdrawal of allied forces of occupation, and that the authority exercised by the Allied Commission for Austria should, upon entry into force of the Treaty, be transferred to the Austrian Government. Only when all allied forces have been withdrawn and full powers have been restored to the Austrian Government will it be possible for the Austrians to act as a free people.

In order to ensure the continuance of Austria as an independent and democratic state, it is the opinion of the Canadian Government that the Treaty should provide that the Austrian Government will abstain in the future from any action likely to impair the independent status of Austria, and that any future Anschluss with Germany should be specifically prohibited. Canada does not, however, consider that the signatories to a Treaty should be asked to secure the future integrity of Austria, but rather that any threat to Austrian independence should be dealt with by the United Nations. If the four occupying powers, however, wish to go beyond this and themselves make such a guarantee it is a matter which would not concern the Canadian Government.

Of importance to the well-being of the people of Austria, and as a guarantee of the permanence of democratic institutions there established, the Treaty should provide for the continuance of the democratic system in Austria, for the guarantee of fundamental human rights, for the prohibition of anti-democratic organizations, and for the elimination of the last vestiges of Nazi influence in Austria.

In making this submission the Canadian Government assumes that an opportunity will be provided for Canada and the other Allies to examine the draft Treaty with Austria before it is put in final form by the Council of Foreign Ministers for signature and ratification. Ends.

120. PCO/Vol. 65

Présentation au Cabinet[26] par le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Submission to Cabinet[26]
by Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], March 10, 1947

PEACE SETTLEMENT WITH AUSTRIA

The special Deputies for Austria of the Council of Foreign Ministers in their meetings in London, which ended on February 25th, were unable to decide on further association of the other allies in the preparation of the proposed Treaty for the Re-establishment of an Independent and Democratic Austria.

2. In the discussions on procedure the Deputies were unanimous in considering that in the case of the Austrian settlement it would not be necessary to convene a formal conference, on the Paris model, prior to the preparation of the treaty text in final form. However, no alternative method of associating the other allies in the treaty procedure was agreed upon. The representatives of the U.S.S.R. and France contended that the Treaty should be between the Four Powers and Austria only. The United Kingdom Deputy held the contrary view that the other allies should be listed in the preamble of the Treaty after the Four Great Powers, and should be original signatories. The United States representative considered that the Four Great Powers should be the only original signatories, but proposed the inclusion in the Treaty of an adherence clause which would permit the other allied states to accede at a later date. In the face of disagreement on the fundamental procedural question of whether the other allies should be signatories to the Treaty, it was not possible for the United Kingdom delegates to secure approval for a proposal that the report of the Deputies to the Council of Foreign Ministers be made available to the smaller powers and that their comments, on the draft Treaty thus communicated, be received by the Council of Foreign Ministers meeting in Moscow.

3. The Canadian High Commissioner in London has now indicated that United States support is likely to be forthcoming in Moscow for the United Kingdom plan that the other allies should be listed in the preamble and be original signatories to the Treaty.

4. The question therefore arises whether the Canadian Government would wish to become an original signatory to this Treaty.

5. Three alternatives suggest themselves:

(a) Canada might be listed in the preamble and sign the Treaty on the basis of nominal equality with other active belligerents.

(b) Canada might dissociate itself from the Council of Foreign Ministers procedure for Austria and make peace separately in due course by formal declaration.

---

[26]Le Cabinet approuva les recommandations le 12 mars.
Recommendations were approved by Cabinet on March 12.

(c) Canada might accede to the Treaty under an adherence clause (such a clause has been included in the draft which is being forwarded to the Council of Foreign Ministers in Moscow).

6. In the Submission made to the Special Deputies on the Austrian settlement, the Canadian Government made known its assumption that an opportunity would be provided for Canada and the other allies to examine the Draft Peace Treaty before it was put into final form by the Council of Foreign Ministers for signature and ratification. It now appears unlikely that the Draft Treaty will be officially communicated to Canada before or during the Council of Foreign Ministers meeting in Moscow. Further, it is probable that after the Moscow meeting the draft will be so far advanced and agreement will have been reached by the Foreign Ministers on so many points of substance, that any Canadian comments thereon would have little effect. It would, therefore, appear that Canada would not wish to adopt the first alternative, that is, be listed in the preamble of the Treaty and become an original signatory, unless after examination of the Treaty in its final form and before signature by any state it was decided that this procedure could be adopted without prejudice to Canadian interests.

7. The second alternative, refusal by Canada to be associated in any way with the Austrian Treaty proposed by the Council of Foreign Ministers, and the conclusion at a later date of a separate peace with Austria, while having the advantage of simplicity, might be construed as unwillingness on the part of Canada to work in co-operation with the other allies in the solution of European problems. An additional disadvantage would be that a precedent set by Canada in making peace separately might be followed by other states having unsettled claims against Austria, such as Yugoslavia, with a resultant undesirable continuation of uncertainty in an area where stability is of particular importance.

8. The third alternative, that of adhering eventually to the Treaty drawn up by the Council of Foreign Ministers would indicate that while Canada did not assume any responsibility for the preparation of the Treaty, the Canadian Government had given it independent consideration and approval.

Recommendation

9. The Secretary of State for External Affairs therefore recommends that approval be given to the following views for communication to the High Commissioner for Canada in London, and the Canadian Ambassador in Moscow, for their guidance in discussions concerning the Austrian Treaty.

(a) It is desirable that a procedure be accepted in Moscow which would place the draft Austrian Treaty before Canada and the other allies for consideration and recommendation at a stage when the Treaty would still be subject to alteration.

(b) The Canadian Government would be prepared to be listed in the preamble of the Treaty and sign as a full participant only if opportunity were given to examine the Treaty in its final form, and before signature by any state, providing of course that the terms of the Treaty were acceptable.

(c) If acceptable procedure for signature, as described in (b) above, were not provided the Canadian Government would favour the inclusion in the Treaty of an adherence clause and would become party to the Treaty if it saw fit, and possibly with certain reservations at a later stage and after independent scrutiny of the Treaty terms.

121. DEA/7-DG (S)

Extrait d'une note par la Première direction politique

Extract from Memorandum by First Political Division

SECRET [Ottawa], July 28, 1947

PRESENT POSITION OF AUSTRIAN TREATY

At the close of their Fourth Plenary Conference in Moscow on 24 April 1947, the Council of Foreign Ministers established the Austrian Treaty Commission, representative of the four powers. This Commission was charged with the examination of all remaining disagreed questions of the Austrian Treaty. It was to "include a Committee of Experts to give special consideration to Article 35 and the appropriate parts of Article 42 and to the establishment of concrete facts with the aim of possible co-ordination of the points of view of the Governments represented on the Commission." It was directed to submit its report without delay to the Council of Foreign Ministers.

. . .

Meetings of the Commission have been characterized by continual refusals on the part of the Soviet delegate to accede to any points in drafts presented by the other delegations. The United States delegate viewed the purpose of the Committee of Experts to proceed from the start with the investigation of concrete facts. The Soviet delegate stated categorically that he regarded any fact finding or study by technical experts preliminary to discussion of specific cases by the Commission as "unnecessary and unacceptable". The Soviet view has apparently prevailed and as a result the Commission itself appears to have retained the role of the Committee of Experts. Reports of the past two months would therefore appear to indicate that no real progress has been made towards settlement of differences of opinion arising from any of the disputed Articles.

The Austrian Government is anxious to have normal relations with other countries restored at an early date. This anxiety is shared by the United Kingdom and the United States who have indicated their readiness to aid in Austrian reconstruction. Some members of the Austrian Government are stated to be willing to make any sacrifices needed to bring about the signing of a Treaty, in order to get Soviet forces out of Austria, to attain internal political stability, and to allow Austria to take full part in broad plans for European reconstruction.

3. Canada's Position

Prior to the Moscow Conference the United Kingdom view was that the Treaty for the establishment of a free and independent Austria should be between Austria and the Allied and Associated Powers. At the Moscow Conference Russia took the view that the Treaty should be between Austria and the "Big Four". This view appears to have prevailed and although Canada and the smaller powers will probably be given the opportunity of acceding to the Treaty, there has been no indication that Canada will be asked for comment on the draft treaty.

122. DEA/8447-40

Le premier secrétaire du haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

SECRET London, October 16, 1947

Dear Mr. Robertson,

You may recall that before you left London you asked me to find out if the Department was considering terminating the state of war with Austria by formal declaration, as had been done by the United Kingdom.

I sent a telegram on this subject to the Department and received in reply a telegram from Mr. Beaudry (No. 1501 of 24th September).†

According to this telegram, consideration was being given to issuing a statement pointing out that Canada was never at war with the political entity of Austria. This argument was based on the fact that Canada, unlike the United Kingdom, never de jure recognized the incorporation of Austria into the German Reich.

This proposal may be a good way of regularizing our relations with Austria. However, I am a little worried as to whether a protestation at this time that we were never at war with Austria might not conflict with the attitude we adopted at the meetings of the Special Deputies in London last winter. I have, in particular, been going through the memorandum containing the views of the Canadian Government, which you presented to General [Mark] Clark as Chairman of the Council of Deputies for Austria. If we maintain that we were never at war with Austria we might thereby damage our chances of having anything to say on the Austrian settlement. It is true that to exclude us from the settlement on these grounds would be illogical, but our position as a non-belligerent might be an additional complication if we were endeavouring to find a formula for participation. On the other hand, of course, we had, I think, virtually come to the conclusion that as we had not played any real part at all in drafting the Austrian settlement we should not be signatories but should in some independent way declare ourselves at peace with Austria. The simplest way of doing so might be by saying that we never were at war.

It is not my intention to argue against the policy of declaring that we had never been at war, but merely to ask whether such an attitude is consistent with our having submitted a memorandum last February. If I had time to go into the matter carefully I think it probable that I should discover that there was no inconsistency.

As I am in the confusion preceding departure I thought it best to draw this minor matter to your attention.

Yours sincerely,
J.W. HOLMES

SECTION B

ALLEMAGNE
GERMANY

SUBDIVISION I/SUB-SECTION I

POLITIQUE GÉNÉRALE
GENERAL POLICY

123. DEA/7-CA-17 (S)

Note pour le chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum for Head, Second Political Division

[SECRET] [Ottawa], January 16, 1947

The work to be done on Germany may well follow with some important modifications that already began last Spring. Two types of memoranda were then prepared — (1) a memorandum describing at some length the meeting of the Council of Foreign Ministers. This has now been brought up to date following the recent Conference. (2) Part of the material was provided on the assumption that Canada might be taking some part in the Peace Conference on Germany. It was decided not to follow the same arrangement as that in the case of the Paris Conference but rather to prepare a number of studies on individual questions of major interest. Such memoranda would not be divided between factual material and instructions but contain in them points of view which would guide the Delegation, both in understanding the subject and taking a useful part in the discussions. The only memorandum that was finished was that on the future constitution of Germany. That needs bringing up to date in respect of local administration.

2. Given the changed situation in regard to a Peace Conference and the possibility of a divided Germany, the line of approach should begin with the possibility of that division. In view of the fact that the German question may come up in the United Nations or in connection with the European Relief Plan, it still seems necessary to have material ready apart even from the normal requirement of a study of a foreign situation in the department. The following individual studies might be undertaken:

(1) A strategic appreciation. This is already provided for.

(2) The economic situation in Germany showing the resources and probable productive capacity of the Soviet Zone, the United Kingdom and the United States zones together, and perhaps the French zone separately. The memorandum should also treat each zone in relation to the Eastern or Western powers with which it would be associated.

(3) The political tendencies in the Eastern and in the Western zones, stressing the character and power of the various parties. To this might be added whatever information can be obtained, showing their views on domestic and foreign questions.

(4) Territorial questions. Instead of only examining the various claims on former German territory as was first intended, to this should now be added an examination of the present boundary between the Soviet and Western zone, and whether the territorial claims of the Powers would be affected by the division of Germany. This, of course, relates to their changed interest in a balance of power on the assumption that Germany was to remain divided.

3. It might be useful, since these memoranda will in detail go out of date, to maintain a rough working file into which notes for their amendment might be slipped. There are, of course, endless other subjects in connection with Germany which might be studied but the above appear to me to be the principal ones. They might, however, lead to a general analysis at some later date of Germany in relation to the balance of power. Into this would be incorporated material in the earlier studies and the whole might lead up to the suggested analytical memorandum. From this could be drawn a briefer note to be sent to Cabinet at whatever time it were needed.

4. This last memorandum, and possibly the earlier individual studies might usefully be sent to certain of the Missions with an account of the method of work in the department. Those Missions might be asked for their comments and should certainly be asked to keep the department informed on the views of the governments to which they are accredited on the German question. The Missions in Paris, London, Washington, Brussels and The Hague should all be able to supply a good deal. The Mission in Berlin might be now asked to pay more attention to analyses of the various subjects of interest at the expense of the individual items which they have been in the habit of sending.

5. A large amount of valuable material will be found in periodicals and other printed matter. The United Kingdom Basic Handbook on Germany provides the best source for reference on the situation up to about 1942.

G. DE T. G[LAZEBROOK]

124. DEA/7-DG (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-124[27] Ottawa, January 1947

Following from Pearson. Peace Settlement with Germany.

We are giving immediate consideration to statement of views on substance of peace settlement with Germany and Austria as distinct from comments on procedure already made.

2. It seems to us that this statement can be of a general nature only, and should not refer to specific questions such as boundary lines or economic relations between Germany and her immediate neighbours. On the other hand, it should indicate that we are interested in a post-war Germany which can take her place amongst other nations of the world without being a menace to them. We should avoid giving the impression that we are in favour of a soft peace but on the other hand, we should make it clear that we are opposed to a German state so politically and economically oppressed that she will be a constant threat to the peace and economic stability of the world. We would, therefore, be in favour of a German state organized in the form of a loose federation with sufficient economic strength to maintain a reasonable standard of living.

3. We would be grateful for your comments on this general approach. Memorandum will probably be completed early next week.

[27]Une copie du télégramme fut envoyée au haut-commissaire à Londres et à la Mission militaire à Berlin.
The telegram was repeated to High Commissioner, London, and to Military Mission, Berlin.

125. DEA/7-CA-17 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-198 Washington, January 18, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

Following for Pearson, Begins: Your EX-124 of January 17th, settlement with Germany. I am in accord with the general approach which you suggest, except that I am inclined to think that we should have to say something on economic relations between Germany and her immediate neighbours, particularly with respect to the produce of the Ruhr and Rhineland. I have been collecting some ideas, which I may develop in another message early next week. I have, however, just read a fairly full report of the speech given by John Foster Dulles to the National Publishers Association in New York last night. This report appears on pages 1 and 24 of today's New York Times, and the last two columns on page 24 express very well the general line which I had in mind.

2. I think that the central point of our submission should be to favour the establishment of a German Federation, with States of approximately equal importance and with specific powers reserved to the Central Government. These powers would presumably have to include international trade, transportation, a national juridical system, and foreign affairs among others. One important point on which we might have some advice of value to offer based on our own experience would be the division of fiscal authority between the National and the State Governments. A strict limitation on the taxing powers of the National Government might help to create a vested interest in the States in the maintenance of a fairly loose federal system. A better guarantee, however, would be the integration of the economy of the States with the European economy, and particularly a regime for controlling and directing the productive capacity of the Ruhr and Rhineland so that it would be for the benefit of Western Europe as a whole. This should discourage the revival of excessive centralization and therefore increase the chances of survival of a fairly loose political federation. Ends.

126. PCO/W-22-5-G

La mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 17 Berlin, January 20, 1947

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson, Begins: Your telegram No. 15 of January 17th.[28]

2. I entirely agree that proposed statement should be of general nature only and that it should not refer to the specific questions you mention. Agree also that it should say that Canada is interested in a post-war Germany which can take a peaceful place amongst the nations of the world. Any possibility of statement being interpreted as advocating a soft peace should most carefully be avoided.

3. I am not, however, favourably inclined to idea that we should insistently oppose a politically and economically oppressed German State which would be a threat to world security and economic stability. So far as I am aware, no one is pressing for this. The French claim for political separation of the Ruhr and Rhineland has long since gone by the board, at least so far as practical politics are concerned. The permitted level of industry is certain to be raised all round. (The difficulty hitherto has been to get this country up to the present agreed level.) The Russians have already made a unilateral announcement of intention under this head. With British concern for economic relief, the danger, I feel, will be from the other extreme. I fear the present sentimental attitude of British public opinion may make for bad politics. Rather would it seem to be preferable to stress that the peace plan should be worked out in the light of justice, a hard peace if necessary, but in no circumstances less than a just peace or, if it is preferred a square deal.

4. So far as I can judge, your scheme for a loose Federation with sufficient economic strength to maintain a reasonable standard of living, is eminently sound. The proposed Federation, however, may not prove to be a loose one if a Central Government is rushed into existence. The Laendre [sic] should first be given a chance to get their bearings and develop their separate individualities. Certain central administrations, e.g., posts, railways, trade, and so on are crying out for establishment but as regards a Central Government in the Canadian sense of the expression, I share the French apprehension and feel that we should go slow.

5. The division of powers between the Central and Laendre Governments is a difficult problem. The United States favour States rights, and the nature of their zone, i.e., agriculture and light industry, lends itself to this policy. The British zone with its heavy industry (and a Labour Government) calls for nationalization or at least centralization and this tends to cause them to be less Laender-minded than the United States and, of course, the French. Any scheme, however, which would retard the assumption of too great power by the Central Government might perhaps help to prolong the peace by another generation. A division of powers along the lines of the B.N.A.[29] Act, with provision for reference to the Privy Council, might well help towards this end. Ends.

[28]Voir le document 124./See Document 124.

127. PCO/W-22-5-G

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 111 London, January 20, 1947

SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: My telegram No. 96 of January 17th.[30]

Following for your comments is an essay at developing the line of argument suggested in paragraph 10 of my telegram under reference.

2. Such speculative consideration as has thus far been given to the possibility of defining the future status of Germany in an International Statute, rather than by a Treaty of Peace concluded between Germany and the victorious Powers, has turned largely on what have been alleged to be political and psychological defects in the Versailles procedure. It is argued with a good deal of cogency that, given the present difficulties and uncertainties in the way of establishment of a viable and representative German Government, it would be unwise and an invitation to a repetition of the fate of the Weimar Republic to saddle a successor Government, which everybody wants to keep weak, with the formidable initial responsibility of voluntarily accepting an imposed and unwelcome settlement. It might also be argued that the signature of such a German Government as we can foresee to the kind of settlement that is in the shaping, would add no effective sanction or guarantee to the maintenance of such a settlement.

3. The real guarantees of the durability of the German settlement seem to me to lie, first in the conclusion as Secretary Byrnes proposed last year, secondly in the consolidating strength of the United Nations Organization, and thirdly in the controlled integration of German industrial development within the framework of a wider and closer organization of the general European economy. The addition of a German signature to a Treaty of Peace would not add much to the effectiveness of these fundamental and indispensable guarantees.

4. A second argument in favour of the statutory approach to a settlement is that it would lend itself to a process of peacemaking by instalments. Some of the major political decisions involved in the German Settlement will, of course, involve horse trading in high policies between the Big Four. Decisions on this class of question may have to be deferred until they can be disposed of simultaneously in a final compromise, but there are a great many aspects of the German Settlement on which a high degree of agreement is already within reach, and in respect of which, there is everything to be said for ending present uncertainties as quickly as possible. It is obviously important both from point of view of German and of general European recovery that as many firm decisions as possible should be taken as rapidly as possible, and be made operative forthwith. This will be difficult under the classical Peace Treaty approach, in which every decision has to be kept formally in suspense until final agreement is reached on the whole vast document. The fact that a statutory procedure would permit progress by instalments bringing into force agreed chapters of the new regime for Germany seems to me a very strong argument for considering it carefully.

[29]British North America.
[30]Document 88.

5. The previous paragraphs indicate some general advantages which might be expected from a statutory procedure and which might commend it on its merits to the Great Powers. From our point of view I think it might simplify the problem of associating the smaller belligerents with the making of the settlement. Whether it would necessarily imply a separation between the act of ending the present state of war and the act of promulgating a new regime for Germany which would prevent a future war, is a point which would require considering by our international lawyers. I am inclined to think there would be psychological and political advantages in such a separation if we were not all ridden by the ghost and language of Grotius.

6. If the Great Powers would envisage their task as the preparation of the first Draft of an International Statute for the future regime of Germany, prestige considerations, such as led the Russians to insist on the Four Power form of the Articles of Surrender, would be much mitigated. It would be easier for them to contemplate the establishment of ad hoc functional Committees with varying membership to prepare Drafts on the many technical chapters which, in aggregate, would constitute the International Statute. The whole process of peace making could proceed on lower levels, and perhaps in different places simultaneously, thus diffusing the spotlight presently focussed on Lancaster House with rather embarrassing chiaroscuro effects on the minor members of the Company and on those still waiting in the wings. Ends.

128. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 123 London, January 21, 1947

SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson. Reference your telegram No. 96 of January 17.[31]

General line of proposed memorandum on substantial aspect of German settlement seems to be sensible. You might wish to urge the importance of bringing agreed installments of the general settlement into formal operation as quickly as possible.

2. You might also consider the advisability of Canada giving an especial plug for the early establishment of an Economic Commission for Europe, approved in principle at the last Assembly. This might be a useful agency for integrating German industrial development into the needs of the general European economy, and could perhaps be given a special responsibility for approving progressive adjustments in the level of German industrial activity, giving the member countries a more direct and visible stake than they now have in German economic recovery, and leaving them with power to guide German economic energies along channels useful to Europe and the world.

3. You may wish to consider whether something could appropriately be said at this time on general reparations policy. I think a good many of the assumptions on which the Paris Agreement was based have proved themselves unworkable or unrealistic. My own view then was that reparations should have been confined to compensation for the destruction of capital goods. This would have meant that neither Canada nor the United States would have received any reparations payment, except possibly for shipping losses. The Cabinet at that time felt that we could not forego even a paper claim to compensation. In the light of two years' experience they may be disposed to reconsider the question. If so, a submission of the statement on the German Treaty would seem to me an appropriate occasion for suggesting a new approach to the question.

[31]Voir le document 124./See Document 124.

129. CH/Vol. 2087

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 125 Ottawa, January 22, 1947

SECRET

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: Your tel. 111 of January 20th.

We have been much interested in your suggestion concerning an international statute rather than a peace treaty for the settlement with Germany and we are incorporating the idea in the draft statement we are preparing for possible presentation to the Special Deputies. We would be grateful for clarification on one or two points. The statute is presumably a document which would be signed only by those countries which had taken part in the war against Germany and would therefore be a settlement dictated to the German people by their conquerors. This aspect of the question need not of course be emphasized in the document. We wondered however if you thought the provision should be made for a German Government eventually either to adhere to the State or to sign a treaty which would replace the Statute.

We have been wondering also what relation a statute of the nature you suggest would bear to the United Nations. Strictly speaking, a statute is the product of some legislature but I presume that in this case the term would mean only an agreement accepted by the countries which had been engaged in the war against Germany. Is it your view that such a statute should eventually be given a kind of legislative approval through action by the Assembly of the United Nations?

130. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 173 London, January 29, 1947

SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Pearson from Robertson.

I have been thinking of the advisability of inserting a short note on "denazification" in our memorandum for the Deputies on Germany. The Russians have been tending to claim this crusade as their monopoly, and to complain of a lack of interest and vigour shown by the Western Powers in the carrying out of the relevant provisions of the Potsdam Declaration. It might be opportune for Canada to emphasize its endorsement of this objective, and to suggest methods by which it might be realized.

2. The method of express proscription of Fascist organizations used in Article 17 of the Italian Treaty seems to me inadequate. It may give authority for extirpating existing organizations already under ban, but is insufficient assurance against their emergence under other forms and perhaps with unobjectionable nominal aims. I have been wondering about the feasibility of imposing in the treaty or statute a double-edged provision designed to make difficult the creation of any new totalitarian state structure in Germany. One element in such a provision would involve the elaboration of a Bill of Rights bolstering the position of the individual vis-à-vis the state, and pro tanto limiting the power of the state. All the draft peace treaties require the ex-enemy countries to guarantee the Four Freedoms in general terms, but I think we might go further in the case of Germany, link the drafting of the peace treaty with the work that is being done on the general problem by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, and suggest that since Germany is going to be subject to a large measure of external control for a good many years to come, it might be used as a social laboratory in which could be worked out an international guarantee of individual liberties more comprehensive than the jealous sovereignties of other states might presently permit.

3. The other blade of the double-edged instrument I have in mind would cut away from the state certain police powers which the Nazis found and developed, and which would greatly facilitate the consolidation of any new totalitarian regime which might conceivably come into office in Germany at a later date. In general one might deprive the German state of the capacity of making emergency decree laws; i.e., of the kind of jurisdiction which our Government only gets under the War Measures Act. These are reserved powers which might perhaps only be made available to the German Government with the concurrence, say, of the members of the Big Four, if they are to be trustees of a future treaty or statute for Germany. Specifically, the German Government might be deprived of the power to maintain secret police, impose censorship, make arbitrary arrests, deport foreigners, etc.

4. This is a very rough approach to the problem. If the principle commends itself to you, it should be put forward, I think, under the rubric of "denazification", with its secondary implications not heavily stressed.

131. DEA/50130-40

Note du conseiller de l'ambassade en France

Memorandum by Counsellor, Embassy in France

SECRET Paris, May 16, 1947

On May 16th I called on M. Dennery[32] at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to ask him whether he could throw any further light upon the statements of M. Teitgen[33] to the Ambassador and myself (see Embassy telegrams No. 186 of April 3rd and [32]Étienne Dennery, directeur des Affaires d'Amérique, ministère des Affaires étrangères de France.

Étienne Dennery, Director of American Affairs, Ministry of Foreign Affairs of France.
[33]Pierre-Henri Teitgen, vice-président du Conseil des ministres de France (-nov.22).
Pierre-Henri Teitgen, Deputy Premier of France (-Nov. 22).

No. 233 of April 25th to the Department of External Affairs)† to the effect that the French Government would prefer that the preparation of the German settlement should be vested in the United Nations rather than in the Council of Foreign Ministers. I said that it would be interesting to have a rather more detailed exposition of this idea. M. Dennery was evidently surprised and even startled at the views expressed by M. Teitgen. He frankly said that he knew nothing about any French suggestion that the negotiation of the German settlement should be removed from the Council of Foreign Ministers. He pointed out that the French Delegation in Moscow had, in fact, put forward detailed plans for the elaboration of arrangements under the auspices of the Council of Foreign Ministers to meet the requirements of the middle and smaller allies. He said that he would inform himself further of the matter and would then get in touch with me again. It was apparent that M. Dennery had not been informed of the views put forward by M. Teitgen as to the undesirability of the Council of Foreign Ministers continuing to deal with the German settlement.

M. Dennery remarked that there were at present no exchanges going on between the four great powers on the subject of the German settlement. After Moscow complete silence appears to have descended. I made the conventional observation that the results of Moscow were thoroughly disappointing. M. Dennery said that it was his impression that some of the powers represented at Moscow were not ill satisfied at the ensuing delay which would enable them to establish themselves more firmly in positions which they already held.

M. Dennery asked me what the attitude of the Canadian Government to the Ruhr problem was. I said that we had only considered the question in a preliminary way but that our general view was that the permanent political separation of the Ruhr from Germany would be dangerous as it might lead to a later campaign of revisionism on the part of the Germans. On the other hand, we certainly felt that special forms of control would have to be set up in the Ruhr and a special economic regime which would make use of Ruhr sources in the interest of Europe. M. Dennery said that from all indications at Moscow the British were now proposing that at the end of the period of allied occupation of the Ruhr the area should simply be treated as part of Germany and should not be subjected to any particular regime of control, economic or otherwise. What would be the Canadian attitude towards this development in British policy? I said that I was not aware that any such development had taken place. My understanding had been that the British favoured a special system of economic control over the Ruhr resources although the control which they visualized was less detailed and far reaching than that contemplated in the French memorandum on the Ruhr.

I asked M. Dennery what he thought of the prospects of the Economic Commission for Europe and whether the French Government did not think that in the long run the Ruhr would have to be considered as a problem affecting all Europe, so that its resources might be most fruitfully employed in the interest of Europe as a whole. M. Dennery said that this was certainly the long term view of the French Government but that it was probably premature to think of the Ruhr problem being put in the hands of a European Economic Commission at this stage. The Ruhr was essentially a French security problem, and it was the most important of all the problems connected with Germany.

Reverting to the machinery for the association of the middle and smaller powers with the peace settlement, I said that the Canadian Authorities had appreciated M. St. Hardouin's (of the French delegation at Moscow) proposal that the interested middle powers should be invited to sit on the main commissions dealing with Germany. I said that this proposal went some way to meet the Canadian position. It did not in our view go far enough. We felt that we should form part of those commissions on which we were represented not as invited guests but as members. There should be no differentiation between the great powers and the other powers as to their status on these commissions. Otherwise there might be a tendency for the real work of the commissions to be done by the great powers in smaller meetings while the larger meetings which other powers were invited to attend might become more or less formalities. I added that of course this argument applied to the subcommissions where much of the detailed work would presumably be done. M. Dennery took note of these views.

C.S.A. R[ITCHIE]

132. DEA/50130-40

Le chef de la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 1140 Berlin, September 26, 1947

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my dispatch No. 1008 dated 2nd September, 1947,† and to report that there is now a definite expectation in one well informed quarter in Berlin that at the November meeting of the Conference of Foreign Ministers, the Russians may well put forward a scheme for quadripartite collaboration in Germany so carefully and skilfully dressed that its rejection would have the effect of putting the onus on the Western Powers.

2. While this cannot be affirmed with too much confidence, some of my Western political friends are strongly of opinion that it would be most unwise to agree to any proposal which would retain the single Power veto which has to date brought to naught every effort to bring about genuine unity in the government of Germany.

I have etc.

MAURICE POPE

133. DEA/7-DE-1 (S)

Le chef de la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 1567 Berlin, December 18, 1947

SECRET

Sir,

It will come to you as no surprise if I report that during the last few days I have felt an urge to address you a dispatch which, in the manner of Blackwoods, might be entitled "The Conference of Foreign Ministers, and After." But while the desire to do so may be eminently reasonable, the information at my disposal is not such as to enable me at all adequately to meet this self-imposed specification. For the time being, Berlin, which has confidently been expecting failure for months, if not indeed for years, seems benumbed. Of recent weeks the scene of action has been in London. Our principals have been absent from their posts and at the moment the lesser fry are busily endeavouring to re-adjust their minds to the new situation without, so far as I can judge, any apparent success.

2. "Hope springs eternal...." and a night or two ago I had ample proof of appositeness of the adage. On the very day the Conference adjourned a usually well informed British Intelligence Officer was seeking to lay bets that Molotov would climb down. Later that evening I gave a dinner to say goodbye to Mr. Ivor Pink of the British Political Division (without a doubt the best friend this Mission has had in Berlin and without whose confidences I am sure I don't know what we shall do in the future), during the course of which the senior British officer then in Germany felt sure that the Soviets would "produce a plan" the effect of which would be to save the Conference. On the same occasion the almost only remaining member of the United States Political Division in Berlin was much of the same mind but he was careful enough to put it that he "hoped" they would. It seems the way of most men to think as much with their hearts as they do with their minds.

3. For the time being the ice is very thin, and on which one does well to skate warily. Direct questions would not be helpful. We must, therefore, have recourse to indirect approaches. Vague allusions, and reticences are the only materials available to us with which to build. And naturally enough, the thought that is uppermost in our minds today is what effect, if any, will this adjournment sine die have on our position in Berlin.

4. So far as I can judge our British friends are not optimistic. Indeed, it is not too much to say that in some quarters the view is one of pessimism. Our United States friends are emphatically of another attitude of mind. As is well known, it is United States policy to hang on at all costs. General Clay[34] has nailed his colours to the mast and has announced to the world (unwisely I think) that nothing short of force or a German peace treaty will induce him to leave Berlin. This is ample for United States officials. It is, in fact, the party line. They are going to stay and that is that, — so they say.

5. My Belgian colleague on the other hand is quietly optimistic. In his view the sudden adjournment has been most disconcerting to the Soviet Government. He thinks they had at least hoped to drag things along for weeks yet to come. Today the only point of contact is in Berlin and he feels sure that this is a bridge the Russians have no desire to burn. The Chief of the Netherlands Mission seems confident that nothing will happen for months yet to come. Our French friends expect "beaucoup d'inconvenients" in the weeks to come.

6. In endeavouring to appreciate this question, I think it useful to remember the late Al. Smith and to look at the record. I must say I judge it to be unpromising. From the very outset, now nearly two and a half years ago, Quadripartite government of Germany has been a mockery. Agreement has been reached only in respect of destructive measures. Anything of a constructive measure has been talked out. Again, agreement must imply a sharing of assets and liabilities and that the Russians will share either with the West I have yet to be convinced. A recognition of German unity either economic or political would imply freedom of movement from one Zone to another and that the Soviet engine is able to go in reverse I have yet to see a sign. Nor, was there any indication whatsoever in London that the Soviet Government was, even in the slightest measure, seeking agreement. I can only conclude then, that they were fully prepared for eventual disagreement.

7. We have known that as soon as they could get to it the Western Powers intended to set up a Provisional German Organization in Frankfurt, and that in this instance for the word "Organization" we were free to read the word "Government". Whether or not there has been a last minute change of plan I am unable definitely to ascertain. There is always the matter of timing and as Lloyd George used to say, the present time may now be judged to be inopportune. A tactic of delay in this particular respect might well be the policy of wisdom.

8. We know, too, that in the Soviet Sector there is an organization in being that requires only a change of name to make it a central government for the Eastern Zone of Occupation. Moreover, we have every reason to be aware that our presence here is in every way as embarrassing to the Russians as it is advantageous to ourselves.

9. Consequently, with these factors in mind, I am forced to the conclusion that the prospects of a continuance of our stay in Berlin are dependent on what action the Western Powers may take in the next few weeks.

I have etc.

J.G. McQUEEN

---

[34]Général Lucius D. Clay, commandant en chef des forces américaines en Europe et gouverneur militaire des États-Unis pour l'Allemagne.
General Lucius D. Clay, US Commander-in-Chief, Europe, and Military Governor for Germany.

SUBDIVISION II/SUB-SECTION II

RETRAIT DES FORCES D'OCCUPATION WITHDRAWAL OF OCCUPATION FORCES

134. DEA/7-CA-2 (S)

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

PERSONAL AND SECRET Ottawa, March 14, 1947

Dear Norman [Robertson],

I am sure that you have been somewhat perplexed over the manner in which the discussion has developed here, both in Parliament and in the press, concerning the withdrawal of Canadian troops from Germany. You know as well as I do, however, that decisions concerning tactics in debate have a way of being made informally at the last minute, and often without there being an opportunity for full consultation between members of the Government, members of Parliament and the civil servants most directly concerned. You know, also, how debates in Parliament sometimes focus on points that are somewhat irrelevant to the main issue.

Mr. Graydon first suggested on Friday February 28th that a debate on Canadian participation in the German and Austrian settlements might take place immediately on that day but it was finally agreed at Mr. St. Laurent's suggestion that the proposed discussion should stand over until Monday, March 3rd.[35] We set about preparing some notes in the Department for Mr. St. Laurent's use in the debate, and I am enclosing a copy of these notes† in order that you may see what we originally had in mind. In the latter part of his address he followed this paper fairly closely, although he used it as a set of notes rather than as a manuscript. The first part of Mr. St. Laurent's statement, in which he developed his ideas concerning the international legal position that had been established by the various agreements amongst the Big Powers at Moscow, Tehran, Yalta and Potsdam, was made on his own initiative, and was given from notes which he wrote at his seat in the House during the earlier part of the debate.

It was inevitable, of course, that the question of withdrawal of troops from Germany should be raised in the debate. It was our view in the Department that the only answer needed to this question was that it was not relevant to the discussion in hand. There was no evidence that the position of Canada in relation to the settlement with Germany would have been improved by the presence of Canadian troops in the British zone and, in fact, such evidence as existed pointed to the conclusion that the situation had not been affected by the withdrawal. In a general way this was the line taken by Mr. Claxton in his statement in the House, and it was our understanding that he was to accept responsibility for dealing with this point. I had talked with him about how this might best be done. At the last moment, however, the Prime Minister asked me to request Mr. St. Laurent also to include some reference to this question in his statement. It was in this way that the suggestion was introduced into the debate that Canadian troops had been withdrawn because of the inadequate provision made for Canadian participation in the control of Germany. Mr. St. Laurent made this aspect of his case even more emphatic in his reply to Mr. Graydon's question at the end of his statement. Attention was further focussed on the point, of course, by the unhappy controversy as to whether Mr. St. Laurent said "kicked out" as was reported in the press, or "left out" as appeared in Hansard.

[35]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume I, p. 971.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Vol. I, p. 975.

The United Kingdom people here were, for obvious reasons, very unhappy about this part of the debate. Garner pointed out to Riddell[36] in conversation immediately afterwards that at no point in the telegraphic exchange between Mr. Attlee and Mr. King had the question of Canadian participation in the control of Germany been raised. There was no suggestion in these telegrams that we would have been willing to stay had we been given a zone of our own, or had we been enabled in some manner to participate in the decisions of the Control Council.

It was not surprising that the question should have been raised again in the House and a motion calling for the tabling of correspondence was a perfectly natural development. Again we considered, in the Department, that a short answer pointing out the privileged nature of the documents and referring to explanations made when the decision was announced would have been sufficient. At first we thought that Mr. St. Laurent would make this reply himself and a brief statement for this purpose was prepared in the Department. In the event, however, the Prime Minister decided that he would make the reply[37] and a statement was prepared for him in his office, which included the memorandum we had drafted for our Minister, and a copy of which I had sent to Mr. King. At that time I was in Washington and the Prime Minister's office did not consult anyone else in the department concerning his statement, though I believe the Prime Minister himself told Mr. St. Laurent of his intentions. For some reason, though no one in the Department of External Affairs knew that the Prime Minister intended to make the statement, Earnscliffe had been informed and Garner was present in the Diplomatic Gallery. His appearance there, together with the fact that Pickersgill[38] was seen somewhat ostentatiously handing him a copy of the text which had been prepared for release to the press, led the Press Gallery to conclude that Mr. King was making his statement as a result of protests from the United Kingdom Government.

The inclusion of extracts from two telegrams was also decided upon in the Prime Minister's office without consultation with officials of the Department, and

---

[36]R.G. Riddell.

[37]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume II, pp. 1194-1197

See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Vol. II, p. 1197-9.

[38]J.W. Pickersgill, cabinet du premier ministre.

J.W. Pickersgill, Prime Minister's Office.

the question of compromise of cyphers unfortunately was never considered. We have written to the United Kingdom authorities about this aspect of the question, and a copy of our letter has already been sent you.

The statement itself was, it seems to me, a fair summary of the course of events when the decision was made to withdraw troops from Germany, though it had the immediate effect of undermining Mr. St. Laurent's suggestion that the decision had been the result of dissatisfaction over arrangements for the control of Germany. I do not suppose, however, that we have heard the last of this controversy and there has already been a rumour that Mr. Bracken[39] will attempt to secure an explanation of the apparent inconsistency between the statements made by Mr. St. Laurent on the one hand and Mr. King on the other. The continuation of this discussion is particularly unfortunate from our point of view, I think, since it will divert attention from the important current question of Canadian participation in the German settlement, in which an active interest has developed both in parliament and in the country at large.

Yours sincerely,
MIKE [PEARSON]

SUBDIVISION III/SUB-SECTION III

RAPATRIEMENT DES CANADIENS
REPATRIATION OF CANADIANS

135. DEA/939-C-40

Le troisième secrétaire de la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne au chef de la Direction du protocole

Third Secretary, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany to Head, Protocol Division

SECRET Berlin, August 1, 1947

Dear Mr. Chance,

I refer to General Pope's dispatch No. 657 of 19th June, 1947,† and to later dispatches on the general subject of the documentation of Canadians in this country. These dispatches contained suggestions concerning the execution of our general policy towards Canadians who have spent the war years in Germany but did not touch upon policy itself.

2. The essence of departmental policy as it exists today appears to provide for protecting and assisting Canadians who have spent the war years in Germany only in so far as they can show that they have prized and protected their status as [39]John Bracken, chef de l'opposition.

John Bracken, Leader of the Opposition.

Canadians. This policy is logical in the sense that it provides governmental assistance to the individual in the measure in which the individual concerned showed loyalty to Canada: the loyal Canadian is repatriated at Government expense if necessary; the lukewarm Canadian stays in this country without travel documents until he can complete his own travel arrangements; and the citizenship of the patently disloyal Canadian is revoked, assuming he is a Canadian citizen by naturalization, or all Missions are advised not to give him protection or assistance if he is a natural born Canadian.

3. There are, however, three possible defects in our present policy which have become apparent in the handling of the Consular work here during the past five months.

4. The first is that we are depreciating Canadian citizenship by refusing to provide travel documents to persons whom we recognize as Canadian citizens in this country. As nationals of a victorious power, these Canadians are being administered by German authorities just like any other German national, and I have had indications from several persons whom we have recognized as Canadians but who are not in a position to pay their passage to Canada, that the German official, when he can do so without risk, tends to enjoy making things difficult for these people.

5. In addition, our present policy of refusing to grant travel documents to Canadian citizens who are not in a position to complete travel arrangements to return to Canada, will not, I think, increase the future loyalty of these persons to Canada or make them better citizens if and when they eventually return. I have on the other hand recently had positive examples of a potential danger to Canada of having such persons here in Germany, should they become embittered against our country. The Russian G.P.U.[40] are attempting to make an espionage agent out of one [. . .], who resides in the Russian Zone (our dispatch No. 193 of February 20th, 1947,† refers). [. . .] was assigned low grade espionage work which he apparently agreed to do under duress and reported to us immediately afterwards. [. . .]

6. The basic problem is, I think, posed by the fact that we are combining a "soft" revocation policy with a "hard" policy with respect to the issuance of travel documents. If it is decided that persons like [. . .] (your dispatch No. 274 of 2nd May, 1947,† refers) and [. . .] (your dispatch No. 291† of 13th May, 1947, refers) who have served in the German army against Canada, should remain Canadian citizens, it is understandable that we should not go out of our way to repatriate them or to assist them in this country. On the other hand, as long as they remain in this country without travel documents and are treated in the same way as nationals of a defeated power, the status of a Canadian citizen is debased to a certain degree and there is a danger, although admittedly very slight, of Canada's being harmed by such persons.

7. The British are not faced with the problem to the same extent that we are, in that they have relatively fewer naturalized citizens. Their revocation policy is, I understand, soft like ours, but they are far more liberal in granting passports to [40]OGPU, les services secrets de l'Union soviétique.

OGPU, Secret Service of Soviet Union.

British subjects and in facilitating their return to the United Kingdom. South African policy is almost identically the same as our own. Australia has a hard revocation policy, but once it has been decided not to revoke naturalization, the claimant to Australian nationality is able to obtain a British passport.

Yours sincerely,
JAMES M. WELD

136. DEA/52-AUM-40

Note de la Direction consulaire

Memorandum by Consular Division

[Ottawa], September 25, 1947

During his recent visit to Ottawa, Mr. Weld discussed the problem of what should be done with respect to certain Canadian citizens who went to Germany before the war and are still there. These are persons whose national status has been clarified, against whom there is no adverse security report and many of whom were not given assisted repatriation previously because they had business affairs to settle in Germany, there was illness in the family or for some other similar reason. These persons may number two to three hundred in all.

Mr. Weld considers that the persons to whom he refers are desirable if we simply look at them as immigrants.

These persons, of course, could not qualify as Displaced Persons and their passage will not be paid by the International Refugee Organization, neither will they have friends or relatives or funds in Canada so that their way could be paid for them. They are in the unfortunate position of being Canadian citizens, so that no one has any responsibility with respect to them except the Canadian Military Mission, Berlin, and the Mission has instructions to give them no assistance.

I should appreciate your views on the desirability of considering these persons as intending immigrants, enquiring carefully with respect to them and if they are satisfactory, including them with persons who are coming to Canada as immigrants from Germany. It seems altogether likely that a considerable amount of transportation space will be available within the next few months and indeed there is the possibility that some ships may sail without the full complement of passengers. Under the circumstances, we could put a few of these people in each ship upon their written undertaking to repay whatever costs might be involved. We could also place them in the camps which Labour is arranging for immigrants in Canada until such time as suitable employment has been found for them here.

If it is decided to proceed with this scheme we will, of course, have to obtain the agreement of the Departments of Mines and Resources and Labour.

C.P. HÉBERT

137. DEA/52-AUM-40

Note de la Première direction politique à la Direction consulaire

Memorandum from First Political Division to Consular Division

[Ottawa], September 30, 1947

RE REPATRIATION OF CANADIAN CITIZENS STILL IN GERMANY

While legally there may be no obligation on the Government to assist Canadians in Germany to return to this country, it nevertheless seems to me that Mr. Weld's case is a good one and should be supported. In particular, I do not think that Canadian citizens should be given less favourable treatment as regards transport to Canada than is accorded to refugees admitted with the assistance of I.R.O., an organization to which Canada is a contributor.

If these persons have been cleared from a security point of view and were previously eligible for assisted repatriation, I am of the opinion that similar assistance should not be denied them now when shipping is easier and the labour situation in Canada is such as to make re-payment a good risk.

The numbers involved appear to be small and if necessary it should not be too difficult for the R.C.M.P. to keep track of the future activities of these persons. In cases where the Department feels that revocation of citizenship is absolutely necessary, transport could be withheld until a final decision is received from the Secretary of State. Otherwise, I consider that these Canadians should be returned here as shipping becomes available.

J.H. WARREN

138. DEA/52-AUM-40

Projet de note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Draft Memorandum for Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa, October 14, 1947]

There are in Germany at present a number of Canadian citizens who wish to return to Canada. These persons have not served in the enemy Forces against us and we have received no adverse security reports concerning them. An Officer of the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin has estimated the number as about 300.

The persons referred to are those who for one reason or another were not granted assisted repatriation immediately following the conclusion of hostilities with Germany. In some instances they did not wish to come forward because of family or business ties and in other instances there was no manner in which we could be given assurance that the amounts advanced to them for repatriation would, in fact, be repaid. However, for the purpose of the present proposal, we should define these persons as being Canadian citizens who would be desirable as "immigrants" to Canada at the present time.

The following considerations move us to review our attitude towards these persons:

1. Because of the food situation in Germany, the lack of fuel and so on, the health of these persons tends on the whole to deteriorate, dependent as they are on German rations only. As they will undoubtedly continue to press for admittance to Canada and will eventually make their way here, it is felt that their removal to Canada might take place at this time rather than at a later date.

2. Demands are made by these persons to the Military Mission in Berlin for relief in kind. To date the Mission has only been able to provide limited relief to the most urgent cases where the applicant can produce positive proof of serious under-nourishment, tuberculosis, etc. In other cases the Mission is not able to provide assistance of any kind and is embarrassed further because it is felt that German officials often discriminate against these persons in small ways in which no positive action may be taken to prevent such discrimination. This situation tends to depreciate Canadian citizenship since the persons involved are, of course, Canadian citizens.

3. Individuals themselves often tend to be somewhat bitter towards the authorities in Canada for not helping them more positively to return to their country. It is felt that the longer these persons suffer the privations of their present life in Germany, the less loyal and desirable they will tend to be as citizens when, and if, they eventually return to this country.

The Department of Mines and Resources is endeavouring to support a programme of increased immigration to Canada. To that end a large amount of Trans-Atlantic shipping accommodation is being obtained and the Department is undertaking to fill a certain number of ships. It seems not unlikely that some of these ships in the earlier stages of the movement will be ready before it has been possible to process a sufficient number of intending immigrants to fill them and it might happen that some of these ships will have vacant accommodation. It is therefore proposed to ask the Department of Mines and Resources whether they could accommodate Canadian citizens in the category above mentioned in some of these ships.

These persons will not be in a position to prepay their transportation to Canada. The amount of money involved will be considerably in excess of the $10,000. available in this Department in the Vote for Relief and Repatriation of distressed Canadian citizens abroad. Accordingly, it would be necessary either to charge this against the Relief and Repatriation Vote of the Department of Mines and Resources or for the Department of External Affairs to obtain a special Vote for use in the repatriation of these persons. I feel that the former would be a more satisfactory arrangement but that we should in any event be prepared to accept the undertaking of the returning Canadian citizen himself that he will repay the funds advanced as soon as he has had an opportunity to re-establish himself in Canada.

If you agree with the above suggestion, I shall enquire from the Department of Mines and Resources concerning the availability of transportation and also concerning the financial arrangements for repatriation. If the Department of Mines and Resources does not feel prepared to ask for a supplementary Vote, I suggest that the Vote be sought by our Department.

4e PARTIE/PART 4

RÉPARATIONS ET RESTITUTION
REPARATIONS AND RESTITUTION

139. DEA/9442-40

Note pour le secrétaire du Comité interministériel des réparations

Memorandum for Secretary, Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations

[Ottawa], May 22, 1947

RE CLAIMS FOR COMPENSATION

In connection with the Inter-Departmental Committee meeting to be held on Monday May 26, 1947, to discuss the possibility of establishing domestic machinery to consider reparation claims against the Canadian Government, the Custodian's Office would like to offer the following comments on the Memorandum prepared in the Department of External Affairs,† and to offer the following general observations:

(1) It is presumed that the Committee is to discuss the matter of all claims which have been filed by Canadians with respect to loss or damage suffered as a result of the recent war. External's Memorandum divides such claims into two general classes, those for reparation and those for restitution. It would probably be more accurate to divide them into claims for compensation and those for restitution in view of our understanding that reparation claims as such are only those of a Government against another Government. We understand that an individual citizen has no right in international law to file a reparation claim against a foreign Government. Moreover, we understand that the Canadian Government is prepared to waive its right to all reparation claims against most of the enemy countries. In fact, Canada has already waived its reparation claim against Italy and by signing the Paris Reparation Act, it has also waived its right against Germany. It is therefore evident that the claims of individual Canadians are those for compensation which they hope to obtain from the Canadian Government.

There would appear to be two sources from which the Government might pay compensation claims (a) from the Consolidated Revenue Fund or (b) from assets presently vested in the Custodian and which formerly belonged to belligerent enemies. It appears that the only reparation Canada will receive is the property presently under the Custodian's control, and it is possible that the Government may wish to return some of this property to certain of the enemy countries.

(2) Under the Trading with the Enemy Regulations, the Custodian's prime responsibility is to control property situated in Canada which belongs to persons residing in enemy or formerly enemy occupied territory. He is not concerned with property situated in enemy territory belonging to Canadian citizens and therefore not directly concerned with the loss of such property. After the beginning of hostilities, the Government considered it advisable to have some Department record claims which Canadians might file with respect to loss or damage to any property which they might have suffered as a result of the war. As a matter of expediency, the Custodian's Office was designated, under Section 45 of our Regulations, to keep a record only of such claims.

(3) In view of the onerous task of administering formerly enemy-owned property of all description in Canada, the Custodian feels that he has not the facilities nor the staff to cope with the question of the payment of claims. Moreover, he is of the opinion that there should be a separate Government agency, probably a commission, appointed to deal with this problem and to investigate and appraise such claims and recommend to the Government the policy that should be adopted with respect to their settlement. He would like to emphasize that such an agency should operate independently of the Custodian's Office.

(4) Up to the present, there has been no public clamour raised, nor is there evidence of organized pressure being brought to bear on the Government for the payment of these claims. There is the danger, if the Government were now to advertise for the compulsory filing of these claims, that this issue might be aroused in the public mind and that claimants might be led to believe that they will obtain compensation which the Government might not be willing or able to pay. In this connection, it should be borne in mind that to our knowledge, neither the United States nor Great Britain have yet advertised for domestic compensation claims. It may therefore be premature for a country like Canada to take the initiative in formulating a claims policy. On the other hand, Canada, like the United States and Great Britain, pursuant to the terms of the various armistices signed with the ex-Axis satellite Governments, has already advertised for certain types of property losses in these enemy countries and for which losses these enemy Governments are obligated to compensate the nationals of the victorious powers.

(5) This office appreciates the fact that it may be useful for the Cabinet and various Government Departments, particularly the Department of External Affairs, to know the full extent of the claims of all Canadian citizens. Providing that the public notices could be worded in such a way that these claimants would understand that the Government would not in any way be committed to the settlement of their claims, this office would have no objection to advertising at the present time. But, as pointed out above, this might arouse a public issue which otherwise might not arise for some time.

(6) Under Section 45 of our Regulations, there is no obligation on the part of Canadians to file claims for their losses. They may do so on a voluntary basis. Consequently, the claims presently registered with the Custodian represent only those which have been voluntarily filed, and the result is that they may not represent an accurate picture of all Canadian claims. From his experience in the handling of claims, the Custodian is of the opinion that many of these claims are grossly exaggerated, while others represent the prewar inventory value of the property, the claimant not knowing to what extent, if any, the property was lost, damaged or destroyed. The records of this office show that as at March 31, 1947, the total amount of claims filed with respect to losses in the nine belligerent enemy countries is $94,222,167.78, while the total value of assets vested in the Custodian for these countries amounts to approximately $19,285,000.00. In addition to this, there is a total of $143,284,794.36 in claims representing claims for losses suffered in the various liberated countries. We have kept a separate record of losses resulting from the sinking of the S.S. "Athenia" and other steamships amounting to $3,657,704.82. These represent a total claims figure to date of $241,164,666.96.

(7) If the Government decided to follow the same practice as was adopted after World War I by paying Canadian claimants out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the payment of the present claims would obviously be a considerable strain on the Canadian taxpayer. On the other hand, if compensation were to be paid from belligerent enemy assets presently vested in the Canadian Custodian, each claimant would only receive, on the basis of present figures, a very small proportion (probably less than 10%) in actual settlement.

(8) It may be premature for the Canadian Government to decide on a policy with respect to the payment of Canadian claims, considering that the drafting of the Peace Treaties with the two main enemy countries Germany and Japan, has not yet commenced. If these Treaties follow the precedent established in the satellite Treaties, some provision will be made for payment to Canadians who have suffered loss or damage with respect to their property interests in these two countries. It may therefore be advisable to await the terms of these two Treaties before a definite decision is made.

(9) Concerning losses suffered by Canadians with respect to their property situated in the various liberated territories, it should be pointed out that agreements have now been concluded with two countries, France and The Netherlands, whereby these Governments undertake to give the same national treatment to Canadians with respect to their property in those countries as these Governments give to their own nationals, in so far as war damage compensation is concerned. If similar agreements can be concluded with the other liberated Governments on the basis of Unanimous Resolution III of the Paris Reparation Act, and it is possible that some will, this will eventually reduce the volume of claims with which the Canadian Government may have to deal. Here again, it may be premature for the Government to decide on a policy which, no doubt, will be greatly influenced by the number of agreements of this kind so concluded. However, the legislation for war damage compensation enacted by these liberated Governments provides for a varying percentage of compensation to be paid their nationals. For instance, I understand that France is prepared to compensate to the extent of 75% of the actual damage suffered; whereas Yugoslavia is prepared to pay only 50% of the damage. This might possibly leave a certain amount of the claim to be dealt with by the Canadian Government.

(10) For the guidance of the Committee, there is attached hereto a memorandum† giving a brief summary of the method adopted for the handling of claims after World War I.

140. DEA/9442-A-40

Rapport du Sous-comité des demandes de réparations du Comité interministériel des réparations[41]

Report of the Reparations Claims Sub-Committee of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations[41]

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], December [6], 1947

I. INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

At the meeting of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations of May 26th, 1947, the Committee agreed that a Sub-Committee be appointed, consisting of representatives of External Affairs, Finance, Justice and the Office of the Custodian, to report and make recommendations to the main Committee on the whole problem of the handling of claims for compensation for loss or damage arising out of World War II.

The Sub-Committee has held eighteen meetings since the above date, and now submits its report to the Inter-Departmental Committee. It is felt that, before the conclusions and recommendations are presented, some explanatory remarks are necessary for the fuller understanding of the many problems involved.

Under the Revised Regulations Respecting Trading with the Enemy, any person residing in Canada could obtain the necessary forms from the Custodian for recording a claim against persons residing or carrying on business in enemy or prescribed territories. This regulation was very widely interpreted by claimants of Canadian origin and others, and has resulted in claims of almost every conceivable description being submitted, including claims covering small trade debts and commissions as well as other claims involving loss of business, profits, and investments, amounting, in some cases, to millions of dollars.

It should be mentioned that in August, 1946, Cabinet approved a Memorandum from the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations which recommended, among other things, that claims relating to restitution of property should be dealt with by External Affairs, and that the domestic handling of all types of claims for compensation for loss or damage arising out of the war should be the responsibility of the Custodian's Office.

References should also be made to approval by Cabinet in October, 1946 of certain press notices in Canadian newspapers relating to protection of property in Germany and Austria owned by Canadian residents, and of paid advertisements respecting the submission of claims of owners of property in Finland, Hungary, and Roumania. These notices were based on undertakings of these enemy Governments under the Armistice arrangements and emphasized that the Canadian Government accepted no responsibility for the satisfaction of claims but would endeavour to promote the favourable consideration of eligible claimants. After the appearance of [41]Le rapport du comité interministériel fut soumis au Cabinet et approuvé le 6 mai 1948.

The report of the Interdepartmental Committee was submitted to, and approved by, Cabinet on May 6, 1948.

the above advertisements in the Canadian Press in December, 1946, four further press notices were published during the period from February to July, 1947, relating to protection of property in Japan and Korea, Canadian property and interests in Yugoslavia, and claims relating to acts of nationalisation of property in Czechoslovakia and Poland by the Governments of these countries.

On the resumption of trade with former enemy occupied countries in Europe, claimants have been successful in obtaining satisfactory settlement of a large number of claims, mainly relating to trade debts, commissions, bank balances and drafts, and in addition, many properties have been restored to the claimants, but there remains a total of approximately 1600 claims in the Custodian's register to a value of approximately $250,000,000. Of this amount, one claim, that of Bata of Czechoslovakia, is for $50,000,000., and it is understood that this claim will be settled by direct negotiations between the claimant and the Czech Government, thus leaving a net total of $200,000,000. In regard to the Canadian value of these claims, it should be mentioned that in all cases conversions of currencies have been made at the exchange rates of September, 1939.

Assets of the belligerent enemy countries, Germany, Italy, Japan, Roumania, Hungary, Finland and Austria, held by the Custodian's Office, amount to approximately $19,500,000., of which $11,000,000. relate to Germany and $5,400,000. to Italy. The German figure includes approximately $4,400,000. representing potential assets and assets yet to be investigated as to enemy interests. These figures are given as an approximation of enemy assets held in Canada by the Custodian, and no attempt is made to indicate the net figure that may eventually be available. An additional sum will be realized as the sale price of the three vessels received from Germany as reparations.

It will be appreciated from the above remarks and from the recommendations that follow that this problem is one of considerable complexity and one for which no simple solution is possible.

II. Observations regarding claimants, claims and sources of funds for paying compensation

The following are general conclusions and recommendations regarding different aspects of the claims problem, which could be taken into consideration by the Government Agency or Royal Commission which may be appointed to investigate such claims and make awards.

Some Canadian claimants will receive total or partial compensation for their claims under the Peace Treaties which Canada has signed or will sign, while other claimants will receive compensation by virtue of the Equal Treatment Agreements which Canada has concluded or will conclude with certain friendly Governments. These claimants will be compensated in the local currency of the country concerned. The conclusions under this heading therefore apply only to claims, for the satisfaction of which no provision is made under any Peace Treaty or Equal Treatment Agreement or under the national war damage compensation legislation of any country in which damage or loss occurred.

A. Eligibility of Claimants

When a Canadian claimant is not eligible for compensation under any of the Peace Treaties or Equal Treatment Agreements, or under the national war damage compensation legislation of any country, the Canadian Government should entertain a claim only from a claimant who was a Canadian national at the time the damage or loss occurred, and who continuously held that status until the date on which the claim was filed, provided:

(a) that when a claimant was a member of the Canadian armed services, it will be required only that such claimant be a Canadian national at the time he files his claim;

(b) that when a claimant has dual nationality, one of which is Canadian, the Canadian Government should not entertain a claim if compensation has already been provided for under the law of the country of the claimant's other nationality;

(c) that when the claimant is a company, corporation, partnership, society, association or religious organization, such claimant must have been incorporated, established or registered under the laws of Canada, or any of its provinces, at the time the loss or damage occurred. However, the Canadian Government should reserve the right to reject any claim put forward by such a claimant, notwithstanding the fact that the claimant is incorporated, established or registered in Canada, if it can be shown that the beneficial ownership of the claimant is substantially non-Canadian.

B. Admissibility of Claims

(1) When provision for the satisfaction of a claim is not made in any of the Peace Treaties concluded or in any of the agreements reached with friendly countries, or in the national war damage compensation legislation of any country, a claim for compensation for loss or damage should be admitted for consideration if the loss or damage was a direct result of operations of war on land, in the air, or at sea, by any of the belligerent states, provided that the loss or damage did not occur in a neutral country. Admissible in this category would be claims in respect of loss of life or personal injury, damage to real property, loss of or damage to ships and cargoes, loss of or damage to other types of tangible movable property.

(2) The Canadian Government should not entertain a claim for compensation for loss or damage to property when such compensation is provided for under existing Canadian legislation or the legislation of any other country or from any other source, including insurance coverage.

(3) The Canadian Government should not entertain claims for compensation such as those resulting from:

(a) uncollected trade debts and commissions;

(b) loss of cash, coins and other forms of currency, as well as loss of security certificates and other forms of negotiable instruments;

(c) depreciation of exchange value of currencies or in market value of securities;

(d) loss of business earnings or profits or good-will;

(e) loss of interest on investments;

(f) loss of earnings by way of wages or salaries;

(g) transportation, travelling or other personal expenses;

(h) loss of pensions;

(i) loss of rentals;

(j) loss in connections with mortgages;

(k) claims of insurance companies for benefits paid to their policy holders.

(4) (a) Claims arising from loss of life or personal injury either as a result of forcible detention by the enemy or as a direct result of operations of war on land, in the air, or at sea, by any belligerent states, should be entertained by the Canadian Government. However, such claims from members of the Canadian armed forces should not be entertained since compensation is provided for under the Pension Act.

(b) If compensation is paid in respect of a claim arising from loss of life or personal injury, such compensation should not exceed that paid in a similar case to a member of the Canadian armed forces. The tables being prepared for the Department of Veterans Affairs by the Department of Insurance for use in connection with the Veterans Insurance Act could be taken as a guide in establishing the amount of compensation to be paid. This type of claim should be given the highest priority.

(c) In establishing the amount of compensation to be paid in respect of a claim arising from loss of life or personal injury, account should be taken of the compensation which the claimant may have received or to which he may be entitled, under existing Canadian legislation or that of any other country, or from any other source.

(d) Any compensation awarded should be paid in a lump sum to the claimant.

(e) The Canadian Government should not pay compensation for damage or loss suffered in an enemy country in excess of the maximum compensation payable to a Canadian by any friendly country for equivalent loss or damage suffered in that country.

C. Claims for Loss or Damage in Friendly Countries

When Canadian claimants are not eligible for compensation under the national war damage compensation legislation passed in the country in which the loss or damage occurred, the Canadian Government should consider the advisability of concluding an Equal Treatment Agreement with that country.

Such Agreements have already been concluded with France and the Netherlands, and negotiations for an Equal Treatment Agreement with Belgium will probably commence in the near future.

In view of the small total of Canadian claims against Luxembourg, Norway and Denmark, it is recommended that negotiations of Equal Treatment Agreements with these countries would not be warranted. Because of the small total of claims against Greece and because, from information available to the Department of External Affairs, it appears that Greek nationals themselves are unlikely to get any compensation from their Government, it is the view of the Committee that it would be futile to attempt to negotiate an Equal Treatment Agreement with Greece. Similarly, the Canadian Ambassador to China has advised that the Chinese Government does not intend to pay any indemnity for war losses suffered by aliens in China, whether the aliens are resident in or outside of China, so that an Equal Treatment Agreement cannot be concluded with China.

Finally, it was the view of the Committee that it would be futile to attempt negotiation of Equal Treatment Agreements with Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Latvia, Esthonia and Lithuania, at least until the efforts of the United Kingdom to negotiate agreements with these countries have met with some success. It is recommended that the assets of nationals of these countries which have [sic] vested in the Custodian be retained by the Custodian and that he be asked to continue the policy of making no releases[42] until a satisfactory settlement can be reached with regard to compensation to Canadian citizens who have suffered war loss or damage in these countries.

D. Sources of Funds for Payment of Compensation

(1) Italy, Hungary, Roumania

Under the Peace Treaties with these countries, the only source of funds for compensation will be the assets of these countries at present vested in the Canadian Custodian. The vested assets of any one of these countries, however, cannot be retained in excess of the amount of the total claims against that country. The stipulated payment, under the Peace Treaties, of 2/3 of the value of the damage to or loss of Canadian property in any of the above countries, payable in the national currency of the country concerned, will serve to reduce substantially the volume of claims to be considered by the Canadian Government.

(2) Finland

Since, under Article 27 of the Peace Treaty now in effect with Finland, assets of that country held at present must be returned to Finland, no funds for the payment of compensation will accrue to the Canadian Government from Finland, although the stipulated payment of 2/3 of the value of the loss as in (1) above will again reduce the volume of claims to be considered by the Canadian Government.

(3) Germany

Canada, by signing the Paris Reparations Agreement, agreed to accept a prescribed share of reparations, this share to cover all the claims arising out of the war of the Canadian Government and of Canadian nationals against the former German Government and its agencies. The sources, as at present envisaged, from which funds will be obtained are the following:

(a) funds realized from the liquidation of Canada's share of physical reparations received through IARA from Germany, the amount of which cannot yet be estimated.

(b) Canada's share of the liquidation of the total of German external assets available to IARA, including both the assets held in neutral countries and in IARA countries. (It has been accepted unofficially by members of IARA that the bulk of

---

[42]Notre copie du document porte :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
except compassionate

German assets at present vested in the respective Custodians will be retained by the Custodians of the countries now holding them.)

(4) Japan

(a) The percentage distribution of shares of physical reparations from Japan has not yet been agreed upon, and it is unlikely that such agreement will be reached before the Peace Conference. It is expected that some funds will be realized from the liquidation of Canada's share, although this share will probably not be substantial, possibly amounting to 1.25% of the total.

(b) It may reasonably be assumed that Japanese external assets at present vested in the respective Custodians will be retained by the countries now holding them.

It is not anticipated that additional funds will be available from any other source.

(5) Until the total amount of claims filed and the total amount of the funds available for the payment of compensation have been ascertained, and the Government has formulated a policy regarding the treatment of ex-enemy external assets, no recommendation can be made as to whether funds from the Consolidated Revenue Fund should be made available for the payment, in whole or in part, of compensation for war damage or loss.

(6) In regard to paragraphs 1, 3(b) and 4(b) above, it appears that the assets vested in the Custodian may be returned only to the owner at the time of vesting, unless Parliament authorizes their use for other purposes, including payment of war damage compensation.

III. RECOMMENDATIONS

The Sub-Committee feels that immediate consideration should be given to the following recommendations:

(1) Under the Peace Treaties with Italy, Roumania and Hungary, the Canadian Government has the right to retain all property which formerly belonged to the nationals of these enemy countries, and which is now vested in the Custodian, up to the amount of claims of Canadians against these countries and their nationals. All property, or the proceeds thereof, in excess of the amount of such claims must be returned. The reference to this in each of the Peace Treaties is found in the Italian Treaty, Article 79 (1), the Roumanian Treaty, Article 27 (1), and the Hungarian Treaty, Article 29 (1). There is no similar provision in the Peace Treaty with Finland. Under the Treaty Canada must return Finnish property vested in the Custodian.

The Sub-Committee is of the opinion that it is urgently necessary to ascertain such claims and therefore recommends that the Department of Finance be directed immediately to take all the necessary steps to ascertain the amount of Canadian claims, which come within the scope of the articles of the Peace Treaties referred to above, but not those claims which fall primarily under other articles of the Treaties which provide for full or partial settlement by the ex-enemy Governments concerned, and to ascertain as well claims against other enemy countries including Germany, Austria and Japan. It is also recommended that the organization necessary to accomplish this work, as well as the method of advertising for such claims, be left to the discretion of that Department.

(2) In its review of the claims problem, the Sub-Committee learned that there are a number of Canadian claimants who could be classified as "hardship cases", and that there are others whose claims are obviously deserving ones, but who would not benefit from any compensation if the payments were delayed for any length of time. The United Kingdom authorities have made "ex gratia" payments in cases of this kind, some Canadians benefitting therefrom. For instance, as a result of the sinking of the S.S. Athenia on September 3, 1939, approximately 200 Canadians received compensation for the losses they suffered. There are other cases of losses at sea, where Canadians have received no compensation whatever.

In order to give some relief to claimants of this category, who would, in the opinion of the Sub-Committee, be entitled to compensation ultimately, it is recommended that the Department of Finance immediately take the necessary action to see that the Government establishes a fund from which interim payments may be made to Canadian claimants coming under this particular category. It is therefore recommended that the Department of Finance be given the discretionary power to decide who should receive such payments and the amount to be awarded. All payments so made should be under the supervision of that Department.

(3) At the present time, no Department or Agency of the Canadian Government has the authority to investigate, assess the validity of claims, make awards or otherwise dispose of claims. Under the trading with the enemy regulations, the Custodian is required only to record claims which are filed on a voluntary basis.

It is therefore recommended that an independent Government Agency, preferably a Royal Commission similar to that established after World War I be appointed. The work of the Commission should be confined to those claims of Canadian citizens, the individual settlement of which is not provided for under Peace Treaties already concluded or to be concluded, Equal Treatment Agreements, or the national legislation of friendly countries.

The Commission should have authority to advertise for all claims except those received by the Department of Finance under recommendation (1) above and to investigate and assess the validity of claims and to make awards. Provided that recommendations (1) and (2) above are carried out, there would appear to be no need for the immediate appointment of such Commission.

It shall be the responsibility of the Department of Finance, after consultation with the Custodian to recommend to Cabinet the date of the Commission's appointment.

(4) Up to the present, the Canadian Government has not advertised for claims with respect to war loss or damage arising out of the recent war. A number of paid notices has been inserted in Canadian newspapers advising Canadians of certain rights available to them under different armistice arrangements. Likewise, a number of press releases has been issued and notices published in the Canada Gazette, advising Canadians concerning aspects of foreign legislation which might affect their interests. Press releases are now being issued by the Department of External Affairs, advising Canadians of their rights and obligations under certain sections of the Peace Treaties already concluded. If a Canadian citizen is not satisfied that he is obtaining his rights under these Peace Treaties he should take up the matter with the Department of External Affairs.

Provided that recommendations (1) and (3) above are carried out, it is recommended that the Canadian Government should not, at present, publicly invite the filing of other claims with respect of loss or damage arising out of the recent war.

The representative of the Department of Finance on this Committee stated that his Department was not prepared to carry out recommendations (1) and (2) above without specific instructions from the Cabinet.

M. CROWE

5e PARTIE/PART 5

CRIMES DE GUERRE
WAR CRIMES

141. DEA/4060-40

Extrait d'une note de la Direction consulaire

Extract from Memorandum by Consular Division

[Ottawa], May 3, 1947

WAR CRIMES TRIALS

The procedure in cases of crimes committed against Canadian personnel was discussed at length between Canada House, the Dominions Office, and the British and Canadian Judge Advocate Generals. The situation briefly is the following:-

(a) Canada relinquishes all jurisdiction over pending cases in which Canada and the United Kingdom have a joint interest; such cases are handed over completely to the United Kingdom authorities;

(b) The right of approval of listing with the Commission of persons accused of war crimes against Canadians only, is retained in the following form:-

(1) Before proceeding to advise the Convening Officer in relation to the trial of a war crime involving only Canadian victims, the British Judge Advocate General submits to the High Commissioner a draft of the proposed charge, together with a copy of the evidence which it is proposed to adduce at the trial, and the High Commissioner's comments are invited thereon.

(2) A copy of the final advice minute addressed to the Convening Officer will be forwarded to the High Commissioner. This advice minute will draw the attention of the Convening Officer to his powers of appointing a Canadian officer as a member of the Court.

In practice, the procedure seems to be the following:-

(a) The British Judge Advocate General informs the High Commissioner of a case, and submits documents for approval;

(b) These documents are referred to the representative of the Canadian Judge Advocate General, Brigadier H.D. Graham, and also, although this is not indicated in any of our files on the subject, to the Senior Liaison Officer of the Service concerned;

(c) After these comments have been returned to the High Commissioner, he sends his approval to the British Judge Advocate General, who despatches a final advice minute regarding the trial to the General Officer Commanding-in-Chief, British Army.

It has already been agreed that the transcripts should not be referred to Ottawa, in order to avoid the long delay involved, and that the High Commissioner should give the necessary approval.

. . .

142. DEA/4060-40

Note pour le conseiller juridique

Memorandum for Legal Advisor

[Ottawa], May 8, 1947

RE THE UNITED NATIONS WAR CRIMES COMMISSION RESOLUTION ON THE SUBJECT OF THE EXTRADITION OF WAR CRIMINALS FROM THE NEUTRAL COUNTRIES

Attached is despatch No. A.404† dated May 2, 1947, from the High Commissioner in London which deals with a discussion which took place at the meeting of the United Nations War Crimes Commission March 26, and also at a later meeting held April 24.

2. The Commission gave its attention to a proposal by Dr. Neumann of Czechoslovakia advocating despatch of a resolution to the Swiss Government on the subject of extradition of war criminals from neutral countries. In the discussion which followed, it appears that the member from the United Kingdom and the member from the United States both felt that the communication of such a resolution by the Commission would not assist the matter, and they were therefore against any action on the matter. However, when the matter was put to a vote in regard to a draft resolution, Czechoslovakia, France, Poland, the Netherlands and Yugoslavia voted in favour of proceeding to draft such a document. The United Kingdom and the United States voted against this proposal. New Zealand, Norway, Greece and Denmark abstained. The members for India, Luxembourg, Australia, Belgium, Canada and China were absent.

3. In accordance with this result, Sir Robert Craigie in his capacity as Chairman of the drafting Committee proceeded to draft a resolution which was submitted at the meeting of the Commission held on April 24, (copy is attached — document A. 43† dated April 22, 1947).

4. Mr. Robertson points out in his despatch that the main features of this draft recommendation are that it is to be addressed to the Governments' members of the United Nations War Crimes Commission for their guidance and is not to be sent directly to the neutral governments concerned by the Commission. It had already been made clear by the representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom that their Governments would not take any action if such recommendation were forwarded to them and it is understood that it is not to be in any way binding.

5. At the meeting of April 24, some further discussion in regard to the exact wording of the draft resolution, and finally the Chairman made the proposal "that a vote on the resolution as prepared by the drafting committee be deferred until the next meeting of the Commission. Australia, Belgium, Canada, New Zealand, Norway, Denmark, United States and the United Kingdom voted in favour of this proposal and Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and France voted against it.

6. Mr. Robertson would like instructions as to what policy the Canadian Government proposed to adopt in this matter and he points out the courses open to us in para. 5 of his despatch.

(a) that we abstain altogether on the ground that as Canada was not represented when the Resolution was originally passed we do not feel we should express an opinion at this late date on the recommendation;

(b) that we vote in favour of the draft as it stands; or

(c) that we vote against it.

In para. 6 of his despatch Mr. Robertson expresses the opinion that the best course of action would be to abstain all together, as a vote for, or against the recommendation, or part of it, in its present wording would only lead to further discussion of a new draft. Mr. Robertson would also like to know that, in the event the recommendation were finally adopted, whether the Canadian Government would not be prepared to address it to the neutral Governments concerned.[43]

7. The High Commissioner would be grateful for an early reply by telegram.

F.B. R[OGER]

---

[43]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree with Mr. Robertson, though it is not a strong course. E.R. Hopkins.

CHAPITRE III/CHAPTER III

RÈGLEMENT DE LA PAIX AVEC LE JAPON
JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1

COMMISSION SUR L'EXTRÊME-ORIENT
FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

143. DEA/S/123/1

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 1561 [Washington], July 22, 1947

Sir,

With reference to your teletype No. EX-1815 of July 16† regarding the Japanese peace settlement, I have the honour to enclose for your information a memorandum on Canada and the Far Eastern Commission, indicating Canadian interest in the various aspects of the Commission's work and our participation and contribution to the Commission's activities.

I have etc.
H.H. WRONG

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Extrait d'une note de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Extract from Memorandum by Embassy in United States

[Washington, n.d.]

CANADA AND THE FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

I. GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

When the Far Eastern Advisory Commission was formed in October 1945, the Canadian delegation was instructed as follows: "Canada, as a nation facing the Pacific, is directly affected by developments in the Far East. She is therefore concerned to contribute to reaching whatever settlement may be best calculated to eliminate Japan as a threat to peace, to assist in the formation by the Japanese of a stable and democratic form of government and to provide a basis for conditions of peace and eventual prosperity in East Asia. Thus, while the absence of Canadian occupation forces in Japan and the limited extent of active participation in the war in the Far East may deter the Canadian Government from taking the initiative in bringing forward proposals, especially in the early sessions of the Commission, the Canadian representative should not hesitate to make clear Canadian interest and concern."

It was further stated that, while it would appear desirable to ensure the retention of single U.S. military command over Japan during the occupation period (except perhaps in small areas), favourable consideration should also be given to any proposals directed toward the strengthening of the Commission as the agency of international control over occupation policy.

Finally, the Canadian delegation was informed that the Canadian Government gave general support to the United States statement of initial policy as approved by the President and transmitted to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers. (This statement was the basis of the Far Eastern Commission's "Basic Post-Surrender Policy for Japan", which was finally approved by the F.E.C. on 19 June, 1947.)

II. Canadian Interest in the F.E.C.

. . . Canada's interest in the work of the F.E.C. was conceived in terms of an involvement stemming initially from geographic location with consequent specific interests of a vested nature, broadened to include at the next level an interest in Far Eastern stability (a peaceful but economically sound Japan) and ultimately an interest in the Commission itself as an instrument of international cooperation.

Canada's representation on the F.E.C. may therefore be most easily reviewed in terms of these three aspects of the Commission's work.

III. Canada's Participation in and Contribution to Commission Activities

(1) Protection of Interests

Specific Canadian interests in Japan are as follows:

(a) Resident commercial or industrial activities (aluminum processing and insurance).

(b) Trade (lumber, silk, etc.)

(c) Missionary activity

(d) Property

(e) Reparations (including restitution of property looted from other areas of the Far East)

F.E.C. deliberations on the treatment of aliens in Japan have involved (a) and (d) above, and while not initiating policy proposals in these fields, the Canadian member of the appropriate committee has endeavoured to see that in consideration of such subjects as taxation of aliens and the removal or destruction of United Nations property (FEC-226/1) Canadian interests were protected insofar as might be consonant with international practice and the balancing of interests as between the Canadian Government and private individuals or concerns. In this latter regard, Canada was instrumental in the adoption of the final form of the policy on "Destruction or Removal of United Nations Property in Japan".

Trade with Japan has been dealt with by the Commission both in the consideration of general export-import policies and in the establishment of the Inter-Allied Trade Board. In connection with the former, the Canadian representatives participated actively in the formulation of policy papers on the "Sources of Japanese Imports" and "Destination of Japanese Exports", to ensure that the criterion of pre-war patterns of trade should be taken into account in any control measures which might be applied. Initially following the U.K. thesis that the IATB should be subordinate to the F.E.C., the Canadian representatives eventually agreed to the U.S. thesis that it would function more effectively as an independent advisory body dealing with technical problems. Since its inception Canada has been represented on it by the Commercial Counsellor of the Embassy. One of the main Canadian interests, both in the IATB and the Commission, has been to hasten the opening of Japan to private trade, and the Canadian representatives on both bodies have consistently supported any proposals which might expedite this.

In connection with the policy paper on Japanese education, the Canadian delegation was under instructions to see that adequate safeguards should be incorporated to protect the position of the missionary institutions which had played such an important role in Japanese education before the war, and it was partly as a result of Canadian support that this policy, in its final form, included the following provision: "Educational institutions of foreign foundation in Japan have played a useful part in the past in widening and deepening the scope of Japanese education, and should be given equal rights to those of Japanese institutions in future."

Finally, in approaching the delicate and vexatious problem of reparations, the Canadian delegation has been in the fortunate position of having gained, through the modesty and realism of the Canadian submission, universal agreement to the share claimed (though the division of shares is by no means settled), and has therefore been able to devote its energies in this field to the more congenial task of assisting in any way possible in the formulation of policies and procedures which would expedite the final settlement. In this latter role, the Canadian delegation has played a minor but not inconsiderable part, and in the development of policy on restitution of looted property, where its relatively neutral position was obvious, has been able to offer substantial assistance. At the moment, aside from supporting and proposing methods of overcoming what appears to be a complete impasse in the solution of the division of shares, the Canadian delegation is endeavouring to obtain approval for a provision in the "Reparations Allocations Procedures" paper which would enable technical experts of the claimant countries to advise SCAP as to those plants and facilities in Japan which would be most useful if made available as reparations.

(2) The Stability of East Asia

On the second level of interest (the creation of a peaceful, democratic and economically "viable" Japan) the Canadian contribution and participation has been much more in evidence on the political than on the economic side. One reason for this has been the fact that Canada has held the vice-chairmanship of Committee No. 3 (Japanese Constitution), which in effect meant the active chairmanship of this committee during the period when it was dealing with the highly complex and very important problem of the adoption of the new Japanese Constitution. While not necessarily taking the lead, Canadian representatives participated actively in the drafting of committee proposals and in the exposition of committee decisions, and played a considerable part in determining the Commission's effective influence upon the ultimate form of the Constitution and the provision for its later review by the Japanese and the F.E.C. This involved questions both of tactics (vis-a-vis the Supreme Commander) and of constitutional content, and it may be said that throughout this phase of the Commission's work, the Canadian delegation endeavoured to achieve a just balance between the obvious institutional requirements of a "democratic" Japan, the views expressed by the Supreme Commander, and the jurisdictional authority of the F.E.C.

In addition, Mr. E.H. Norman, of the Canadian delegation, was responsible for the preparation of a paper which was circulated in the F.E.C. (C4-004 of April 16) containing an analysis of the secret societies of Japan which served as part of the basic information for the committee on the strengthening of democratic tendencies in Japan.

The Canadian delegation also contributed something to the Commission's work on economic problems, and participated actively in the initial stages of the drafting of an emergency statement on the supply of food for Japan.

(3) International Cooperation

As an emerging power in the international scene, Canada is vitally interested in the broad question of international organization, and insofar as the F.E.C. is concerned, has consistently attempted to strengthen the authority and effectiveness of the Commission within the bounds of practicality, making due allowance for the primary responsibility of the United States as the occupying Power. For this reason the Canadian delegation has on a number of occasions taken issue with the United States, not so much on matters of substance as on the question of whether the Far Eastern Commission, as a responsible international body charged with the formulation of policy for the occupation of Japan, should be allowed to discharge its responsibility in an effective way. Examples of this may be found in Canadian action in the Commission on such subjects as food for civilian relief, Commission authority in connection with the new Japanese Constitution, demilitarization of Japan, and, more recently, the reduction of Japanese industrial war potential and Japanese whaling.

. . .

144. DEA/8364-40

Note de la Troisième direction politique
Memorandum by Third Political Division

[Ottawa], December 5, 1947

ACTIVITIES OF THE FAR EASTERN COMMISSION

The Far Eastern Commission, composed of the representatives of Australia, Canada, China, France, India, New Zealand, The Netherlands, The Philippines, The United Kingdom, The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and The United States, has met regularly in Washington over the past 21 months since its inception on February 26th, 1946. It has carried out its functions, in accordance with its Terms of Reference laid down by the Council of Foreign Ministers at Moscow in December, 1945, of formulating the policies and principles governing Japan in the fulfillment of its obligations under the Terms of Surrender.

Policy decisions have now been reached on many of the more important subjects, and an indication of the extent of agreement which has been reached in this body may be seen in the approval by the Commission last June 19th of a statement of Basic Post-Surrender Policy for Japan to cover the period of the occupation, which was based on the United States Initial Post-Surrender Policy. The two outstanding issues of major importance upon which final agreement has not yet been reached are the division of reparation shares and the establishment of a peaceful level of economic life for Japan. However, it is possible that agreement may be reached on the latter before the Peace Conference. Private trading with Japan was reopened on August 15th, and the demobilization and demilitarization program has now been virtually completed. A start has also been made on an interim reparations removal program, under which the first 30% of the internal industrial facilities surplus to Japan's peaceful requirements are to be distributed among the following countries: China 15%, Netherlands 5%, Philippines 5%, United Kingdom and Colonies 5%. Decisions have also been reached on a new Japanese constitution, trade relations with the allied powers, trade unions, education, war criminals, aliens in Japan, Japanese atomic research, and the dissolution of the large holding companies, known as the Zaibatsu. These and many other decisions have been transmitted on behalf of the Far Eastern Commission by the United States Government as directives to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan. A report on the activities of the Far Eastern Commission from February 26, 1946 to July 10, 1947 has been submitted for tabling in the House.

Canada is represented on the Commission by the Canadian Ambassador to the United States, Mr. H.H. Wrong, and by his alternate, Mr. R.N. Collins, of the Canadian Embassy in Washington.

2e PARTIE/PART 2

CONFÉRENCE DU COMMONWEALTH, CANBERRA
COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE, CANBERRA

145. DEA/50051-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], May 6, 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT

In one of the informal meetings of the Heads of British Commonwealth Missions in Moscow held on April 7th Mr. Bevin expressed apprehension lest the United States suddenly announce its plans for the Japanese peace settlement before receiving the views of other interested governments. Mr. Bevin did not discuss this matter with General Marshall in Moscow.

2. Following on this statement by Mr. Bevin the United Kingdom issued an invitation on April 11th for an early meeting between Commonwealth Governments in London "to consider policy with a view to an approach to the United States Government as the next step."

3. On April 15th we were informed by our Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow that Dr. Evatt had told Mr. Bevin through the Australian Chargé d'Affaires in Moscow that he hoped to call a conference in Australia of those members of the British Commonwealth represented on the Allied Council for Japan. (Note that this would exclude South Africans and ourselves) Afterward it should be possible for agreed views to be submitted to Washington.

4. On April 17th we received a telegram from the Australian Minister for External Affairs† stating that in view of the special position of Australia and New Zealand in relation to the settlement with Japan and Australian representation of common Commonwealth interest in Japan (Note: reference is to the Allied Council for Japan where we did not accept the principle of joint Commonwealth representation), Australia would prefer to invite the British Commonwealth Governments to Canberra for informal meetings during May in order to secure some agreement on procedure and perhaps the general lines of the settlement before the question is raised formally with the United States Government.

5. After seeking the advice of our High Commissioner in London and Ambassador in Washington, and with your approval, we requested our High Commissioners in London, Canberra, Wellington and Pretoria on April 19th to inform the various Commonwealth Governments that we favoured an informal exchange of views in Washington between the British Commonwealth representatives on the Far Eastern Commission. We entered the caveat that such meetings should be of an informal and private nature for the purpose of exchanging views, and should not be expected to lead to the formulation of a single Commonwealth policy to which all members of the Commonwealth would be committed in the later stages of the Japanese settlement.

6. The only reply we have received to date has been from the United Kingdom which stated that,

"In view of the importance of the issues involved and their significance to Australia and New Zealand in particular, it would be desirable, if practicable, to arrange for a meeting on a Ministerial level in order to ensure that there is the fullest mutual understanding of the respective points of view both as regards procedure and as regards the substance of a Japanese peace settlement."

The United Kingdom went on to say that they would find it difficult at present to arrange for suitable representation on a Ministerial level in Australia and it was for this reason that they hoped that the meetings might take place in London. They hoped that on further consideration, if it were found possible to arrange such meetings, the Canadian Government would also be represented.

7. In his memorandum to you on April 18th† Mr. Pearson stated that Dr. Evatt's request for the meeting of Commonwealth representatives to be held in Canberra would raise a difficult problem for us. There would be no particular difficulty with regard to an exchange of views on the substance of the settlement with Japan. We could probably arrange to send one of our Far Eastern experts for this purpose. The real difficulty would arise on the procedural side. Dr. Evatt has made public statements claiming the right for Australia to participate in drafting of the peace settlement for Japan at the highest level and we have learned from Washington that Australia has received assurance that the United States will back this claim. However, if owing to opposition from the U.S.S.R., Australia is unable to secure full participation in the treaty drafting at the highest level, she might favour the type of joint Commonwealth representation now employed in the Allied Council for Japan. Such a proposal would place us in a difficult position as we have not accepted the principle of British Commonwealth representation on the Allied Council for Japan and our stake in the Japanese settlement is not large enough for us to seriously consider a departure from our established practice if we were invited to accept joint Commonwealth representation in the Council of Foreign Ministers in passing on the drafts of the Japanese peace treaty.

8. These procedural difficulties would very likely come up for discussion at any talks held in Canberra. It would be asking a good deal of our new High Commissioner to Australia to enter immediately on ticklish discussions of this nature even if he were to reach Australia in time. I assume that there would be a good deal of difficulty in arranging for a Cabinet Minister to attend any such meetings in Australia in May or June. For this reason, it would seem undesirable to give any encouragement to the Australians at this stage to think that we would be in a position to accept their invitation to attend such talks in Canberra.

9. In view of our difficulty in attending talks in Canberra, we have been considering the desirability of throwing our weight now to the side of holding such conversations in London where we would be ably represented by Mr. Robertson. We have requested the views of Mr. Wrong and Mr. Robertson on this proposal before submitting it to you for your approval.

10. I am attaching for convenience of reference, copies of telegrams† exchanged with our Acting High Commissioner in Australia on this subject. You will note that in telegrams No. 63 of April 21st† and No. 68 of April 23rd† we are given some indication of the Australian views on the procedure and substance for the peace settlement.

LAURENT BEAUDRY

146. DEA/50051-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-1415 Washington, May 6, 1947

SECRET

Following for D. Johnson from Wrong, Begins: Your EX-1169 of May 3rd repeating Canada House telegram No. 741 of May 1st.† In the light of the reply of Lord Addison to our suggestion that Commonwealth discussions on the Japanese peace settlement might be held in Washington, I think on the whole that we should now support the desire of the United Kingdom Government for a meeting in London, and I agree with Robertson's analysis of the situation. Undoubtedly more effective representation of Commonwealth countries could be arranged in London than in Canberra even if several of them are not able to send representatives of ministerial rank.

2. I am also concerned about Dr. Evatt's personal ambitions in this respect, while sympathizing with his desire that Australia and other active belligerents against Japan should fully participate in the peace settlement. He has, however, been pushing his demands lately in so exaggerated a form, on so many fronts, and by such debatable methods, defeating his own objects, with many of which we are in agreement. Within recent weeks, for instance, he has:

(1) Reversed the policy hitherto consistently supported by Australia concerning the discussion of reparations in the Far Eastern Commission;

(2) Demanded Australian representation on the body which is to study the future of the former Italian colonies in Africa;

(3) Pressed for Australian representation on the United Nations Committee which is to report on Palestine;

(4) Pulled all sorts of wires to secure Australian election to Executive Directorships of the International Bank and Monetary Fund, even telephoning the Acting Secretary of State from Canberra at 2:00 a.m., to the latter's great annoyance, to urge Australian claims;

(5) Taken so extreme a line on the procedure for preparing the German settlement that he has stiffened Soviet resistance to our more modest aims.

3. All Commonwealth countries, except possibly New Zealand, would be resistant to joint Commonwealth representation by Australia during the negotiation of the Japanese settlement, and if Dr. Evatt seriously intends to push this idea in the hope that he would be the Commonwealth spokesman, the sooner it is killed the better. The coup de grâce could be administered more readily at a meeting in London or Washington than in Canberra. We are in a better position than the United Kingdom to resist unreasonable Australian claims in this and in other respects. We can take complaints from Canberra of cowardice, disloyalty to the Commonwealth, and so on, with little in the way of public criticism at home, whereas the Labour Government in London cannot easily afford to be charged with desertion of Commonwealth interests, especially by the Labour Government in Australia. Ends.

147. DEA/50051-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au consul général à New York

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 461 Ottawa, May 10, 1947

Following for Pearson from D. Johnson, Japanese peace settlement, Begins: Dr. Evatt sent a personal message to the Prime Minister through the Australian High Commissioner in Ottawa stressing that if preliminary Commonwealth discussions were held in London Pacific problems would not be put in full perspective. He and Fraser would not go to London at present and they hoped very much that a preliminary conference might be held in Canberra.

2. The Prime Minister has replied stating that he and Mr. St. Laurent share Dr. Evatt's concern that countries which made a substantial contribution towards defeating Japan should be ensured a full part in drafting the peace settlement. He also understood Dr. Evatt's wish to have the preliminary meetings held in Canberra. However, suitable representation at the Ministerial level could not be sent at present to either Canberra or London as Parliament would still be in session for some time. If it were felt an exchange of views was desirable in the near future Canadian suggestion was discussions on High Commissioner level in London of procedure for peace settlement and in Washington among Commonwealth representatives on the Far Eastern Commission on substance of Japanese settlement. Findings of these two meetings might be reviewed at Ministerial level if Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser would be attending the September Session of the General Assembly.

3. Robertson has reported that United Kingdom authorities will not agree to Ministerial talks in Canberra and in view of nature of questions to be discussed do not think a preliminary conference between officials there would serve any useful purpose. They were now thinking of proposing a meeting on a Ministerial level in conjunction with next meeting of United Nations Assembly in New York.

4. We are communicating Prime Minister's views on this matter to other Commonwealth Governments. Ends.

148. DEA/50051-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], May 23, 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT

The attached telegram No. 845 of May 21† from the High Commissioner for Canada in London reports on the trend of discussions in meetings in the office of the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs.

2. Mr. Robertson states that at one stage the Australians suggested that if Canada and South Africa were unable to attend a Ministerial Conference in Canberra, then the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand should go ahead with plans to meet without the other two. This suggestion was unacceptable to the United Kingdom. However, the Australians have pressed their arguments in favour of a meeting in Canberra so forcefully that the United Kingdom has undertaken to review its position and it is possible that Lord Addison and Hector McNeil might be able to attend a meeting in Canberra in the last week of August or the first week in September.

3. Mr. Robertson has said that up to the present he was inclined to think that Australia's insistence on preliminary Commonwealth discussions could be attributed to Dr. Evatt's pre-occupation with his personal place in the arrangements for the Japanese settlement. He has, however, come to the conclusion that the reasons lie much deeper and are connected with the general Australian feeling that Australia and New Zealand are in an exposed position in the south Pacific and that the United Kingdom has consistently refused to look at Pacific problems from their point of view. Mr. Robertson concludes that he thinks it would be worthwhile making an effort to provide Ministerial representation from Canada at a preliminary meeting in Canberra.

4. There is a good deal to be said for trying to meet the Australian views in this matter. However, I am inclined to think that many of the real or imaginary grievances which Australia and New Zealand may have are directed against the United Kingdom rather than against Canada. We do, after all, look at the Pacific from opposite corners and have no direct interest in the British-Australia-New Zealand security system in the southwest Pacific and the line of communications that runs from the United Kingdom through the Mediterranean and Indian Oceans to that area. From a defence point of view our interests are North American and much more closely linked with the United States. I do not think, therefore, that it would [be] necessary for us to go to such a Conference in Canberra and we could maintain the position that the Prime Minister stated to Mr. Evatt in his telegram of May 9.†[1]

5. It appears that if a meeting is to be held in Canberra, it would be at the end of August and certainly by that time, it might be easier for us to release a Minister to go to Australia. If you think this could be reasonably done, then I think perhaps we might fall in with the views of the other Commonwealth Governments if further representations are made to us.[2]

6. It would, of course, be possible to have our High Commissioner represent us at the talks in question if they are held in Canberra, though that would not be as satisfactory as having a Minister.

L.B. P[EARSON]

149. DEA/50051-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions au premier ministre

Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs to Prime Minister

SECRET AND PERSONAL [London], June 4, 1947

I am sorry to trouble you personally on the question of the suggested British Commonwealth Conference at Canberra regarding the Japanese Peace Settlement. I do so only because I feel most strongly that it is really important in the interests of mutual co-operation between the countries of the Commonwealth in matters of common concern. I am sure that you recognize as we do the very great importance attached in Australia and New Zealand to their being able to secure an adequate part in the working out of the Japanese settlement which so directly and vitally concerns them.

It is clear that there are a number of important issues both affecting the procedure for the settlement and its substance on which an exchange of views on the Ministerial level between the countries of the British Commonwealth (including India who have agreed to be represented) would be most helpful to all concerned as a preliminary to future international discussion of the subject. Owing to the difficulties which we recognize of arranging for the Australian and New Zealand Ministers principally interested to come to London at the present time we here have come to the conclusion that if at all possible we ought to meet their wishes by attending a conference at Canberra. I have therefore undertaken myself to go to Canberra in the latter part of August after Parliament has risen here, and the Minister of State is arranging to accompany me. But this is on the assumption that, in

[1]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[aurent]

[2]Note marginale:/Marginal note:
I mentioned this to the P[rime] M[inister] who does not think we should send a minister. St. L[aurent] spite of the difficulties which we realize, it would be found possible for Canada and South Africa also to be represented Ministerially at the proposed meeting, as we feel that a large part, if not all, of the value of the conference would be lost if Canada and South Africa were not also represented on the Ministerial level. I can well understand that you yourself would not find it possible to make the journey, much as I should like to meet you there. But I most earnestly ask you to consider whether you could not arrange for one of your Ministerial colleagues to go to Canberra on this occasion.

I understand that the Australian Government are making a renewed request to the Canadian Government to this effect in the light of the latest position and I am sending this telegram in support of their approach.

With all best wishes.

ADDISON

150. DEA/50051-40

Le haut-commissaire d'Australie
au premier ministre

High Commissioner of Australia to Prime Minister

[Ottawa], June 12, 1947

My dear Prime Minister:

Referring to my letter of 2nd June,† I have to inform you that after consultation with Mr. L.B. Pearson, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, and with his approval after he had conferred with you, I cabled the Right Honourable H.V. Evatt, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for External Affairs, that you would reconsider the decision regarding Ministerial representation at the Conference to be held in Canberra in August. I am now in receipt of the following reply: "Glad to receive your telegram that Prime Minister is reconsidering decision regarding Ministerial representation at Conference. Please see him personally and once again express our keen hope that he himself will be able to attend."

I am also forwarding this reply to the Right Honourable L.S. St. Laurent, Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I shall deem it a favour if you will grant me a personal interview at your earliest convenience so that I may comply with Dr. Evatt's request that I see you personally. Knowing how busy you are, it is with reluctance that I am seeking this interview but it should only take a few minutes. I am deeply grateful to you for your courtesy and consideration at all times.

Yours sincerely,

HIGH COMMISSIONER

151. B.C./Vol. 99

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-1695 Ottawa, July 4, 1947

SECRET

Reference my three immediately following teletypes.† Japanese peace settlement.

You will note from D.O. Circular Telegram D. 543 of June 20 and Telegram No. 1012 of June 23 from our Acting High Commissioner in London† that the United Kingdom is greatly concerned that the United States should have no occasion to suppose that the forthcoming conference in Canberra will produce an agreed Commonwealth policy on the Japanese settlement, much less a Commonwealth draft for a Japanese peace treaty. That the Australians are still entertaining some hopes on this score is clear from their telegram No. 9 of June 26,† since they indicate that the conference might provide "an approach to broad agreement on main policies." The headings under Item 3 of their proposed agenda indicate that they have some fairly specific proposals to discuss and no doubt they will press for as much support as they can get for their ideas, emphasizing the advantages they see in close Commonwealth co-operation in the peace negotiations.

2. As you know, we have made clear our feelings with respect to the formulation of any Commonwealth policy on the peace settlement at the Canberra meeting, and we share fully the wish of the United Kingdom that there should be no misunderstanding on this score in Washington. It is particularly important that there be no misconception of Canada's position. From the strategic point of view and that of security in the Pacific area we are likely to be more affected by the policy of the United States than by that of the other Commonwealth members, and we will naturally wish to consider United States views on the Japanese peace settlement very carefully before formulating our own position. The Canadian delegation will not be going to Canberra with the intention of making any commitments to the policies which are discussed there, so that our position in later negotiations should not be prejudiced in any way.

3. For reasons of prestige the Australian Government may be under some temptation to play up the significance of the forthcoming meeting at Canberra and give it a more formal and general character than we would wish. Our Acting High Commissioner in Australia has been instructed to inform the Australian Government that we would not be willing to discuss changes in His Majesty's Royal Style and Titles or any of the subjects listed under items 10 and 11 of their proposed agenda. In all statements in the House and in press conferences we have taken care to emphasize that our understanding of the projected meeting is that it will be informal and purely exploratory in character.

4. It would be appreciated if you would avail yourself of an opportunity in the near future to discuss the Japanese peace settlement with a senior official of the State Department, to discover any new developments in United States thinking on this subject, particularly on procedural matters, and, inter alia, to indicate our general position with respect to the forthcoming Commonwealth meeting in Canberra.

152. DEA/50051-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], July 10, 1947

JAPANESE SETTLEMENT; COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE; CANBERRA

At the meeting of the Cabinet on July 10th, it was reported that Canada would participate at the Ministerial level in the Commonwealth Conference in Canberra for preliminary consideration of certain aspects of the Japanese settlement.

The Cabinet noted the report submitted with approval.

153. DEA/50051-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Prime Minister

[Ottawa], July 15, 1947

You will have seen telegram No. WA-2190 from the Embassy in Washington dated July 11th,† copy of which is attached for convenience, regarding the invitation from the United States Government to a preliminary discussion of the Japanese peace settlement to be held in Washington or in San Francisco about August 19th. This will, of course, cause a great gnashing of teeth in Canberra and Dr. Evatt will naturally interpret it as a direct offensive move on the part of the United States to prevent or at least neutralize his Canberra meeting. We have, of course, never been too happy about this Canberra Conference and felt from the beginning that it was unnecessary. The American proposal for a meeting of the members of the Far Eastern Commission countries to give preliminary consideration to the Japanese treaty is, it seems to me, a much more sensible one. However, the timing of the American invitation is almost gratuitously offensive to the Australians. When it was issued the State Department knew that the Canberra Conference had been called for almost the same date as that of their proposed meeting and they must have known, therefore, that their proposal would be most embarrassing to the Australian Government. State Department officials may try to say that there is no connection between the two invitations but the connection is quite clear.

I suppose we shall have to wait until we see the Australian reaction to the American proposal. From nearly every point of view the United States conference would be a more useful and satisfactory one, but I do not see how we can now accept it without some qualification in view of our acceptance of the invitation to Canberra.

We have already heard from the United Kingdom that while they favour in principle the United States proposal, they suggest the date be postponed until after the Canberra Conference. They also suggest it be held on the Ministerial level.

I do not think it is necessary for us to state our own views in regard to this matter at the present time. A bitter controversy might arise between Washington and Canberra over it and it might be well for us to keep out of it and wait and see what happens. If the United Kingdom, the United States and Australia can agree as to the time and place for the international meeting, it should not be difficult for us to accept.

154. DEA/50051-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], July 18, 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT; COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE; CANBERRA

At the meeting of the Cabinet on July 18th, a report was submitted stating that the Canadian delegation at the Canberra conference would resist any suggestion that a Commonwealth policy be formulated for subsequent international discussions. The meeting at Canberra would, in the Canadian view, be exploratory only and for exchange of views between the nations of the Commonwealth having important interests in the Pacific settlement.

The Cabinet noted the report submitted with approval.

155. DEA/50051-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-1873 Ottawa, July 21, 1947

Your WA-2190 of July 11th.† Japanese Peace Conference. Please convey our reply to the United States proposal of July 11th for the convening of a Conference to discuss a peace treaty for Japan along the following lines,[3] Begins: The Canadian Government welcomes the proposal made by the United States Government on July 11th for the convening at an early date of a conference of the eleven states members of the Far Eastern Commission to discuss a peace treaty for Japan. It views with satisfaction the provision in the United States proposal for the eleven powers primarily interested in the settlement with Japan to participate fully from the beginning in the preparation of the Japanese Peace Treaty and also the suggestion that voting should be by a simple two thirds majority. The proposal that the Conference be convened at deputy and expert level may require comment later when detailed proposals have been made regarding the agenda and procedure for the Conference.

As the Canadian Government has accepted an invitation from the Australian Government to attend a meeting of British Commonwealth representatives in Canberra on August 26th for the purpose of exchanging views informally on the Japanese Peace Settlement, it would find it difficult to attend a meeting in the United States on the tentative date, August 19th, suggested. It hopes, therefore, that some other early date that will not conflict can be agreed upon by those attending. Ends.

156. DEA/50051-40

Rapport du Comité mixte de planification du Comité des chefs d'état-major

Report of Joint Planning Committee of Chiefs of Staff Committee

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], July 29, 1947

MILITARY ASPECTS OF THE PEACE SETTLEMENT WITH JAPAN

Background

The Potsdam Declaration of July 1945, laid down in broad terms the condition of the post surrender period for the defeated axis powers.

2. In the case of Japan, these were in essential:-

(a) The elimination of the authority and influence of the militarists.

---

[3]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:
The following was typed on this copy of the document:
This telegram was cleared with the Minister by telephone prior to despatch. L.B. P[earson] 21.7.47

(b) The complete disarmament of all Japanese forces.

(c) The limitation of Japanese sovereignty to the four main islands of Japan.

3. The pattern of later economic controls was laid down as follows:-

"Japan shall be permitted to maintain such industries as will sustain her economy and permit the exaction of just reparations in kind, but not those which would enable her to rearm for war. To this end, access to, as distinguished from control of, raw materials shall be permitted. Eventual participation in world trade relations shall be permitted."

Peace Treaty

4. It is presumed that the Peace Treaty will in effect embody the foregoing principles and will provide for enforcement machinery in the form of an international inspectorate applying economic controls.

Canberra Conference

5. The forthcoming conference, to be held in Canberra in August of this year, has been urged by Australia who has aspirations to become the dominant power in the South Pacific. Possibly she considers that should she emerge from the Conference as the recognized leader of the British Commonwealth in the Pacific, her voice will be too influential to be overlooked.

6. In this regard, Canada has traditionally refused to undertake prior Commonwealth commitments and her attitude at the Canberra Conference is likely to reflect this policy. In consequence she will probably refuse to commit herself to any combined commonwealth policy to be decided in advance.

Canadian Interests

7. Canadian interests in the Pacific would appear to be as follows:-

(a) The continuance or extension of U.S. Military power in the Pacific and in particular, within the sphere of former Japanese influence.

(b) The establishment of a friendly (non communist) Government in Japan.

(c) Subject to (a) and (b) above, a return of industrial prosperity to Japan to restore the economic balance in the Far East, and the resumption of normal trade relationship between the two countries to provide a market for Canadian raw material and manufactured products.

(d) Canada would not wish to see a return of Japan's former industrial potential, without adequate means of defence, i.e., an undefended "workshop of Asia" on the Eastern doorstep of the U.S.S.R. would be a rich prize.

Conclusions

8. It would therefore appear that:-

(a) Canada's attitude at the Canberra Conference should be non committal, as her interests in the Pacific are more closely allied to those of the U.S. than the Commonwealth.

(b) She should support the continuation of U.S. Military power in the Pacific as a stabilizing influence.

(c) She should support policies which will facilitate the return of normal commercial relations between Canada and Japan.

(d) She should support either the continuance of an international occupying force or the rebuilding of restricted Japanese defence forces to guard against possible aggression or expansion by the U.S.S.R.

157. DND/193009 (D53)

Le secrétaire par intérim du Comité des chefs d'état-major au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Acting Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], August 7, 1947

The Chiefs of Staff, as requested in your memorandum of July 12th,† have considered the military aspects of the peace settlement with Japan and have expressed the following views on the points raised:

(a) The Minimum Demilitarization Requirements of the Peace Treaty

The complete demilitarization of Japan, which it is understood has already been largely accomplished in accordance with the Potsdam Declaration, should be maintained.

(b) Machinery for Enforcing Demilitarization

Machinery to enforce demilitarization and other provisions of the Treaty will probably consist of an inspecting system backed up by military and/or economic arrangements, to give proper power and authority to the inspectorate. In the event of such a system being adopted, the Canadian government should be prepared to participate.

(c) Military Aspects of Economic Controls in Japan

They are in agreement with the views expressed by the United Kingdom Chiefs of Staff that disarmament and demilitarization should be subject to the following exceptions:

(1) the importation of the necessary equipment with such types and quantities of small arms and the appropriate ammunition as may be essential to the Civil Police and Coastguards for the maintenance of public security;

(2) the importation of such aircraft as are necessary for the development of such internal civil airlines or undertakings as are allowed and the provision of such ground organizations, including signals organizations, as may be necessary in Japan for the purpose of civil aircraft operating in, to or across Japan;

(3) the importation of minimum quantities of such items as explosives or ingredients of explosives which may be essential for construction, mining and other peaceful purposes;

(4) the limited provision of merchant, coastal, coastguard and fishing vessels and the necessary facilities thereof; and

(5) the retention of such military structural installations and establishments as the contracting parties may agree can be made available for civil use.

(d) Security Aspects of Territorial Adjustments

Canada's interests in the Pacific are more closely allied to those of the United States than the Commonwealth. She should therefore support the continuation of United States military power in the Pacific as a stabilizing influence and support United States recommendations regarding the disposition of islands.

J.A.K. RUTHERFORD
Lt.-Col.

158. DEA/5/122/1

Extrait d'une lettre du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre de la Défense nationale

Extract from Letter from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of National Defence

SECRET Ottawa, August 13, 1947

Dear Mr. Claxton,

As you will be leaving Ottawa for Canberra in the near future to attend the meeting of representatives of the British Commonwealth of Nations which has been called to discuss the Japanese peace settlement I should like to take this opportunity of making some observations on the Canadian attitude to the conference and the assistance which will be available to you in the form of briefing and personnel.

Since this conference was first projected Canada has consistently maintained the view that its primary purpose should be the free and informal exchange of views on the Japanese peace settlement. The formulation of Canadian policy with respect to the Japanese settlement will be greatly facilitated once we have an appreciation of how other Commonwealth countries are approaching this problem. Furthermore it is hoped that the Canberra discussions will be a good proving ground for ideas on the Japanese settlement. Reports on the meeting should be of great assistance to the Canadian Government in the work of drafting instructions for the Canadian delegation to the Japanese peace conference. It has been our understanding, however, that the Canberra talks should not go beyond an exchange of views. The Canadian attitude in this regard has been well expressed by the Prime Minister in his statement to the House on July 10, when he said: "No decisions will be taken at this Canberra meeting which will affect the freedom of action of the Canadian Government at the Japanese peace conference which is to be held, but it is thought that this preliminary exchange of views will be helpful to all the governments concerned."

It is most important that the other Commonwealth delegations should understand and appreciate our attitude and I trust that you will take an early opportunity when the conference is assembled to indicate our position. For various reasons which you will appreciate the Canadian attitude towards the main issues of the peace settlement must take into account the views of the United States Government. At present we have very little information on this subject. In view of this circumstance Canada must retain its freedom of action in the general international conference when it is held. The Canadian Ambassador in Washington has on two occasions informed high officials of the State Department that so far as Canada is concerned the Canberra conference will result in no commitments on policy and that the Canadian Government will certainly not formulate its position without giving full consideration to the views of the United States Government.

The other Commonwealth delegations will no doubt in varying degrees also wish to avoid creating the impression that a Commonwealth panel is being formed in Canberra. In the recent proposals which the United States made to the member nations of the Far Eastern Commission for a preliminary Japanese peace conference it was suggested that conference decisions should be made on a two-thirds majority vote. In effect this would give the five Commonwealth countries a power of veto in the proposed conference. The United States were certainly aware of this fact when they made their proposal. It would be most undesirable, however, that these Commonwealth countries should prejudice their relations with the United States by allowing the impression to become current that they were planning to take advantage of their potential veto in the international conference.

In view of the numerous statements which have been made concerning the non-committal attitude which Canada will take at the Canberra conference I trust you will not hesitate to take the initiative in injecting a note of caution into the conference discussions concerning the dangers implicit in the circulation of reports, whether well or ill founded, which would lead the United States or any other government to think that a Commonwealth policy on the Japanese peace settlement is being formulated in Canberra. In this connection relations with the press assume considerable significance. It would be most unfortunate if reports of the type indicated above, whether based on corridor gossip or official press releases, should emanate from Canberra.

Before you leave Ottawa you will be provided with a brief containing material prepared in the Department of External Affairs for your use at the Canberra conference. This material is not in the form of instructions but is rather intended for your guidance in the conference discussions.

As you know, the Far Eastern Commission, of which Canada is a member, has during the past year and a half been formulating policies in conformity with which Japan is to fulfil her obligations under the terms of surrender. Decisions taken by the Far Eastern Commission for the occupation period will in a good number of cases have a bearing on decisions taken in the peace conference on similar subjects. In the course of our participation in the work of the Far Eastern Commission a start has been made in the process of determining Canadian policy with respect to Japan. While we will not be bound in any way to the continued support of these policies, the positions which we have taken on various issues in the Far Eastern Commission are a fair indication of what the Canadian line is likely to be in the peace conference.

On the basis of Canada's general interest in the establishment of peace and security in the Far East, of certain special Canadian interests and the precedents established in our participation in the work of the Far Eastern Commission, it has been possible in our drafting of guidance material to indicate in a tentative way some of the policies which are likely to be acceptable to the Canadian Government. I have summarized below the main principles of these tentative policies on some of the more important issues.

(1) Procedure—Full support of the United States proposal for an eleven power Japanese peace conference to include all the member nations of the Far Eastern Commission with decisions to be taken on a two-thirds majority vote.

(2) Territorial Adjustments—Confirmation of such territorial transfers as are projected in the Cairo Declaration, the Yalta Agreement, and the Potsdam Declaration; possible extension of the United States Trusteeship Agreement for the former Japanese mandated islands to cover other minor Japanese islands not assigned in the above-mentioned agreements.

(3) Military Requirements—Completion of the demilitarization of Japan with such exceptions as are necessary to permit Japan to maintain a viable economy and maintain internal order.

(4) Economic Demilitarization and Long Term Economic Control — The completion and implementation of the programme for economic demilitarization of Japan now under consideration by the Far Eastern Commission, and such long term economic controls as are necessary to prevent Japan from rebuilding her industrial war potential. Economic demilitarization and long term economic controls should not be so severe as to prevent the economic recovery of Japan. (The reduction of Canada's market in Japan for strategic raw materials, such as aluminum and nickel, will have to be accepted, but Canada should take care to ensure that restrictions on industries which require these metals should not be in excess of security requirements.)

(5) International Trade—The early restoration of normal trading conditions in Japan consistent with security requirements.

(6) Fishing—Restrictions on Japanese fishing activities sufficient to protect the interests of Canadian fisheries.

(7) Reparations—The balancing of considerations of justice and security with the requirements of a viable economy in Japan; therefore no reparations payments out of current Japanese production.

(8) Restitution—The restoration of all looted and confiscated property to its rightful owners: protection of the property, rights and interests of United Nations nationals in Japan.

(9) Political Clauses—The guarantee by Japan to protect all fundamental human rights and freedoms, and to protect foreign nationals from discrimination.

. . .

The special qualifications of members of the Canadian delegation will be of great assistance to you in the preparation of a detailed report on the Canberra conference. As one of the main purposes of the meeting is an exchange of ideas, we will be looking forward to receiving the report prepared by your delegation on the views expressed in Canberra. In addition to covering the meeting itself, it will be appreciated if your report contains recommendations for changes and revisions in the Departmental brief, in case it proves possible to use it as the basis for drafting instructions for the Canadian delegation to the general peace conference for Japan. It is possible that the conference proposed by the United States may be held very soon after the Canberra meeting, in which case we may find it necessary to ask you for a summary of your suggestions concerning instructions for our delegation.

May I extend to you every good wish for the success of your mission.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

159. DEA/S/122/1

Extrait d'une note du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Extract from Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], August 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The difficult international negotiations involved in the drafting of Peace Treaties with the Ex-Axis satellite states of Europe, and the so far fruitless discussions of the Council of Foreign Ministers with respect to the future of Germany, have demonstrated the importance of achieving a satisfactory and workable procedure for the conclusion of a Peace Treaty with Japan.

2. Although not as immediately concerned as certain other Pacific nations, Canada by virtue of its geographic position cannot remain aloof from any settlement which affects the future pattern of relationships in the Pacific. The development of more rapid means of communication, the discovery of long range instruments of war, and the emergence of new powers in the Far Eastern theatre now make it impossible for Canada to regard as unimportant to its security political developments in Eastern Asia. It would appear essential, therefore, that Canada be permitted to play its part in the drafting of a Peace Treaty for Japan calculated to make a maximum contribution to peace and security in the Far East. Prior to the war Canada had extensive trading interests in the Orient and the form of their resumption will depend substantially on the position which Japan is to be permitted to assume in the economic field. This position will no doubt be governed by the Treaty terms and it is necessary for this reason to secure participation in their preparation. The emergence of national consciousness amongst the peoples of South Eastern Asia is a factor of increasing importance in international relations and represents a fruitful field for possible ideological conflicts. With this in mind, the Pacific settlement cannot properly be isolated from the problem of overall world stability. The settlement is therefore of direct concern to Canada. This direct concern can only be served if the procedure adopted for the preparation of a settlement with Japan is of a nature to permit Canada to participate freely in the drafting and final preparation of its terms.

3. Quite apart from the necessity of securing Canadian interest in the substance of the Japanese settlement, the procedural question has very important implications for Canada. Throughout the period of hostilities, because of military necessity, and in the interest of speed, secrecy and efficiency, it became customary for policy decisions to be reached by the major allies without consultation with the governments or representatives of other allied states taking part in the war. This practice has been carried into the post-war period particularly in respect of the European Peace Settlements where the Council of Foreign Ministers has had the deciding voice in the preparation of Peace Treaties with Italy, Roumania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Finland. Another indication of this concentration of authority is the principle of action by "unanimity" which is followed by the Great Powers in the Control Council for Germany, the Far Eastern Commission, and to some extent in the United Nations, where substantive decisions of the Security Council require the concurring votes of the Great Powers represented thereon. The use or threatened use of this veto power by one or other of the Great Powers has in large measure reduced the effectiveness of these organizations in that it allows any one power to prevent action by majority decisions even on unimportant matters.

4. While admitting in some degree the special position which the Great Powers hold in regard to the Peace Settlements because of their greater responsibilities, Canada has protested on many occasions, against the practice of decisions being taken by the Great Powers in fields which affect Canadian interest without adequate consultation with, or participation by, the Canadian Government or its representatives. These protests were ineffective in the case of settlements with the ex-Axis satellite states and have not yet been fruitful in the case of the German settlement.

5. Perpetuation of the principle of action by the Great Powers in world affairs, without adequate consultation with states concerned, will make it more and more difficult for countries such as Canada to protect their interest in important fields of their international relations. A body of precedent will be established which will become increasingly difficult to reverse, and which will serve to continue into the future an unsatisfactory great power — small power relationship which arose during the war. From this point of view it is necessary to ensure, if at all possible, that the settlement with Japan will have a less restrictive and more popular basis that has been the case with the preceding settlements. It would therefore seem desirable for a procedure to be adopted which would permit all allies with a substantial interest in the Japanese settlement to participate from the beginning in its drafting and in a manner which would preclude veto action by any one of the Great Powers concerned.

6. For Canada, and other members of the British Commonwealth, the Pacific settlement may have a particular significance with respect to the development of Commonwealth relations. Australia, because of its geographic position and the extent of its war effort in the Far East, attaches the highest importance to the settlement with Japan. It is probably fair to say that Australia's efforts to liberalize the procedure adopted for the settlements with the ex-Axis satellite states, and its bitter dissatisfaction with the refusal of the Council of Foreign Ministers to allow the other allies an equal voice in the settlement with Germany, have been conditioned by its fears that a similar restrictive procedure might obtain for the treaty with Japan. Failure to achieve a satisfactory role in the European Peace Settlements, which have been developed under the control of the Council of Foreign Ministers, has led Australian officials to suggest informally that a Commonwealth panel might be established in order that Commonwealth influence could be brought to bear through United Kingdom representation in the Council of Foreign Ministers, or on other bodies where the United Kingdom vote is more effect[ive] than that of individual Commonwealth members. Evidence available suggests that the Australians take the view that the United Kingdom should follow the line in the Council of Foreign Ministers advocated by interested Commonwealth governments, that is, the United Kingdom representatives should speak not for the United Kingdom as such, but for the Commonwealth as a whole. A further development of this theory, which seems to have recommended itself to Australian officials, is that for purposes of the Pacific settlement, if Australia is not to be accorded an equal voice with the Great Powers, Australia rather than Great Britain should be empowered to present the Commonwealth viewpoint. Adoption of such a "one voice" procedure for the presentation of the interests of the various Commonwealths at international conferences is considered neither workable nor desirable by the Canadian Government. In the long run such practice would inevitably weaken the influence of individual Commonwealth members vis-a-vis other soverign [sic] independent states. In addition it would seem unlikely that the various commonwealth members would have a single viewpoint on many problems which would arise. In particular is this true of Canada whose national interest frequently runs parallel to that of the United States rather than to that of other members of the Commonwealth. It is important therefore that in the Commonwealth conference which has been called for August 26th and in any subsequent Commonwealth consultations which may take place during the preparation of the Japanese peace treaty, the "one voice" theory, if presented, should be opposed.

. . .

18. It is evident from the failure of Canada to obtain an adequate role in the drafting of European peace treaties prepared under the control of the Council of Foreign Ministers that this procedure should if possible be avoided for the settlement with Japan. When the Council of Foreign Ministers was established at Potsdam the prospect of an early victory against Japan was not fully apparent. Moreover, the Soviet Union was still at peace with that country. The terms of reference of the Council of Foreign Ministers make no specific mention of any possible action that the Council might take with respect to the Far Eastern settlement. However before the invitation to form the Council of Foreign Ministers was issued to China and France, the other three great powers agreed informally that China would take an active part only in the discussions of the Council on matters affecting Asiatic interests or questions of world wide concern. The possibility that the Council might ultimately concern itself with the Far Eastern settlement is thus recognized by the fact of Chinese membership. Moreover, subsection 3 of para. III of the terms of reference of the Council provided that "...other matters may from time to time be referred to the Council by agreement between the member governments." Press reports originating from Moscow indicate that the Soviet Government holds the view that the peace treaty with Japan should be dealt with by the Council of Foreign Ministers and the implication is that the Soviet authorities would wish to see the settlement prepared in a manner similar to that used for the peace treaties with the European satellite states or under discussion with respect to Germany. Attempts so far by the Soviet Union to have the Far Eastern matters discussed by the Council of Foreign Ministers have been rebuffed by representatives of United States and Great Britain. In the London meeting of the Council in September 1945 the Soviet Foreign Minister attempted to put the question to control of machinery for Japan on the agenda. To this proposal Mr. Byrnes would not agree. Again at the recent meetings of Foreign Ministers in Moscow when the Soviet delegate proposed that China should be discussed both General Marshall and Mr. Bevin were opposed and the question was not considered.

19. The proposals which were made on July 11th 1947 by the United States Government, for the early convening of an eleven nation conference for the preparation of a settlement with Japan, under procedures which would deprive any one nation of the veto power, are a strong indication that the United States Government will oppose any move by the Soviet Union to return to the restrictive Council of Foreign Ministers procedure. Favourable replies to the United States invitation which have been made by the United Kingdom and China would seem to mean that the U.S.S.R. would be alone in wishing to deprive the other allies of an effective voice in the preparation of a treaty for Japan.

20. There is always the possibility that in order to ensure Soviet participation in the treaty making the U.S.A., the U.K. and China will be prepared ultimately to make some concession to the Soviet view that the Great Powers members of the Council of Foreign Ministers should retain the deciding role in drafting the settlement. In this eventuality it might become necessary as a last resort for the Canadian delegation to fall back on the procedure advocated by Canada for the German settlement, whereby the allies not members of the Council of Foreign Ministers would participate at the Committee stage in the actual drafting of the treaty terms, as well as in any final conference which might be convened.

. . .

36. . . . The latest agenda for the discussions at Canberra which has been received from Australia suggests that procedure be discussed under the following headings.

(a) Countries to participate,

(b) Method of reaching decisions,

(c) Time of Peace Conference,

(d) Venue,

(e) Single instrument or more (final settlement or settlement stages),

(f) Adherence of other governments.

37. Of the above items, (a), (b), (c) and (d), cannot be considered without reference to the proposal which has been made by the United States Government for the early convening of an eleven nation conference to prepare a Japanese Settlement under procedures which would eliminate the veto by any one of the Great Powers.

The Canadian Government has already made known its favourable reaction to the main points of the United States proposal. (Discussed in Section VII below). No views have been expressed on the most suitable venue for the conference, but it seems likely that a site in the United States would be preferred for reasons of convenience.

38. The question of a single instrument or more will depend in large measure on the views expressed by those countries willing to undertake continuing responsibility for security in Japan and who consider post treaty control desirable. There are already indications that a separate instrument to provide against renewed Japanese aggression, and to ensure the observance of the treaty terms, may be proposed. The United States Government on June 21, 1946, released the text of a draft twenty-five year treaty on the disarmament and demilitarization of Japan which had been circulated to the governments of China, the Soviet Union and Great Britain. The Australian Foreign Minister has already made known his opinion that some form of control should be continued in Japan after the entry into force of the peace treaty.

39. There are several ways in which control of this nature could be accomplished. If all countries party to the peace treaty with Japan were willing jointly to assume responsibility for the observance of the treaty this guarantee could be written into the treaty itself and a second instrument would not become necessary. However, it hardly seems likely that states which are only technically at war with Japan and whose vital interests are not immediately affected by developments in the Far East would be willing to underwrite the treaty terms. It seems more likely that those countries having a substantial interest in the Japanese settlement would jointly perform any control function which might be agreed. This would probably entail the conclusion of a separate agreement providing control machinery of a military, and perhaps also an economic, character, to which only those governments willing to undertake responsibilities for the future behaviour of Japan would become party. These might be the eleven states now represented on the Far Eastern Commission, or a smaller group of the Great Powers, such as the United States of America, the Soviet Union, China, the United Kingdom and perhaps Australia because of its regional interest. Conceivably the agreement might be drafted in two parts, covering separately the military and economic aspects of post-treaty control of Japan. Under this arrangement a small group of powers might assume primary responsibilities of a military nature, and a larger group might undertake to maintain requisite economic controls and assume very general military obligations commensurate with their commitments under the United Nations Charter. In this connection the present economic difficulties of the United Kingdom may weigh against its participating in a separate agreement involving specific military commitments. Australia would, however, probably wish to become party to such an agreement and would cite its membership on the Allied Council for Japan and its command of the B.C.O.F.[4] as precedents for its participation in any continuing military control which may be established.

[4]British Commonwealth Occupation Force

40. It is questionable whether Canada would wish to enter into any four or five power scheme for the post treaty military control of Japan, having regard to its non-participation in the present occupation. Consideration would have to be given, however, to Canadian adherence to any proposed control of a general international character, either by all states party to the treaty with Japan or under the United Nations. It will also be necessary to consider whether Canada would wish to be associated with any continuing economic controls which may be agreed for Japan. It is not possible at this time to formulate any definitive policy on this matter. It will be for the Canadian Government to consider in the light of the discussions at Canberra and at subsequent conferences called for the preparation of the Japanese settlement, whether Canada will assume any responsibilities for the post treaty control of Japan.

41. As regards the adherence of other governments, the United States proposal envisages that the final Peace Conference will be composed of all states at war with Japan, and there would seem to be no objection from the Canadian point of view to these states becoming party to the Japanese Treaty. The question of adherence to the treaty proper therefore seems to be relatively unimportant. If, however, it is eventually decided that a second agreement should be concluded for the post treaty control of Japan, it would appear that only those countries willing to undertake military and or economic responsibilities in the Far East should be required to adhere. Whether or not Canada would wish to become party to such a control treaty cannot be decided until specific proposals can be submitted for Government consideration.

VI. COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

42. Mention has been made in the introduction to this memorandum of the significance of the procedure for the Japanese settlement to the development of Commonwealth relations. This aspect of the treaty procedure has importance because of Australian dissatisfaction with its ability under present arrangements to bring its views to bear effectively in fields of international relations in which the Australian Government deems itself directly concerned. There is considerable evidence to suggest that failing achievement of a satisfactory individual status, Australia would wish to exert its influence in world affairs through the formation of a Commonwealth panel with a view to having the United Kingdom representative in Great Power discussions speak for the Commonwealth and with the full force of the Commonwealth as a whole. A further development of Australian thinking along these lines, is that when the interest of one member of the Commonwealth is a given problem is greater than that of the other Dominions it should be authorized, failing participation on a basis of equality, to represent the Commonwealth in Great Power discussions, rather than have the representatives of Great Britain perform this function.

. . .

47. There are two possible developments in the procedure for a settlement with Japan which may give Dr. Evatt an opportunity to propose the "one voice" principle for acceptance by other members of the Commonwealth.

48. If the United States proposals for an eleven nation conference to prepare the peace settlement under a ⅔ds majority voting rule are implemented, the five commonwealth votes taken as a bloc would be decisive in the conference. This eventuality has no doubt been forseen by Dr. Evatt and he may endeavour at the Canberra conference to secure advance support of other Commonwealth governments for the Australian view on aspects of the settlement which he considers of particular importance for Australia. In particular he may try to obtain agreement from other Commonwealth Governments, especially Great Britain, that prior Australian consent should be obtained before advancing substantive proposals at the elevennation conference suggested by the United States for the preparation of the Japanese settlement.

49. If on the other hand, because of Soviet insistence, and in order to secure Russian participation in the treaty preparation, it is decided by the United States and other governments concerned to proceed by some procedure which would give special status to the Great Powers, it is highly probable that Dr. Evatt will seek to obtain similar status for Australia. Failing agreement on Australian participation at the Big Four level it would not be surprising if Australia endeavours to take the place of Great Britain in the Big Four as the Commonwealth representative on grounds of the inability of the United Kingdom to continue any heavy military responsibility in the occupation of Japan. Something along this line may be discussed at Canberra and the Australian foreign minister may advocate the Australian right to speak for the Commonwealth if participation on an equal basis with the larger powers is not achieved. In this connection Dr. Evatt will no doubt refer to the precedent of the appointment of an Australian to represent four members of the British Commonwealth on the Allied Council for Japan of Australian command of the BCOF.

50. The Canadian Government has considered the possibility that an effort may be made at Canberra to reach agreement on a single Commonwealth policy for the peace treaty with Japan and it is their view that any suggestion of this nature should be resisted. It is the Canadian view that it is neither in the interest of Canada nor of the Commonwealth as a whole to adopt the "one voice" approach to international affairs. Formalization of the Commonwealth relationship in the way which may be suggested by the Australian representative at the Canberra talks would in the Canadian view destroy the flexibility of relations under which the Commonwealth has so far successfully developed. For similar reasons Canada would oppose the doctrine of "prior consent". In this connection the Canadian delegation to the Canberra conference should pay particular attention to relations with the press. It will be necessary to guard against the impression being given that a Commonwealth policy is being decided. It should be made clear that the conference is for consultation and an exchange of views and is not for the purpose of reaching agreement on common policy.

51. Canada must pay particular attention to the effect which any tendency towards a Commonwealth bloc approach to international affairs would have on its relations with the United States. Canadian interests in the Pacific area would seem to correspond more closely with those of the United States than with the interests of the Antipodean members of the Commonwealth. The Canadian delegation should therefore avoid being committed at Canberra to any policies which would prevent the consideration and possible acceptance of United States proposals which have not yet been made known to the Canadian Government.

. . .

Conclusion

62. Of the various precedents and procedural suggestions for the conclusion of the Peace Treaty for Japan examined in the foregoing sections, the United States proposal for a series of conferences composed of representatives of the eleven States Members of the Far Eastern Commission which would reach decisions by a two-thirds majority vote would appear most likely to serve Canadian interests and should therefore, be supported. The opportunity to participate on a basis of equality with other Allies most directly concerned in the preparation of the Japanese Settlement is a procedure which was denied to Canada and Allies not Members of the Council of Foreign Ministers in the conclusion of Peace Treaties with the ex-Axis satellite states in Europe and so far, at least, in the Settlement with Germany. The proposal that drafting of the treaty should be conducted under two-thirds majority rule, should make it impossible for the Soviet Union or for that matter any other great power to block progress in the completion of the Japanese Treaty as was the case with previous settlements.

63. It is worth noting that a two-thirds majority rule in an eleven-member conference would give to the Commonwealth, as a whole, a veto over the proceedings of the conference, provided the various Commonwealths were to vote as a bloc. This aspect of the voting procedure must already have been considered by the United States authorities who would seem to have something to lose under such a plan. However, if the United States Government is prepared to face this possibility, there would seem no reason for the Canadian Government to suggest any alteration in the two-thirds rule. Both Canada and the United Kingdom, have made it amply clear that they do not subscribe to the "one-voice" approach by the Commonwealth in international affairs. Any danger therefore of this eventuality is probably unreal.

64. In the event that the United States Government and other Governments concerned are not prepared to proceed with the treaty preparation without the Soviet Union, it may become necessary for some compromise to be reached with the Soviet authorities in order to assure their participation. If this eventuality occurs, the Canadian delegation should seek maximum participation in the preparation of the settlement consonant with agreement amongst the Great Powers. It may be necessary, for instance, to agree to the granting of a limited veto to the Great Powers for use only as regards certain clearly defined subjects of the settlement. These might include, for instance, territorial changes which have already been agreed by the Great Powers. The absolute minimum requirement for Canadian participation would be a guarantee that adequate provision is made for the association of Canada in the actual work of drafting at a time when the draft is sufficiently flexible to be changed. It is hoped, however, that any reversion to the restrictive Council of Foreign Ministers procedure for concluding the settlement will not become necessary, and that Canada will be able to participate on a basis of equality under a procedure similar in principle to that proposed by the United States Government.

65. In a more detailed way the most desirable procedure would seem to be,

(1) The early convening of an eleven-power conference as proposed by the United States. This conference could decide on main policies and establish the framework of committees and sub-committees under which the settlement could be prepared. In the Canadian view, there should be a steering committee set up to co-ordinate the work of various committees and functional sub-committees. The Secretariat should not be allowed to usurp the functions of this steering committee as was the case during the commission stage of the Paris Conference. The Committees might be of the whole and the Sub-Committees could be organized on a functional basis to permit those countries having a specific interest in any one aspect of the settlement to be represented on the Committee concerned with that problem.

(2) The committees and sub-committees established by the plenary conference of ministers could proceed to draft the individual sections of the Peace Treaty. Experience at the Paris Conference and at the Moscow Meeting of Foreign Ministers has demonstrated that where the Press is represented at the committee stage in international discussions, there is a tendency for the positions of each of the delegations to become rigid and compromise becomes more difficult. In addition, certain delegations are inclined for propaganda purposes to address themselves to the Press rather than to the business at hand. For this reason it would be desirable if the committees and sub-committees set up for drafting purposes could conduct their deliberations in secrecy.

(3) The eleven-minister conference could be re-convened to complete the drafting of the settlement and to resolve, by the two-thirds majority voting procedure, any differences which might have arisen.

(4) A final peace conference should be convened, composed of representatives of all states at war with Japan for the purpose of finalizing the treaty terms.

66. While it may not be possible to achieve the above suggested procedure, the Canadian Delegation should endeavour to ensure, that, as far as possible, the essentials of this programme are secured.

160. PCO/W-22-5-J

Le haut-commissaire en Australie
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in Australia
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 143 Canberra, August 26, 1947

SECRET

Following from Brooke Claxton, Begins: Arrived Canberra Thursday, 21st, and following morning, with High Commissioner, called on the Governor General to present the messages from the Prime Minister and pay respects when we were very well received. Later that day saw Prime Minister and had a friendly talk with him and also discussed Conference procedure with Dr. Evatt.

2. Evatt appears to have become less interested in this Conference as American proposal has developed and local limelight taken by nationalization of banks and dollar difficulties. Consequently, it is expected that the Conference will be over by the evening of the 2nd and it was even suggested that all meetings, including the first, would be private. As I then anticipated, however, the opening meeting today was public and, although this was just decided a few minutes before the meeting at eleven, fortunately we were prepared with short speech.

3. Dr. Evatt was open minded about the agenda and, after discussions with other delegations here, we prepared a revision putting consideration of machinery from second to eighth place and making other minor modifications in the Australian proposal of August 14th. This was discussed with Hector McNeil on arrival Sunday night, Lord Addison, Fraser and the Australians yesterday, and was unanimously accepted by the Conference today.

4. At interviews we stressed the extreme importance of avoiding commitments or giving the impression of agreement or allowing this impression to go abroad. Our view was accepted by all, but we anticipate that their acquiescence may be superficial as they tend to consider the Commonwealth as entity and this unconsciously colours their thinking.

5. Hector McNeil, Sunday night, spoke about the desirability of reporting agreed views of Commonwealth countries to the United States. Greene and I sharply took up the question of agreement but felt it desirable that the United States should be kept fully informed of the progress of the discussions. Yesterday, Lord Addison brought forward this suggestion again in milder form. He said he felt it very desirable that his Government should tell the United States frankly about the progress of the discussions and that it was his intention to cable reports to London where the Foreign Office might communicate with Washington. I said I welcomed each Government being free to take the course it wanted regarding this and felt you would probably consider it advisable to keep Washington informed in the same way, with which he agreed. At the session today he repeated this and it was left for future consideration.

6. United Kingdom suggested several technical Sub-Committees to go over the material prepared by the Australians and themselves. We felt some danger might arise through the acceptance of Committee reports that the Conference would be expressing itself as a whole and mentioned this to Lord Addison. He said he appreciated this but felt it would still be desirable to have at least one of Technical Committee officials or others to look into economic questions. At meeting today this was left open. If this suggestion is made later, we will probably have to acquiesce in it but will watch the procedure carefully in view of your general instructions. Possibly one reason for the United Kingdom desiring Sub-Committee is size of delegation with Addison, McNeil and Williams[5] as delegates, eighteen advisers and nineteen staff, many of whom came out specifically for the Conference.

7. Following public meeting today, all meetings, except possibly final, will be private and arrangements for press likely to become important. When we raised this with United Kingdom, they said it has been suggested that press accounts would be prepared and released by Australians and United Kingdom Press Attaché, Nash. I said that I thought it would be a good thing to have press report prepared by small Committee and suggested adding Paul Malone in view of his experience and general acceptability here. I added, however, that this would probably not be acceptable to other Commonwealth countries unless they saw final text. Australians and United Kingdom agreed to Malone. Meeting today Sub-Committee of Press Committee with one official from each country.

8. At first meeting, I asked Dr. Evatt if I might have the honour of moving or seconding his nomination as Chairman. He seemed very pleased by this and has been in every way entirely friendly. I suggested same course to Hector McNeil and last night Lord Addison said he would move nomination and hoped that I would second it, which I did in speech today.

9. We have sent you text of the agenda as adopted and parts of speech en clair† and you might find it desirable to give this to Canadian Press, including mention of part played by us in drafting the agenda and seconding Evatt.

10. At the opening, all eight Commonwealth countries were represented except Burma delayed in travel. Unfortunately, Malcolm MacDonald[6] prevented from attending by convalescence from typhoid at Penang.

11. In speech and in later private discussion, I raised again the necessity for discussions being non-committal and this was emphasized by all others. Ends.

---

[5]E.J. Williams, haut-commissaire du Royaume-Uni en Australie.
E.J. Williams, High Commissioner of United Kingdom in Australia.
[6]Gouverneur général de Malaisie.
Governor-General of Malaya.

3e PARTIE/PART 3

QUESTIONS ÉCONOMIQUES
ECONOMIC QUESTIONS

161. B.C./Vol. 99

Extrait d'un rapport du chef de la délégation à la Conférence du Commonwealth

Extract from Report by Head of Delegation to Commonwealth Conference DESPATCH 759 Canberra, September 2, 1947

TOP SECRET

Sir:

I have the honour to report on the conference of nations of the British Commonwealth held at Canberra, Australia between 26th August and 2nd September, 1947, to discuss the peace settlement with Japan. . . .

9. . . . the conference met in its first session in the Parliament House of the Commonwealth of Australia at 11:00 a.m. on the morning of Tuesday, 26th August. The Prime Minister, the Right Honourable J.B. Chifley took the chair. Before the conference, the Australian representatives had strongly expressed the view that even the opening session would be private and that appears to have been the expectation of most of the delegates present. As we anticipated, however, the opening session was public and I attach as Annex "B" a copy of the speeches then made.† From these it will be seen that Mr. Chifley warmly welcomed the delegates and that his speech was replied to in a short speech by Lord Addison who proposed Dr. Evatt as chairman. In view of this being the first visit of a Canadian Minister to Australia since the war, I had prepared some references to the relations between the two countries and also felt it desirable to set out in clear and express terms our understanding of the purpose of the conference and the procedure that would be followed. This speech, which appears to have been well received, took about fifteen minutes and is included with the other speeches. In the course of my remarks I seconded Lord Addison's motion that Dr. Evatt be chairman of the conference. This was in accordance with a suggestion I had made in the first instance to Dr. Evatt and later proposed to Lord Addison. These speeches were followed by even briefer speeches by the other delegates present. Everyone referred in warm terms to the presence of the Indian and Pakistan representatives. The representatives of Burma were delayed by transportation difficulties and only arrived at the conference on the 29th August. A copy of the conference booklet issued by the Australian Government containing a list of all delegations is attached as Annex "C".† It will be noted that the United Kingdom delegation totalled forty members, many of whom had come out from England expressly for the conference.

. . .

14. Following the opening session on the morning of the 26th the conference adjourned until 3:30 p.m. and sat on successive days generally from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m.

15. The agenda was completed on the morning of Monday, 1st September. That afternoon was spent in passing on a press communiqué which when finally approved was issued to the press that night. This is included in Annex "H".†

16. The final public session was held at 11:00 a.m. on the morning of Tuesday, 2nd September. At this session speeches were made by representatives of every country. A copy of a note of these proceedings is attached as Annex "I".†

17. It may be said at once that the proceedings of the conference were very informal and carried on throughout in a spirit of tolerant goodwill. On only a few occasions was the effort made to press a point to secure agreement. The only event approaching anything in the nature of an "incident" was early in the second session of the opening day when the representative of Pakistan with some heat expressed surprise that the claims of Pakistan to participate in the preparation of the Japanese treaty had not been more clearly recognized by the representatives of India and the other countries present.

18. As Chairman, Dr. Evatt was urbane and conciliatory. He had before him a brief thoroughly prepared by a committee under Sir Frederick Eggleston[7] as well as by his own Departmental officials. His own great knowledge of this subject had been recently augmented by his visit to General MacArthur. Undoubtedly, Dr. Evatt has recently made a total about-face in his general attitude to the Japanese settlement. Where before he had repeatedly declared himself in favour of a hard peace, he now appears to be willing to go far in the opposite direction. It has been suggested that Dr. Evatt's conciliatory attitude shown in the chair was adopted at the dictation of Mr. Chifley who must have received word of the unpopularity of Dr. Evatt and Australia in the world of conferences because of the uncompromising way in which he has stated his views. . . .

25. Before taking up the actual subject matter of the conference, one further general comment should be made. It was quite obvious that at the conference the emphasis shifted quickly from questions of security to questions relative to the economy of Japan. This is where Dr. Evatt's change of heart was most evident. His conversion on economic policies from draconian to reasonable was indicated by his failure to hammer away at his former theory that the standard of living in Japan must not be higher than in any country she devastated. The reversal on this was complete. To the contrary, both Dr. Evatt and Mr. Fraser somewhat tediously tried to secure support for the insertion in the treaty of provisions requiring Japan to accept the obligations with regard to standards of working and living under the conventions of the International Labour Organization and guaranteeing freedom of association in trade unions, land reform and full employment. In part these suggestions sprang from the desire to protect Australia and New Zealand against competition with cheap Japanese labour. The importance of the economic provisions, and [7]Ancien ministre d'Australie aux États-Unis (retraité en 1946).

Former Minister of Australia in United States, (retired 1946).

indeed of a viable future for Japan was keynoted in the opening paragraphs of the report of a sub-committee set up to assist discussions of the conference on economic and financial matters. This read "It will be necessary to impose restrictions on the Japanese economy to avoid the danger of future aggression. These should be consistent with a viable economy and should not go beyond what is demanded by considerations of military security." A copy of this report is attached as Annex "K".†

26. The main objectives of the conference may be summarized as security against aggression, democratization and restoration of viable economy for Japan. There can be no doubt that few, if any, of the delegates present believe seriously that there is much hope of the last of these objectives being realized even if there is hope of security and the eventual democratization of Japan.

27. One further reference should be made of the procedure followed. On the second day Lt. Gen. H.C.H. Robertson, Commander of the British Commonwealth Occupation Force and adviser to the Australian delegation, spoke to the conference at some length about conditions in Japan. He was followed by Mr. M.C. Dening, Far Eastern expert of the British Delegation, and later by Dr. Norman of our own delegation as well as by Major Plinsoll who has been Australian alternate member on the Far Eastern Commission and has twice visited Japan. These talks proved one of the most useful events at the conference. The speakers agreed on all main points. A summary of what was said is included in the notes attached as Annex "L".† Dr. Norman's thoughtful and penetrating analysis of probabilities and his readiness in answering questions met with the most general approbation and was indeed generally recognized as one of the most useful contributions to the conference. . . .

31. The conference dealt with the matters in the order listed in the agenda. For the purposes of this report it will be most convenient to deal with these in the order followed in our discussions by briefly mentioning the points in respect of which there was a consensus of opinion and indicating the main points of difference in the few cases where these occurred.

I. Procedure for Drafting of this Treaty

32. (a) The United States initiative in calling a conference was welcomed.

(b) The conference should consist of the eleven members of the Far Eastern Commission and Pakistan as having been included with India. The British delegation promised to take note of the claims of Burma but anticipated difficulty. Views were expressed that Outer Mongolia had no claim.

(c) The conference should be held at governmental or policy-making level with countries free to send ministers or officials. The conference should decide on the machinery for drafting the treaty and agree on the main objectives and the procedure by which Japan and the Allied belligerents, in addition to those having the responsibility for drafting the treaty, would express their views. The Conference would, also, decide on the procedure to be followed subsequent to the preparation of the draft. This conference would be followed immediately by the establishment of the necessary working committees.

(d) The conference should be held as soon as possible, preferably towards the end of September or early October.

(e) In view of the fact that the conference should preferably be held during the Assembly of the United Nations, the most convenient place of meeting would be New York. Working committees should meet at Washington.

(f) Voting at the conference would be by two-thirds majority on all questions of substance and simple majority on questions of procedure and drafting. In the drafting committees, voting should be by simple majority.

(g) Strong views were expressed that the draft should be prepared and a peace settlement made as soon as possible, preferably in 1948. My opening statement that delay benefitted the forces which sought to profit from disorder and uncertainty was the view of everyone.

(h) Mr. McNeil and Dr. Evatt both expressed the view that the U.S.S.R. would probably participate in the proposed conference even if it was held on the conditions outlined here.

II. Basic Objectives of Settlement

33. This subject was inserted at the suggestion of Australia. Dr. Evatt suggested that we might more profitably deal with this under the headings which followed.

III. Territorial Provisions

34. The agreements already arrived at between the Great Powers narrowed the field open to discussion to four main areas:

(a) Quelparte, a small island off Korea, which the United Kingdom felt might come under the expression "such minor islands as we determine" in the Potsdam proclamation. If this were tenable this island should remain part of Japan subject to civil aviation rights being reserved on it.

(b) The Marshalls, Carolines and Marianas where the trusteeship of the United States should be recognized.

(c) The Loochoo Islands should come under the trusteeship of the United States.

(d) The Bonin and Volcano Groups and Marcus Island should also come under trusteeship of the United States.

I pointed to the desirability of the southern two islands in the Kuriles group being held in trusteeship or being subject to civil aviation rights but it was recognized that the Great Powers had permitted these to be transferred to the U.S.S.R. and the Soviet Union was, in fact, in possession of them so that any arrangement regarding civil aviation would depend on bilateral negotiations. In discussing this and similar points, I emphasized the importance of civil aviation in the Far East and the strong desirability of trying to ensure, even at this late date, that bases and emergency landing areas were available.

IV. Disarmament and Demilitarization

35. (a) Japan should remain completely disarmed.

(b) Internal order should be maintained by a non-military Japanese police force and the suggestion was made by the United Kingdom that this police force should be organized locally in each of the fifty-two prefectures.

(c) General research should be permitted but views were expressed for and against permitting research on nuclear physics which might relate to atomic energy. The consensus was that research on atomic energy would be prohibited. Research on chemical and bacteriological warfare would be prohibited.

(d) Manufacture of arms and airplanes should be prohibited and of merchant vessels limited, the United Kingdom suggesting a figure of 250,000 tons per year with no vessels of over 5,000 tons or 14 knots.

(e) The United Kingdom suggested that Japan be allowed small unarmed coastal vessels for fishery protection.

(f) Canada suggested that Japan be allowed to engage in civil aviation limited to the four main islands for the purpose of transport, medical assistance, fisheries inspection, agricultural control, etc., planes and parts to be imported under strict control as to range and number. This view was generally agreed to.

(g) The question was raised as to the possibility of exercising control of Japanese emigration but there was no agreement on this.

V. Political Provisions

36. (a) The treaty would provide for fundamental freedoms and human rights in terms generally similar to Article XV of the Treaty with Italy, possibly extended so as to make express reference to association for industrial purposes. The suggestion by Australia and New Zealand that the new Constitution of Japan should itself be incorporated into the treaty or guaranteed by its provisions was not supported by other delegations.

(b) The purge of Japanese war leaders and nationalist societies should be continued.

(c) Mr. McNeil's suggestion that aliens resident in Japan should receive treatment similar to that enjoyed by Japanese nationals in other countries received some support but, while I did not express myself on it, I felt that it was doubtful whether it was practical.

(d) Bilateral treaties made by Japan should be recognized, if requested by the Allied powers.

(e) Japan should recognize the acts during the occupation.

(f) An effort by Australia and New Zealand to have Japan accept all the obligations or multilateral agreements met opposition from the United Kingdom, Canada and India.

VI. Economic and Financial Provisions

37. (a) Production of strategic materials such as light metals, synthetic oil and synthetic rubber should be prohibited.

(b) Capacity for the production of iron, steel and industrial explosives as well as regards oil refining and storage and shipbuilding should be limited to defined levels.

(c) The Zaibatsu should be dissolved.

(d) Efforts by Australia and New Zealand to secure acceptance of insertion in the treaties of provisions regarding economic equality, maintenance of domestic employment and fiscal policy in Japan were opposed by the United Kingdom, India, and Canada as interferences with the internal economy of Japan and incapable of enforcement. Similarly, the suggestions made that Japan be required to carry into effect the obligations of I.L.O. conventions, etc., were opposed.

(e) Property rights of aliens resident in Japan should be restored, payment of debts to United Nations nationals by the Japanese should be enforced and rights to copyrights, patents, trade materials, etc., preserved.

VII. Reparations

38. (a) The very general discussion of reparations noted the external assets problem in relation to allocation of shares (which was not considered by the conference), and general doubt was expressed as to the feasibility of obtaining reparations from current production.

(b) Occupation costs should be paid by Japan. The problems of definition of such costs and their priority vis-a-vis reparations were noted.

VIII. Machinery for Enforcement

39. The discussion of this subject was continued at the final business session on 1st September in view of the general recognition that what was proposed would have to be carried out so largely by the United States the discussion was in general terms. Points made in the general speeches and which appeared to receive general acceptance were:

(a) With the termination of occupation by military forces in Japan probably some time in the summer of 1948, there should not be any necessity of maintaining any considerable occupation forces in Japan. What would remain there would be the Supervisory Commission representative of all governments which had taken an active part in the war against Japan and inspecting personnel, etc.

(b) The function of the Supervisory Commission would be advisory rather than executive.

(c) Of necessity, the United States would continue to provide the forces presently responsible for ensuring that the treaty was carried out. Its actual troops would presumably be located on islands outside the four principal islands of Japan. The relationship between the Supervisory Commission and the United States Forces would be a major element in the whole peace settlement. A great deal would inevitably depend on the relations between the Supervisory Commission and the United States Forces. Australia and New Zealand expressed the view that token forces representing their countries should be associated with the American Forces.

(d) Care should be taken to ensure that the Supervisory Commission would not be placed by the treaty in a position where the Japanese people could hold it responsible for the failure of their own economy.

(e) To meet this, it was suggested that there might be set up an International Committee to advise with regard to economic questions. To the suggestion that there should be Japanese members on the committee, Dr. Evatt said that since it was advisory it would have to work with Japan.

IX. Form of Peace Settlement

40. Here again, the feeling was generally expressed that this could be easily worked out at the conference at New York or Washington. The following points were mentioned:

(a) There was general acceptance of the view that the treaty should come into effect by its ratification by two-thirds of the drafting powers rather than either by a smaller majority of Big Powers as in the case of treaties with satellite powers or by a majority of all countries which had declared war against Japan.

(b) Obviously, the treaty would not be effective unless the United States participated but simultaneous ratification could be taken care of through ordinary diplomatic channels.

(c) Countries which had declared war against Japan but which did not take an active part in hostilities could ratify the treaty.

(d) Provision might have to be made for adherence of countries which had not declared war against Japan in order to provide for any special objectives that might come to light.

41. Discussion of the agenda was concluded before twelve noon on the morning of Monday, 1st September. The Chairman then mentioned some other questions such as pearling and whaling, which he felt should be best left to be dealt with on executive level at the conference. After Dr. Evatt had mentioned the whole situation in a general way, Mr. Fraser asked for further information as to the Australian position but this was left to be dealt with by a memorandum to be distributed by Australia. This has since been distributed and is attached as Annex "A2".† This interchange appeared to us to indicate a minor failure of understanding between Australia and New Zealand with regard to a matter in which they were both interested. Mention of whaling led on to my mentioning Canada's special interests in fishing which I said could best be dealt with by experts when it came to the treaty drafting.

42. The agenda was completed during the morning session on 1st September. It was then agreed that a release would be prepared for the press and agreed to by representatives of the members of the conference. The release was drafted by Mr. Nash of the United Kingdom and Mr. Malone[8] of our delegation and was issued to the press on the evening of 1st September. At the meeting on 1st September I said that my understanding was that the summary of proceedings and the verbatim report of discussions would be available for the use of the delegations and governments represented but would be regarded as strictly secret and not used for any other purpose. This understanding was accepted. The conference then adjourned to meet today in a final open session at which speeches were given. Copies of these speeches are attached as Annex "I".†

[8]P. Malone, deuxième secrétaire, haut-commissariat en Australie.
P. Malone, Second Secretary, High Commission in Australia.

. . .

46. Members of the delegation proved themselves to be very well prepared to enable us to take an active part in the conference. The High Commissioner and his officers and staff did everything possible to assist in the work of the conference as well as to make the stay of the Canadian delegation as enjoyable as possible. I regard it as a privilege to head such a delegation at this important meeting and trust that you will find that this mission has been satisfactorily completed.

I have etc.

BROOKE CLAXTON

162. DEA/50051-40

Note du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Department of External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], July 21, 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT; ECONOMIC DEMILITARIZATION AND ECONOMIC CONTROL

The economic requirements of any security system which may emerge from the peace settlement for Japan may be considered under two headings:

(1) Economic demilitarization: a short term programme for the reduction of Japan's industrial war potential.

(2) Long term economic controls: measures required to keep Japan in a permanently demilitarized state.

I. ECONOMIC DEMILITARIZATION

1. The pattern of post-surrender economic activity in Japan was laid down in the Potsdam Declaration of July, 1945:

"Japan shall be permitted to maintain such industries as will sustain her economy and permit the exaction of just reparations in kind, but not those which would enable her to re-arm for war. To this end access to, as distinguished from control of, raw materials shall be permitted. Eventual Japanese participation in world trade relations shall be permitted."

2. A general programme for the economic demilitarization of Japan was laid down in the basic post-surrender directive issued by the United States Government to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in September, 1945:

"1. Economic Demilitarization

"The existing economic basis of Japanese military strength must be destroyed and not be permitted to revive.

"Therefore a programme will be enforced containing the following elements, among others; the immediate cessation and future prohibition of production of all goods designed for the equipment, maintenance, or use of any military force or establishment; the imposition of a ban upon any specialized facilities for the production or repair of implements of war, including naval vessels and all forms of aircraft; the institution of a system of inspection and control over selected elements in Japanese economic activity to prevent concealed or disguised military preparation; the elimination in Japan of those selected industries or branches of production whose chief value to Japan is in preparing for war; the prohibition of specialized research and instruction directed to the development of war-making power; and the limitation of the size and character of Japan's heavy industries to its future peaceful requirements, and restriction of Japanese merchant shipping to the extent required to accomplish the objectives of demilitarization.

"The eventual disposition of these existing production facilities within Japan which are to be eliminated in accord with this program, as between conversion to other uses, transfer abroad and scrapping will be determined after inventory. Pending decision, facilities readily convertible for civilian production should not be destroyed, except in emergency situations.

A programme almost identical with the one outlined above was included in the paper, "Basic Post-surrender Policy for Japan," which was unanimously approved by the Far Eastern Commission on June 19, 1947.

3. Certain measures have been taken to implement this programme, but as a whole it has been only partially accomplished. Immediately after the Japanese surrender the Supreme Commander prohibited the manufacture of arms, ammunition and implements of war and parts and components thereof. The war potential industries such as iron, steel, chemicals, light metals, and heavy machinery were permitted to continue operation only on a limited scale. Systems of inspection and control were set up to check on the activities of those war industries which were permitted to resume operation for the production of essential civilian goods.

4. All these measures, while instrumental in bringing about an immediate reduction in the Japanese industrial war potential, depend for their effectiveness on the administrative control of the Supreme Commander, backed up by the presence of the occupation troops. To make the economic demilitarization of Japan sufficiently effective to permit the withdrawal of occupation troops in accordance with the Potsdam Declaration, further and more drastic measures would be necessary — i.e. the destruction or removal of that part of the Japanese industrial war potential over and above what is necessary for the maintenance of a peace-time economy.

5. Work of the Far Eastern Commission

The Far Eastern Commission has devoted considerable time and effort to these tasks with only very limited success. In the first place a programme of interim reparations removals was drawn up, based on a preliminary survey of Japanese war industries and war-supporting industries. This programme called for the removal of those facilities which would obviously be in excess of Japanese peace-time requirements. A final reparations programme was to be drawn up later, after more exhaustive surveys of the Japanese economy had been carried out and peace-time industrial requirements had been more accurately estimated. This interim reparations removals programme was approved by the Far Eastern Commission by June, 1946; its implementation has been impossible, however, since member nations of the Far Eastern Commission have been unable to resolve the difficult problem of the division of shares. Deeming the relief of certain needy countries a matter of urgency, the United States Government finally by-passed the Commission in April, 1947 by issuing an interim directive to the Supreme Commands for the Allied Powers, providing for the removal of thirty percent of available reparations assets to China, the Philippines, the Netherlands (for Netherlands East Indies), and the United Kingdom (for Burma, Malaya, and colonies). A copy of this United States directive, F.E.C. 216/1, is attached. It is expected that the limited removals permitted under this directive, in accordance with the interim reparations removal programme, will get under way shortly.

6. After drawing up the interim reparations removals programme mentioned above, the Far Eastern Commission approached the problem of reducing Japanese industrial war potential by endeavouring to determine Japanese peace-time needs in the various industries concerned. In this connection two policy decisions have been reached:

(1) Assured production capacity levels for Japan: (F.E.C. 083/5 approved February 20th, 1947, copy attached).

This paper specifies interim production capacity levels for certain designated industries, to be maintained in Japan during the period of the occupation. Under this policy decision the Supreme Commander would be permitted to designate specific plants for retention in Japan so that the owners and management concerned could be assured that the production facilities in question would not be removed in any later reparations or disarmament programme.

(2) Determination of the peaceful needs of Japan: (F.E.C. 106/1, approved January 23, 1947, copy attached).

This policy decision states that the peace-time needs of the Japanese people should be defined as substantially the standard of living prevailing in Japan during the period 1930-1934. Data for this period would be used to estimate Japanese peaceful needs in 1950, due allowance being made for technological developments, balance of payments, and employment.

These policy decisions are two very small parts of what must be a fairly extensive programme for the economic demilitarization of Japan.

7. The Far Eastern Commission has under consideration two further papers which would go a long way toward completing the economic demilitarization programme:

(1) Reduction of Japanese Industrial War Potential. (latest version, F.E.C. 084/12; minor amendments are now being considered in the Steering Committee; copy attached).

This paper specifies the action to be taken with respect to various categories of industry which are deemed to constitute the Japanese industrial war potential. For industrial facilities in those categories in excess of Japanese peace-time requirements the paper would require either destruction or removal as reparations. The paper would also establish for the period of the occupation a ban on primary war industries and limits for the production capacity of certain war-supporting industries.

(2) Reparations Removals of Industrial Facilities and Merchant Shipping from Japan. (F.E.C. 218 — this paper was submitted by the United States delegation in April but so far has only been discussed in sub-committee; copy attached).

This paper is intended to be the final reparations removal programme and includes precise definitions of the peace-time requirements of Japan in terms of actual production capacities in the industries to be affected.

8. Even with the approval of these papers the initial economic demilitarization programme cannot be completed until reparations removals have been carried out and some disposition is ordered for production facilities in war-supporting industries which are in excess of peace-time requirements, but which are not actually removed as reparations. The reparations removal programme cannot be accomplished until some agreement is reached on the division of reparations shares. Progress towards the solution of this problem has been painfully slow and at the moment it would appear that final settlement will be attained only at the peace conference.

9. For the peace settlement the principal task with respect to economic demilitarization of Japan may therefore be summarized as follows: to review and if approved to make provision for the immediate implementation of the programme for the reduction of Japanese industrial war potential, as set forth in the proposals now before the Far Eastern Commission, to be completed prior to the final withdrawal of all occupation troops.

10. The Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission has been instructed to vote in favour of both papers mentioned in paragraph 7 above, subject to certain changes being made in the section on the aluminum industry in F.E.C. 218. As there will be an opportunity to review these papers before their provisions are written into the Japanese peace treaty it would appear desirable to consider whether the Canadian delegation should continue to support the programme these papers contain for the immediate reduction of the Japanese war potential (with an amendment re aluminum), or whether in view of the possible effect of this programme on long-term Canadian trade interests, its provisions should be modified in certain respects.

(Note: Aluminium Limited is preparing a memorandum on their interests in connection with the action proposed for the Japanese aluminum industry in F.E.C. 218. The views of Aluminium Limited will be taken into consideration in our preparation of instructions for the Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission with respect to the section on aluminum in F.E.C. 218).

II. LONG TERM ECONOMIC CONTROLS

11. The short term programme for eliminating Japanese industrial war potential which has been discussed in Part 1 of this memorandum will have the effect of preventing for a limited period only the emergence in Japan of an industrial economy suitable for war production. Furthermore, the ban on primary war industries and the limits on the production capacities of war-supporting industries which are laid down in F.E.C. 084/12 will be valid only for the period of the occupation. If permanent economic demilitarization is to be achieved, some system of long-term controls over Japanese industrial development will be necessary. The permanent economic demilitarization of Japan was one of the objectives included in the Potsdam Declaration; moreover, the terms in which this objective is expressed clearly foreshadow the establishment of long-term economic controls (see paragraph 1 above). Such controls may well prove to be the keystone of any security system which may be established to prevent Japan from again disturbing the peace.

12. Economic Controls

In the first place economic controls would presumably be continuous and preventive and, if properly administered and supported by the principal supplying countries of Japan, should make it extremely difficult for Japan to build up an air force, a navy, or a properly mechanized army.

13. Secondly, economic controls would vastly simplify the method of applying pressure to Japan when minor violations of the peace treaty occur. In other words, they would make possible minor penalties for minor crimes. A system of continuous economic controls would permit the application of limited as well as comprehensive sanctions, and such action could be taken long before Japan would be in a position to commit overt acts of aggression.

14. Conversely, a system of flexible economic controls would permit the Allied Powers to keep a constant check on Japan while permitting her to resume gradually her normal functions as an independent nation. Initially imposed restrictions could be relaxed progressively as a peaceful economy develops in Japan.

15. Finally, in the case of Japan, exterior controls over imports of certain strategic raw materials, together with other economic restrictions, will go a long way toward keeping in check the development of those industries which form the backbone of a war economy. For example, Japan has to rely on imports for practically all the raw materials needed in the manufacture of iron and steel. Similarly with aluminum: of all the large aluminum producing countries, Japan is among those most deficient in the natural resources requisite for economical production; in the past she has had to rely heavily on imports for her supply of bauxite and, in addition, found it necessary to supplement domestic production of aluminum with large imports of aluminum ingots.

16. Military Guarantees

Such economic controls as are devised for Japan will probably have to be supplemented by a military agreement between the principal allied powers to guarantee the continued demilitarization of Japan. If a system of economic restrictions is not devised, however, the control of Japan after the peace treaty would have to depend almost entirely on these military guarantees. A security system of military character, involving the stationing of troops in or near Japan by the great powers, might not be entirely conducive to peace and stability in the Pacific area. The overriding consideration, particularly for the United States and the U.S.S.R., might well become not the demilitarization of Japan but the securing of strategic advantage in the Far East. The emergence of new points of friction between these two powers in the north Pacific area might adversely affect our own security. If these considerations are to be given any weight, it would follow that Canada's interests would be best served by a security system for Japan based on economic controls rather than one which was predominantly military.

17. Moreover, a security system which was purely military in character could not be nearly as flexible as one based mainly on economic controls. It would amount to the removal of all direct controls exercised by the Allied powers during the critical period after the end of the occupation. Should Japan attempt to build up the war potential again and embark on a career of aggression, her history might quite likely follow the pattern of Nazi Germany after World War I — a series of minor violations of the peace treaty, none of which would be considered sufficiently flagrant by the Allied powers to warrant the drastic step of military action. A system of military security provides for only one type of preventive action, which would probably [illegible] at the eleventh hour. What is required [illegible] continuous restrictions which can be [illegible] reward for good behaviour.

18. Canadian Interests

Economic controls of any kind involving restrictions on the normal movement of commodities in open markets are, of course, quite repugnant to the Canadian way of thinking. The Department of Trade and Commerce have informed us on a number of occasions that Canadian economic interests would be best served by the earliest possible return to pre-war conditions of trade in Japan. The existence of controls over Japanese imports would certainly cause inconvenience to Canadian traders, and would limit the development by Canadian producers of what were very promising markets before the war. Notwithstanding the importance of export trade to Canada's national income and economic development, however, the primary consideration for Canada so far as the peace treaty with Japan is concerned must be security. If this security is to be based on a system of economic controls for Japan, it will cost Canada something in terms of irksome trade regulations and reduced markets for certain commodities.

19. So far as these markets are concerned, an examination of Canadian trade with Japan before the war will show that some of our most valuable exports had a direct relationship with the development by Japan of her war economy. In 1939, nearly 60% of Canada's exports to Japan by value consisted of aluminum and nickel, both strategic raw materials; and a further 25% was made up of copper, lead, zinc, scrap iron and steel — all items necessary in a war economy. Canadian exports of aluminum and nickel rose in value from approximately $2 millions in 1934 to $7½ millions in 1937 and $16 millions in 1939. The rapid increase in Japanese imports of these metals during the pre-war years no doubt reflects the final effort made by Japan to accumulate stockpiles of raw materials for military requirements, in anticipation that trade might be interrupted. It is quite clear that Canadian exports of this kind made a substantial contribution to the Japanese war potential, since in the case of both nickel and aluminum ingots Canada was one of Japan's principal sources of supply.

20. In any system of economic controls for Japan, aluminum and nickel would almost certainly fall in the class of restricted imports. The limitation of our future market in Japan for these materials does not seem an excessive price to pay for security. Even if this market were entirely eliminated the loss of $16½ millions in income is a trifling figure when set beside the $842 millions which made up only the budgetary cost of our very limited war effort against Japan. Moreover it would be quite illogical for Canada to participate in any security system vis-a-vis Japan if we are not willing to cooperate in a system of economic controls which would regulate the supply of strategic raw materials.

21. Furthermore, the Canadian people in general would not likely wish to see the national income increased by the sale of war materials to Japan. The Government defended this practice before the recent war on the grounds that if Canada did not fill Japan's orders, some other country would. Before adopting a policy of restricting the sale of strategic raw materials to Japan, the Canadian Government will require assurance that other supplying countries will take similar action. Collective action of this kind points to the establishment of a security system based on economic controls. If at the peace conference Canada can come out in favour of economic controls for Japan, pledging our support and cooperation, we should be making a worth-while contribution to the peace settlement.

22. Form of Economic Controls

For a system of economic controls based principally on the limitation of imports to be feasible and effective, it would have to meet the following requirements:

(1) For simplicity of administration and economy of operation it should be confined to an absolute minimum of key imports into Japan.

(2) It should permit Japan to buy restricted imports in any market of her choice provided that overall quotas are not exceeded.

(3) It would have to be subject to periodic revision to allow for the normal development of Japanese civilian requirements in a peace-time economy and the building up of a peace-time export trade, and in addition to take account of new technological developments in industrial processes.

(4) The system of controls would have to be subscribed to by all potential supplying countries.

23. The requirements outlined above for a system of controls based on the limitation of imports only indicate that such a system could only be administered by an international council in conjunction with an inspectorate located in Japan.

24. International Council

The Australian Department of External Affairs has under consideration a plan involving a supervisory council whose main function would be to ensure that Japan carries out her obligations under the peace treaty. Mr. E.H. Norman, Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo, has suggested a similar plan: a control council made up of representatives of signatory nations, with full power to carry out inspections within Japan.

25. Of all the possible functions of such a council we need concern ourselves here only with those relating to economic controls. One may speculate that some of the functions in the economic field of any international council established for the control of Japan after the signature of the peace treaty would be:

(1) To provide an inspectorate for purposes of making investigations of and reports on Japanese industrial development.

(2) To receive and pass on applications from the Japanese Government for increases in the allowances of restricted imports.

(3) To regulate the movement of Japanese capital abroad.

(4) To recommend to member nations the application of limited or comprehensive sanctions when certain violations of the peace treaty occur.

26. An inspectorate working under the direction of the suggested international council should be able to ensure that permitted imports of commodities and raw materials in restricted categories were being used for legitimate peaceful purposes and that stockpiles of these materials were not being accumulated. The inspectorate might also check on the construction of new industries to make sure that they are not being made specially adaptable to war purposes. In addition the inspectorate would probably have other responsibilities in the economic field, such as rendering reports on undesirable trade and labour practices.

27. With regard to the second possible function of the council mentioned in paragraph 25 above, the council should be in a position to work in cooperation with other international bodies, such as the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East, in any plans drawn up for the reconstruction and economic rehabilitation of Far Eastern countries. There are indications that the United States may not wish to see Japanese war-supporting industries kept under severe restrictions for a protracted period, and the suggestion has been made that Japan should be reconstituted as the "workshop of Asia". This policy would undoubtedly cause some uneasiness amongst the former victims of Japanese aggression. On the other hand it might not be unduly dangerous if Japan's industrial production were under the constant supervision of an inspectorate. Increases in the import quota of iron ore, for instance, might be permitted to allow for increased production of machine tools if this additional production were to be entirely to the export market and not be retained for domestic use. Thus a contribution could be made to the rehabilitation of other countries in the Pacific area, Japan could increase her holdings of foreign exchange for the purchase of other imports, while there would be no substantial increase in Japan's holding of machine tools. Increased domestic holdings of machine tools might be permitted only after a period of good behaviour.

28. The question of Japanese investments abroad raises problems which will not be touched upon here. It should be noted, however, that the Potsdam Declaration provides that Japan shall have access to, rather than control of, raw materials. To prevent Japan from gaining financial control of the sources of important raw materials some control over the export of Japanese capital may be required.

29. Conclusion

On the basis of the points raised in this memorandum it may be possible to draw the broad lines of a Canadian policy with regard to economic control of Japan after the peace treaty is signed. For purposes of the peace conference further studies will be required, some of which are suggested below:

(1) The listing of strategic raw materials, the import of which into Japan should be subject to control. Such a list could presumably be selected from the principal raw materials which would be required for the establishment of [illegible] of those industries subject to destruction or removal listed in F.E.C. 084/12 and F.E.C. 218. In this connection it is interesting to note the recommendations of the United Kingdom Economic and Industrial Planning Staff with regard to Japanese industry. They recommend the prohibition of production for an indefinite period of the following items: (a) aircraft; (b) alumine and aluminum; (c) magnesium; (d) explosives for all types of armaments; (e) synthetic oil; (f) synthetic rubber. In addition they propose that restrictions be placed on the production capacities of iron and steel, and all refining and storage.

(2) On the basis of the list of strategic raw materials suggested above, study should be made of the probable effects on Canadian trade of such limitations as may be placed on Japanese imports of these materials. Such a study would have to take into account the possible changes in world sources of supply (-.-. production of aluminum in Formosa.)

(3) An examination should be made of the nature of the domestic legislation which may be required to control the export of strategic raw materials to Japan if Canada commits herself to co-operating in a system of economic controls for Japan.

(4) An examination of the world supply situation with respect to the raw materials likely to be affected under any system of economic controls for Japan should be made to determine which countries should participate in the work of the projected international council insofar as it relates to economic controls of Japan.

163. DEA/50051-40

Le sous-ministre du Commerce
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET Ottawa, July 30, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

May I refer to your letter of July 21 enclosing a Working Paper prepared by your department, entitled "Japanese Peace Settlement: Economic Demilitarization and Economic Control," and requesting our comments on this paper, with special reference to the following topics:

(1) A short-term program for the reduction of Japanese war potential.

(2) The desirability of economic controls in any security system devised for Japan.

(3) The effect on Canadian interests of any economic controls which may be established.

(4) Suggested international machinery for the administration of long-term economic controls.

In the comments which follow, we refer chiefly to (2), (3) and (4) — all relating to the problem of long-term economic controls, as distinct from the short-term economic demilitarization program which has been in hand for some time, but which has been making such slow progress.

May I refer, first, to Par. 18 of your departmental Working Paper, which contains this statement — "The Department of Trade and Commerce have informed us on a number of occasions that Canadian economic interests would be best served by the earliest possible return to prewar conditions of trade in Japan." I should like to make it clear, in case there may have been any misunderstanding, that we have had no intention of advocating a future trading position for Japan that would be inconsistent with the policy of imposing a system of economic controls amply adequate for security purposes.

(1) Short-term program for the reduction of Japanese war potential

With regard to Par. 10 of the Working Paper, it is not possible to foresee the effects of the two programs that are now in hand on Canadian trade interests — other than those on the aluminum industry, on which Canada has already submitted an amendment. We believe that, as further opportunity will be given to review them, we should continue to support both programs, rather than at this stage to suggest any added amendments or revision which might have the effect of still further encumbering the rate of progress in having the programs carried out. In view of Canada's acceptance of the general policy of which these programs are part, it is felt that any unforeseen adverse effects on Canada which might later become apparent, should be left to be dealt with as future circumstances may determine.

(2) The desirability of economic controls in any security system devised for Japan

Despite the reduction in trade which the program of long-term economic controls may bring about, Canada should be prepared to give full support to the policy of imposing such a system of controls. Restrictions on Japan's import of strategic materials appear to be one of the chief forms of economic control — perhaps the key form — required to keep the immediate structure of Japanese industry and also the future industrial development of Japan within limits that would assure permanent and effective economic demilitarization. The operation of import controls affords room for the necessary degree of flexibility in meeting both security and peacetime development purposes.

To facilitate their administration, the import restrictions should be confined to the minimum list of basic materials that will enable adequate over-all control to be established. The restrictions should be applicable to imports from all potential sources. While it might be desirable to leave Japan free to purchase the established quotas of restricted imports from any source of supply, this might open the door to collusion. In any event, it is imperative that the controls be operated under the direction and close supervision of an appropriate international body.

(3) The effect on Canadian interests of any economic controls which may be established

As Canada's prewar exports to Japan were principally in the category that would be embraced in the proposed restrictions, it must be assumed that the controls would result in some reduction of Canadian trade — possibly also in some criticism from the producing interests whose markets and established trade were affected. Despite these considerations, we consider that Canada should not hesitate to give complete support to economic controls of this type, providing that the restrictions are enforced in an impartial way, and that full reports upon their administration are made available periodically and also upon special request, suitably supported.

Judging from 1939 statistics on Canadian exports to Japan, it would appear that the following commodities would fall within the category of restricted materials:

Aluminium	$10,184,174
Nickel	8,792,740
Lead	2,672,322
Zinc	1,273,662
Copper	2,845,308
Metallic scrap	588,174
Wood Pulp	448,902
Cobalt	125,529
	$26,930,811
Asbestos
Mica
The total exports to Japan for that year were	$28,167,607

Although the future pattern of Japanese trade is far from being clear, it may well be that after a period of Japanese readjustment, Canada will find increasing demands for products which heretofore have entered only in a limited way into our commerce with that country. Over the long term our total trade with Japan may not be too adversely affected.

(4) Suggested international machinery for the administration of long-term economic controls

We consider that administrative machinery along the lines suggested by the Australian Department of External Affairs and also by Mr. Norman, Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo, is indispensable to the proper working of any system of economic controls that includes restrictions on imports. We are not in a position, however, to add materially to the discussion of these proposals that is contained in paragraphs 24 to 27 inclusive, of the Working Paper. It does appear, however, in connection with the four functions of the suggested International Council that are set out in Par. 25, that very special care would have to be taken to enable the Council to work under terms of reference giving the Council clear-cut and ample authority to check infringement of the controls and to call effective action to that end into actual operation without delay once it had been established that infringement had either occurred or was being attempted.

We have noted the four suggestions contained in your concluding Par. 29 with regard to the lines along which further studies of these questions should be pursued, and this Department will proceed with such phases of these studies as we are best equipped to follow.

Yours sincerely,
M.W. MACKENZIE

4e PARTIE/PART 4

RÉPARATIONS ET RESTITUTION
REPARATIONS AND RESTITUTION

164. DTC/Vol. 293

Décret

Order in Council

P.C. 98 Ottawa, January 14, 1947

Whereas the Secretary of State for External Affairs, with the concurrence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, reports as follows:

The Canadian Government was informed on September 23rd, 1946, that the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan had invited each member nation of the Far Eastern Commission desiring to do so, to establish in Tokyo an accredited permanent representation to operate under the executive authority and operational control of the Supreme Commander, such representation not to exceed five individuals from each represented government, who would be capable of acting on routine matters pertaining to reparations removals, restitution, or any other relevant matter which would otherwise require the visit of individual missions. This invitation was confirmed in a memorandum of October 18th, 1946, from the Supreme Commander to the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo.

2. It may be assumed that in the final reparations settlement Canada will receive a percentage allocation of reparations from within Japan. It will therefore be desirable that technical experts representing Canadian firms interested in obtaining Japanese plant and equipment through the Canadian reparations account should make a survey of the appropriate Japanese industries. Representatives of Canadian industry have been consulted on this matter and to date the only firm to express an interest in sending an industrial investigator to Japan for the above-mentioned purpose is Aluminium Limited of Montreal.

3. In addition to the industrial surveys mentioned above, it will be necessary for the Canadian Government to conduct enquiries in Japan in order to secure the return of Canadian property seized during the war, and, in cases where restitution is not possible, to assess the losses sustained by Canadian nationals.

4. The great majority of the Canadian assets in Japan at the beginning of the war were held by the Sun Life Assurance Company of Montreal, Manufacturers Life Insurance Company of Toronto, and Aluminium Limited of Montreal. Owing to the special nature of the work involved in investigating the holdings of the Canadian life insurance companies, it is deemed advisable that an insurance expert be appointed to the five-man team mentioned in paragraph one above to carry out investigations in connection with restitution cases of these two Canadian insurance companies. The industrial investigator whom Aluminium Limited wish to send to Japan in connection with the reparations survey would also be able to carry on some of the restitution work for his company. The extent of minor claims against Japan by private individuals, missionary societies, etc., is not yet sufficiently known to justify the sending of a government official from Canada to Japan at this time; any business arising in this connection may be handled for the present by Canadian officials now in Japan.

5. On the recommendation of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Reparations (established in September, 1945, with the concurrence of Cabinet) the Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association and Aluminium Limited have been invited by the Department of External Affairs to nominate members for this five-man restitution and reparations team and have been informed that the following conditions will govern the appointment of their nominees:

(a) Members of the team will be responsible to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, under whose authority and control all restitution and reparations teams in Japan will be working.

(b) Members of the Canadian team, as Canadian officials, will be responsible for administrative purposes to the Canadian Government through the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

(c) Companies or associations whose representatives are appointed members of this team will be responsible for the pay and expenses of their representatives, both in travelling to and from Japan and during the period they are in Japan. Funds required will be advanced by the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo and will be recovered in Canada from the companies or associations concerned by the Department of External Affairs. In the event that it is necessary for the Canadian Government to ask a member of the team to carry out any substantial duties which bear no relation to the interests of the firms which he represents, the Department of External Affairs will be willing to discuss appropriate adjustments in these financial arrangements.

(d) The Canadian Government will expect all members of the team to render a report on their investigations and this report will become the property of the Canadian Government.

Aluminium Limited and the Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association have accepted these conditions and have nominated candidates for the team.

6. In order to ensure the coordination of the team and the accomplishment of assignments indicated in institutions issued by the Canadian Government, it is expedient that a Canadian official should be appointed to act as chairman of the team. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has agreed that pending the appointment of another government official to the Canadian team, should such an appointment prove necessary, these duties might be assigned to Mr. J. E. Kenderdine, Special Representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce, now attached to the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo.

Now, Therefore, His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs concurred in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, is pleased to order as follows:

1. A Canadian restitution and reparations team for Japan is hereby established in accordance with the terms laid down by the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in his memorandum of October 18, 1946;

2. Members of the Canadian restitution and reparations team are hereby made responsible in the first instance to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers, and, in the second instance, for administrative purposes, to the Canadian Government through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to whom they shall render reports of their investigations;

3. Companies or associations sponsoring members of this team shall be responsible for the pay and expenses of those members, both in travelling to and from Japan and during the period they are in Japan, except as otherwise determined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs;

4. The following are hereby appointed to the above-mentioned team;

Mr. F.F. Ruthven, Engineer, of Aluminium Limited (industrial investigator);

Mr. R.M. Dobson, Secretary, the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada (insurance investigator);

Mr. J.E. Kenderdine, special representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce, Canadian Liaison Mission, Tokyo (chairman);

5. The remaining two places on the team shall be left vacant for the present, to be filled at a later date by representatives of industrial or commercial firms, or by government officials, or by one of each, at the discretion of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

A.D.P. HEENEY

165. DEA/8364-C-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], January 20, 1947

JAPANESE REPARATIONS

Recent reports from Washington indicate that the United States is now on the point of going ahead with interim reparations removals from Japan, and that their current plans are merely awaiting authorization from the Secretary of State. It seems appropriate, therefore, that we should now make a formal reply to the United States aide-memoire of November 5th, 1946 (copy attached),† in which the proposal was made that interested countries should participate in the drafting of interim directives in order to get reparations moving from Japan. A draft reply to the State Department aide-memoire is attached for your approval.[9]

2. Action in the Far Eastern Commission on Japanese reparations was delayed for many months pending negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on methods for allocating reparation shares. The Soviet Union has consistently refused to accept the jurisdiction of the Far Eastern Commission over Japanese external assets, and in negotiations with the United States indicated that they would not agree to a conference until they receive assurance from the United States that the removal of plants and equipment from Manchuria would not be subject to discussion, and that the allotment of reparations assets from Japan to the U.S.S.R. would be determined without regard for these removals. The United States was unwilling to give these assurances and negotiations broke down at this deadlock in October.

3. Since this breakdown in negotiations the United States have been attempting to devise methods to get reparations moving from Japan by circumventing Soviet opposition. The plan they have proposed in their aide-memoire of November 5th is in accordance with the terms of reference of the Far Eastern Commission, the relevant section of which reads:

"The United States Government may issue interim directives to the Supreme Commander pending action by the Commission whenever urgent matters arise not covered by policies already formulated by the Commission."

Their proposal for informal conferences in which interested governments would participate in the formulation of interim directives is obviously designed to evade the Soviet veto in the Far Eastern Commission.

4. The United States proposal has had a cool reception. The Philippines, New Zealand, Australia, China and the Netherlands have given qualified acceptances; the United Kingdom has outlined the instructions they have sent to their Ambassador in the attached telegram (DO No.14 of January 15).† At last reports, France, India and the U.S.S.R. had made no reply.

5. The main points covered in the attached reply to the United States aide-memoire have been communicated to the United Kingdom and the United States authorities as representing Canadian views at the official level. The suggestion that the matter be referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers was not greeted with much enthusiasm, and the emphasis in our formal reply has therefore been put on the desirability of a further effort within the Far Eastern Commission to reach an agreement on the procedure to be followed in allocating Japanese reparations before directives are issued covering a final comprehensive reparations settlement. As recent reports indicate that the United States Government is at present contemplating directives which will cover the removal of only 15 or 20% of the estimated reparations pool this draft reply should therefore not prejudice our position if at a [9]Voir le document suivant.

See immediately following document.

later date the United States decide to go ahead with directives covering the final reparations settlement.

L.B. P[EARSON]

166. DTC/Vol. 293

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister in United States

TELEGRAM EX-238 Ottawa, January 28, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL. FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Your WA-309 of January 27th, Japanese Reparations.

Following text of aide memoire for transmission to State Department has received ministerial approval, Begins: "The Canadian Government has carefully studied the proposals concerning the Japanese reparations question set forth in the State Department aide memoire of November 5th, 1946. While the procedure outlined therein is recognized as admissible under the terms of reference of the Far Eastern Commission, nevertheless, the Canadian Government is concerned lest the plan proposed by the United States Government might prejudice the future effective discharge by the Far Eastern Commission of its designated responsibilities, and might have unfortunate repercussions on other international bodies.

Of the various considerations in favour of immediate action on Japanese reparations, the Canadian Government attaches the greatest importance to the stabilization of the Japanese economy at peacetime levels. It is felt to be desirable that decision on the level of industry for Japan be reached before any action is taken on reparations removals, and that these decisions be made within the Far Eastern Commission. The Canadian Government has noted with satisfaction that an effort is now being made in the Far Eastern Commission to devise methods for speeding the work on these matters.

The Canadian Government fully appreciates the patient efforts on the part of the United States Government and the Soviet Government over a considerable period to reach a basis of agreement for settling the Japanese reparations problem, but doubts that the failure of bilateral conversations fully warrants, at this time, the issuance by the United States Government to the Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers of interim directives covering the final comprehensive reparations settlement. It is felt that a further effort should be made within the Far Eastern Commission to reach an agreement on the procedure to be followed in allocating Japanese reparations to the Allied Nations. The Canadian Government would be willing to accept a procedure which does not specifically indicate how the problem of Japanese external assets is to be handled.

As the question of the jurisdiction of the Far Eastern Commission over Japanese external assets has been an obstacle to progress in previous discussions of the reparations problem within the Commission, the Canadian Government has been of the opinion that the deadlock might be broken if the matter were referred to the Council of Foreign Ministers, by whom the terms of reference of the Commission were drafted in December, 1945. It recognizes that owing to pressure of other urgent problems, the Foreign Ministers may not be in a position to discuss this question in the near future, but it is suggested that if other methods fail to produce a solution consideration be given to this procedure before all hope of reaching a settlement acceptable to the various nations concerned is abandoned.

If, in the light of the above considerations, the United States Government nevertheless feels that the various factors mentioned in the State Department aide memoire make it imperative to proceed without further delay with an interim reparations programme, covering the removal of say fifteen or twenty percent of the estimated reparations pool to certain designated countries, the Canadian Government would be willing to participate in the drawing up of interim directives covering such a programme, provided that:

(a) Such directives would be without prejudice to the final reparations settlement; and

(b) The United States Government has reasonable assurance that the countries to receive reparations items under an interim programme are in a position to remove the items concerned from Japan and put them to use without undue delay." Ends.

In presenting this aide memoire to the State Department, your representative might indicate that what we have in mind in the last sentence of paragraph three of the text is that the Soviet Union should be given an opportunity to accept a face saving formula by which they would receive a very moderate share of reparations from within Japan. The whole question of external assets might go unmentioned and any allowance for Soviet gains in Manchuria would be tacit and inferential.

167. DEA/8364-R-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la mission de liaison au Japon

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Liaison Mission in Japan

DESPATCH 85 Ottawa, February 4, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I am enclosing with this confidential despatch a formal letter of instructions to Mr. Kenderdine† in his capacity of Chairman of the Canadian Restitution and Reparations Team for Japan, together with a copy of Order-in-Council P.C. 98 of January 14th.[10] Copies of this letter should be made available to the other members of the team. Since we have as yet little precise information concerning the nature of the responsibilities of the team regarding restitution and reparations matters, the manner in which they will be expected to discharge them and the nature of the controls that will be exercised over their activities by the Civil Property Custodian and other sections of the Supreme Commander's staff, we have drawn up these instructions in very general terms. We would therefore greatly appreciate your keeping us fully informed of the official relations of the team with the Supreme Commander's Headquarters and in particular of what team members are expected to do in their work on restitution and reparations. In addition, we would like to have any unofficial indications which you may receive as to the direction in which reparations and restitution matters are moving in Japan.

[10]Document 164.

2. In view of our scanty knowledge of the proposed scope of activities of the Restitution and Reparations Team, the initial appointments are intended to provide only a skeleton team. We recognize that if the Supreme Commander's Headquarters expect team members to perform a large part of the work in connection with restitution claims, the tasks assigned to Mr. Kenderdine relating to restitution may become more onerous than he could conveniently discharge in conjunction with his other duties as Chairman of the team and as special representative of the Department of Trade and Commerce. If such a situation arises, we will have to give further consideration to enlarging and possibly changing the personnel of the team.

3. At present we are unable to assess accurately the various factors which will affect future appointments to or changes in the team. With regard to reparations, we do not expect the slight interest shown by Canadian industry in Japanese reparations to increase very substantially in the future, particularly in view of the absence of any international settlement of the problem of allocating shares. While it appears unlikely that we shall find it desirable to appoint other members to the team to carry out inspection of facilities available for reparation, nevertheless we feel it is wise for the present to hold a place available on the team for another industrial investigator, until the situation clarifies further.

4. The restitution picture is equally obscure. I understand that a certain number of restitution claims have already been sent to you. In addition, we have on file a number of claims which have been transferred from the Custodian's Office to this Department. Further information with regard to their claims is now being sought from the claimants and in due course these claims, numbering approximately thirty, will be forwarded to you. As you are aware, no publicity has yet been given with respect to filing of claims with regard to property rights in Japan and it is likely that, when this is done, other claims will be received by this Department. You will appreciate that we are unable to estimate how extensive the work involved in processing these claims in Tokyo is likely to be.

5. Another factor which will have a bearing on future appointments to the restitution team is a request which we have received from the Custodian's Office that one of the remaining places be held available for an officer of that Department since they anticipate the need of certain investigations in Japan relating to the work of the Custodian's Office.

6. Clarification of the above mentioned points together with all information you can supply us on the work of the team in Japan will enable us in a few months time to consider whether any changes in the present set-up of the team are necessary. Any advice you may be able to send us concerning personnel requirements of the team as they become apparent in Japan would be helpful to us.

7. With regard to the other members of the team as now appointed, I do not expect that you will encounter any difficulties in connection with Mr. Dobson's work, since his task of straightening out the affairs of the Sun Life Assurance Company and the Manufacturers' Life Insurance Company is fairly well defined. You should not hesitate to ask Mr. Dobson, if necessary, to assist Mr. Kenderdine in handling some of the restitution work. This arrangement was made part of the conditions of Mr. Dobson's appointment and was accepted by the Insurance Companies concerned. Should it appear likely that Mr. Dobson may be required to spend much time on business which does not relate to the affairs of the Insurance Companies, you should inform us, if possible in advance, so that adjustments in the financial arrangements could be made, as specified in Paragraph 5(c) of the Order-in-Council.

8. As you know, Aluminium Limited have expressed an interest in obtaining certain aluminium plants and a caustic soda plant on the Canadian reparations account. The main purpose of Mr. Ruthven's visit, therefore, is to inspect whatever Japanese industrial facilities of the types mentioned may be available for reparations removal. As in the case of Mr. Dobson, we have reserved the right to ask Mr. Ruthven to do a certain amount of work relating to reparations, but not specifically concerned with the interests of Aluminium Limited. If it seems desirable that certain tasks of this kind be allotted to Mr. Ruthven, such as the inspection of reparations facilities other than those in the aluminium industry, you should follow the procedure outlined above in the last sentence of Paragraph 7.

9. In addition to their interest in reparations, however, Aluminium Limited is most anxious to secure the restitution of their interests in Aluminium Sumitomo and its subsidiaries. They requested permission to send another man whose specific job would be to attend to these restitution matters, but in view of the Supreme Commander's objection to changing the personnel of the teams from time to time, we did not feel able to allocate another place on the five-man team to them. We suggested, therefore, that Mr. Ruthven be briefed on the details of Aluminium Limited's restitution case. Consequently he will no doubt wish to spend a certain amount of time on this restitution work.

10. As you know, Aluminium Limited are interested in conferring power of attorney on certain of their former employees in Japan so that the people in question could carry on this restitution work. We are awaiting your advice in this connection. You have probably noted that in our letter to Aluminium Secretariat Limited of January 10th (forwarded to you under cover of despatch No. 35 of January 15th) we assured them that their interests in Japan were being properly looked after and that whatever policy was developed with regard to the disposition of property of United Nations nationals declared surplus to the peacetime level of Japanese industry, their case would be accorded the same consideration as given to firms of other Allied nations, with similar holdings in Japan. We do not wish to secure any special privileges for Aluminium Limited, but we will expect you to inform us if there is any indication of unfair treatment with regard to their holdings.

11. The financial arrangements for Mr. Dobson and Mr. Ruthven will be as specified in Paragraph 5(c) of the Order-in-Council. We will request the Sun Life Assurance Company and Aluminium Limited to advance funds to the Department here and you will be informed what amounts you are authorized to advance to Mr. Dobson and Mr. Ruthven in Tokyo.

12. With regard to Paragraph 4 of the letter of instructions to Mr. Kenderdine, we have had no recent communications from the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs on the subject of co-operation between Commonwealth Restitution Teams. We informed the Dominions Office in November that the Canadian Team would probably consist of three members one of whom would be an expert in aluminium processing and fabrication. Background information was sent to Canada House in the expectation that some discussion would take place in London on the co-ordination of Commonwealth Restitution Teams, but nothing further has developed. Possibly the matter will be raised again in Tokyo and should this occur, Mr. Kenderdine should indicate that we are quite amenable to arranging some exchange of information.

13. We will endeavour to impress upon Mr. Dobson and Mr. Ruthven their responsibilities as Canadian Government officials in Japan. We are particularly anxious that no expression of Canada's interest in either reparations or restitution matters be made by anyone other than Mr. Kenderdine and yourself.

I have etc.

L.B. PEARSON
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

168. PCO/W-38

Note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum for Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET Ottawa, August 30, 1947

JAPANESE REPARATIONS — DIVISION OF SHARES

Little progress has been made in recent months in the Far Eastern Commission towards solving the problem of dividing the shares of Japanese reparations between the Far Eastern Commission member countries, and there is now a danger of the negotiations reaching an impasse. The Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission has recommended that we produce a detailed schedule of the percentage shares which we consider that each of the eleven Far Eastern Commission member countries should receive as reparations from Japanese industrial assets. We should therefore like to be in a position to have our representative announce at the F.E.C. Reparations Committee meeting next Wednesday morning (September 3rd) that he has been authorized to submit a detailed schedule.

2. On April 23rd, 1947, a memorandum on Japanese Reparations† was submitted for your consideration, and you agreed that the Group Schedule, recommended in paragraph 8 of the memorandum, should be submitted to the Far Eastern Commission with the tentative support of the Canadian Government. This schedule was as follows:

Group I	China United States	50%
Group II	Australia India Netherlands Philippines United Kingdom (including Burma and colonies)	41%
Group III	Canada France New Zealand U.S.S.R.	9%

3. At that time it was felt that it would not be appropriate for us to submit a detailed schedule of percentages, in view of the modesty of our claim in comparison with those of other countries which had made greater contributions in the war against Japan. Although this consideration, which was the underlying basis of the recommendation not to go beyond submitting the group schedule, has not itself altered, the circumstances of more recent developments in the Far Eastern Commission have now made it desirable that we should present a detailed list of percentage shares for each of the eleven Far Eastern Commission member countries.

4. All of the delegates to the Far Eastern Commission have now presented their country's official schedule, with the exception of the Australian member who is under instructions to oppose any further progress in the Far Eastern Commission towards settling the division of reparations shares. His Government wishes the matter to be deferred until the Peace Conference. Of the official schedules so far tabled, only the Canadian and the Chinese are on a group basis and not detailed.

5. We have always taken the view that the Far Eastern Commission should continue its work on all matters, rather than leave questions in abeyance with the expectation that they would be solved in the near future, at the Peace Conference. The more progress which the Far Eastern Commission can make in formulating policies and reaching agreements, the greater will be its contribution to the success of the Peace Conference.

6. In the case of the reparations question, it is considered that the task of the Peace Conference in arriving at a final division of reparations shares will be considerably simplified if the Far Eastern Commission is able to present it with two working schedules as follows:

(a) the percentage each country claims

(b) the average of the percentages allotted to each country by all the others.

7. So far there has been no objection raised by any member of the Far Eastern Commission to the Canadian claim of 1½%, and no country has allotted to Canada a figure below this. If the Canadian and the Chinese group schedules were to be broken down into eleven detailed percentages, it would doubtless serve to keep discussions in the Far Eastern Commission going forward and thus avoid a complete deadlock which would have the effect of nullifying the efforts made by the Far Eastern Commission Reparations Committee since January 1946.

8. It is therefore recommended that the following schedule be submitted by the Canadian representative on the Far Eastern Commission as the revised tentative official Canadian schedule. For purposes of comparison, the percentage claimed by each Far Eastern Commission member country is also listed:

	Recommended Schedule	Percentage Claimed by each country
Australia	8	28.0
Canada	1.5	1.5
China	22	40.0
France	3	12.0
India	7	12.5
Netherlands	6	12.0
New Zealand	2	2.0
Philippines	7	15.0
U.S.S.R.	3.5	12.0
United Kingdom	14	25.0
United States	26	29.0

169. DTC/Vol. 329

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre du Commerce

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce

Ottawa, November 14, 1947

Dear Sir:

DIVISION OF REPARATIONS SHARES OF JAPANESE INDUSTRIAL FACILITIES

I refer to teletype No. WA-3524 of November 6th from Washington,† a copy of which was referred to you on November 7th, concerning the latest United States proposal for the division of reparations shares of Japanese industrial facilities.

You will note that this proposal has been put forward as a take it or leave it proposition, and it is probable that this will represent the last opportunity which the Far Eastern Commission will have before the peace conference to overcome this major stumbling block and break the deadlock on the division of reparations.

If the 18% of their share offered by the United States to the other Far Eastern Commission member countries were to be divided among them according to their relative shares under the United States schedule, they would receive increments as follows:

	Proposed U.S. Schedule	Pro-Rata Increase	Final Percentage	Official Canadian
Australia	8	2	10	8
Canada	1	.25	1.25	1.5
China	30	7.5	37.5	22
France	2	.5	2.5	3
India	4	1	5	7
Netherlands	4	1	5	6
New Zealand	1	.25	1.25	2
Philippines	8	2	10	7
U.S.S.R.	4	1	5	3.5
United Kingdom	10	2.5	12.5	14
United States	28		10	26
	100	18	100	100

The official Canadian schedule, which has not been released is given in the last column for ease of comparison. You will note that under the United States proposal our percentage share would be reduced by .25%.

China's demand for 40%, however, is virtually met under this arrangement and consequently the United States proposal will probably prove acceptable to them, particularly since the average of the percentages allotted to China by the other members averages less than 25%.

There are many important considerations which may lead the other Far Eastern countries which suffered material devastation during the war to accept this proposal. The most important of these is the fact that the delay in deciding upon the division of reparations shares is seriously holding up the economic recovery and rehabilitation of many Far Eastern areas. Largely owing to seriously disturbed political and economic conditions, as well as the weakened financial positions of some of these countries, since the end of hostilities, very little has been accomplished in the last two years in the way of actual reconstruction. It appears that for the next few years at least, the greater part of the United States foreign aid programme is likely to be concentrated on Europe under the Marshall Plan. With little prospect of United States help, the Far Eastern countries naturally attach great importance to the hope of getting Japanese industrial plants for their reconstruction.

Another factor is that the Japanese industrial facilities which will be removed as reparations are rapidly depreciating and becoming obsolete, so that their ultimate value to the recipient countries will probably be much less than if the whole reparations removals programme were to get under way in the very near future. It is obvious that if these removals were to be undertaken during the occupation, not only would the programme be carried out more efficiently and thoroughly, but also the presence of the United States forces would provide an important element of compulsion which would be lacking after the peace conference. Moreover, as long as the facilities are allowed to remain in Japan, they constitute a threat to the security of the Pacific powers.

Since world recovery is largely bound up with a restoration of normal production and international trade, we feel that it would be in the interests of all concerned if the other Far Eastern Commission member countries were to realize that it would be more profitable to them to accept a small share now than to continue to hold out in the hope that they may be able to get a much larger share later. As it is problematical how much value a larger share would have to them after the peace conference anyway, there exists the possibility that certain countries may wish to use the reparations issue at the peace conference as a bargaining counter to gain other concessions which they may consider to be of greater importance. For such political motives we feel that the Soviet [sic] may reject the United States proposal. The remaining six countries should, however, be disposed to accept it as offering at least as good terms as they would probably get anyway.

Our attitude is influenced by the fact that among other things, all enquiries made by the Department of Trade and Commerce have so far indicated a complete lack of interest on the part of Canadian industry in securing any industrial plants from Japan, with the single exception of the Aluminum Company Limited, which may wish to buy one aluminum plant if we can get it. It is therefore possible that an abandonment of .25% of our claim to Japanese internal industrial assets would seem to be a small sacrifice to make considering the advantages which could be gained by an early settlement of the reparations question, especially if its solution were to result in China's decision to attend, without her veto, a peace conference boycotted by the Soviet. Furthermore, we have consistently held that the solution of this major problem would contribute substantially to the success of the forthcoming peace conference. It would be of great importance to Canada's future international position if, by a concession on the part of China, a peace conference should be held in which we participate on a footing equal to China and the other great powers. If, as predicted above, the majority of the other countries are prepared to accept the United States proposal, we feel that it would be well for us to indicate that we are prepared to sacrifice part of our very modest claim which was regarded by the other Far Eastern Commission member countries as very reasonable, and was acceptable to them as it stood on July 25th last.

We would be glad to have at your earliest convenience, your views on whether or not we should support the United States proposal, as we feel that, if it should be desirable for us to make a positive statement on this matter, the importance that would be attached to our position would be greatly increased if we were to do so at the earliest possible opportunity.

Yours sincerely,
DAVID M. JOHNSON
for Acting Under-Secretary of State
for External Affairs

5e PARTIE/PART 5

CRIMES DE GUERRE
WAR CRIMES

170. DEA/4060-C-40

Note de la Direction juridique
pour la Conférence du Commonwealth, Canberra

Memorandum by Legal Division for Commonwealth Conference, Canberra

[Ottawa], August 18, 1947

JAPANESE PEACE SETTLEMENT: "WAR CRIMINALS"

A—Canada's Participation to Date:

1. The United Nations War Crimes Commission together with its Collateral Commission for the Investigation of War Crimes was set up in October, 1943 with the primary objects of investigating and recording the evidence of war crimes, identifying when possible the individuals responsible, reporting to the Government concerned cases in which it appears that adequate evidence may be expected to be forthcoming, and, as extended later, giving of advice to Governments on technical questions of law and procedure. This work was regarded as an essential preliminary to ensure the just and orderly trial of war criminals.

2. In connection with this Commission, several countries decided at the same time, in view of the considerable number of atrocities committed either on their respective soil, or against their respective nationals, to create a special national organization to cope with the problem. It is for that reason that we founded a War Crime Bureau in France, an Enemy War Crimes Investigation Committee in China, a Special Investigation Organization in Russia, and a War Crimes Investigation Unit at the Canadian Military Headquarters in London, working in collaboration with the War Crimes Section of National Defence in Ottawa, and with the Canadian War Crimes Advisory Committee.

3. This first step was followed by the Moscow Declaration on German atrocities of 1943, which laid down that at the time of granting the Armistice to Germany (and to Japan) the handing over of war criminals should be required in order that they might be sent back to the countries in which their crimes had been committed to be judged and punished according to the laws of those countries. The Declaration redefined and made concrete the principles and procedure which were to be applied to the prosecution and trial of the war criminals, and was also to be utilized to show the German (and Japanese) people the firm resolution of bringing war criminals to justice. On the other hand it gave assurance against unorganized revenge.

4. As it was apparent, however, that in certain cases, the National Courts would be inadequate to deal with war crimes, for the ordinary rules and procedures would not be adaptable to the extraordinary circumstances in which the crimes were committed, it was advocated that special United Nations Tribunals or mixed Allied Military Tribunals for the trial of enemy nationals alleged to have been involved in atrocities should be organized and established. Certain cases indeed would have to be tried before special United Nations Tribunals, rather than by National Courts.

5. While the United Nations War Crimes Commission had jurisdiction over, and was responsible for, all war crimes committed in the European sector as well as the Eastern area, a plan was approved providing for joint military investigation and prosecution by all interested countries of Japanese war criminals, with the Supreme Commander in the Far East establishing International Military Tribunals for the trials. The organization in the field for the prosecution of war criminals under the jurisdiction of General MacArthur consisted of a unit of his special staff, known as the Legal Section, of which Colonel A.C. Carpenter was the chief. Any other country, however, whose nationals had been victims of atrocities were given the right to assist in prosecuting cases involving such atrocities by providing members for the Military Commission trying the cases, and also the members of the Prosecution Staff. This permitted some sort of centralization in one office of the work of all nations concerned in those crimes.

6. It was for that purpose that the Canadian Government created a Crimes Advisory Committee which was to work with the various similar organizations in other countries, like in the United States and the United Kingdom, and which would especially direct its activities towards the question of Far Eastern War Crimes. It may be pointed out here that though the examination of the Charter of the International Military Tribunal in the Far East did not indicate any connection between it and the United Nations War Crimes Commission, it still came under the latter's jurisdiction as the United Nations War Crimes Commission had been created for dealing with war crimes in all theatres.

7. Meanwhile, a preliminary screening of reports from liberated prisoners of war from the Far East had been carried on by officers of National Defence.

8. In November, 1945 the United States put forward some proposals for dealing with Far Eastern war criminals of all grades, which proposals the Canadian Government soon afterwards accepted. These proposals considered three classes of trials of war criminals, as follows:

Type 1 (a) Trials of those responsible for conspiracy to break the peace.

Type 1 (b) Trials of those responsible for atrocities during occupation.

Type 1 (c) Trials of those responsible for individual acts of atrocities.

9. It was understood then that the job of dealing with the first two classes would rest principally upon the United States, seconded by the British authorities. The Canadian Government would mainly deal with the third category, namely Type 1 (c), since Canada would not be setting up its own military courts. Indeed, as Canada was not going to be an occupying force we were to depend on the British or the United States authorities to convene courts for the trial of any cases which Canada was interested in prosecuting. In those cases Canada was required to prepare the case and provide a prosecuting officer. However, Canada was permitted to have a military representative on the court if this was desired.

10. As far as the Canadian Government was concerned it was also decided, when the case of the Canadian-born Japanese Kanao Inouye came up for trial under the Canadian Treachery Act, that all cases of Far East war criminals would be dealt with in Japan or Hong Kong.

11. Moreover, as by international law, a belligerent as such may try and punish war criminals, that there must also be trial before punishment, and that the belligerent may make provision in a manner appropriate to its jurisprudence for the procedure to be followed at such trials, it became evident that the Canadian Government needed a proper vehicle for giving itself the power of carrying on this obligation and to provide for the punishment of enemy war criminals by Canadian military courts and authorities, this was resolved by the passing, under the War Measures Act, of the War Crimes Regulations on September 10, 1945.

12. The frame of the Organization having been set up, it was now a question of sending the appropriate officers within this organization as to have Canada represented as one of the Allies, as Canada had also to share with the other nations the general responsibility of ensuring the proper trial of the Far East war criminals.

13. The Canadian Army supplied most of the men for these proceedings by sending a group of eight officers and two warrant-officers, all engaged in the trial and prosecution of Japanese war criminals on behalf of the Canadian Government. Brigadier H.G. Nolan was sent to Japan as associate prosecutor of the Major War Crimes Trials while Colonel Thomas Moss, M.C.,K.C., (who was later replaced, because of ill health, by Lieutenant-Colonel Griffin) was appointed at the request of the Government of the United States as law member of military commissions trying lesser war criminals, together with Major J.T. Loranger who was detailed to Hong Kong at the request of the Government of the United Kingdom.

14. The whole body of the Canadian officers was designated as the Canadian War Crimes Liaison Detachment in Japan, working before the military commissions with a Sub-Detachment in Hong Kong. Also in order to give to the Military Tribunal some sort of an "international flavour" in the trying of major Japanese war criminals, Canada was also invited to have a member on the International Tribunal, and the Honourable, Mr. Justice E.S. MacDougall was appointed for that position. This organization and the personnel has remained pretty well the same ever since its appointment, and by May, 1947 Canada had three classes of persons concerned with the Trials of war criminals in the Pacific area:

(a) Those participating in the trial of major Far Eastern war criminals;

Honourable Mr. Justice E.S. MacDougall (Judge)
Brigadier H.G. Nolan (Prosecutor)

(b) Canadian investigation team in Tokyo under Lieutenant-Colonel J.F. Orr with a Sub-Detachment in Hong Kong.

(c) Military Judicial officers whose duties were to participate in the trials of lesser war criminals, represented in Tokyo by Lt. Col. M.J. Griffin and in Hong Kong by Major J.T. Loranger as members of the United States and United Kingdom Military Courts respectively.

15. As this memo is being written, the following situation exists with regard to those three classes of persons mentioned above:

(a) The International Military Tribunal, (major Far Eastern War Criminals) is adjourned from June 23 to the end of August, acting on the motion of the Defence that they need time to prepare for a Pacific phase. Earlier this year, the Defence also succeeded in securing three weeks adjournment on similar grounds. We have been informed that Defence tactics are to drag out the trial interminably, and this last adjournment will more likely result in protracting the trial for at least another three months. The trial of Premier Tojo et al is not expected to terminate earlier than the end of 1947 and possibly may extend into 1948. Upon its completion, there will no doubt be the usual process of confirmation of sentence, appeals from sentence, pleas for clemency, and so on.

(b) It was announced on May 16, 1947 that the Canadian Division of the Legal Section (Investigation Team) composed of five Canadian officers, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel J.F. Orr had completed their work on the minor war crimes trials in Japan and subsequently they sailed for Canada. During the period of the year ending in April, 1947 Lieutenant-Colonel Orr and his officers took part in the prosecution of a total of forty-seven war criminals in Japan. There were six common trials involving twenty-five defendants and twenty-two individual trials. The sentences varied from several years to twenty, thirty and forty years, and to hanging. These criminals were the Japanese that the prisoners of war came in personal contact with. They were camp commanders, camp staffs and guards.

Major G.B. Puddicombe, in charge of the Canadian Sub-Detachment in Hong Kong acted as prosecutor during the same period and secured convictions against eleven war criminals. Five of these were tried at one time in a very lengthy camp trial. The total therefore of war criminals tried and sentenced in the Far East and in whom Canada was vitally interested is fifty-eight.

Aside from prosecuting cases, this Canadian Division also acted as a liaison between the Legal Section and the repatriated Canadian prisoners of War.

(c) Any substantial Canadian interest in the trials involving lesser war criminals has ceased, and full retribution in the form of sentences of hanging and long imprisonment has been exacted from the Japanese war criminals who were particularly culpable in respect of Canadian prisoners of war. In fact, it is so that the withdrawal of our representative in Japan, Lieut-Col. Griffin, has been agreed upon by the Department of National Defence with the concurrence of the Department of External Affairs and the U.S. authorities, without a replacement being necessary, and our representative at Hong Kong, Major J.T. Loranger might remain there, only because requested by the U.K. Government, with the possibility of being appointed President of the British War Crimes Court in Hong Kong.

16. In view of the above, it may therefore be concluded that as far as Canada is concerned, all the accused war criminals in which we had a special interest have now been tried and sentenced in Japan and Hong Kong; there remain approximately thirty cases in Japan in which Canada is concerned to a slight extent. They will be prosecuted by representatives of the United States, United Kingdom, and other nations against whose nationals the great bulk of their particular crimes were alleged to have been committed. These cases have been taken care of by handing over affidavits of Canadian prisoners of war, and other material, with relevant documents, to the American Group who, being the parties primarily interested, are conducting the actual prosecution. There is finally a Japanese Major General in Hong Kong against whom there are Canadian specifications and who will be tried by the British Military Tribunal in that city.

As experience has demonstrated that investigation of a case against a particular war criminal discloses the probability that lesser war crimes had been committed by others, usually subordinate to the party under investigation, and that this state of affairs could progress "ad infinitum", the United Kingdom authorities at the beginning of 1947 decided to release minor Japanese war criminals which action was agreed to by the Canadian authorities, diminishing thereby considerably the cases in which we would have been interested.

A copy of an article on War Crimes Trials,† written by Major W.P. McClemont, E.D. of the Directorate of Administration in the Branch of the Adjutant-General, Canadian Army Headquarters, has been attached to this memo for reference by the Delegation; the interesting detailed information contained in it may be useful in completing the general outline of this memo.

B—Possible Provisions for the Japanese Peace Treaty:

17. It would appear from the foregoing that the responsibility still to be assumed by Canada in this question of war criminals in the Far East, and particularly with regard to the coming Peace Treaty with Japan, would be as follows:

(a) To ensure that the Peace Treaty contains the necessary general clauses with respect to Japanese war criminals still to be tried by other countries, or who might unexpectedly still have to be tried for crimes against Canadians, and which would guarantee therefrom the establishment and maintenance of international law and order — in demonstrating that war crimes do not pay.

On that point it has been suggested by Lieutenant Colonel Orr that though the definition of war crimes appeared to be well understood in text books on military and international law, some general recognition of the definition on the part of the Japanese would be most desirable. In other words, the Japanese should admit the existence of war crimes as such in the Treaty and should further admit that their nationals had committed them and that it was equitable as well as just that such persons should have been tried for these crimes, and finally that their convictions and sentences were a logical result of their unlawful actions.

It should be noted indeed that the Japanese were not signatories to the Geneva Convention prior to World War II and that they do not therefore consider that what we define as war crimes are anything other than the operations of war. Accordingly, the greatest care should be taken to have them admit the unlawfulness of war crimes and the justice of prosecuting the perpetrators of them.

(b) That the Peace Treaty also contains the necessary clauses which would bring about the detailed legal implementation of what had already been done on the matter. This would imply:

(i) That all convictions and sentences should be confirmed by the Treaty in some general terms and that it would be desirable to have the Japanese signify their full acceptance and agreement of what has taken place in respect of war crimes trials, and the present and future disposition of war criminals.

(ii) That the serving of sentences should be carried out in full, once they have been confirmed by military authorities. We have been informed, however, that this confirmation has not yet taken place.

(iii) That limited amnesty along broader lines than that already suggested by the United Kingdom might be desirable. This should include all crimes not likely to merit capital punishment. In the same direction, sentences might be mitigated by the application of any existing local laws of general application; it should be remembered, however, that, in this regard, Japanese law is quite generous in remitting sentences after a portion of same has been served.

(iv) That all sentences imposed in Japan be served in that country.

In connection with the question of amnesty, special reference was made by Lieutenant-Colonel Orr of the Department of National Defence to Lieutenant Kato from Niigata Camp, to the persons responsible for the murder of Canadian priests in the Philippines, and to the persons responsible for the execution of Flying Officer Siddall R.A.F. and Warrant Officers Low and Smith, R.C.A.F. These are the types of war criminals to whom such amnesty should not be made applicable and in respect of whom the honour of Canada should demand punishment. It might be mentioned here that some of these war criminals have been recently apprehended, but that the preparation of the cases against them is not fully complete, nor have they been too well identified. In the case of the Philippine priests, the suspected criminals have not yet been apprehended.

(c) That provisions be made for the question of the property of war criminals which has been impounded and blocked in accordance with the basic directive issued by the Post-Surrender Military Government. Though this question will most probably be handled by the U.S. authorities, it would be appropriate for Canada to be in a position to discuss the matter, especially with reference to confidential memorandum F.E.C.-204/1, March 10, 1947, copies of which are attached.†

18. It may be noted that in the Instrument of Japan's Surrender signed at Tokyo Bay, 1945 the only mention of war criminals was made by the fact that the Japanese signatories accepted the provisions set forth at Potsdam, namely the Potsdam Declaration of July, 1945 which provided for the dealing of all war crimes by the Allied powers. It read as follows:

"We do not intend that the Japanese shall be enslaved as a race or destroyed as a nation, but stern justice shall be meted out to all war criminals including those who have visited cruelties upon our prisoners."

The terms in the Instrument of Japan's Surrender with regard to this point may be found in the attached copy of same.†

19. Its acceptance did, of course, leave complete freedom to the Allies in the question of the trial of Japanese war criminals as well as in the insertion of whichever clause they would think best to insert into the coming Treaty of Peace with Japan. In this connection, it might be useful, however, to mention Article 45 of the Peace Treaty with Italy with regard to war criminals which would appear to be presumably the best precedent for the case in question, and which has so far proved to be quite satisfactory for dealing with the problem in Italy. The text states indeed:

"1. Italy shall take all necessary steps to ensure the apprehension and surrender for trial of:

(a) Persons accused of having committed, ordered or abetted war crimes and crimes against peace or humanity;

(b) Nationals of any Allied or Associated Power accused of having violated their national law by treason or collaboration with the enemy during the war.

2. At the request of the United Nations Government concerned, Italy shall likewise make available as witnesses persons within its jurisdiction, whose evidence is required for the trial of the persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. Any disagreement concerning the application of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be referred by any of the Governments concerned to the Ambassador in Rome of the Soviet Union, of the United Kingdom, of the United States of America, and of France, who will reach agreement with regard to the difficulty."

20. To sum up, it may be said that the following points should particularly retain the attention of the Canadian Delegation throughout the Canberra discussions:

(a) To bear in mind that Canada has never taken an over-active interest in the United Nations War Crimes Commission, though we always have had a representative on this Organization;

(b) That the Canadian interest in enemy war crimes in the Far East has never been so extensive as that of other countries like the United States of America, Australia, China and the United Kingdom.

(c) That therefore Canada's interests in the matter are much more of a general nature than of specific obligations, namely the maintenance of international law and order and the safeguarding of the accepted laws and usages of war together with the proper application of justice.

(d) Accordingly, it would be appropriate for the Canadian Delegation not to take the lead in the discussion of this particular subject, but to give its support to, and informally approve, any proposal which would appear to guarantee the maintenance of the above mentioned principles of international law and order and to assure the application of the various points outlined in paragraph 17 of this memorandum.

6e PARTIE/PART 6

COMITÉ DU CABINET SUR LES PROBLÈMES JAPONAIS/QUESTIONS
CABINET COMMITTEE ON JAPANESE PROBLEMS/QUESTIONS

171. PCO/Vol. 84

Extrait d'un rapport de la réunion du Comité du Cabinet sur les problèmes japonais

Extract from Report on Meeting of Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems

SECRET Ottawa, January 13, 1947

The sixth meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems was held in the Privy Council Chamber, on Friday, January 10, 1947, at 11:00 a.m.

Present:

The Minister of Labour,
(Mr. H. Mitchell) in the chair,
The Minister of Veterans Affairs,
(Mr. I.A. Mackenzie),
The Solicitor General,
(Mr. J. Jean),

Also present:

The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
(Mr. L.B. Pearson),
The Deputy Minister of Labour,
(Mr. A. MacNamara),
From Prime Minister's Office,
(Mr. R.G. Robertson),
From Dept. of Labour,
(Mr. A.H. Brown),
From Dept. of External Affairs,
(Mr. A.R. Menzies),
From Department of Justice,
(Mr. D.W. Mundell),
(Mr. D.H.W. Henry),
Counsel to Custodian of Enemy Property,
(Mr. K.W. Wright),
From Dept. of Veterans Affairs,
(Mr. O.C. Elliott),
From Privy Council Office,
(Mr. Raymond Ranger, Secretary)

I. DEPORTATION AND CONTROL OVER MOVEMENT OF JAPANESE

The Minister of Labour reviewed the reports (Documents "A"† and "B1"†) on the repatriation and relocation of Japanese and recommended:

(a) that Japanese who do not wish to be repatriated be not deported; and

(b) that the control over movement of Japanese be continued for a year or two until these persons had become more settled in their new locations. (Documents "A" and "B1" circulated December 13, 1946).

2. The Committee, after considerable discussion, agreed to make the following recommendations to Cabinet:

(a) that no action be taken to deport any persons of Japanese race under Order-in-Council P.C. 7355, December 15, 1945, but that financial assistance, authorized to voluntary repatriates, be continued under Order-in-Council P.C. 7355; and

(b) that control over movement in Canada of Japanese persons be continued for a year or two.

. . .

III. STATUS OF CANADIAN JAPANESE RETURNING TO CANADA

5. Mr. Robertson inquired as to the status of Canadian Japanese who, at their request, were repatriated to Japan, and now wished to return to Canada.

6. Mr. Pearson stated that, due to the fact that these persons were Canadian, they could not be refused permission to return to Canada. He explained, however, that it was most difficult to obtain passage to Canada, and that these persons would not be able to return for some time.

7. Mr. Robertson further inquired if naturalized Canadians of Japanese origin, who had been repatriated, could not be considered as having been deported, in which case they would come under Order-in-Council P.C. 7356, December 15, 1945, which provides that all naturalized Canadians of Japanese origin, deported from Canada, lost their citizenship upon deportation.

8. After considerable discussion, the Committee agreed that this question be referred to the Secretary of State Department and Justice Department for further study, and that a report be made to this Committee as soon as possible.

. . .

RAYMOND RANGER
Secretary

172. DEA/50076-40

Rapport du Comité du Cabinet sur les questions japonaises

Report of Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions

[Ottawa], January 22, 1947

PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE

At the meeting of the Cabinet on January 22nd, it was agreed, with respect to the report of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions, presented to Cabinet on January 16th, as follows:

(a) that action be taken at once to revoke the provisions of the existing Order-in-Council respecting deportation of persons of Japanese race; provision for financial assistance to voluntary repatriates to be continued (P.C.7355, Dec.15, 1945);

(b) that control over the movement in Canada of persons of Japanese race be continued for the period of the proposed extension of general emergency powers;

the appropriate provision to be included in the schedule to the draft bill (P.C.946 of Feb.15, 1943) for that purpose;

(c) that existing orders issued by the Minister of Labour to regulate the issue of fishing licences to Japanese be rescinded, but that the general prohibition (P.C.251, January 13, 1942) be continued for the period of the proposed extension of general emergency powers; the appropriate provision to be included in the schedule to the draft bill for that purpose;

(d) that all other Orders-in-Council affecting persons of Japanese race in force under the emergency powers be revoked with the exception of those providing the authority required by the Secretary of State to complete liquidation and disposition of properties of Japanese evacuated from the protected area of British Columbia;

(e) that, in connection with the disposition of property of persons of Japanese race, compensation be made in cases where it was established that undue loss or damage was incurred by owners as a result of improper or improvident disposition thereof by the government; and

(f) that arrangements be made for the passing at once of the Orders-in-Council necessary to give effect to the foregoing decisions and that suitable public announcement thereof be made.

173. DEA/263-38

Note du ministère des Affaires extérieures pour le Comité du Cabinet sur les problèmes japonais

Memorandum from Department of External Affairs to Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems

SECRET [Ottawa], April 16, 1947

RE QUESTIONS OF CONSULAR PROTECTION AND ASSISTANCE IN JAPAN FOR CANADIAN CITIZENS OF JAPANESE ORIGIN AND THE RE-ENTRY INTO CANADA OF SUCH PERSONS AND JAPANESE NATIONALS RETAINING CANADIAN DOMICILE

Present Canadian Policy

At the sixth meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems held on January 10, 1947, there was some preliminary discussion of these difficult questions but, as it was observed that no shipping would be available for some time to bring persons from Japan to this continent, no attempt was made to formulate firm recommendations. Accordingly, these matters remained largely governed by a memorandum of August 10, 1946 (attached),† approved by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which recognizes the right under existing law of Canadian citizens and Japanese nationals retaining Canadian domicile to re-enter Canada, but lays down that the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo shall not for the present (a) help persons of Japanese race to obtain exit permits or buy passage, (b) issue visas to Japanese aliens even if they have technically retained Canadian domicile and (c) issue or renew passports to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin, except in special circumstances. It was expected that this memorandum would be reviewed in eight months to a year's time.

Reasons for Reviewing Policy at this Time

2. Recently the Immigration Branch has been pressed to give rulings on a number of applications of persons of Japanese origin for re-entry into Canada (e.g. letters from Mr. Angus MacInnis, M.P. to the Hon. J.A. Glen regarding Mrs. Tsuru Fujiwara). In addition, the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan has been asked by the Japanese Government through the Diplomatic Section, General Headquarters, Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers to state how the Canadian Government regards persons of Japanese ancestry born in Canada who went to Japan, before, during or after the war. Persons able to prove Allied nationality are entitled in Japan to special consideration in respect to extra food rations, foreign rates of pay when employed by the occupation authorities, and extra-territorial judicial status. Mr. Norman estimates that there are at least 5000—6000 persons in Japan having a prima facie claim to Canadian citizenship. It is assumed that the 2606 Japanese Canadians repatriated after the war would be included in this number. Most of these would be interested in securing the advantages of foreign status in Japan. The number who will make application sooner or later to return to Canada will be considerable because of the difficult economic situation in Japan. Mr. Norman points out the magnitude of the task of interviewing and processing these 5,000—6,000 applicants, but urges the desirability of our facing this problem now and reaching decisions that will enable him to state Canadian Government policy at least on those questions on which United States policy has already been clearly defined. It would seem desirable, therefore, for the Committee to give consideration to these questions now with a view to giving guidance to the Immigration Branch and the Department of External Affairs.

United States Policy

3. The United States faces similar problems with regard to the extension of Consular protection and assistance in Japan for United States citizens of Japanese origin and the re-entry into the United States of such persons. They do not face a problem similar to ours with respect to Japanese nationals retaining Canadian domicile. Any alien leaving the United States for temporary purposes requires a re-entry permit which is only good for one year. All such permits issued to Japanese nationals resident in the United States and returning to Japan before the war for a visit would have expired and there appears to be no disposition to extend the life of these re-entry permits. The United States is prepared to recognize the claims of persons of Japanese origin to United States citizenship with full Constitutional rights. They have opened an office in Yokohama to examine the credentials of such persons. Preferred consideration is given to United States citizens of Japanese origin who "stood out" in Japan during the war and suffered proven discrimination, hardship or imprisonment for being United States citizens. Such persons are being assisted financially and in other ways to return to the United States, some of them this year. During the remaining months in Japan such persons receive the same treatment with regard to rations, pay, etc. as any other United States citizen. (Because of the number of Japanese Americans in the U.S. Army of Occupation special care is taken to avoid any trace of racial discrimination in Japan). Other persons claiming United States citizenship are being gradually screened, their credentials examined, their wartime activities investigated, etc. Persons passing this screening, but who suffered no hardship during the war, will be permitted to return to the United States, but must make their own arrangements when travel becomes normal.

4. United States officials in Japan have expressed the hope that the Canadian Government would coordinate, so far as its laws permit, its treatment in Japan of persons of Japanese origin claiming Canadian citizenship with United States policy toward similar categories of U.S. citizens of Japanese origin. They are concerned lest Japanese Canadians, without going through the same sort of screening which Japanese Americans are required to undergo, might as a group receive favoured treatment by the Japanese Government and thus cause dissatisfaction amongst those not similarly favoured in the United States group.

Proposed Canadian Policy

5. The recommendations formulated in the succeeding paragraphs are based on certain assumptions to which the Committee will wish to give prior consideration. In the event that these assumptions require modification the recommendations will also need to be changed. It is the assumption of this memorandum that:

(a) The Committee would not wish to recommend the introduction of new legislation depriving persons of Japanese origin of any rights they may now possess under The Canadian Citizenship Act and the Immigration Act;

(b) The Committee would not wish Canadian policy to diverge widely from United States policy in view of the similarity of the problems faced and the predominant role played by the United States in the control of Japan;

(c) The Committee would not wish to recommend the extension of any more protection or assistance to Japanese Canadians in Japan than they are entitled to by law and than is being accorded Japanese Americans;

(d) The Committee would not wish to recommend that any assistance be given to persons of Japanese origin to return to Canada, except in exceptional circumstances;

6. Based on the foregoing assumptions the following recommendations are submitted for the Committee's approval:

(a) The Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan shall be authorized to accept, from persons claiming to be Canadian citizens, applications for certificates of Canadian citizenship to be forwarded after careful examination to the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada along with such documents or affirmations as the Department may, in the circumstances, consider necessary to determine whether

(1) in the case of a person claiming to be a natural-born Canadian citizen he was in fact born a Canadian citizen, and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 16, 17(1) or 18 of the Canadian Citizenship Act, or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942

(2) in the case of a person claiming to be a Canadian citizen other than natural-born he did in fact acquire Canadian citizenship and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 21 or 23 of the Canadian Citizenship Act (wherever there exist grounds for the issue by the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada of a notice of revocation of naturalization, the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission shall so report), or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942, or

(iii) under P.C. 7356 of December 15, 1945

(b) The Department of External Affairs shall determine the extent of Consular protection and assistance to be afforded Canadian citizens in Japan in conformity with Canadian practice in other countries and United States practice in Japan.

(c) Where a Canadian citizen of Japanese origin "stood out" in Japan during the war and suffered proven hardship on that account and is desirous of returning to Canada the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan may consult the Department of External Affairs to determine what assistance, if any, may be afforded such person to return to Canada.

(d) Passports shall not be issued to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin to enable them to leave Japan unless they are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan.

(e) Visas for travel to Canada shall not be issued to Japanese nationals claiming domicile in Canada without prior reference to the Immigration Branch. In all such cases the Director of Immigration shall determine whether such persons may be deemed to have lost Canadian domicile. Even in approved cases visas shall not be granted unless the persons concerned are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan.

(f) The Department of External Affairs and the Immigration Branch shall be authorized to consider and approve applications for temporary entry into Canada on behalf of Japanese nationals whose visits abroad are approved by Headquarters, Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan and who would be coming to Canada for conference, educational or other approved temporary purposes that would be of assistance in the democratic re-education of Japan.

174. DMR/Vol. 128

Le secrétaire du premier ministre
au sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Secretary to the Prime Minister to Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

Ottawa, May 10, 1947

Dear Dr. Keenleyside:

I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter which has just been received from repatriate persons of Japanese origin who now wish to return to Canada.

This is the first letter of the type which we have had, but it will, no doubt, be followed by several others. As it raises points of interest to your department, you may wish to have it for file. No reply has yet been sent, pending discussion of the matter in the Cabinet Committee on Japanese.[11]

Yours sincerely,
R.G. ROBERTSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Lettre au premier ministre

Letter to Prime Minister

Aganabara, Japan April 6, 1947

Dear Sir:

On behalf of my two younger brothers, Yoskinobu Kawaguchi, age 15, Masao Kawaguchi age 16, and also my mother Itsuno Kawaguchi and I, Mamoru Kawaguchi age 24, wish to take venture to solicit a favour of a testimonial from you. A favour we gratefully wish to request is that we so desirably wish to process of repatriation to Canada, and to retain our national status as Canadian.

Please allow me to lay before you the following justification of procedure:

We arrived in Japan on the 13th of August 1946 from Vancouver, British Columbia by means of under deportation. Our coming to this strange country of Japan was more or less a great mistake. It all happened like this, our mother did not wish to come to Japan, truthfully, but her other son 28 years of age who came along together with us was the only one who wanted to come to Japan which I have not mentioned his name in this letter.

---

[11]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante:/The following was written on this copy of the document:

P.S. The Prime Minister has directed that a copy of the letter be sent to Mr. Glen direct which I shall do. R.G. R[obertson]

Just because of this son wanted to come our mother naturally did not wanted to interfere with his affair more than she had to, although, mother did not wanted to let him come to Japan by himself as she feared it may cause him a lot of trouble when he arrives in Japan because it was his first trip to this country and there is no house of our's except our cousin's resident so she more or less brought him here. Of course mother will take the youngest sons with her but my situation was different. I came to Japan was because of my mother, and I thought it will be very hard for my elder brother to support his mother and his two youngest brothers so I somehow pitifully tagged along with them.

We are Canadian born and we educated and lived on the Canadian way of living never had seen Japan before in our life except than our mother, and so the reason why our desire to return to our native country is quite true.

Our mother lived in Canada for forty years never had return to her country in those years, and she was a naturalized Canadian. We, mother and all were all true to the Canadian government while we were there and we served our every possible effort to the government even during the war with Japan. You may refer that to our brothers and sisters who are still in Canada, and they are honestly serving the Canadian rights and our mother and ourselves are so desirably wish to rejoin them.

I will be very much appreciate if our mother and I could reestablish our Canadian citizenship and be able to become a real Canadian once more.

On behalf of our family I thank you ever so much in accepting our request and we greatly appreciate your very kindness in exerting great interest towards us.

Yours sincerely,

MAMORA KAWAGUCHI

175. PCO/Vol. 84

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la mission de liaison au Japon

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Liaison Mission in Japan

DESPATCH 113 Ottawa, May 22, 1947

SECRET

A comprehensive memorandum on questions of Consular protection and assistance in Japan for Canadian citizens of Japanese origin and the re-entry into Canada of such persons and Japanese nationals claiming retention of Canadian domicile was submitted some time ago to Cabinet Committee on Japanese Problems for consideration. Until Government policy on these matters is redefined you should follow lines of instructions already sent, particularly as outlined in memorandum of August 10, 1946 enclosed with our despatch No. 7, of August 16, 1946.†

2. These questions should not be confused with questions of national status which are straight questions of law determinable from Canadian Citizenship Act and Orders-in-Council applicable to persons of Japanese ancestry. Those affecting national status are P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942 which deprived of their status as British subjects and Canadian Nationals all persons repatriated to enemy countries in wartime exchanges and P.C. 7356 of December 15, 1945 which provided that naturalized Canadians repatriated from Canada under the provisions of P.C.7355 shall cease to be British subjects or Canadian nationals from the date they leave Canada. Both these Orders provide that the names of all persons who have ceased to be British subjects and Canadian nationals by virtue of the Orders shall be published in the Canada Gazette. We have been endeavouring to secure such lists to send to you. Whether lists have been published or not does not disturb the fact that these persons lost their status as British Subjects and Canadian nationals.

3. Further, you will observe that under Section 21 of the Canadian Citizenship Act the certificates of naturalized Canadians may be revoked for a number of reasons. Sub-section (d) will be applicable in most cases of persons going to Japan before the war who have not taken steps to maintain substantial connection with Canada. Secretary of State may wish to take steps to revoke most such certificates. We will send you instructions in this connection as soon as possible.

176. DEA/263-38

Note pour le Comité du Cabinet sur les questions japonaises

Memorandum for Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions

SECRET [Ottawa], August 12, 1947

REPATRIATION FROM CANADA TO JAPAN OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE ORIGIN

3,964 Japanese were assisted during 1946 by the Canadian Government in voluntary return to Japan, at a total cost of $1,131,733.81, and consisting of

1,355	Japanese Nationals
630	Naturalized Japanese Canadians
658	Canadian Born 16 years and over
1,321	Canadian Born under 16 years
3,964

(2) The following assistance is provided by the Government for those volunteering to go to Japan, under the authority of Order in Council P.C. 7355 of December 15, 1945, as amended by P.C. 268 of January 23, 1947:

(a) Transportation of individuals and reasonable amounts of baggage from present addresses anywhere in Canada to debarkation depot in Japan;

(b) Medical inspection and necessary inoculations prior to departure;

(c) Transfer of full proceeds of all assets of an individual in Canada to the Bank of Japan to his credit, at the official U.S. exchange rate;

(d) Grant sufficient to bring the funds of an individual up to a minimum amount of $200 for an adult and $50 for each dependent child.

(3) The number listed as volunteering to return to Japan on the sixth repatriation ship (scheduled for October next) now stands at 166. These are divided approximately as follows:

Japanese Nationals	76	B.C.	76
Naturalized Canadians	32	Alta.	36
Canadian Born 16 and over	27	Sask.	6
		Man.	19
Canadian Born under 16 years	31	Ont.	25
		Que.	4
	166		166

(4) It is expected that government assistance in the repatriation of this group will total approximately $50,000.00.

(5) Following the repeal of Order in Council P.C.7356 (dated December 15, 1945) effective January 23, 1947, there is now no means by which the Naturalized Japanese Canadians who repatriate to Japan can be deprived of Canadian citizenship, except under the clauses of the Citizenship Act of 1946 which provide for possible loss of citizenship: e.g. upon acquiring other nationality or after being absent from Canada for at least six consecutive years.

(6) The situation arises therefore that no legal bar remains to prevent the return to Canada of these repatriated Naturalized Japanese Canadians as well as Canadian born of Japanese origin, provided that they can obtain ship accommodation from Japan to Canada. Only repatriated Japanese Nationals can be prohibited from returning to Canada.

(7) There are three alternatives which might be considered:

(a) To cut off all government assistance of those Japanese in Canada who now desire or in the future may desire to go to Japan;

(b) To give government assistance only to Japanese Nationals and their dependent children under 16 years of age;

(c) To continue the present policy of assisting all Japanese in Canada who volunteer to go to Japan, facing the possibility that a certain number may later desire to come back to Canada.

(8) If (a) or (b) is determined upon as future policy, it will also be necessary to decide whether the amended policy will go into effect at once, or after the next sailing in October for which 166 persons have volunteered on the basis of present arrangements.

(9) The Department of Labour favours (a) above — that is to discontinue immediately the policy of granting financial assistance to persons of Japanese race to go to Japan for the reasons:

(a) that the numbers now involved in such repatriation are so few as to have no appreciable effect in the matter of the disposition of Japanese evacuated from the coastal areas of British Columbia; and,

(b) that as there is no effective means now available to prevent the return of Canadian citizens who are given assistance in going to Japan, the project is open to valid criticism as involving useless expenditure of public funds.

RAYMOND RANGER
Secretary

177. DEA/50076-40

Extrait d'un rapport de la réunion du Comité du Cabinet sur les questions japonaises

Extract from Report of Meeting of Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions

SECRET Ottawa, [September 3, 1947]

Minutes of the ninth meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions held in the Privy Council Chamber at 10:00 a.m. on Wednesday, September 3, 1947.

Present

The Minister of Labour
(Mr. H. Mitchell) in the chair
The Minister of Veterans Affairs
(Mr. I.A. Mackenzie)
The Secretary of State
(Mr. C. Gibson)
From Privy Council Office
(Mr. Raymond Ranger) Secretary

also Present

From External Affairs
(Mr. L.B. Pearson)
(Mr. A.R. Menzies)
From Department of Labour
(Mr. A.H. Brown)
From Department of Justice
(Mr. D.H.W. Henry)
From Custodian's Office
(Mr. K.W. Wright)
From Department of Finance
(Mr. M.A. Sharp)

. . .

Mr. Mitchell stated that on April 14, 1947 under the authority of Order in Council P.C. 946 of February 5, 1943 as amended by P.C. 5793 of December 18, 1945 and P.C. 270 of January 23, 1947, he had issued a revised travel regulation (Administrative Order No. 5) to the following effect:

No person of the Japanese race shall:

(a) enter or reside in the coastal area of British Columbia as defined; or

(b) enter the Province of British Columbia; or

(c) travel a distance of more than fifty miles within the Province of British Columbia; or

(d) if resident in any place in the Province of British Columbia, take up residence elsewhere in the Province of British Columbia unless such person has obtained a permit in writing to do so from a member of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, the provisions of paragraphs (b) (c) and (d) of this Order shall not apply to any person of the Japanese race who served as a member of the Naval, Military or Air Forces of His Majesty in World War II or in World War I (1914-18) nor to the wife or dependent children of such person and that no other orders affecting residence or movement of Japanese in Canada were in effect under P.C. 946.

. . .

Mr. Gibson reported that the Deputy Minister of Justice, in his letter of April 21, 1947 to the Under Secretary of State, had stated that a person of the Japanese race who was naturalized as a British Subject in Canada and who was removed or sent from Canada to Japan pursuant to arrangements made under Order in Council P.C. 7355, following a request for repatriation which remained unrevoked on September 1, 1945, is a person who has been "deported" within the meaning of that term as used in Order in Council P.C. 7355 December 15, 1945 and, also, as used in Order in Council P.C. 7356 of the same date and therefore such person has no right to enter into Canada. A person of the Japanese race who was born in Canada, however, has such a right to enter.

Mr. Menzies pointed out that according to the provisions of Order in Council P.C. 10773 November 26, 1942 and P.C. 7356 December 15, 1945 the Secretary of State shall publish in the Canada Gazette a list of persons of Japanese race who had been repatriated to Japan and had lost their status as Canadians pursuant to these Orders. He said that the publication of such lists would enable the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo and other diplomatic offices in the Far East in identifying the persons who had lost their status as Canadian citizens and British subjects pursuant to the Orders.

(Document JAP #4 circulated April 17, 1947)
(Document JAP #6 circulated August 26, 1947)

The Committee, after discussion, agreed to recommend:

. . .

(c) that no steps be taken to change the status of persons of Japanese origin who were repatriated or deported to Japan and that the Department of Secretary of State in consultation with the Department of Labour and the Immigration Branch prepare a list of persons of Japanese origin who lost their status as Canadian Citizens and British Subjects under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942 and, P.C. 7355 December 15, 1945 such lists to be furnished to the Department of External Affairs for transmission to the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo and other interested Consular offices in the Far East; and

(d) that appropriate steps be taken by the Department of Secretary of State to make note in the records of the Department of the revocation of naturalization of Japanese deported under P.C. 7355 and P.C. 10773.

2. REPATRIATION TO JAPAN — PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE

The Chairman reported that if the present government policy to repatriate to Japan persons of Japanese origin was continued, government assistance would total approximately $50,000. for the 140-150 persons presently requesting repatriation. He pointed out that following the repeal of Order in Council P.C. 7356 December 15, 1945 effective January 23, 1947 there is now no means by which the Naturalized Japanese Canadian who repatriates to Japan can be deprived of Canadian Citizenship, except under the clauses of the Citizenship Act of 1940 which provide for possible loss of citizenship; e.g. upon acquiring other nationality or after being absent from Canada for at least six consecutive years.

(Document JAP 7 circulated August 26, 1947)

The Committee after discussion agreed to recommend to the Cabinet:

(a) that, the present policy of granting financial assistance to persons of Japanese race who volunteer or volunteered to be repatriated to Japan be discontinued immediately; and

(b) that, from now on persons of Japanese origin who wish to be repatriated to Japan will have to do so at their own expense.

3. RETURN TO CANADA OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE ORIGIN

Mr. Menzies explained in detail the present policy followed regarding persons of Japanese origin (Canadian-born, naturalized or nationals retaining Canadian domicile) who left Canada before the war or who were repatriated and who wish to obtain Consular protection and assistance in Japan and who want to re-enter Canada. The Department of External Affairs recognize the right, under existing law, of Canadian citizens and Japanese nationals retaining Canadian domicile to re-enter Canada, but lays down that the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo shall not for the present (a) help persons of Japanese race to obtain exit permits or buy passage, (b) issue visas to Japanese aliens even if they have technically retained Canadian domicile; and (c) issue or renew passports to Canadian Citizens of Japanese origin except in special circumstances.

It was proposed

(a) The Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan shall be authorized to accept, from persons claiming to be Canadian citizens, applications for certificates of Canadian citizenship to be forwarded after careful examination to the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada along with such documents or affirmations as the Department may, in the circumstances, consider necessary to determine whether

(1) in the case of a person claiming to be a natural-born Canadian citizen he was in fact born a Canadian citizen, and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 16, 17(1) or 18 of the Canadian Citizenship Act, or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942

(2) in the case of a person claiming to be a Canadian citizen other than natural-born he did in fact acquire Canadian citizenship and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 21 or 23 of the Canadian Citizenship Act (wherever there exist grounds for the issue by the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada of a notice of revocation of naturalization, the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission shall so report), or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942, or

(iii) under P.C. 7356 of December 15, 1945

(b) The Department of External Affairs shall determine the extent of Consular protection and assistance to be afforded Canadian citizens in Japan in conformity with Canadian practice in other countries and United States practice in Japan.

(c) Where a Canadian citizen of Japanese origin "stood out" in Japan during the war and suffered proven hardship on that account and is desirous of returning to Canada the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan may consult the Department of External Affairs to determine what assistance, if any, may be afforded such person to return to Canada.

(d) Passports shall not be issued to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin to enable them to leave Japan unless they are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan.

(e) Visas for travel to Canada shall not be issued to Japanese Nationals claiming domicile in Canada without prior reference to the Immigration Branch. In all such cases the Director of Immigration shall determine whether such persons may be deemed to have lost Canadian domicile. Even in approved cases visas shall not be granted unless the persons concerned are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan.

(f) The Department of External Affairs and the Immigration Branch shall be authorized to consider and approve applications for temporary entry into Canada on behalf of Japanese nationals whose visits abroad are approved by Headquarters, Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan and who would be coming to Canada for conference, educational or other approved temporary purposes that would be of assistance in the democratic re-education of Japan.

(Document JAP 3 circulated April 16, 1947)

The Committee, after discussion approved the proposals submitted by the Department of External Affairs and agreed to recommend to the Cabinet that these proposals be implemented immediately with the proviso that the right of Canadian domicile of any Japanese national shall be considered lost after six years' absence from Canada, unless they can show that they maintained their intention throughout the war of returning to Canada at the earliest opportunity. In the interpretation of the foregoing "maintenance of intention", attention should be paid to the actions of such Japanese nationals throughout the period of the war.

. . .

RAYMOND RANGER

Secretary

178. PCO/Vol. 10

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], October 1, 1947

. . .

PERSONS OF JAPANESE RACE; REPATRIATION TO JAPAN; RETURN TO CANADA

11. The Minister of Labour submitted a report of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions following a meeting held on September 3rd.

Consideration had been given to a number of questions, including, particularly, policy governing repatriation to Japan and the return to Canada of persons of Japanese origin who had left Canada before the war or who were repatriated and who now wished to come back to this country.

12. Mr. Mitchell stated that the recommendations of the Committee on these two questions were as follows:

I. (a) that the present policy of granting financial assistance to persons of Japanese race who volunteer or volunteered to be repatriated to Japan be discontinued immediately;

(b) that, from now on, persons of Japanese origin who wish to be repatriated to Japan will have to do so at their own expense;

II. (a) that the Department of External Affairs and the Immigration Branch be authorized to consider and approve applications for temporary entry into Canada on behalf of Japanese nationals whose visits abroad are approved by Headquarters, Supreme Commander for the Allied Powers in Japan and who would be coming to Canada for conference, educational or other approved temporary purposes that would be of assistance in the democratic re-education of Japan;

(b) that, where a Canadian citizen of Japanese origin "stood out" in Japan during the war and suffered proven hardship on that account and is desirous of returning to Canada, the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan may consult the Department of External Affairs to determine what assistance, if any, may be afforded such person to return to Canada; and,

(c) that the Canadian Liaison Mission in Tokyo, except for persons mentioned in above paragraphs II.(a) and II.(b) shall not:

(i) help persons of Japanese race to obtain exit permits or buy passage,

(ii) issue visas to Japanese nationals claiming domicile in Canada without prior reference to the Immigration Branch; in all such cases the Director of Immigration shall determine whether such persons may be deemed to have lost Canadian domicile; even in approved cases visas shall not be granted unless the persons concerned are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan; and

(iii) issue or renew passports to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin to enable them to leave Japan unless they are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan.

Copies of the Cabinet Committee's report had been circulated.

(Report of Cabinet Committee, Sept. 22, 1947 — Cabinet Document 528).†

. . .

14. The Minister of Mines and Resources observed that, in submitting the above recommendations with respect to the return to Canada of persons of Japanese origin, it had been agreed by the Cabinet Committee that a proviso be added to the effect that the right to Canadian domicile of any Japanese national should be considered lost after six years absence from Canada, unless they could show that they maintained their intention throughout the war of returning to Canada at the earliest opportunity. In the interpretation of "maintenance of intention", attention should be paid to the actions of all such Japanese nationals throughout the period of the war.

Such a proviso was important in relation to certain particular cases which had come to the attention of the Immigration authorities. In the implementation of the recommendations, it was advisable that officials of the Immigration Branch and External Affairs should be able to make appropriate provision for such special cases.

15. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendations submitted by the Cabinet Committee.

. . .

179. PCO/C-20-2

Extrait d'une lettre du secrétaire du Cabinet au ministre du Travail

Extract from Letter from Secretary to the Cabinet to Minister of Labour

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, October 6, 1947

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

You will recall that at the meeting of the Cabinet of October 1st 1947, you submitted a report of the Cabinet Committee on Japanese Questions following a meeting held on September 3rd. Consideration had been given to a number of questions, including particularly, policy governing repatriation to Japan and the return to Canada of persons of Japanese origin who had left Canada before the war or who were repatriated and who now wished to come back to this country.

. . .

The Secretary of State drew attention to the fact that a person of Japanese origin who was a Canadian citizen by birth could hardly be dealt with in the manner recommended in II(c)(iii) above, at least after the conclusion of a peace treaty with Japan.

The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendations submitted by the Cabinet Committee, subject to:

(a) the qualification of paragraph II(b) thereof, relating to the return to Canada of persons of Japanese origin, to meet the situation to which attention was drawn by the Minister of Mines and Resources; and,

(b) the amendment of II(c)(iii) to include only those who were Canadian citizens by naturalization.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. MacNamara for his information. Messrs. Howe and Glen have also been advised of this item.

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. HEENEY

180. PCO/C-20-2

Note du secrétaire du premier ministre pour le secrétaire du Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary to the Prime Minister to Secretary to the Cabinet

[Ottawa], October 9, 1947

RE DECISIONS OF CABINET CONCERNING RETURN OF PERSONS OF JAPANESE ORIGIN TO CANADA

The decisions of Cabinet on October 1 do not cover, and were not thought to cover, all portions of the report of the Cabinet Committee arising out of its meeting of September 3. Part I of the Cabinet decision disposes of the section of the Committee recommendations regarding further repatriations. Part II, however, deals only in part with the section on treatment of persons in Japan. Certain of the omissions are important from the point of view of External Affairs. The Committee had, in fact, recommended that they "be implemented immediately" along with the other portions of the section. The omitted sections were as follows:

(a) The Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan shall be authorized to accept, from persons claiming to be Canadian citizens, applications for certificates of Canadian citizenship to be forwarded after careful examination to the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada along with such documents or affirmations as the Department may, in the circumstances, consider necessary to determine whether

(1) in the case of a person claiming to be a natural-born Canadian citizen he was in fact born a Canadian citizen, and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 16, 17(1) or 18 of the Canadian Citizenship Act, or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942

(2) in the case of a person claiming to be a Canadian citizen other than natural-born he did in fact acquire Canadian citizenship and that he has not ceased to be a Canadian citizen

(i) under section 21 or 23 of the Canadian Citizenship Act (Wherever there exist grounds for the issue by the Department of Secretary of State of Canada of a notice of revocation of naturalization, the Head of the Canadian Liaison Mission shall so report), or

(ii) under P.C. 10773 of November 26, 1942, or

(iii) under P.C. 7356 of December 15, 1945

(b) The Department of External Affairs shall determine the extent of Consular protection and assistance to be afforded Canadian citizens in Japan in conformity with Canadian practice in other countries and United States practice in Japan.

2. Apart from the above omissions, part II (c) of the Cabinet decision involves certain differences from the actual recommendations of Cabinet Committee. I understand that the discrepancy arose when the Committee recommendations were being put in briefer form for Cabinet consideration.

3. There is nothing of serious consequence with regard to II(c)(ii). It is to the effect that the Canadian Mission in Tokyo shall not

"(ii) issue visas to Japanese aliens even if they have technically retained Canadian domicile."

The full text of the Committee conclusion was as follows:

"(e) Visas for travel to Canada shall not be issued to Japanese nationals claiming domicile in Canada without prior reference to the Immigration Branch. In all such cases the Director of Immigration shall determine whether such persons may be deemed to have lost Canadian domicile. Even in approved cases visas shall not be granted unless the persons concerned are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan."

The Cabinet conclusion is somewhat more stringent in its effect as it denies the right to a visa no matter what the position may be with regard to domicile. This need not cause any trouble so long as a technical state of war with Japan continues, but when that is ended a person who has domicile will have a legal right of entry into Canada and some change in the decision on policy may be necessary.

4. Point II(c)(iii) of the Cabinet conclusion is to the effect that the Canadian Mission in Tokyo shall not

"(iii) issue or renew passports to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin except in special circumstances."

This decision was qualified so as to exclude Canadian-born persons. The full recommendation of the Cabinet Committee was in the following terms:

"(d) Passports shall not be issued to Canadian citizens of Japanese origin to enable them to leave Japan unless they are able to produce evidence that they have secured passage for Canada and will be able to obtain the necessary exit permit from Japan."

The difference between the Cabinet conclusion and the Committee recommendation is important. The Committee recommendation simply imposed certain prior conditions of a reasonable character before a passport would be granted. In contrast, the Cabinet conclusion denies passports to a certain group of Canadian citizens by naturalization. Technically this can be done because no one has an automatic right to a passport. However, persons who cannot get a passport cannot come to Canada and thus, in effect, it means that these persons are denied their legal right of entry here. (This has been the position since the end of the war, and the Cabinet Committee recommendation was intended to modify it.) Objection can be taken to this on grounds of both principle and law:

(1) It continues a discrimination against a racial group of Canadian citizens which is not imposed on any other Canadian citizens.

(2) While it does not do so specifically, it denies, in effect, the right of Canadian citizens to enter Canada. This is in conflict with a basic principle established by the amendment to the Immigration Act of 1946. That amendment was designed to ensure that anyone who is a Canadian Citizen shall automatically have a right of entry into Canada.

(3) The differentiation in treatment between Canadian-born and Canadian-naturalized citizens is in conflict with Section 27 of the Canadian Citizenship Act which provides for equality of "rights, powers and privileges".

5. You might feel that it would be desirable to have paragraph (d) of the Cabinet Committee recommendations substituted for part II(c)(iii) of the Cabinet decisions, and also to have paragraphs (a) and (b) placed before Cabinet for approval at an early date.

R.G. R[OBERTSON]

CHAPITRE IV/CHAPTER IV
IMMIGRATION
IMMIGRATION

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
POLITIQUE
POLICY

181. W.L.M.K./Vol. 281

Note pour le premier ministre

Memorandum for the Prime Minister

[Ottawa], January 11, 1947

As you asked me to keep in touch with developments related to the position of Asiatics in this country, you may wish to have a brief report on the developments last week in the Cabinet committees on Immigration and on the Japanese, which I attended.

The committee on Immigration decided to recommend to Cabinet that the Chinese Immigration Act of 1923 be repealed at the forthcoming session and that provisions be made by Order in Council under the Immigration Act to enable the wives and unmarried children under 18 years of age of Asiatics who are Canadian citizens to be admitted to Canada. It is felt that these two steps will substantially meet the complaints with regard to discrimination for the time being.

With the repeal of the Chinese Immigration Act, an important problem of administration arises which will require further action. This problem is connected with the difficulty of identifying Chinese persons so as to be sure of the actual identity of people admitted to Canada. Under the present Act, registration of outgoing Chinese is required, and they cannot return if they have not so registered. The Immigration Branch feels that this registration is essential to a successful control policy. In order to provide for registration without specific discrimination, the committee decided to recommend that an Order in Council be passed under the general Immigration Act requiring all persons, other than Canadian citizens, who are resident in Canada to register before leaving Canada, if they wish to return. A second Order in Council, it was felt, should then be passed exempting from the provisions of the above such nationalities as provide no complications with regard to identity. The probable result would be to exempt all persons from registration, except Asiatics, but the above method would enable it to be done in a less discriminatory manner than at present.

With regard to the Japanese problem,[1] the committee decided to recommend that there should be no deportations and that the Orders in Council of December 1945, which were recently before the courts, should be allowed to lapse. With regard to the Japanese remaining in Canada, the committee is recommending that the present Order in Council restricting the movement of Japanese persons should be retained in effect along with the few other emergency controls which will be found necessary, such as rent control, etc. It is felt that the control of movement is needed for a time to prevent a new concentration of the Japanese in British Columbia.

In connection with this matter, you will recall that the co-operative committee on Japanese Canadians have particularly asked for an interview with you before any policy is announced.

I think that the above recommendations, if approved, should go a long way toward eliminating the current criticisms of the government position.

R.G. R[OBERTSON]

182. W.L.M.K./Vol. 281

Note pour le premier ministre

Memorandum for the Prime Minister

[Ottawa], February 1, 1947

RE CHANGES IN IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS

Attached for possible use in connection with the proceedings in the House on Monday are the Order in Council (P.C. 371) passed on January 30th† together with a draft statement† on the changes it makes, which was prepared for Mr. Glen.

In brief, the situation is that in 1931 P.C. 695 of March 21st severely restricted the categories of persons admissible to Canada. On May 28, 1946 (P.C. 2071) the categories of relatives admissible to Canada were somewhat widened. The new Order in Council still further widens the categories of relatives and also includes new categories on an occupational basis.

The extension of the categories of relatives is not large. The persons added are widowed daughters and widowed sisters plus their unmarried children under 18 (formerly only single daughters and sisters were admitted), and orphaned nephews and nieces up to 18 years of age (previously they had to be under 16 years of age).

The only occupational group formerly admitted were agriculturists "having sufficient means to farm in Canada." This capital requirement has to some extent been removed by P.C. 371. Agriculturists in a fairly wide range of relationship are admissible if they can be placed on a farm by their relative in Canada. Farm labourers are also admissible "to engage in assured farm employment." New occupational categories have also been added in the form of persons "experienced in mining, lumbering or logging" coming here "to engage in assured employment in any one of such industries."

[1]Voir les documents 171-180./See Documents 171-80.

In the light of the very general press comment on immigration policy recently, it seems probable that the above extensions will be regarded as inadequate. The Jewish organizations especially want the categories of relatives considerably extended. There will probably also be criticism on the ground that there is no indication of special action being taken to alleviate the situation of displaced persons.[2] So far as the latter are concerned, special arrangements could be authorized by order in council under the existing Immigration Act and no changes in legislation will be necessary for the purpose. I understand that preparations are virtually complete to send teams of inspectors to camps in Europe to inspect displaced persons admissible under the present groups of relatives and occupations.

R.G. R[OBERTSON]

183. PCO/Vol. 82

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet pour le cabinet du premier ministre

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Office of the Prime Minister

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 13, 1947

RE IMMIGRATION POLICY; INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE'S REPORT; DRAFT MEASURE

This morning the Cabinet discussed immigration policy at some length, as a result of which it was decided to ask the interdepartmental committee to hurry up the submission of their report (through the Cabinet Committee) with a view to some agreement upon long term policy and appropriate announcement in the House of Commons.

After the meeting Mr. St. Laurent developed with me a suggestion which he had put tentatively during the Cabinet discussion. He wished this to be passed on to the interdepartmental committee so that they might consider it and prepare at least the framework of a bill along the following lines:

The government should be in a position to propose to Parliament (in a bill) some appropriate maximum number of persons to be admitted into Canada during some stated length of time, possibly one year. The countries of origin to be allotted quotas on a basis which would be calculated from the racial composition to be found in the last decennial census. The justification for such a measure would be the natural desire of the government not to effect any radical change in racial composition while, at the same time, not adopting a "dog in the manger" attitude in relation to overcrowded areas elsewhere in the world. The maxima might be stipulated in an they could, without much delay, put á measure of this positive character on the Order Paper.

[2]Voir les documents 189-205./See Documents 189-205.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

184. PCO/Vol. 82

Le secrétaire du Cabinet
au ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Mines and Resources

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 14, 1947

Dear Mr. Glen:

You will remember that at yesterday's meeting of the Cabinet the Prime Minister raised the question of the admissibility of near relatives of Chinese legally resident in Canada who were not Canadian citizens in relation to the more favourable position of other groups in this respect. It was suggested that this situation involved continued discrimination on racial grounds.

In this connection, Mr. St.Laurent suggested that, it might be desirable for the government to approve and announce, at an early date, a general immigration policy which, within prescribed limits, would avoid discrimination on racial grounds.

A positive regime might be devised, on an appropriate scale which would render unnecessary the continuation of present special regulations with regard to the admission of Asiatics. In this connection, consideration might be given to the establishment of an appropriate overall maximum figure to be apportioned on quotas based upon the related numbers of the racial groups in Canada at the last census.

The Cabinet agreed that the Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration be directed to complete and submit their report on general policy at the earliest possible date, taking into consideration the proposal advanced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I am sending copies of this letter to Mr. Jackson [Department of Mines & Resources] and Mr. Jolliffe for their information.

Yours sincerely,
A.D.P. HEENEY

185. DEA/939-40

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, February 28, 1947

I have just read for the first time the minutes of the Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration Policy for the meeting of February 24th.

It strikes me as extraordinary that the Interdepartmental Committee should, in effect, have refused to report on the quota proposal which had been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs during the Cabinet discussion on February 13th. While the Cabinet conclusion authorized a direction to the Interdepartmental Committee to submit their report "on general policy" at the earliest possible date, it was specifically mentioned that the Committee should give consideration to the proposal advanced by Mr. St.Laurent. Subsequently, at his request, I asked Mr. Gordon Robertson to have the Interdepartmental Committee consider the drafting of a general bill along these lines.

No doubt the Interdepartmental Committee are quite free to advise against the quota principle but I find it strange that they do not propose to comply with the Cabinet's wishes and submit a report. I notice that the Cabinet Committee are meeting soon. Perhaps the situation can be corrected at that stage.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

186. DEA/5068-A-40

Note du sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources pour le ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Memorandum from Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources to Minister of Mines and Resources

SECRET Ottawa, May 7, 1947

CHINESE IMMIGRATION

Now that the Chinese Immigration Act has been rescinded it might be advisable to look again at what seem to me to be the dangerous implications of this new policy — and to consider what steps if any can be taken to meet the situation.

2. Without going in detail into all the calculations involved we can summarize the present position by saying that:

If all the male persons of Chinese race now in Canada should take advantage of the new regulations, and if each wife brought in by a Chinese husband should bring two children with her, the total legal immigration of Chinese to Canada would amount to approximately 66,000 persons.

3. It is, of course, highly unlikely that all the persons of Chinese race now in Canada will, in fact, exercise their rights under the new regulations. Many of them (because of the age factor) will die, many more will return to China rather than bring their families to Canada, some will be uninterested.

4. On the other hand it may prove that the estimate of two children per family is too small.

5. If it is assumed that one-half the male persons of Chinese race resident in Canada exercise their prerogative, and if we retain the assumption of two children per family, the total immigration will amount to approximately 33,000.

6. Of these, approximately 22,000 will be females — either adults or children.

7. In my opinion a movement on anything like this scale will arouse a new storm of anti-oriental feeling in British Columbia for, judged by the present incidence of distribution in Canada, approximately half of the new arrivals will settle in that Province.

8. If this line of reasoning is correct the alternatives before the Government would be:

(a) to disregard the criticism and hold to the present policy;

(b) to find some formula which would block at least some part of this new legal movement of Chinese into Canada.

9. If the Government decides to adopt the second course there are only two steps, so far as I can see, that are likely to be effective. The first would be to reimpose some discriminatory barriers against persons of Chinese race, thus annulling in whole or in part the steps just taken. This would, I believe, be politically impracticable. The alternative is to impose a quota system and to make it applicable to wives of Canadian citizens who are not themselves Canadian citizens at the time of the passage of the Quota Act.

10. If such a quota system is to be introduced and is to be used effectively to stop the gathering wave of Chinese immigrants it will have to be made law before any large part of the 22,000 non-Canadian Chinese males now in Canada can achieve naturalization. In other words, it must be on the statute books within one year.

11. There are many difficulties involved in the drafting and enforcement of a Quota system for Canada. It can, however, be done; and so far as I can see it is the only practicable way of avoiding the grave influx of Chinese women and children now threatening this country.

H.L. KEENLEYSIDE

187. DEA/939-40

Extrait d'un rapport d'une réunion avec le sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Extract from Report on a Meeting with Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

SECRET [Ottawa], May 22, 1947

. . .

6. Chinese Immigration

Dr. Keenleyside read a memorandum which he has prepared for the Meeting of Cabinet Committee on Immigration next Tuesday. A copy was given to Mr. Beaudry for the consideration of External Affairs. Dr. Keenleyside pointed out that there were very large numbers of Chinese wives and children who would become admissible to Canada as soon as the Chinese Immigration Act has been repealed. Undoubtedly, there would be a strong reaction from persons in British Columbia, since most of the wives and children would be destined to that Province. Consideration must, therefore, be given at once to the institution of a quota system for immigration from China.

7. Admission of persons with left wing tendencies[3]

Mr. Jolliffe gave an outline for the arrangements which have been made for R.C.M.P. screening both in Canada and in Europe. In Canada recently, the R.C.M.P. opposed the admission of an immigrant on the ground that the applicant in Canada had left wing tendencies. The direction which has been given by Cabinet for such matters is that no explanation of the refusal is to be given by the Immigration Branch. It is felt that the term "left wing tendencies" is somewhat indefinite, but that the approval or the rejection is entirely a matter for the R.C.M.P. who have been directed to perform this security screening by the Government.

The question of the screening in Greece was discussed. It was the opinion of the Meeting that people should not be disqualified merely because they live in a Communist dominated area such as Western Macedonia.

. . .

9. Proposed Canadian Initiative in Matter of Displaced Persons

Dr. Keenleyside presented a brief memorandum, proposing that 5,000 displaced persons should be admitted to Canada at once. He indicated that this would give us an opportunity to secure the best displaced persons rather than taking a share at a later date when the average quality would have been reduced. It would also indicate readiness on our part to accept displaced persons in order to relieve the problem in Europe. All such immigrants, of course, will be chargeable against any eventual quota allocated to Canada by the International Refugee Organization.

Action:

The memorandum referred to is being presented to the Cabinet Committee.

10. Admission of Enemy Aliens

---

[3]Voir aussi les documents 911-913./See also Documents 911-3.

It is anticipated that a deposit of the ratification of the treaties of peace with the satellite countries will not be completed for some time. In order to bridge the gap and permit the entry to Canada of suitable persons from those countries in the meantime, it is proposed to broaden the interpretation of Order-in-Council P.C. 1373 regarding enemy aliens. At the present time each case must be referred to the Minister of Mines and Resources in order that he may determine that the persons concerned have been opposed to the enemy government. Under the changed interpretation the enemy alien would have to appear at a Canadian Office abroad and satisfy the Canadian Official there that he had been opposed to an enemy government. In all other respects the usual method of application on behalf of the persons concerned will continue. This change will provide for the admission, among others, of German fiancees of Canadian ex-servicemen.

Action:

The Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources will obtain necessary authority for implementing the above change with respect to P.C. 1373. External Affairs will instruct the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin to arrange for medical examinations locally in the same manner as other European Missions have done.

11. Admission of Priests for Ukranian Greek Orthodox Church

An application has been made in Canada for the admission of some 200 priests. Before the war, it is understood that this religion maintained 350 parishes which were ministered to by 75 priests. The persons on whose behalf the present admission is being sought are really displaced persons. It was felt that the number of new priests applied for was entirely out of proportion to the pre-war number of priests and seems to be merely an excuse for providing refuge to these persons. It is feared that these priests might be more political than religious and might carry into Canada the bitterness of Europe. There is also some doubt as to the exact religious community to which they would minister.

Action:

The Director of Immigration will make further enquiries to find out more exactly the numbers of persons adhering to this religion in Canada and the need for additional priests not now available from the Canadian community.

12. Proposal to change Order-in-Council P.C. 2215 to admit Armenians and Syrians Order-in-Council P.C. 2215 prohibits the landing in Canada of any immigrant of any Asiatic race. Since there is no such thing as an Asiatic race in the ethnic sense, this has previously been interpreted in a geographical sense. Representations have been made of late on behalf of Syrians and Armenians to consider them as Europeans instead of Asiatics. There would be many administrative difficulties encountered in making a change at the present time. It might be well to leave this entire matter to be considered in general proposals for the introduction of the quota system.

Action:

The Cabinet Committee will be asked to indicate whether it feels that the immigration to Canada of Syrians and Armenians should be encouraged.

. . .

188. DEA/5068-A-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Comité du Cabinet sur l'Immigration

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet Committee on Immigration

SECRET [Ottawa], May 26, 1947

RE CHINESE IMMIGRATION

It is understood that the Department of Mines and Resources are of the view that the repeal of the Chinese Immigration Act has created a condition involving possible danger of large-scale Chinese Immigration which might cause difficulty and criticism in British Columbia. It is also understood that the Department are of the view that, in the light of this, the alternatives before the government are:

(a) to disregard the criticism and hold to the present policy; or

(b) find some formula which would block at least some part of the new legal movement of Chinese into Canada.

A possible method suggested to achieve alternative (b) is understood to be the imposition of a quota system which would be applicable to wives and children of Canadian citizens who are not themselves Canadian citizens.

2. The suggestion that a quota be used to curtail undesirable immigration is not new. It was considered at an early stage in the discussion of immigration policy and was discarded largely at the instance of the Department of Mines and Resources.

In February a set of draft proposals for the regulation of immigration were circulated, in which the establishment of a quota system was suggested. These proposals were considered at a meeting of the Interdepartmental Committee on Immigration Policy on February 24th. Mr. Jolliffe, who represented the Department of Mines and Resources, was of the view that there was not available the machinery to handle a quota system and that this, together with other considerations, made it undesirable to attempt to recommend the quota basis of regulation.

On March 18, 1947, the first draft of a statement on immigration policy for the Prime Minister was prepared. That draft included the following passage:

"One method of control which has been considered as providing the necessary basis of selection while, at the same time, permitting the removal of discriminatory regulations, is the quota system. Whether it will finally be found desirable to adopt this system I cannot say with certainty at the moment. A quota system is a complicated matter which requires the most careful adaptation. One thing that will be essential in any quota system is to ensure that the quota is devised in such a manner as to provide that the main measure of immigration is from sources which we regard as likely to provide immigrants most suitable to Canada and most likely to maintain in its essentials the present composition and balance of the Canadian population."

This draft was considered at an informal interdepartmental meeting on March 19. At that meeting Dr. Keenleyside, who represented the Department of Mines and Resources, indicated that further consideration of the quota system with Mr. Glen and Mr. Jolliffe led the Department to renew their view that the quota system was not feasible at present and should not be mentioned in the statement. All reference to the quota method was accordingly deleted.

The quota system was, thus, suggested at an early date with the problem of oriental immigration specifically in mind. The Department of External Affairs felt that it would provide an adequate basis for selection and control without the appearance of discrimination. Careful consideration was given to the proposal and, at the instance [sic] of the Department of Mines and Resources, reference to it even as a possibility was removed from the statement of policy.

3. It is suggested that, whatever the merits of the quota method may be, and despite its obvious attractions from the point of view of External Affairs, it would be unwise for the government, after the Prime Minister's statement of policy of May 1, to consider its imposition now in such a way as to apply to the wives and children of Canadian citizens. The only major criticism of the government's policy that has been made in the House has been that it admits only the wives and children of Canadian citizens of oriental origin, and not the wives and children of non-citizen orientals. The introduction now of a quota curtailing further this degree of admission by formal legislative action would be seen as an effort to withdraw from concessions granted by the government and announced by the Prime Minister. It would reopen the entire question of policy and would put the government in the position of having either to extend the present degree of discrimination in order to achieve its purpose or else of having to impose new restrictions of a general character on all immigration. Either development would give rise to serious criticism.

4. It is submitted that these are regulations which can and should be imposed under the existing legislation which would, as an indirect result create conditions that would prevent any large or sudden influx of Chinese wives and children. Health examinations are now required in each case and it has been decided that in future individual X-rays are to be a requisite. Administration of these requirements in a country such as China will inevitably involve delay, especially if examination centres are few. There are also qualifications with regard to the husband being able to care for the family on arrival. Certain standards of health and accommodation could reasonably be imposed. Further, in the interests of health, it would be desirable to require minimum standards of accommodation in ocean transportation to prevent the movement of persons as "human freight". Such regulations will inevitably impose an important degree of delay, both because of the time required for actual administration and because of the shortage of adequate and appropriate shipping. Such regulations would be reasonable and proper, and would not involve the reopening of a difficult question in Parliament.

5. In view of the above considerations, it is suggested that no steps should be taken for the present which would involve the reopening of legislative consideration of immigration but that the regulations should be examined and possibly revised in the light of new developments in policy.

L.B. PEARSON

189. DEA/939-B-40

Extrait d'une note pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Memorandum for the Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], September 10, 1947

Immigration Branch has recently been considering whether persons who served in the enemy forces during the war should be admissible to Canada as immigrants. They have also been considering the status of Canadians who served in the enemy forces. I attach for your information a copy of a memorandum prepared for the Acting Minister of Mines and Resources by the Immigration Branch.†

. . .

You will recall that the question of admitting as immigrants persons who had served in the Axis armed forces arose when consideration was given to the admission to Canada of members of the Polish forces. The question was discussed at a meeting between the Prime Minister, yourself and Mr. Wrong in September, 1946, and the conclusion was reached that only those would be admissible who took part in active hostilities against the Germans after having been taken prisoner by the Allied Forces while serving in the German Army. Poles who deserted from German units and fought against the Germans during the war were included in the acceptable categories. The criterion applied was whether an individual had actively participated in hostilities against the Axis. Those who had served in the Axis armed forces and had joined the Polish Corps after the end of hostilities were not admissible.

The proposal in the attached memorandum is in effect that nationals of countries other than Axis countries would be admissible provided it was shown that they served in the Axis forces under duress. In other words, there is no requirement that they should have taken part in active hostilities against the Axis. This appears to be a slight departure from the decision taken in the case of the Poles, but would, it seems to me, be a satisfactory criterion. I think, however, it would be desirable in the memorandum to refer not only to service in the armed forces but also service in the auxiliary forces.

I am informed that the chief reason why Immigration is raising the general question is that there is a desire in some quarters to bring a number of Balts from Germany.[4] Some of these persons have served, however, in the German armed forces, and under the present proposals these persons would be refused entry to Canada unless they served under duress.

---

[4]Voir les documents 206-208./See Documents 206-08.

I am not sure whether the memorandum from Immigration Branch will be raised in Cabinet in its present form, but I thought I should let you have a note so that you will be aware of the problem when it is raised.

. . .

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note

Memorandum

POLICY ON ADMISSIBILITY AND READMISSIBILITY TO CANADA OF PERSONS WHO HAVE SERVED IN THE ENEMY FORCES AGAINST US (OTHER THAN JAPAN)

I. The following categories of persons must be considered:

1. Persons who are Canadian citizens and whose status cannot be revoked, e.g., natural-born.

2. Persons who are Canadian citizens and whose status can be revoked, e.g., naturalized citizens.

3. Persons who are not Canadian citizens but who have been granted permanent entry to Canada and have not lost their domicile.

4. Intending immigrants.

II. If it is desired to consider the circumstances under which any of these persons served, the following considerations are suggested:

(a) It must be assumed that nationals including dual nationals of enemy or former enemy countries served voluntarily, i.e., nationals of Germany, Austria, Italy, Finland, Roumania and Hungary. Although we did not declare war on Bulgaria, presumably this country would also be included.

(b) Nationals of countries other than those listed in (a) must be able to satisfy the investigating officer beyond a reasonable doubt that they served under duress, i.e., under physical compulsion and not merely by choosing military service rather than imprisonment. Service in forward areas or combatant units raises a presumption of voluntary service. Conscription per se is not conclusive evidence of duress.

III. If it is desired to discriminate against persons who have served in forces against us, the following steps are recommended with respect to the different categories mentioned in the first paragraph.

1. (a) Refusal of Consular assistance, i.e., refusal to issue Canadian travel documents, to grant protection or to issue certificates of Canadian citizenship.

(b) Endeavour to prosecute for treason if it is ascertained that the person has reentered Canada.

(c) Obtain an amendment to Section 3 of the Immigration Act making the person not admissible.

2. (a) Revocation of citizenship of the person concerned as expeditiously as possible.

(b) Refuse consular assistance pending revocation of citizenship.

(c) Endeavour to prosecute for treason if it is ascertained that the person has re-entered Canada.

3. Refuse re-admission unless there is compelling evidence of duress.

4. Refuse admission unless there is compelling evidence of duress.

IV. There are two further considerations which arise,

(a) If one member of a family is not admissible by reason of service against us, it will follow that all dependent members of the family will be refused admission, as it has never been the policy to separate a family unit.

(b) If the naturalized person has already been informed that proceedings for revocation have been dropped, proceedings should be re-instituted.

190. DEA/939-B-40

Le directeur de l'Immigration du ministère des Mines et des Ressources, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Director of Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, December 17, 1947

With further reference to copy of my memorandum of September 6th to the Acting Minister, please be advised that the following decisions have been reached[5] with regard to applicants for entry to Canada who have served in the Armed Forces of His Majesty's enemies during the war:

(1) Canadian citizens by birth and naturalization. The re-entry of such persons is not to be facilitated and they are not to be advised that they are admissible to Canada as a matter of right. Final action to be taken on this class is under review and further instructions will be issued in due course.

(2) Persons who possessed Canadian domicile and served in the Armed Forces of His Majesty's enemies during the war are to be considered as having relinquished domicile by such action.

(3) Immigrants who are citizens of Finland, Hungary, Italy and Roumania, who served in the Armed Forces of their own country during the war are not to be refused admission to Canada on account of such service unless recorded on the official list of war criminals.

(4) Immigrants of neutral or allied nationality who have served in the Armed Forces of His Majesty's enemies are to be refused admission unless they can establish that such service was rendered under physical compulsion.

---

[5]Le Cabinet approuva les décisions le 21 décembre.
The decisions were approved by Cabinet on December 21.

These decisions will be included in the next supplement to "Instructions to Canadian Visa Officers," but in the meantime it will be appreciated if you would transmit this information to all Canadian Missions abroad.

A.L. JOLLIFFE

2e PARTIE/PART 2

PERSONNES DÉPLACÉES
DISPLACED PERSONS

SECTION A

GÉNÉRALITÉS
GENERAL

191. CH/Vol. 2087

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 133 London, January 23, 1947

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Reference my telegram No. 123 of January 21st:[6] I hesitate to thrust half-thought-out suggestions at you, but I feel I should try to put on paper some ideas about the handling of the problems of displaced persons, which might after whittling down be suitable for inclusion in the German Treaty, though not perhaps for sponsorship in a Canadian brief.

2. I have little hope of anything substantial coming out of plans for overseas group settlement of displaced persons which now fill the minds of the governments co-operating in the Inter-Governmental Refugee Committee.[7] I need not spell out the reasons for a lack of faith in this line of approach, though from the point of view of a country like Canada, they should be obvious.

3. An alternative approach which I think promising would begin by stripping the label from these unfortunate persons in as quick and kindly fashion as possible. We should try to get away from such elaborate political categories and sub-categories as have complicated and confused our efforts to select 4,000 Poles from Anders army[8] for agricultural employment in Canada. Similar categories with labels imposed by military governments, UNRRA, and the I.G.C., tend to give each class of refugee a corporate character and a definite grading in the political spectrum,

---

[6]Document 128.

[7]Créé à la Conférence d'Évian en 1938.
Set up at Evian Conference in 1938.

[8]Le général Wladyslaw Anders commandait les forces polonaises qui servirent avec les Alliés en Italie.
General Wladyslaw Anders commanded the Polish Corps which served with the Allies in Italy.

which can only make the task of their ultimate assimilation and absorption, whether in Europe or overseas, infinitely difficult. I should like to see an immediate effort made to dissolve the present communities of displaced persons, first within the German community wherein the vast majority are presently resident, secondly within the general European community. The third phase of their assimilation and absorption would come with the re-opening to Europe of opportunities for overseas settlement to suitable individuals, not to organized groups and classes with special and conflicting priority ratings.

4. I have been trying to look at the problem from what I conceive to be the interest of Canada as an important country of immigration during the next decade or so. From this point of view I should like to see us drawing at our own discretion on a general European pool within which the displaced elements had been already dissolved or were at least suspended in some kind of equilibrium. The alternative course along which the governments are now drifting promises years of pressure groups, racial, religious, and political, all trying to influence and distort our immigration policy — with very little real settlement and that continuously controversial.

5. It seems to me that a first step toward reversing present trends might be to stipulate in the German Treaty that all persons now in Germany, regardless of how they got there, whether they be Balts, Ukrainians, Sudetens, Jews, Swabians, Poles etc. should be granted as of right the option of legal domicile in Germany, with eligibility on equal terms with all natural-born residents of the Reich for whatever is left of social and civil status in Germany today; i.e. they should be free to work at any trade, enter any profession, own land, qualify for citizenship if they desire to. "Domicile" in Germany for the purposes of the Treaty could be defined to include obligation on Germany (perhaps valid for a limited number of years) to receive them back as deportees if other countries to which they might have been admitted concluded that they were unsuitable as immigrants. To give displaced or stateless persons a right to return to some part of the earth's surface would in fact greatly facilitate their chances of obtaining employment and the opportunity of settlement in other countries which, like our own, have been very hesitant about accepting undeportable immigrants regardless of their personal qualities and qualifications.

6. The displacement of these people from their homes and their present predicament in Germany can be regarded as directly or indirectly a consequence of German aggression; to the extent that their interim settlement in Germany represented a new liability on the German economy, it could be represented as another form of reparation, a reparation without a transfer problem and with the compensatory addition to the German working force of the skills and capacities of such of these people as elected to live and work there.

7. I should expect such a provision in the German Treaty to lead in many cases to fairly rapid local assimilation. In other cases German residence might prove only a transitional period pending admission into other countries, in Europe or overseas for permanent settlement. In any case the prospect of permanent settlement for likely individuals would be enormously facilitated if they could be stripped of their present political labels (regardless of whether those labels are meant to designate a special claimant status or a general racial stigma) taken out of camps, given a domicile and a chance to go back to work.

8. To sum up such a provision might help:

(1) Speed up the liquidation of a political and economic problem which might otherwise plague Governments and prejudice international relations for twenty years.

(2) Saddle Germany with primary responsibility for the solution of a problem which her policies have created.

(3) Give individual displaced persons a more real opportunity than they have now of reestablishing themselves in new homes either in Europe or abroad.

(4) Give overseas countries an opportunity to develop selective immigration policies adapted to their needs, and absorptive capacities — and relatively unburdened by the special pressures which may well make it impossible for us to work out any coherent and sensible immigration policy at all.

192. DEA/939-40

Extrait d'une note de la Deuxième direction politique

Extract from Memorandum by Second Political Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], February 12, 1947

INTERNATIONAL OBLIGATIONS ARISING FROM THE REFUGEE PROBLEM

I. Dimensions of the Problem

1. It is impossible to give an accurate estimate of the total number of refugees and displaced persons, as the refugee population is a shifting and uncertain one and documentation is often very faulty. However, it is safe to say that there are now nearly 3,000,000 people in the world who are homeless or stateless, and who will require international assistance in their re-settlement or repatriation. Of these, about 1,500,000 are in the Far East — Chinese taken from their homes by Japanese occupation forces, and now wishing to be repatriated. They constitute a special problem — the figure is by no means certain, nor have definite plans on an international basis yet been made for dealing with them. The other 1,500,000 are in Europe or the Mediterranean area. About 700,000 of them are refugees from before the recent war, that is, Spanish Republicans, German Jews and Social Democrats, Nansen refugees, persons who, in the main, are the particular concern of the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees. This leaves a balance of about 800,000 people who make up the new European refugee problem. They are the present inhabitants of U.N.R.R.A. camps, or they receive aid from U.N.R.R.A. in a manner that puts them on the roster of that organization. They are the residue that remained when the great post-war movement of repatriation had been completed. In the main they are Poles, Yugoslavs, Ukrainians and Baltic peoples who, for fear of persecution on political grounds, are unwilling to return to their countries of origin. It is this group whose situation is the most urgent of all, and whose fate will be the first consideration of any new body (such as the International Refugee Organization) which may be set up.

2. Besides these three groups there are certainly others, homeless people who are still in hiding and have not made themselves known to any refugee or military body, but who may turn up on the doorstep of the new organization if it is established. The total figure of 3,000,000 persons is thus most probably a minimum rather than a maximum estimate.

II. The Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees

3. This body, which was established at Evian in 1938, mainly on the initiative of the United States and United Kingdom, was created to deal with the urgent question of helping German and Austrian victims of Naziism, and Spanish Republicans who had fled after the Franco regime had come to power. Under Article 2 of the I.G.C. Constitution, the mandate of the Committee is extended to "all persons, wherever they may be, who, as a result of events in Europe, have had to leave or may have to leave their countries of residence because of the danger to their lives or liberties on account of their race, religion or political beliefs."

4. Predominantly German Jews and Spanish Republicans, the refugees under the mandate of the I.G.C. have now been classified as "refugees" for at least eight years. They are not grouped in camps but are assisted in various ways by the I.G.C. in regard to their housing and livelihood. The number of these refugees is uncertain, but the best estimate is about 700,000. While many of them are still stateless persons, their problem is not so immediate as that of the displaced persons in the U.N.R.R.A. camps as they have already managed to establish themselves to a greater or lesser degree in the countries of north-west Europe, particularly in France. Most of them will also shortly be in possession of a travel and identity document which is considerably broader in its application than was the former Nansen passport.

5. Canada has for several years taken an active role in the Executive Committee of the I.G.C., and has contributed to the Committee's support. In 1946, the Canadian Government contributed the sum of £48,263, to the operational expenditures of the I.G.C.

6. It is difficult to make any forecast concerning the I.G.C.'s activities in 1947. Possibly its principal work may be in assuming some of U.N.R.R.A.'s functions in looking after persons in the D.P. camps of occupied Germany. Unlike U.N.R.R.A. it is permitted by its constitution to arrange and finance the resettlement of refugees. However, the fate of both the I.G.C. and of the D.P. camps now under U.N.R.R.A. will be determined to a great extent by the speed with which the proposed International Refugee Organization comes into being.

III. The U.N.R.R.A. Displaced Persons Camps

7. By its terms of reference U.N.R.R.A. is authorized to assist the repatriation and rehabilitation of a wide range of persons, including United Nations nationals, stateless persons, and even Italians, who have been displaced from their place of former residence due to enemy action during the war. In carrying out its mandate, U.N.R.R.A. has established a large number of D.P. camps in Germany, Austria and Italy, where, in co-operation with the occupying military authorities, the D.P.s are sheltered, fed and, where possible, repatriated. By far the greatest number of these D.P. camps or assembly centres are in the United Kingdom, United States and French zones of Germany.

8. The number of D.P.s being helped by U.N.R.R.A. in this manner is now roughly 850,000. While repatriation from the three zones has somewhat increased during the past few months, this has been compensated for by an influx of new homeless persons, so that the population of the camps has remained fairly steady. The D.P.s are segregated in the camps roughly according to nationality. A breakdown of the 850,000 gives the following approximate figures: 400,000 Poles, 200,000 Baltic peoples, 75,000 Yugoslavs, and 175,000 miscellaneous. Of this total, about 130,000 are classified as Jews. The camps contain about 48% men and 34% women, while 18% are children under 18 years.

9. While every effort is being made to repatriate these people by U.N.R.R.A. and by the military authorities, the fact must be recognized that, on the whole, the population of the D.P. camps in Germany consists of political irreconcilables who absolutely refuse to return to their former homes. This is particularly true in the case of the Baltic peoples and the Yugoslavs. In the case of the Poles, who have recently been singled out for the greatest pressure to accept repatriation, particularly in the United Kingdom zone, a considerable amount of further repatriation may be possible.

10. Nearly all observers agree that the Baltic peoples (particularly the Latvians and Esthonians) are the best material in the camps, from the standpoint of possible emigration. They are regarded generally as the most hard-working, conscientious and resourceful group; however, they contain a high proportion of professional men — lawyers, doctors and teachers — whose resettlement abroad may be difficult. Yet there has been no disinclination by these Baltic white-collar people to do manual work if such will expedite their resettlement.

11. In general, the Ukrainian D.P.s (most of whom formerly lived in the eastern half of pre-war Poland) are considered the next best group after the Baltic peoples. They are largely industrious, conscientious peasants, very religious and without much initiative. While these docile qualities have made the Ukrainians well liked by the occupation authorities, it seems doubtful that they would prove more valuable citizens to a country such as Canada than would the Jews or Poles, both of which groups are regarded as the "problem children" of the camps, but who generally have much more initiative and intelligence than the Ukrainians.

12. With the termination of U.N.R.R.A.'s displaced persons functions now fixed for June 30th, 1947, the I.G.C. is taking over an increasing amount of the work in the D.P. camps formerly done by U.N.R.R.A. Besides this, the military occupation authorities, upon whom the main responsibility will rest until the I.R.O. comes into existence, are making definite plans of their own.

IV. The International Refugee Organization

13. On December 15th, 1946, immediately following the General Assembly resolution which called on member states to approve the draft Constitution of the I.R.O., Canada became the first state to sign both the Constitution (subject, of course, to later ratification by Parliament) and the Interim Arrangements establishing a Preparatory Commission of the I.R.O. Signatures to the Interim Arrangements are given without reservation to subsequent parliamentary approval. As it now stands, the I.R.O. Constitution will not enter into force until at least 15 states have become parties to it whose total contributions to Part 1 of the operational budget, as set forth in Annex 1, amount to at least 75% thereof.

14. Meanwhile, the Preparatory Commission has come into existence through the signature of the Interim Arrangements by 8 states who have also signed the I.R.O. Constitution. The first meeting of the Preparatory Commission has been called for Geneva, beginning on February 11th, 1947. Canada will be represented at this meeting by General Pope. The main task of this Preparatory Commission meeting will be to make plans for the efficient transfer of U.N.R.R.A.'s D.P. activities to the I.R.O. when the new organization comes into being.

15. The I.R.O. will be hampered, when it comes into existence, both by the whole-hearted hostility of the countries of origin of the refugees and by clauses in its Constitution placed there as a concession to these states, who have now all indicated their intention of not joining the new organization. An example of this is a paragraph in Article 10 of the Constitution which makes contributions to the large-scale re-settlement activities of the I.R.O., as distinct from the re-establishment of individuals and family units, on a purely voluntary basis from the various member states.

. . .

V. Action Already Taken by Canada in Admitting Refugees

17. During the war years approximately 3,500 refugees (predominantly Poles and Czechs) were admitted to Canada. By Order-in-Council P.C. 6687 of October 26, 1945, these persons were made eligible for permanent residence in Canada.

18. Recently, also, 4,000 single ex-members of General Anders' Polish Army were admitted to Canada under two-year farm labour agreements with the right to remain in Canada if they lived up to the terms of their agreements.

19. By P.C. 2071 of May 28, 1946, Canadian Immigration regulations were extended to include a number of categories of near relatives of Canadian residents who were not previously admissible to Canada. Recently, arrangements have been completed with the I.G.C. and other interested authorities, whereby any of these persons who are now in D.P. camps in Europe may be located, identified and inspected by teams of Canadian Immigration officials who will be sent from Canada for this purpose. The number of such relatives of Canadian residents in the D.P. camps, however, is quite small — probably under 1,000.

VI. Conclusion

20. It is apparent that the problem of these nearly one million persons in the D.P. camps of Europe can only be solved through re-settlement in countries who are willing and capable of receiving them as immigrants. Only a fraction of these people will accept repatriation and their prolonged stay in the D.P. camps will merely further demoralize them. Canada's interest in this problem derives, therefore, both from our position as a logical country of reception rather than from our membership in various international bodies operating in this field.

21. One further factor, of course, is that there is a great difference in the quality of the D.P.s themselves as prospective immigrants. If, for example, the Canadian Government were to decide that the best course was to admit a fairly large group of Baltic D.P.s to Canada, it would be imperative to act quickly in order to meet competition from other countries of reception. Consistent with our internal housing conditions and other such limiting factors, it seems essential therefore that Canada should take the earliest possible action in this field, both for obvious humanitarian reasons, and in order to obtain the best potential immigrants for assimilation as future Canadians.

H.H. CARTER

193. DEA/9770-B-40

Lettre circulaire du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Circular Letter from Secretary of State for External Affairs

No. B.48 Ottawa, April 15, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir:

I have the honour to refer to the statement made by the Prime Minister on November 7, 1946, concerning the scheme for sending immigration inspection teams to Germany and Austria to inspect and select displaced persons for whom application had been made by their relatives in Canada. Copies of this statement were subsequently referred to all Canadian Missions abroad.

2. The first group of approximately 50 persons who have been selected by the immigration teams under this scheme have now reached Canada on board the "Aquitania", and I thought it would be useful to review in more detail the actual procedure whereby these displaced persons are made admissible to Canada.

3. As mentioned in the Prime Minister's statement on November 7th, arrangements were completed between the Canadian Government and the Inter-governmental Committee on Refugees by which displaced persons who were near relatives of Canadian residents could be located, identified, assembled, inspected and approved for entry to Canada. The scheme did not make admissible to Canada any new categories of immigrants but merely developed machinery by which displaced persons, who were already admissible in virtue of their relationship to Canadian residents, could be inspected and approved.

4. It was obvious that such persons could not proceed to a Canadian Immigration Office on the Continent for inspection in the ordinary manner. Arrangements were accordingly made to send inspecting teams of Canadian immigration, medical and security officers to Germany, Austria and possibly Italy, to inspect the displaced persons who had been located and identified for this purpose by the IGCR. At present these immigration teams have been operating in the British, United States and French zones of Germany for several weeks. Later they will move on to Austria and perhaps to Italy. Mr. Odilon Cormier, normally Canadian Immigration Officer in Paris, is in charge of the inspecting teams.

5. As mentioned above, this scheme does not make any new categories of persons admissible to Canada. All the displaced persons who will be selected are admissible under the authority of Order-in-Council P.C. 695, as amended by P.C. 2071 of May 28, 1946, and by P.C. 371 of January 30, 1947. The procedure begins when the resident in Canada makes application to Immigration Branch for his relative in the displaced persons' camp in Germany. The Immigration Officers in Canada then check as to whether the relative concerned comes within the admissible categories and, if so, whether his relative in Canada can provide satisfactory settlement arrangements. Lists of applications approved on these two points are then forwarded to the immigration teams in Germany and to the IGCR who identify and assemble the displaced persons concerned. The immigration teams then inspect the displaced persons in order to determine their health and character and to see that they otherwise qualify under our Immigration Regulations. At the same time, the applications are screened from the security standpoint by the R.C.M.P. officers attached to the teams. Following final inspection and approval by the inspecting teams, the displaced person concerned is granted a visa making him admissible to Canada as an immigrant. His subsequent transportation to Canada is arranged by the IGCR who collect the expenses, where possible, from the relative in Canada.

6. It is not yet known how many displaced persons will be admitted to Canada under the scheme outlined above. In view, however, of the distortions concerning this scheme which have occasionally appeared in the Press, I would like to emphasize again two points which have already been mentioned: (a) the scheme does not make new categories admissible to Canada and (b) the initiative in the application must in all cases be from the relative in Canada.

I have etc.

H.H. CARTER
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

194. DEA/5127-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

Ottawa, May 8, 1947

Dear Sir,

I have your letter of May 2nd† in which you ask for information concerning plans for the resettlement of displaced persons and refugees. The development of any general plan in regard to the migration of displaced persons has been delayed pending the establishment of the International Refugee Organization. The Preparatory Committee of the I.R.O. is meeting in Geneva at the present time and in this connection I am enclosing copy of telegram No. 45 of May 4th† from the Canadian representative on this body. You will see from this telegram that it may not prove possible to bring the I.R.O. into existence before the termination of UNRRA activities in the displaced persons' camps, and that methods for meeting this situation are under consideration. As you know, the Constitution of the I.R.O. has been signed for Canada, but a resolution approving ratification has not yet been adopted by Parliament. We are hopeful that it may be possible to bring this matter to the attention of Parliament within the next two or three weeks and that a contribution to the finances of I.R.O. may be included in the next supplementary estimates.

In the course of negotiations leading to the establishment of the International Refugee Organization, the possibility of adopting a general plan for the settlement of refugees has been discussed on a number of occasions. It has been suggested, for example, that the refugees should be distributed on a quota basis amongst countries which were prepared to accept immigrants. In these discussions the view advanced by the Canadian delegation has been that resettlement could best be accomplished through amendments and adjustments in existing immigration regulations in receiving countries, rather than through the adoption of any general quota system. The gradual adjustment of Canadian immigration regulations over the past two years in such a manner as to admit immigrants from displaced persons' camps has seemed for us a more practicable method of approaching the problem than the acceptance of a commitment to receive an overall specific quota of refugees. The question of resettlement will, however, come urgently before the Preparatory Commission of the I.R.O. and the I.R.O. itself when that body comes into existence. If it is the view of your Department that Canada should agree to accept a specific quota of displaced persons and should urge other states to make similar commitments, we should be glad in this Department to see such proposals considered by the Government.

In the meantime, as you know, Canadian authorities have been cooperating with the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees to make possible the movement to Canada of groups of displaced persons for whom admission to this country has been approved. The Intergovernmental Committee has also been arranging for the movement of groups of refugees to other parts of the world, particularly to South American countries. All arrangements of this nature have, however, been made on a piecemeal basis and the negotiation of a general international agreement for the resettlement of displaced persons has not yet been discussed at any international conference. This Department, of course, would be glad to learn of any initiative which you considered might be taken by Canadian delegations at international conferences in this respect.

Yours sincerely,
LAURENT BEAUDRY

195. DEA/5127-40

Le sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources au sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, May 15, 1947

Dear Mr. Beaudry:

I have read with interest your letter of the 8th May, 1947, regarding the delay in the establishment of the International Refugee Organization.

So far as one can judge from available official and unofficial information on this subject, it may be six or eight months before the I.R.O. gets established and succeeds in working out an International Agreement for the handling of the D.P. problem.

We have been wondering in this Department whether it might not be advantageous to Canada if we were to take more initiative in this matter. If we wait until the ultimate international agreement is reached, we will then, of necessity, have to take our part of the displaced persons straight from the general pool and without very much chance of making a selection. If, on the other hand, we were to act independently now and arrange for the movement of say 5,000 to 10,000 D.P.'s. to Canada, we would gain the following advantages:

(a) We would have the satisfaction of being able to say that Canada was the first country to make any serious effort to contribute to a solution to this problem.

It could be pointed out that being distressed by the extreme delays in obtaining an International Agreement, we went ahead on our own and made our contribution without waiting indefinitely while the refugees continue to suffer.

(b) We could select the D.P.'s. in accordance with our own ideas as to who would be likely to make the best Canadian citizens.

If we wait until the International Agreement is reached, we would presumably, as suggested above, have to take our share of all classes and types.

(c) We would strengthen the impression in Canada that the Government is seriously interested in immigration and is acting effectively to obtain a good type of immigrant.

(d) We would, in fact, be making a real move towards the solution of a very distressing problem and we would get a degree of recognition which would be very valuable publicity for Canada.

(e) Our action might very well lead to other countries taking somewhat similar steps and thus contributing, in turn, to the solution of the problem.

It will, of course, be understood that any persons admitted as a result of this initiative would be counted against any ultimate quota that Canada might be assigned as a result of the eventual International Agreement. In summary, the proposal outlined above would constitute a humanitarian act; would improve the type of displaced person that will ultimately reach Canada; would stimulate other countries to make an early contribution to the problem and would enhance the reputation of Canadians as a humanitarian and practical people.

I am sending a copy of this proposal to the Deputy Minister of Labour and I shall be glad to have early comments both from Dr. MacNamara and yourself with reference to this matter.

Yours very truly,
H.L. KEENLEYSIDE

196. DEA/939-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of Mines and Resources

Ottawa, May 22, 1947

My dear Colleague:

With reference to your letter of May 13th† concerning the efforts of the High Commissioner in London to secure additional shipping in the United Kingdom for immigration purposes, I am enclosing herewith a copy of a telegram which I have sent Mr. Robertson on this subject.†

I can understand your anxiety to ensure that everything possible is done in this matter, but I would like to point out that there is no evidence of any lack of understanding of the importance of the question in this Department or at Canada House, nor any evidence that all possible efforts are not being made. Since receiving instructions from this Department, in our telegram No. 541 of March 27,† to press for the maximum amount of shipping space, the Office of the High Commissioner has been almost constantly in session with officials of the Cunard Line, the Minister of Transport and others.

In regard to the use of ships specifically for refugees and displaced persons, you will recall that the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees made a proposal of this nature to the Canadian Government some months ago. This plan, which was communicated in Despatch No. A 270 of March 26† from London and referred to your Department on April 3,† suggested the possibility of using, for the purpose of moving displaced persons to Canada, United States C-4 and Victory-type ships chartered by the Inter-Governmental Committee. No reply, however, was received from your Department until April 19th, by which time we had been informed from London that the ships concerned had been ear-marked for South American traffic.

You point out that it would be difficult to explain to the Canadian people why Australia can obtain three additional vessels for the movement of immigrants "while Canada obtains none". I do not think myself that any fair comparison can be made between the allocation of three troop ships to the Australian run and the situation in regard to the North Atlantic. The Australian Government has, as you know, drawn up an agreement with the United Kingdom for assisting immigration to the Commonwealth by which both the Australian and the United Kingdom Governments shall pay a proportion of the fares for ex-servicemen and others who emigrate from the United Kingdom to Australia. We, of course, have concluded no such agreement for assisted immigration nor, as I understand it, do we plan to do so. This, of course, has a bearing on the provision of ships.

May I say in conclusion that this Department is quite aware of the importance of this whole matter and I am sure that the High Commissioner is also. We shall continue to take all steps possible to assist you in procuring the maximum amount of shipping for the movement of immigrants and other passengers from the United Kingdom to Canada.

Yours sincerely,
LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

197. DEA/5068-A-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

SECRET [Ottawa], May 26, 1947

Dear Dr. Keenleyside:

Mr. Beaudry has shown me the copy of your memorandum of May 7th to Mr. Glen, concerning Chinese immigration. I note from the agenda for the Cabinet Committee meeting tomorrow that Chinese immigration is included as item 5 and I understand that it is your intention to bring forward the considerations and suggestions outlined in your memorandum.

As you know, proposals for the establishment of a quota, which is one of the suggestions contained in your memorandum, were made on two or three occasions when the whole problem of policy was under review. It was largely because of views expressed by the Department of Mines and Resources that the quota possibility was dropped. Now that the government statement of policy has been made, without any reference to a possible use of the quota system, I feel that there are serious considerations which would make it unwise to reopen this matter at the present time. I have accordingly had the attached memorandum prepared expressing my views on the matter.†

I hope that you may feel, on further consideration, that it might be possible to achieve the curtailment you have in mind by means of regulation and administration rather than through new legislation and new formal modifications of policy. If you think that this would be a feasible method to try as a first device, possibly it would not be necessary for the quota consideration to be reopened tomorrow.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

198. PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], June 5, 1947

. . .

IMMIGRATION; ACCEPTANCE OF DISPLACED PERSONS; SELECTION AND ADMISSION OF SPECIAL GROUPS

3. The Secretary submitted a report of the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy in which it was recommended that up to 5,000 persons from D.P. camps be admitted without waiting for the conclusion of the proposed international agreement on the subject. If this proposal were approved, an Order in Council might be passed and an immediate public announcement made.

In this connection it was reported by the Committee that the Acting Minister of Mines and Resources was exploring actively the possibility of obtaining a ship capable of carrying some hundreds of passengers per voyage for this purpose.

Copies of the Cabinet Committee's report on this subject had been circulated.

(Cabinet Committee's report, June 2, 1947 — Cabinet Document 466).†

4. Mr. Heeney also submitted a second report of the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy describing the various occupational groups under consideration by the Immigration-Labour Interdepartmental Committee and the procedure recommended for selection and admission.

These groups included some 1,400 woods workers, 2,000 craftsmen for the clothing industry and 2,000 women for domestic work in private homes, hospitals and similar institutions. The Cabinet Committee recommended their admission.

The procedure recommended involved applications to Mines and Resources by prospective employers who would undertake to provide employment under certain conditions and for a specified duration and to arrange suitable housing, assist in selection and pay costs of transportation. Employers would also enter into a "memorandum of understanding" with employees in which the latter would agree to work at prevailing wage rates for specified periods.

Copies of the Cabinet Committee's report had been circulated.

(Cabinet Committee's report, June 2, 1947 — Cabinet Document 467).†

5. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of National Health and Welfare mentioned certain administrative practices in the Immigration Branch concerning respectively the status of "enemy aliens" and "Asiatics" which had been the cause of a good deal of criticism.

6. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed:

(a) that suggestions and criticisms concerning administration of the regulations for admission to Canada by the Immigration Branch coming to the notice of Ministers be drawn to the attention of the Acting Minister of Mines and Resources directly by such Ministers;

(b) that the recommendation submitted by the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy for the admission of 5,000 persons from Displaced Persons camps be approved (the 1,400 woods workers referred to in the Committee's second report and the 100 mill workers brought in for the Dionne Spinning Mills Company to be included in this number);

(c) that the report of the Cabinet Committee respecting further occupational groups under consideration for admission (2,000 for the clothing industry; 2,000 for domestic work) be noted with approval; authorization for admission of these additional groups to be deferred pending the working out of detailed arrangements and the submission of specific recommendations; and,

(d) that decision upon the recommendations of the Cabinet Committee respecting procedure to govern all group movements be deferred pending further consideration thereof.

. . .

199. PCO

Extrait des conclusions du Cabinet

Extract from Cabinet Conclusions

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], July 10, 1947

. . .

IMMIGRATION; ADMISSION OF DISPLACED PERSONS

19. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply as Acting Minister of Mines and Resources reported that applications now under active and favourable consideration by Labour and the Immigration Branch for admissions from displaced persons camps already exceeded the total of 5,000 fixed by the Cabinet decision of June 5th.

Some 2,720 woods workers had already been approved for admission; tentative approval had been given for 2,000 garment workers; individual cases up to 1,000 were being approved; other groups in substantial numbers were under active consideration.

Accordingly, it was recommended that approval be given for admission of a further 5,000 from D.P. camps (making a total of 10,000) and that announcement be made in Parliament to that effect.

Immigrants admitted under this decision would be counted against any total that Canada might agree to accept as a result of international agreement for re-settlement of displaced persons.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources, July 4, 1947 — Cabinet Document 490).†

20. The Secretary of State for External Affairs pointed out that approval of this recommendation would not involve any change in policy or any new regulations; it would merely increase the number admissible from D.P. camps.

21. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that approval be given for the admission of an additional 5,000 immigrants from displaced persons camps, on the basis indicated by the Minister, and that announcement be made accordingly.

. . .

200. PCO/Vol. 83

Note du ministre par intérim des Mines et des Ressources pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Acting Minister of Mines and Resources to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], August 8, 1947

The Acting Minister of Mines and Resources, with the concurrence of the Departments of External Affairs, Justice (R.C.M.P.), Labour, National Health and Welfare, begs to make the following report and recommendations:-

Toward the end of last year arrangements were made with the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees for the assembling for examination of displaced persons eligible for admission to Canada. Immigration inspection teams were sent to Germany in March last. Originally there were two teams each consisting of one Immigration Inspector, one doctor (Immigration Service, Department of National Health) and one R.C.M.P. Officer for security screening. At first their work was confined to the examination of displaced persons admissible under the close relative scheme. To this has been added the bulk movement of labour, 5,000 authorized under P.C. 2180 of June 6th, 1947, which was increased to 10,000 by P.C. 2856 dated July 18th, 1947. Applications for the bulk movement of 3,000 woodworkers have already been approved and the selection of 1,000 female domestics authorized. Applications for a further 1,500 to 2,000 woodworkers and for 1,200 garment workers are being processed and applications from several other industries are under consideration.

When a bulk movement is approved the employers nominate representatives to select the displaced persons they want. These representatives join our teams in a semi-official capacity.

Approved cases under the close relative scheme already number approximately 16,000 and these are being added to daily; these are outside the 10,000 bulk movement so our teams already have a total of 26,000 to deal with. It might be mentioned that nearly 4,000 applicants were interviewed in selecting the first 1,500 woodsworkers. Fifty per cent of those interviewed were rejected on medical and other grounds.

The arrangement with the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees which is being carried on by the Provisional Committee, International Refugee Organization, is that they assemble displaced persons for Examination and have chest X-ray and blood tests ready for our Medical Officer. A third team will shortly be added to the two already working and each team will consist of one Immigration Inspector, one doctor, one R.C.M.P. Officer, one Department of Labour official and one representative of industry and Women Officers are being despatched to select domestics. To this should be added interpreters. This means that each team operating will have six to eight members.

Arrangements are under way to deal with persons who do not come within the mandate of the International Refugee Organization such as Volksdeutsche, German fiancées of Canadian servicemen and the German and Austrian wives and minor children of legal residents of Canada.

Progress in the examination and movement of displaced persons has been very slow due to,-

(a) Lack of transport for our Officers.

(b) Difficulty in locating many of the prospective immigrants.

(c) Difficulty in securing ocean transportation.

(d) Inadequate facilities of I.G.C.R. in Germany.

The Director of Immigration and the Assistant Director, Public Health Services, Department of National Health and Welfare, have recently been in Germany investigating the whole situation and have fully reported thereon and made certain recommendations hereinafter referred to. The difficulties under which the Canadian teams are working are fully set forth. Upon receipt of this report, which was concurred in by the representatives of the Departments of Labour and National Health in Germany, a meeting was called of senior officials of each of the Departments concerned and the recommendations of the Director were unanimously approved but the Committee was of the opinion that billeting at Heidelberg should be increased to provide for approximately fifty personnel to include twelve women and more motor cars provided. These items were referred back to the Director for his further consideration and met with his approval.

In view of reports received the undersigned desires to make the following recommendations:

(1) That an Immigration headquarters be set up at Heidelberg, Germany. Heidelberg is in the American Zone but it is the logical place for such a headquarters. In the first place it is the headquarters of the P.C., I.R.O. in Germany and the various Missions concerned with the movement of displaced persons are to be located there. The location is fairly central in Germany keeping in mind that our Officers will also be working in Austria. It would have been preferable to locate in Hannover which is in the British Zone but the devastation has been so terrific that quarters there cannot be obtained. The same applies to Hamburg. In view of these facts there is no serious objection to the location in the American Zone.

(2) That a request be made for the billeting at Heidelberg of forty persons. This is considered a good balance between the two figures suggested.

(3) That six Canadian Ford Station Wagons and two Ford five passenger Sedan cars be purchased and shipped to Germany as soon as possible. Lack of transport is seriously impeding the work of our teams. All movement within the Military Zone or international travel is either by military train or motor transport. Every trip outside of a mile or two means one or other of these modes of transportation. Travel by military train requires the obtaining of movement orders, permits, etc., which takes hours and sometimes longer to obtain. An enormous amount of time is lost in this way. Motor transportation is, generally speaking, not available. Our Officers receive every help from the various authorities but the same is inadequate. Many of the Camps can only be reached by car and our Officers have to wait hours to obtain a car to transport them. All organizations are extremely short of motor transport.

(4) That arrangements be made with the British Army Authorities to provide from their general stores summer and later on winter outfits for Canadian Government officials on teams. The cost will be very little and can be done on requisition from Officer in charge of teams. The wear and tear of clothing is creating a serious problem for our Officers.

(5) That six competent and trustworthy interpreters be sent from Canada or recruited in England, the former preferable. The teams are largely dependent on the honesty and intelligence of the interpreter and at present the situation in this respect is unsatisfactory. Reliance has to be placed on interpreters selected from among displaced persons at the various camps or local people. Two interpreters are needed for each team as their services are required by the R.C.M.P., the doctor, Labour Department official, Immigration Inspector and representative of industry. Knowledge of Polish, German and Slavic dialects are required.

(6) That a Senior Immigration Officer have direction and be responsible for the work in Germany as it is necessary to co-ordinate work of various units comprising teams. Immigration Officer O. Cormier has been in charge of Immigration work in Germany since teams were first sent and nominally responsible for the teams as a whole. He is well qualified to assume command of operations. Mr. Cormier has for many years been the Immigration Officer-in-Charge at Paris, France, where he is now a member of the Embassy staff with the rank of Consul and he is thoroughly acquainted with conditions in Europe and official procedure. It is recommended that he be officially designated Head of all Canadian teams operating in Occupied Territory and if possible be given Consular ranking in Germany and Austria.

Approval of the foregoing recommendations are considered essential if our work in Germany is to be successfully carried on.

JAS. A. MACKINNON

201. DEA/939-C-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour la Direction consulaire

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division to Consular Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], August 26, 1947

I return to you your memorandum of August 20 to Mr. Crean[9] in which you state that you understand that the Immigration Branch is now instructing its selection teams in Germany that, subject to the usual security clearance, the mere fact that a displaced person bore arms for the enemy will not disqualify him as an immigrant.

2. This seems to me too important a decision to be made without clearance with the Prime Minister and Mr. St. Laurent.

3. Similar problems arose during the course of the movement to Canada of the former members of General Ander's Polish Army. At first we were reluctant to accept any Poles who had served in the German army. We then moved from this position to accepting them if they had shown their good faith by deserting the German army and by fighting against the Germans. Later we moved to an even more generous position under which we would accept Poles who had served in the German army and had been taken prisoner so long as they had actively participated in hostilities against the Axis. This decision was reached at a meeting attended by the Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent and Mr. Wrong.

4. Consequently, Poles who served in the German army and joined the Polish Corps after the end of hostilities have been debarred from entry into Canada.

5. It looks now as if we are going to apply a less rigorous rule to the Baltic displaced persons. I do not think this ought to be done without a reference to the Prime Minister and Mr. St. Laurent.

6. The problem is essentially a political one. The Government has been criticized a good deal for admitting to Canada Poles who have served in the German army even though they later purged their sins by serving in the Polish army. I should think the Government would be reluctant to court further criticism by admitting to [9]G.G. Crean, cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures; président, sous-comité du Comité mixte du renseignement.

G.G. Crean, Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; Chairman, Sub-Committee of Joint Intelligence Committee.

Canada Balts who have served in the German army and who have not subsequently fought on our side.

ESCOTT REID

202. PCO/Vol. 82

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au sous-ministre des Mines et des Ressources

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources

[Ottawa], August 29, 1947

Dear Mr. Keenleyside:

RE — IMMIGRATION

Since my return to Ottawa, I have reported to the Cabinet my observations on immigration as a result of my visit to the United Kingdom and to Germany. By Cabinet decision, I am authorized to instruct as follows:

1. The tentative arrangements for reconversion of the SS Huascaran, made before I left for the U.K., have been confirmed. This ship will be operated by CPR and will be at the complete disposal of the Department as far as westbound loading is concerned, both as to immigrants and to ports of call, for a period of three years.

2. An immediate expansion of our Immigration services in the U.K. must be made without delay. The new quarters obtained in London should be occupied as soon as possible and similar adequate quarters should be obtained in Glasgow and possibly at a third point that our officers may recommend. Efforts should be made to offer immigrants to Canada a complete service similar to that now being offered by Ontario House.

Every effort should be made to change the atmosphere of our immigration offices and to make it evident that Canada welcomes desirable immigrants from the U.K. It is probable that an increasing number of berths for Canada will be available by ship and it is certain that an additional number of air passengers will be offered during the next two months. There is every reason why an improved service should be inaugurated in our Immigration offices as soon as possible.

3. With the concurrence of the Minister of Labour, Council has decided that a maximum movement of 3,000 persons per month from Displaced Persons Camps can be handled. This number will include movement of special groups and be supplemented by labourers suitable for primary steel plants and for steel foundries, the construction industry, railroad maintenance gangs and similar heavy work. For those not included in special groups, the Department of Labour will arrange accommodation in one of the three military camps and distribute the men from these. Agricultural workers can of course be absorbed in unlimited numbers.

It is important that the movement of Displaced Persons be stepped up as promptly as possible and the International Relief Organization should be advised accordingly. The latter were particularly anxious to know the extent of Canadian requirements, in order that these persons may be segregated in a separate camp and be held available for movement whenever shipping space can be obtained.

4. The movement of domestic servants which, I understand, is presently limited to 1,000, can be expanded to 2,000, provided the selection of the first 1,000 indicates that suitable women are available.

The speeding up of the immigration movement should be treated as a matter of high priority. Anything that can be done to assist the movement of relatives and immigration from Holland, Belgium and the Scandinavian countries should be undertaken. Our Immigration Department will have the enthusiastic support of the Governor-in-Council for any steps that will contribute to the success of the movement.

I am sure that the above will have the enthusiastic cooperation of yourself and your officers.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

203. PCO/Vol. 83

Extrait d'une note du ministre par intérim des Mines et des Ressources pour le Cabinet

Extract from Memorandum from Acting Minister of Mines and Resources to Cabinet

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], September 18, 1947

RE ADMISSION OF DISPLACED PERSONS FROM EUROPE

. . .

4. It is proposed to provide a pool of 7,000 displaced persons from which immigrants would be drawn and embarked as shipping is made available. This pool to be composed of the following:

1,500 men suitable for heavy industry work, primary steel plants, metal manufacturing plants, foundries and machinery manufacturing plants, stone quarries and brickyards.

1,500 men for construction work on power plants, transmission lines, highways, railway construction and track maintenance work.

1,000 men with experience in building construction to be employed as building construction labourers. To be included in this group bricklayers, terrazzo and tile workers or other building tradesmen willing to come to Canada as construction labourers to work as such until they gain knowledge of our language and methods and prove their ability as tradesmen.

1,000 men suitable for lumber camps. This in addition to those already approved.

2,000 women for domestic work. This in addition to the 1,000 already approved.

The advantages of the proposed pool are that it will make possible reasonably long term planning which is essential in order to arrange for shipping accommodation. It will ensure the filling of all steamship berths made available and will earmark for Canada the most desirable immigrants who would otherwise be tempted to accept offers from other countries.

5. Thus the group movements already approved total 9,619 and the number of applications still to be considered will exhaust the 10,000 authorized and with the proposed pool of 7,000, the total will be brought up to 17,000.

6. It is, therefore, recommended that approval be given for the admission of a further 10,000 displaced persons from Europe.[10]

This will make a total of 20,000 to be counted against any ultimate total which Canada may accept as a result of an International agreement dealing with the resettlement of displaced persons.

C.D. HOWE

204. DEA/939-B-40

Note du directeur de l'Immigration du ministère des Mines et des Ressources pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la politique de l'Immigration

Memorandum from Director of Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources to Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy

SECRET [Ottawa], October 31, 1947

PROPOSED QUOTA FOR APPROVED DISPLACED PERSON RELATIVES OF RESIDENTS OF CANADA RESIDING IN OCCUPIED TERRITORY OF EUROPE

Considerable criticism is developing because of the delay in the movement to Canada from Occupied Territory in Europe of displaced persons having relatives in this country whose cases have been approved by the Immigration Service.

Up to October 21, 1947, 10,264 relatives cases have been approved and of this number 1,102 or 23.5% of the displaced persons movement have arrived in Canada.

The slow movement has been due to,-

(1) The scarcity of ocean transportation

[10]Approuvé par le Cabinet le 1er octobre.
Approved by Cabinet on October 1.

(2) The fact that I.R.O. has been unable to deal with refugees of German ethnic origin (Volksdeutsche),[11] they being outside its mandate and the difficulties in locating and presenting the immigrants for Immigration examination.

(3) The preference being given to the movement of labour groups urgently needed in Canada.

With the increased shipping programme for the next four months announced recently by I.R.O., which will result in the movement of about 7,200 displaced persons by the middle of February, the number of relatives admitted should be increased by about 1,600 if the percentage referred to above is maintained.

The difficulties experienced in locating and processing relatives not coming within the mandate of I.R.O. are being overcome by the activities of the Canadian Christian Council for the Resettlement of Refugees, a voluntary organization having representatives operating in Occupied Territory.

While it is recognized that with the limited transportation available any increase in the movement of relatives would correspondingly reduce the bulk labour movement it is believed that the circumstances warrant a larger proportion of relatives being moved as several thousand cases in this category have been in abeyance for almost a year. The increased movement referred to could be accomplished by requesting I.R.O. to arrange that on each sailing either 33⅓% or 40% of the immigrant passengers should be approved relatives.

A.L. JOLLIFFE

205. CH/Vol. 2093

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[London], December 12, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

I had a visit this morning from Mr. H. Tuck, the American Director of the Preparatory Commission of the International Refugee Organization; Sir Arthur Rucker, his United Kingdom deputy; and Mr. Dow, one of their senior officers, who was formerly with the Inter-Governmental Committee on Refugees. The visit was really a courtesy call for the purpose of expressing their appreciation of the support and cooperation that their organization had received from the Canadian Government and various departmental agencies with which they had been in contact. They welcomed our close relatives scheme, and have been very glad to assist our immigration services in efforts to recruit special categories of workers among the DP's.

[11]Voir les documents 216-218./See Documents 216-8.

They were obviously shaken by the size of the job they had taken on, and dismayed at the difficulties of winding it up in two or three years, which they had hoped would be all that was necessary to do the job in. Not unnaturally their minds are moving toward some system of quota allocations which countries of reception might agree to accept. I saw great difficulties in the way of this sort of approach, particularly from the point of view of a country like Canada.

The conversation led me to have another look at the telegram I sent you a year ago during the Deputies' discussion of the German Settlement (our telegram No. 133 of January 23rd).[12] I am inclined to think there is still some merit in the suggestions for dealing with the DP problem which I there tried to set forth. I wondered if people in Ottawa had any chance to look into them and see if they carried their judgment. If you think this approach is in main line a sensible one, I could perhaps try to sell it privately to the International Refugee Organization, and to the Deputies once more tackling the problem of the German Settlement.

Yours sincerely,
N.A. ROBERTSON

SECTION B

BALTES
BALTS

206. DEA/5127-C-40

Extrait d'une lettre du directeur de l'Immigration du ministère des Mines et des Ressources à la Direction économique du ministère de l'Agriculture

Extract from Letter from Director of Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources to Economic Division, Department of Agriculture

Ottawa, January 13, 1947

In accordance with memorandum dated December 18th, received from the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, I am sending you the papers† relating to a plan for the formation of a Balt Settlement in Canada. The scheme as envisaged is recorded in detail and undoubtedly has been very carefully worked out by those responsible for the same.

There are two serious objections from the Canadian viewpoint, namely, the kind of settlement proposed and the matter of finance. The plan is based on large group settlements totalling 4000 people living and operating under conditions that would tend to isolate them from other communities. Past experience and conditions in Canada do not favour group settlements or colonies and the plan in question would not, therefore, fit in with this country's general immigration policy. The elaborate scheme would require financial arrangements involving large sums of money and would, no doubt, prove to be an expensive method of settling immigrants in Canada.

[12]Document 189.

. . .

A.L. JOLLIFFE

207. DEA/939-C-40

Le chef de la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Berlin, August 7, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

During the course of his visit to Berlin, Mr. Jolliffe asked me what I thought of the Immigration Branch's ruling that displaced persons, who had borne arms against the Allies during the recent war, were ineligible for entry to Canada as immigrants. I replied that while I did not know the case or type of case he had in mind, I thought we should be wise in matters of this kind to adopt a generous and tolerant attitude, adding that for a great many years I had been of opinion that our regulations had been unduly restrictive and rigid.

Continuing, Mr. Jolliffe said that he had the Balts in mind, many of whom had willingly or unwillingly served in the German armed forces. To this I rejoined that I had invariably heard the Balts spoken of in the highest terms. Moreover, I was under the impression that most of them who had served against the Allies had had little choice in the matter and that it might be said for some of them who had voluntarily served, that at least they had been fighting Communism.

I gather from some of our immigration officials in the Zone that adherence to the above-mentioned regulation has required them to reject a considerable proportion of prospective lumber-men from amongst the Balts. They thought that this was a pity because the end result was that Canada was thereby depriving herself of some of the best material amongst the displaced persons. So far as their information went, neither the United Kingdom nor the United States made any such restriction. I share their view.

While I am aware that this question is one lying within the province of the Department of Mines and Resources, I have thought it expedient to bring the point to your attention. Some of my British friends tell me that the United Kingdom and other countries are rapidly taking the top of the bottle and that we shall find ourselves bringing up the rear of the procession. Such a thought I ventured to express to Mr. Robertson as long ago as March of last year.

Yours sincerely,
MAURICE POPE

208. DEA/5127-C-40

Extrait d'une note pour le chef de la Direction consulaire
Extract from Memorandum for Head, Consular Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], November 30, 1947

ADMISSION OF BALTS AND BALTIC PERSONS

The above matter is to be discussed in Mr. MacNamara's[13] office on Monday Dec.1 at 2.30. The following paragraphs contain some random opinions and questions that might serve to indicate useful lines of thought in talking with Pol.II and in the meeting itself.

To repeat the last paragraph of my memorandum to you of November 19,† a suitable approach to the question might be this:

1. Is the field of search of our Immigration authorities to be extended to the countries where these Balts and Baltic persons now reside? (What factors prompt this examination of the matter? In administrative terms, could the migration be undertaken in the near future?)

2. If the answer is yes, precisely which countries of temporary residence will be involved? and having regard to each of these countries and Canada's relations with the countries of origin and the U.S.S.R., what political considerations must be taken into account? Is there some paramount objection to positive action by the Government?

3. Will the migrants then be dealt with as refugees or D.P.s or immigrants pure and simple?

4. What will be the machinery of movement and of settlement? (Immigration-Labour Committee)

If this priority is realistic, the Department of External Affairs has the duty of answering question 2, before further steps are taken. To-morrow's agenda being so general, we can for the moment only attempt a broad sweep. 1st Political Division have no suggestions to make for the moment and do not wish to attend the meeting. 2nd Political Division will, I think, be intimately concerned, if only to advise that some or all of the points raised below have no substance. On the face of it, they have.

The problem differs in certain respects from that which arises from Balts and Baltic persons in the occupied territories. Where such persons now live in other European countries, whether in local employment or in camps (as in Denmark; see [13]A. MacNamara, sous-ministre du Travail.

A. MacNamara, Deputy Minister of Labour.

Copenhagen's despatch attached), they are not a burden on the German economy or on the resources of occupying or contributing powers. In so far as they are settled in employment, the only question will be the political one whether the U.S.S.R. is still exerting pressure for their return. If it is, we can expect to draw protests upon Canada as well as upon the country of temporary residence. As to those in camps, there is a burden upon local resources. The political aspect is the same, and there will be the added question whether the country of residence has its own labour shortage and settlement plans and therefore whether subject to the political considerations, it would welcome the migration plans of another country of settlement.

Before going to the meeting, we might have the opinion of 2nd Political Division as to the political reasoning. In the face of any protests from the U.S.S.R., we must expect to find ourselves alone with, say, Sweden. Such a position is to be contrasted with the movement of persons from Germany which has powerful international support in the face of opposition from the countries of origin. It is to be contrasted also with the movement of the Polish veterans, which had the support of the United Kingdom.

In view of our political affiliations, we might also consider whether any stirring of the waters in North-western Europe where British and Soviet influence meet, should only be permitted after careful exploration in London, particularly if we hope for the support of others in the face of protests.

Sweden's position alone might be delicate. We understand (from Mr. Congdon)[14] that in 1945, at any rate, the Swedish Government was managing to delay the repatriation of Baltic persons despite Soviet pressure.

I do not know whether any of the persons concerned have ever been screened by the I.G.C.R. or the I.R.O. for eligibility as D.P.s. Perhaps 1st Political can advise us regarding the European countries covered by those organizations. Alternatively, the Immigration Branch might arrive well armed with this information. I have in mind the point whether at least a part of any Canadian migration plan will not prove after all to have an international complexion like that of the movements from Germany. The whole idea may prove however to be simply the result of a need in Canada for certain types of immigrants leading us to look over the fence for greener pastures.

Whichever is the case, the situation differs from that in the occupied territories, as I have said in paragraph 4. The refugees in the occupied territories are the residue remaining there after the large-scale repatriation to countries of origin by the Western Allied armies. The western zones have on their hands a large number of refugees who are finally and definitely unwilling to return to their homelands. There is a deep resentment in the D.P.s, who hold the Germans responsible for their distress and in the Germans, who see in them nothing but a cause of annoyance and burdens. As the United States Secretary of State said before a Congressional committee in July, any attempt to absorb them into the German economy would perpet-[14]G.C. Congdon, commissaire de l'Émigration outre-mer, ministère des Mines et des Ressources; son bureau était à Londres.

G.C. Congdon, Commissioner of Overseas Emigration, Department of Mines and Resources; based in London.

uate serious tensions, in addition to increasing the occupation difficulties and expenses and prolonging the need for occupation itself. According to available information, this is not the case in other European countries of residence.

. . .

It may be necessary to consider also the following matters, in order to determine whether they are relevant to the enquiry:

1. Did all these Baltic refugees make their way to their present countries of residence by way of Germany, after being forcibly removed there? or did large numbers cross the Baltic direct to Sweden as the German armies approached? (Norway and Denmark were, of course, occupied at the time.)

2. By "Balts" do we mean Volksdeutsche inhabitants of the Baltic Republics and by "Baltic persons" do we mean Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians? (It is perhaps an advantage for the former to emphasize their Baltic citizenship at the moment.)

3. However we may set about the migration, shall we be able to avoid the triangle formed by the country of origin, the country of temporary residence and the country of settlement?

4. Is there any evidence that, like certain Ukrainians, some of these persons fought against the U.S.S.R. for political reasons of their own? (there seems to have been forced service in labour battalions)

5. Are Switzerland or the Low Countries in mind as sources of such immigrants? (I have not been able to make a thorough search to see whether we are informed of the presence of any of them in large numbers in these countries, but I think Immigration have a little information)

6. Will we be proceeding elsewhere in the face of appeals by and on behalf of Baltic refugees now in Germany? and from the international point of view would we be failing to put first things first?

7. From the "Near relatives" point of view, will Balts and Baltic persons be at a considerable disadvantage?

I do not put forward the above questions as desirable points of discussion at the meeting but rather as stimuli to a development of the general question in all possible directions.

H.R. H[ORNE]

SECTION C

VÉTÉRANS POLONAIS
POLISH VETERANS

209. DEA/621-PF-40

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 249 London, February 13, 1947

MOST IMMEDIATE

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: Your telegram No. 248 of February 12th.†

I very much regret delay in disposing of this distasteful subject. I had been hoping that matter could be cleared satisfactorily on departmental levels over here, without forcing it to Cabinet level, but War Office and Treasury have both taken, up to now, a pretty rigid and narrow view of their responsibility in the matter. I assumed from initial instructions that United Kingdom medical services had had some part in the actual examinations, and, therefore, that their Government might reasonably have been asked to accept equal responsibility for the results of an inadequate inspection of applicants. War Office investigations of their part in the matter did not show any specific derelictions for which they could hold their officers accountable, and made them reluctant to accept liability.

2. However, I have again put the whole question up to the Dominions Office, urging considerations of general policy which make it desirable for their Government to meet our request without further argument about the merits of the case. This they will try to do at once. In securing a final and favourable decision, it would be helpful to have an estimate of total costs involved. If United Kingdom authorities do agree to meet half the costs, I think they would much prefer to make a capital payment of half the estimated costs of those presently hospitalized, rather than a series of continuing payments based on actual expenses incurred in respect of individual cases. In particular, they would hope that they would not be asked to accept continuing responsibility for subsequent hospital treatment that may be required for new cases of tuberculosis or other ailments that may develop. Ends.

210. DEA/621-PF-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 391 Ottawa, March 6, 1947

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL

Following for Robertson from Pearson, Begins: My immediately preceding telegram, Polish veterans.†

In discussion of this question in Cabinet, it was suggested that one reason for reluctance of U.K. Government to agree to pay half cost of treatment was the fact that this might involve an indefinite commitment, since total costs could not be fully known. Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that, in place of assuming responsibility for half of all costs of treatment found to be necessary, the United Kingdom Government be requested to contribute a firm figure of $53,500 (being one half of the present estimated cost).

2. When asking for Cabinet approval to ask U.K. for single capital payment, we suggested an alternative decision that, in view of the reluctance of the War Office and the United Kingdom Treasury to accept any part of the liability, and in view of the United Kingdom's difficult dollar position, the Canadian Government should assume the whole cost of roughly $107,000. This suggestion was turned down by Cabinet. Ends.

211. DEA/621-PF-40

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 505 London, March 20, 1947

SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Pearson from Robertson, Begins: My telegram No. 504 of March 20th.†

Satisfactory settlement of hospital costs of tuberculous Poles is due largely to good offices of Lord Addison, who had much difficulty in persuading the Chancellor of the Exchequer to authorize payment without reopening the collateral but essentially separate questions of United Kingdom's obligation to receive Polish veterans who might be found unsuitable for employment in Canada, and of our plans for taking in another 1,100 Poles from this country.

2. I insisted that it would be a very great mistake for United Kingdom Government to attempt to attach any conditions of this character to the settlement of the hospitalization account and Lord Addison succeeded in making this view prevail.

3. My own view has always been that we were rather unreasonable last summer in insisting on the right of deportation to United Kingdom of displaced persons whose only real connection with that country arose out of United Kingdom's readiness to accept the residual responsibility for the honourable winding up of Polish forces in the West. I very much hope that as a matter of administrative policy the Departments of Immigration and Labour will be very slow to exercise this right of deportation in any given case. United Kingdom, in carrying out its wartime commitments, is giving asylum and maintenance to more than 150,000 Polish soldiers, plus dependents and camp followers, without medical examination or political screening. Our selected group of Polish land workers should be much better than a sample of the general Polish diaspora. If some of them turn out to be not very satisfactory, I do hope we can keep the thick with the thin, and not insist on our unchallenged right to return some of them to this country. Ends.

212. DEA/621-PF-40

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in United Kingdom
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 850 London, May 21, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

My telegram No. 769 of May 8th.† In formally accepting the Canadian Government's offer to authorize an increase of 500 in the total of 4,000 Polish veterans to be brought to Canada, Lord Addison says "we greatly appreciate this further evidence of the readiness of Canadian Government to assist in the solution of the problem of dealing with former members of Polish armed forces who are unwilling to return to Poland."

213. DEA/621-PF-40

Extrait d'une dépêche du chargé d'affaires en Pologne
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Extract from Despatch from Chargé d'Affaires in Poland
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 165 Warsaw, September 3, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to report that the immigration of Poles to Canada and their establishment under contract arrangements continues to provide the Polish press with a theme of disapprobation and criticism. I enclose translations of several recent articles on this subject, supplementing those transmitted with my despatch No. 138 of August 20th. Distortions of the facts are characteristic, since the theme is evidently developed for propaganda purposes.

2. Dr. Alfred Fiderkiewicz, recently Polish Minister to Canada, has apparently contributed to this unfortunate attitude in interviews published in the Polish press and in at least one speech. In fact, it was subsequent to an address he gave on August 10th to the Executive Committee of the Polish Workers' Party (Communist) that this latest rash of press articles broke out between August 18th and August 27th mostly in Polish Workers' Party newspapers. It is a disappointment to find that after his departure from Canada and just prior to his proceeding to his new post in Hungary, Dr. Fiderkiewicz has displayed an attitude so unsympathetic and in some respects defamatory toward the country which verbally he had usually spoken so well of.

3. Incidentally you will note in connection with the report of his address his references to Canadian university education, which he compares unfavourably with that of Poland. It would appear that he has recklessly misrepresented Canadian figures . . . Dr. Fiderkiewicz gives Canadian student enrolment as 17,000 and Polish as 65,000!

4. The subject of Polish settlement and labour in Canada, no doubt, is part of a broader propaganda of criticism of expatriate Poles, a warning to Poles wishing to emigrate, and a rather bitter attitude toward any foreign support given to "Anders Poles"[15] or other denationalized, hyphenated or irreconcilable Poles abroad. Apart from the specific falsifications, which I am told few "intelligent Poles" are impressed by, there is seen the familiar croaking Marxian voice accusing the "capitalists" of exploiting the workers under "slave contracts" and "cheap labour". Against this characteristic ideological propaganda, no corrective is likely to be very effective. Criticisms of Canadian immigration and settlement policies, made by Canadian opposition groups in the House of Commons itself, of course provide Canadian fuel to keep the fires of communist criticism burning abroad.

7. It is unfortunate that this smoke and shadow should cloud the otherwise friendly relations of Poland and Canada, signified here by so many expressions of sincere esteem and respect. In view of the basic ideological roots of this carping attitude on the part of the communist elements in this country, it seems to me difficult to counter it with a few factual corrections, which the tendentious part of the press, scarcely willing to be impartial or conciliatory, would very likely disregard. It is particularly disappointing and disillusioning that Dr. Fiderkiewicz, a man of international experience and a fairly broad culture, should have descended to the narrow politics of his communistic affiliations with an antagonistic disrespect for facts and an unfair slander against Canada.

8. Notwithstanding the obvious distortions of facts concerning Polish immigrant labour conditions in Canada, I am nevertheless not in a position to make any specific corrections here without precise details as to terms and methods of employment, numbers of Poles employed by "German" farmers, comparative rates of wages and hours of work, and other factors on which allegations have been made. A memorandum on these points would be helpful in the event of future contacts with the local press or Foreign Ministry officials, even as it would serve the Government in replying to any criticisms on the part of opposition Members in the House of Commons.[16]

[15]Voir le document 189, note 8./See Document 189*n*.8.

I have etc.
K.P. KIRKWOOD

SECTION D

UKRAINIENS UKRAINIANS

214. DEA/5127-40

Note du chef de la Direction consulaire
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Consular Division
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], October 16, 1947

PROPOSAL FOR ENTRY TO CANADA OF CERTAIN UKRAINIANS

At the Meeting of Cabinet on October 9th the Secretary of State reported that representations had been made to him on behalf of some thousands of non-communist Ukrainians who had fought in the German Army against the U.S.S.R. during the war. These persons are seeking admission to Canada.

This matter had already been brought to our attention by Mr. Panchuk[17] who called at Consular Division on the morning of October 9th and left the attached memorandum (marked A)† addressed to the Minister for External Affairs. The memorandum refers only to a particular group of approximately 8,000 Ukrainian persons now in the United Kingdom who are usually referred to as "Ukrainian Surrendered Enemy Personnel." In addition, Mr. Panchuk forwarded to Mr. Chance, under date of October 11th, a copy of a memorandum (marked B)† addressed to the Department of Mines and Resources, dated October 8th, 1947. This latter memorandum proposes that a change be made in the Immigration Regulations concerning the admission to Canada of Ukrainian Displaced Persons and Refugees now in Europe.

The following information has been obtained concerning the Ukrainians in whom Mr. Panchuk and his Committee are interested:

---

[16]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante : The following was written on this copy of the document: at home.

[17]G.R.B. Panchuk, directeur, mission de secours aux Ukrainiens victimes de la guerre.
G.R.B. Panchuk, Director, Relief Mission for Ukrainian Victims of War.

These persons were living largely in the Polish Ukraine prior to the recent war. When that area was overrun by the Germans they were taken to Germany and became forced labour. In the latter part of 1944 the Germans sought to recruit "Free Forces" from among the nationals of various neutral and allied countries. They appealed to these Ukrainians to join the Free Ukrainian Forces. Most of the male persons with whom we are concerned agreed on condition that they would serve only on the Eastern Front, i.e., against the U.S.S.R.

It would appear that these Ukrainians were and are strongly anti-Soviet and probably to a large degree anti-communist. They are, in fact, Ukrainian nationalists whose aim was neither to fight for the Germans or the Allies but to regain for themselves the territory of the Ukraine and to establish there a Ukrainian National State under the benevolent protection of the German Reich. A number of them were formerly known as the Galician Division.

A few of these persons are probably admissible under the Near Relatives Scheme. The others to be admissible would have to come within the provisions of Orders-in-Council with respect to Displaced Persons. I am not at all sure that all of them qualify as Displaced Persons within the mandate of P.C.I.R.O. In any event, these persons are either admissible now, in which case no action need be taken, or they are not admissible and a specific Order-in-Council would have to be obtained making them admissible. Certainly it would be necessary to obtain an Order-in-Council if we wish to admit the 8,000 now living in the United Kingdom.

The Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy made the following recommendation on September 26th, 1947:

"that regarding persons of neutral or allied nationality now seeking admission, the fact of having served in the armed forces of His Majesty's enemies during the war shall debar them unless they can establish that such service was furnished under physical compulsion."

The Cabinet Committee's recommendations were considered by Cabinet on October 9th and were referred back with respect to several points but not with respect to recommendation (e). However, a specific direction was given that the proposal for the admission of non-communist Ukrainians who had served in the German Forces be referred to the Cabinet Committee for consideration.

Political 1, Political 2 and Consular Divisions have discussed the considerations which should be taken into account in making a recommendation to Mr. St.Laurent with respect to the position this Department should take at the next Meeting of the Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy. In the meantime, an informal discussion will take place tomorrow afternoon with the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources and the Director of Immigration in order that the two Departments may pool their information before finally deciding what recommendations to make to their respective Ministers.

The following considerations may be said to favour the entry to Canada of the Ukrainians referred to:

1. On humanitarian grounds. These people have undoubtedly suffered a great deal.

2. They will probably include a good many agriculturists and skilled tradesmen who could contribute something to the Canadian economy.

3. Ukrainians who in former years came to Canada have made good settlers.

4. These persons are strongly anti-Soviet and presumably are not communists.

The following considerations may be said to militate against permitting the entry of these persons to Canada:

1. These persons have fought in German uniform against our wartime ally the U.S.S.R. at a time when we were providing equipment through Mutual Aid for use on the Eastern Front.

2. It is possible that a number of these persons may be listed by the U.S.S.R. as war criminals and indeed be war criminals according to our own standards.

3. Although there will be strong pressure to admit these persons on humanitarian grounds, there will undoubtedly be similar pressure exercised on behalf of those who have a better claim to our sympathy. One instance of this may be the Mennonites who have been refused entry to Canada and have gone to Paraguay.

4. Canadian public opinion, as expressed by such persons as the Representative of the Canadian Legion, may well be strongly opposed to the entry to Canada of persons who, although neutrals, wore the uniform of the German Army.

5. The memorandum to the Department of Mines and Resources requests that the medical requirements be waived in order that these persons may be admitted. This is primarily a question for the Department of National Health and Welfare and again it would be setting a precedent to permit persons to come to Canada whose health was, as Mr. Panchuk states, impaired because of the conditions under which they have lived and not merely physically but also morally and psychologically.

6. The question of relaxing the health requirements and admitting a number of elderly persons has a direct bearing upon the municipalities rather than the Federal Government. The Provinces and the municipalities must bear the burden of the costs of hospitalization and Old Age Pensions. Unless prior consultation with the Provinces takes place, there would in all likelihood be a great deal of recrimination.

7. Although these persons are all stated to be strongly anti-Soviet, experience would indicate that there is need for a careful screening on security grounds. Although at present these persons may not be communists, a certain percentage will undoubtedly become malcontents and a certain further percentage can be got at by bringing pressure to bear through relatives who remain in the Soviet Union. This is altogether aside from the possibility of some persons being specifically planted within these groups in order to create discontent.

The above considerations are internal but there is a further important consideration and that is the international situation which may result if we should admit these persons to Canada. At an interview between Mr. Zaroubin, the Soviet Ambassador, and Mr. J.E. Read, then Acting Under-Secretary of State, on April 30th, 1945, the question of the Canadian Ukrainian Refugee Fund was discussed.

"The Ambassador stated that Ukrainian Refugees who would not be able to return to the Ukraine were those who had left with the German Forces. They were consequently pro-fascist and the fund was therefore designed to assist the enemies not only of the Soviet Union but of Canada and the United States as well. . . . Mr. Zaroubin pointed out that this question was not one of charitable appeals only but was looked upon by the Soviet Government as a political question to which they attached a particular importance."

Our experience with respect to the attitude taken by the Government of Poland regarding Polish Displaced Persons would clearly indicate that a very bitter protest would be received from the U.S.S.R. This protest would be founded upon much stronger grounds than that which we have received from the Poles and might not be so easy to answer.

Another aspect of this question which has arisen but has now, I think, been solved is the amount of recognition which can be given to the Canadian Relief Mission for Ukrainian Victims of War. P.C.I.R.O. enquired of our High Commissioner in London regarding this matter and then proceeded to enter into an agreement with the organization before we gave a reply. Under the circumstances I think we may say to I.R.O. that it is of course, entirely a matter for themselves whether they wish to enter into an agreement with any particular welfare organization. Furthermore, since they did not await our approval before entering into the agreement they cannot be heard to say that they made the agreement because of any representations on our part.

LESLIE CHANCE

215. DEA/232-1-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

DESPATCH 2120 Ottawa, October 20, 1947

SECRET

Sir,

Mr. G.R.B. Panchuk, Director of the Canadian Relief Mission for Ukrainian Victims of War, recently called on officers of the Department requesting our assistance in obtaining approval for the entry to Canada of a large number of Ukrainians, including some 8,000 at present in the United Kingdom and an indefinite number on the Continent of Europe.

We have discussed Mr. Panchuk's representations with the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources and it is felt that no encouragement can be given with respect to the 8,000 now in the United Kingdom. These persons were apparently removed to Germany during the war as forced labour. In the latter stages of the war they were recruited by the German Army and served in German uniform on the understanding that their service would be only on the Eastern Front. After their surrender they were transferred, I believe, to Italy and thence to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Panchuk informed us that he was leaving shortly for the United Kingdom and I have no doubt that he will be calling upon you. As he made representations to the Department of Mines and Resources while in Ottawa, he will be receiving a direct answer to his representations from that Department. It will not be necessary for you to indicate to him that you have already been informed what the decision of that Department is. This despatch is merely for your information.

However, with respect to the Ukrainians who are still on the Continent of Europe, we have little information and are not certain as yet that they did, in fact, serve in the enemy forces against us. I wonder if you could ascertain from the sources of information available to you anything concerning the conduct of these persons during the recent war. I am enclosing for your information copies of three memoranda left by Mr. Panchuk with officers of the Department of Mines and Resources.

I am sending a copy of this despatch to the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin in order that any information which may be available there may be obtained.

I have etc.

LESLIE CHANCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

3e PARTIE/PART 3

VOLKSDEUTSCHE

216. DEA/9408-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 577 Ottawa, April 2, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Robertson from Riddell, Begins: Reference previous correspondence, immigration inspection of displaced persons in Germany.

2. Difficulty has arisen concerning displaced persons in Germany for whom application has been made by their relatives in Canada but who do not come within the mandate of the IGCR. The people concerned are not, repeat not, German nationals but are of German ethnic origin (i.e. "Volksdeutsche"). They are excluded from the IGCR mandate in view of the provision in the IRO Constitution placing persons of German ethnic origin outside the concern of that organization (Annex 1, Part II, paragraph 4). The IGCR has accepted the IRO definitions in interpreting their own mandate in order to avoid confusion. Specifically, the groups concerned include Sudetens, Balts, German-speaking Poles and Russians who were displaced during or before the war. As they are not enemy aliens they are not debarred from admission to Canada provided they can prove they were not collaborators.

3. Many of these persons have relatives in Canada who have filed applications for them, although the figures for such applications are not available. However, Immigration has removed them from their approved lists for inspection until it can be shown that there is some method by which they could be brought to Canada. Meanwhile, the relatives in Canada have been advised by Immigration that their applications have not been approved as the persons concerned are outside the IGCR mandate.[18]

4. The central problem is the question of assembling these people for inspection, getting them to the port of embarkation and arranging their onward transportation to Canada. Even though these people are outside the IGCR mandate, the IGCR might be ready to help assemble them and move them to the port (e.g. Hamburg or Rotterdam) provided they could recover the expenses from the relatives in Canada. It might then be possible for the relatives to arrange for prepaid ocean transportation through the C.P.R.[19] or C.N.R.[20] Colonization Services if the IGCR did not feel they could further assist these people.

5. While the above suggestions may not be the only possibilities, I wonder if this problem might be discussed with the IGCR in London, particularly Innes. It should be emphasized that the people we have in mind are not Germans or enemy aliens. These latter are inadmissible to Canada. Persons who are shown to be collaborators would, of course, also be screened out. The problem concerns only those D.P.'s who do not come under the IGCR mandate by reason of their belonging to a German-speaking minority, but who are otherwise admissible to Canada.

6. We understand from Colley, the Canadian representative of the IGCR, that he has already brought this matter to Innes' attention on his own initiative. Colley appears to believe that it may be possible for the IGCR to assist in assembling these people for inspection and moving them to the port of embarkation provided they can recover the costs. However, in discussing this matter with Innes, I would not refer to Colley's opinions as these were given in an informal non-official manner.

7. It might also be possible to discuss this matter with the representatives in London of the C.P.R. and C.N.R. Colonization Services. They may be able to undertake arranging the ocean passage to Canada of these people on a prepaid basis.

8. If arrangements can be made to assemble and transport these people, Immigration will replace them on their approved lists for inspection. It does not seem reasonable that they should lose their opportunity to come to Canada merely because they are outside the IGCR mandate.

---

[18]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
April 9 Mr. Congdon advised me letters to relatives had NOT mentioned IGCR mandate. H.H. C[arter]
Pour Congdon, voir le document 208, note 14.
For Congdon, see Document 208*n*14.

[19]Canadian Pacific Railway.

[20]Canadian National Railways.

9. Please send copy of this telegram to Berlin by bag. Ends.

217. DEA/9408-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

DESPATCH 1229 Ottawa, June 27, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

The Canadian Christian Council for Resettlement of Refugees (Outside the mandate of the I.R.O.) was formed in Ottawa on June 23rd, 1947. I am enclosing a copy of a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Organization to the Director of Immigration dated June 24th.† This letter sets forth the purpose of the Organization and the assistance it is requesting from the Canadian Government. The above-mentioned Organization is composed of representatives of Roman Catholic, Baptist, Lutheran and Mennonite Bodies in Canada who have agreed among themselves to pool their resources in order to expedite the selection within Germany and Austria and the transportation to Canada of persons who are admissible to Canada under the Near Relatives Scheme, and who are not German nationals, although of German-ethnic origin.

2. Reverend H.H. Erdman,[21] the Secretary of the new Organization is leaving shortly for Germany to assess the situation and to report on what staff will be needed and where they should be located. This Overseas group, if approved by the Canadian authorities, will endeavour to take the names from the lists approved by the Director of Immigration in Canada for entry and seek to find the persons in the occupied zones. They will then arrange with Canadian Immigration teams to bring these persons forward for medical and civil examination and, if possible, to provide for their transportation within Germany and Austria. Furthermore, they are hoping to be able to charter ships or sections of space within ships for the purpose of moving these people to Canada and to finance this movement. As you know, the Mennonites recently chartered the S.S. Volendam to carry 2300 persons to South America and they have an option expiring July 31st for a second trip.

3. The proponents of this scheme suggest that they will be able to bring forward to Canada 2000 persons before the end of this year. They hope to continue operating for two or three years.

4. No definite decision has been given by the Department of Mines and Resources concerning the extent of the co-operation which will be extended to this [21]Pasteur luthérien à Kitchener, Ontario.

Lutheran clergyman in Kitchener, Ontario.

newly organized group. As soon as this information is available, I shall forward it to you.

I have etc.

LESLIE CHANCE
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

218. DEA/939-B-40

Note du directeur de l'Immigration du ministère des Mines et des Ressources pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la politique de l'Immigration

Memorandum from Director of Immigration, Department of Mines and Resources to Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy

SECRET [Ottawa], November 4, 1947

STATUS OF CANADIAN VOLUNTARY WELFARE ORGANIZATIONS IN OCCUPIED TERRITORY — EUROPE

Several Canadian voluntary welfare organizations have offered to assist us in the matter of gathering together persons in Germany and Austria who are admissible to Canada as immigrants. The two with which we are immediately concerned are the Canadian Christian Council for the Resettlement of Refugees (outside the mandate of I.R.O.) and the Ukrainian Canadian Committee for the Relief of War Victims.

These organizations have requested that we inform P.C.I.R.O. and the Control authorities that they are "sponsored" by the Canadian Government. They have not defined exactly what sponsorship means but presumably it would mean informing the authorities in Germany and Austria that these organizations have authority to act as agencies of the Canadian Government.

If we "sponsor" such organizations we shall be in the position of having to assume responsibility for their acts without even the slightest measure of control over them. For this reason it seems obvious that the Canadian Government cannot "sponsor" such organizations.

On the other hand, these organizations can be of great assistance. Using their own facilities, personnel and funds they can seek out persons, particularly those admissible under the Near Relatives Scheme, and assemble them for immigration inspection. The C.C.C.R.R. has already succeeded in obtaining a camp near Hannover for this purpose. We should, therefore, endeavour to obtain for these organizations as much assistance as possible from the authorities with whom they come in contact in Germany and Austria. To this end it would seem desirable to approach P.C.I.R.O. and the Control authorities with a clear statement of the relationship between voluntary welfare organizations and the Canadian Government. Possibly their position might be explained as being in most respects similar to that of representatives of employers to assist in the selection of Displaced Persons.

It is suggested that the following formula be adopted to explain the relationship between these Voluntary Welfare Organizations and the Canadian Government:

"From time to time the Canadian Government through its Department of Mines and Resources accepts the offer of cooperation and assistance from Canadian voluntary welfare organizations for the purpose of seeking out and assembling for inspection prospective immigrants who are admissible to Canada under the Canadian Immigration Regulations. These persons for the most part are not Displaced Persons within the mandate of P.C.I.R.O., although some of them do come within the mandate. The Canadian Government would appreciate any assistance and cooperation which can be afforded to these Bodies by the Control authorities (P.C.I.R.O., etc.) in order that they may carry out the above-mentioned tasks most effectively."

A.L. JOLLIFFE

4e PARTIE/PART 4

SCIENTIFIQUES ALLEMANDS
GERMAN SCIENTISTS

219. DND/Vol. 63

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CIRCULAR TELEGRAM D. 91 London, February 1, 1947

TOP SECRET

My telegram Circular D. 1736† 18th September, 1945, and subsequent correspondence about employment of German scientists.

Apart from value which we may derive from use of German scientists in defence field and in civil industry, we have noted with some concern increasing attempts on part of Russian authorities to obtain German scientists from Western zones for building up of Russian war potential. Categories of scientists concerned are in our opinion:

(a) Scientists of first rank whose ability to solve completely new and fundamental problems is of extreme importance in time of war but whose activities are normally of peaceful and academic character.

(b) Industrial scientists and technicians who are normally engaged in applied research and development work of peaceful nature but whose ability and experience can readily be directed to war work.

(c) Scientists and technicians who have special knowledge and experience of design, development and production of particular weapons and munitions.

2. Our conclusion is that vigorous steps should be taken to increase employment of scientists in Germany and elsewhere and we are investigating methods of doing this in the United Kingdom, the Colonies and Germany. In particular, we are investigating the possibility of increasing scientific employment in Germany by the placing of innocuous research contracts to be worked in Germany.

3. In spite of these steps, however, it seems likely that there will remain some hundreds of scientists for whom we shall not at the moment be able to find suitable employment and it has occurred to us that in view of danger of allowing these scientists to find employment on war potential in Russia you may be prepared to employ some or increase the number already employed.

4. We are at present engaged in producing a list of these men for whom we wish to find employment giving what details are available of their qualifications. We shall send you a copy of this list and in event of your wishing to obtain services of any scientists on it we suggest that details might be discussed with your Scientific Liaison Offices in London.

220. DEA/7-DC (S)

Le président du Conseil national de Recherches
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

President of National Research Council
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, February 15, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

With reference to your letter of February 7th† in connection with the admission to Canada of selected German scientists, I think that the Research Council from a national viewpoint will sympathize with the views expressed as to the desirability of offering positions to German scientists at the present time in light of the situation outlined.

On the other hand, from our strictly institutional viewpoint we are inclined to offer employment only to a few German scientists and, very specifically, on account of the specialized knowledge and experience which they can bring to our institution. Our reasons I think are sound. We have an establishment which at present is adequate but which in the future may be difficult to increase. We have adopted the policy of keeping open a considerable percentage of such positions because our survey of Canadian universities indicates to us that there are large numbers of first-rate young scientists who broke their university courses to serve overseas and who are now completing their formal education. We wish to be in a position to take on our staff as many of these young men as possible, not only because they deserve to be so absorbed but because we have found them to be a most desirable group. We feel that if we were to fill up a substantial number of our positions with German scientists, we might find ourselves in an embarrassing position within the next three or four years.

In the light of what has been said above, I feel that the proposals contained in your letter must be treated on a national and not an institutional basis and that if it is wise to bring in these German scientists, it would be much better for the Government to set up a special establishment for that purpose which would in no way conflict with the normal establishments of existing institutions such as our own. If that were done, some Government department such as the Directorate of Defence Research could be responsible for the administration and could arrange for the allocation and secondment of the various scientists to other Government departments, to universities and to industry.

Sincerely yours,
C.J. MACKENZIE

221. DEA/7-DC (S)

Décret

Order in Council

P.C. 2047 Ottawa, May 29, 1947

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report, dated 3rd May, 1947, from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, representing:

That at the Cabinet meetings on October 2nd and November 12th, 1946, it was decided to permit the entry into Canada, on the recommendation of the President of the National Research Council and the Director General of Defence Research, of selected German Scientists and technicians required for industrial and educational purposes;

That it has not proven possible to bring such scientists and technicians to this country under ordinary immigration arrangements — firstly, because they are enemy aliens, and secondly under Allied Control Council regulations a voluntary contract must be concluded with any German whom it is desired to employ outside of Germany;

That under the United Kingdom system for the employment of German scientists and technicians in the British Isles, a contract must be concluded between the Government and the German concerned, and between the Government and the ultimate employer of the scientist or technician;

That the Department of External Affairs has been advised by its representative in London that it will be necessary for the Canadian Government to utilize a similar contract system before any German scientists or technicians will be released for service in Canada;

That under the United Kingdom system a thorough security screening is provided and these arrangements have been found to be satisfactory by the R.C.M.P.;

That form contracts for use between the Canadian Government and the German scientist or technician, and between the Federal Government Department concerned and the company or agency wishing to employ the services of the German, have been drawn up in the Department of Trade and Commerce with a view to complying with United Kingdom requirements, and have been approved by the Department of Justice;

That the contracts referred to include the following main features:

(a) The contracts will be signed by the German scientist or technician before leaving Germany;

(b) The scientist will be brought to Canada at Government expense, but such expense will be recoverable from the eventual employer of the German's services;

(c) Employment is for an initial period of one year, but can be renewed for a further period of one year; the Government is free to return the scientists or technicians at any time;

(d) Payment of salaries is roughly in accordance with United Kingdom scales and is subject to ordinary taxation;

(e) The eventual employers will be responsible for finding suitable accommodation for the scientist or technician but the German concerned will be required to pay for such accommodation;

(f) The eventual employers will be required to make monthly reports in writing to the Minister in respect of the ability and conduct of German employees;

(g) The German scientist or technician will not be permitted to write articles for publication, or to give interviews to the Press while under contract in Canada without the written consent of the Minister;

(h) The employee will assign to the Government, or to whomever the Minister may designate, his title to all inventions, processes, or improvements, which he may discover during the period of the contract;

That the Immigration Branch of the Department of Mines and Resources will arrange through the Canadian Military Mission in Berlin and through Immigration inspection teams, for medical examination and the granting of visas to approved scientists or technicians; the Immigration Branch will also provide for entry for a period of one year under Minister's permit and for documentation of the Germans at the port of arrival;

That tentative arrangements have been made with the March Shipping Agency Ltd., Montreal, to evacuate the required scientists and technicians from Hamburg to Canadian ports; under this plan the Captain of the vessel would accept responsibility for these men during the voyage and would hand them over to the R.C.M.P. and Immigration officials at the port of entry, movement to the center of employment to be the responsibility of the eventual employer;

That it is proposed that no action be taken to publicize the names of Germans who may make application for permission to enter Canada, to Canadian industry or educational institutions; however, action should be taken to inform Canadian industry, the Provincial authorities and the various Canadian Universities that if they have specific requirements for individual German scientists or technicians, application should be made to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (concurred in by the Secretary of State for External Affairs) advise:

1. That approval be given to the above tentative administrative arrangements, as well as to the substance of the proposed contracts for use between German scientists and the Canadian Government, and between the Minister and the eventual employer in Canada of these scientists;

2. That all applications received from Germans for employment in Canada be directed to the Department of Trade and Commerce where they will be kept on file; and

3. That the United Kingdom Government be informed that while every effort will be made to employ in Canada those of the listed German scientists and technicians for whose services there is an actual need and for whom a request has been received by the Canadian Government, no action will be taken to absorb in Canada German scientists for whom no such requirement exists.

A.D.P. HEENEY

CHAPITRE V/CHAPTER V

LE CANADA ET UN MONDE BIPOLAIRE
CANADA AND A BIPOLAR WORLD

222. DEA/50028-B-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], February 13, 1947

POLITICAL APPRECIATION OF THE PROSPECTS OF SOVIET AGGRESSION AGAINST NORTH AMERICA

The J.I.C. is preparing for the Chiefs of Staff a memorandum on possible forms and scale of attack upon the North American Continent. The memorandum, which is being prepared by the J.I.C., starts with a description of the problems set by the J.I.C. for the Chiefs of Staff, goes on to demonstrate that the only likely aggressor is the U.S.S.R. and then summarizes the conclusions reached by the J.I.C.

2. Attached to the report will be a number of appendices on the following factors: political; economic; geographical; manpower; army, navy and airforce; defence research; and subversive activities. Of these appendices the first two are being prepared in this Department and the last one by the R.C.M.P.; the others are being prepared by National Defence.

3. Our representatives on the J.I.C. have taken as a basis for their paper on political factors the memorandum prepared by Mr. Ritchie in December [sic] for the Prime Minister, in view of the defence talks with the United States.[1] I attach my copy of this memorandum together with the summary prepared by Mr. Teakles of this Division.

4. A couple of days ago we had a discussion on Mr. Ritchie's paper. There were present Mr. Wilgress, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Crean, Mr. Teakles and myself. In the light of that discussion, Mr. Teakles is revising the paper.

5. Mr. Ritchie's paper was, of course, written not for the purpose for which we now intend to use it but for a different purpose. My feeling is, after our discussion a couple of days ago, that in its present form, even with revisions, it might mislead the Chiefs of Staff because it assumes a comprehension of the complexities of the problem which, because of their special training, they may not possess.

6. It has therefore occurred to me that it might be useful if we were to insert a general introduction to our paper on political appreciation. I have tried my hand at

---

[1]Cette note, qui porte la date du 30 novembre 1946, est reproduite dans le volume 12, le document 994.

The memorandum, which was dated November 30, 1946, is printed in Volume 12, Document 994.

preparing such a general introduction and attach a draft, which is dated February 13.

7. In view of the importance of the problems dealt with in this political appreciation and because it, along with the other memoranda being prepared by the J.I.C., will influence the recommendations of the Chiefs of Staff on the nature and extent of Canadian defence activities, I hope that you may find it possible to read my memorandum and let me have your suggestions for revision.

8. I am sending a copy of my note to you and of the attached memorandum to Mr. Wilgress, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Crean and Mr. Teakles, and am asking them for their suggestions for revision. I have spoken to Mr. Wilgress, who feels as I do that our role on the J.I.C. is to emphasize considerations that do not occur to the military mind.

ESCOTT REID

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

DEA/50028-B-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum by Head, Second Political Division

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], February 13, 1947

POLITICAL APPRECIATION OF THE PROSPECTS OF SOVIET AGGRESSION AGAINST NORTH AMERICA

This memorandum is divided into four parts: a general introduction; a discussion of the prospects of Soviet aggression during the next decade; a discussion of the prospects of Soviet aggression ten to twenty-five years from now; and a conclusion.

General Introduction

2. What we are concerned with in this memorandum is the possibility of war between the Soviet Union and the United States. Such a war might be deliberately embarked on by either side or it might occur as the result of a succession of accidents. In this memorandum, the possibility of the United States taking the initiative in provoking such a war is disregarded, though the concept of a preventive war has been a subject of discussion in the United States. The question at issue so far as this memorandum is concerned is, therefore, the likelihood of the Soviet Union provoking a war with the United States or stumbling into such a war. For reasons which are developed later in this memorandum, it is believed that the chances of the Soviet Union stumbling into a war with the United States are remote. A war, if one comes, is likely to arise out of a deliberate decision on the part of the Soviet governing class.

3. Given the nature of that governing class, it is highly improbable that they would embark on a course which might lead to war with the United States unless, in their opinion, (a) the balance of forces in the world was such that their chances of winning the war were much greater than the chances of defeat or of a stalemate; or (b) even though their chances of victory were no more than even, the balance was constantly tipping more and more against them and they feared that unless they precipitated a preventive war, they would soon be at the mercy of the United States.

4. To try to assess the balance of forces at any given time is an extremely difficult task since on either side of the balance there are so many imponderables. It is not only a question of the possession of arms and armaments, strategic positions, and industrial potential; it is also a question of the willingness of the nations concerned to use their armed forces. Since modern war has to be waged with the total force of a country, it is also essential to take into consideration the unity or disunity of each country in the event of the outbreak of a first-class war and this unity, particularly in the kind of war under discussion, would depend in part on what people in each of the Western countries felt about the issues at stake and the incidents which had precipitated hostilities. Thus it is difficult to assess the nature of the balance today and impossible to assess, with any degree of precision, the nature of the balance at any given time within the next ten or twenty-five years.

5. One factor which is clearly important in trying to assess the nature of the balance in the future is the ability of either of the main combatant states to secure, either by force or persuasion, allies or friendly neutrals. The Soviet Union is today posing as the principal defender of the rights of coloured and colonial peoples. It would seem probable that, if the Western powers are unable to remove racial discriminations rapidly and to satisfy the demands of colonial peoples for self-government, the Western powers may have the great majority of the colonial and coloured peoples hostile or unfriendly to them in the event of war with the Soviet Union. In this context the term "colonial peoples" may well include a considerable section of Latin America, as well as the whole of Asia and Africa and the South West Pacific.

6. The sympathies of the peoples of Western Europe would undoubtedly be divided in the event of a Soviet-American war and, moreover, it is possible that, by the time such a war occurred, Soviet-dominated governments might have succeeded in securing power in such countries as Greece, Italy and France.

7. Even within the hard core of the present Western alliance which exists in fact, though not on paper, (the United States, the Commonwealth, the Netherlands, and Belgium), there would be differences of opinion within each country in the event of a Soviet-American war and it is impossible to forecast how large and influential a group in each country would either be pro-Soviet or neutral. This depends, in part, on whether during the next ten years or so the governments of the Western powers, and particularly the United States, are able to take measures to prevent serious economic depressions and whether they can convince their peoples that they are in the right should war occur. A dissident minority in a Soviet-American war would not for the most part be pacifists; they would be saboteurs and even rebels. Already Soviet sympathizers have secured a large measure of control of the trade unions in certain communications industries which are vital for war.

8. Thus, what we are dealing with in any discussion of the balance of forces between the Soviet world and the Western world are not for the most part "hard facts" but the imponderable things which go on in the minds of men.

9. Moreover, a decision to go to war or to embark on a course knowing that it may lead to war is a decision which is made in the minds of men. The reality with which we are concerned is not the imponderable balance of power but the picture of that imponderable balance in the minds of the members of the governing class of the Soviet Union. What matters is not the actual balance but what people in authority think is the balance.

10. In order to avoid the grave dangers of over-simplification, it is also necessary to keep constantly in mind that an armed attack against North America is scarcely likely to occur until after North America has been subjected to a softening-up process and a nibbling-away at its outer ring of defences. If the Soviet Union is resolved on aggression against the United States, it will most certainly pursue its orthodox policy of constantly probing for the weak spots in the outer ring of defences of the United States. When it finds a weak spot, that is to say a spot which it has decided it can secure control of without running the danger of precipitating a war, it will secure that control. Thus if it were to discover that it could secure control of Spitsbergen, it would in due course probe to find out whether it could safely advance its area of control farther west across the North Atlantic bridge. Similarly, it will continue to probe in the Middle East, in China, in Europe, Africa and Latin America. At the same time, it will try through its many propaganda agencies to soften up opinion in the United States and other countries. On the assumption that the Soviet Union is out to secure domination of the world, it is clear that the Soviet Union's ambition would be to secure that domination without recourse to a first-class war. The Soviet Union does not want to inherit a desert but a going concern. The Soviet Union would therefore hope to secure domination as the result of a gradual extension of power — an extension of political power over adjoining territory, an extension of economic power, an extension of power over the minds of men — until the balance was so weighted in its favour that the governments of the remaining Western powers would become more and more under its influence, and would finally become subservient.

11. No attempt is made in this memorandum even to guess at a future more remote than twenty-five years from now. The chances of the maintenance of peace between the Soviet Union and the United States during the whole of that twenty-five year period are not bright. It is, however, not unreasonable to hope that, if we can maintain peace for twenty-five years — even though it is an uneasy peace full of friction and crises — the situation at the end of that twenty-five year period will be much better than it is today, provided that the balance of power has not by then tipped too far in favour of the Soviet Union. After a certain time — we do not know how long, fifteen, twenty, twenty-five years — the chances of a Soviet-American war will probably lessen with every year that passes.

223. DEA/50028-B-40

Rapport du Comité mixte du renseignement

Report by Joint Intelligence Committee

TOP SECRET Ottawa, March 15, 1947

STRATEGIC APPRECIATION

Appendices

Appendix A[2]—Political Estimate of the Possibility of the Soviet Union precipitating War against the United States and Canada.

Appendix B—Economic War Potential of the U.S.S.R.†

Appendix C—Manpower of the Soviet Union, 1947-1957.†

Appendix D—New Weapons.†

Appendix E—Russia's Naval Capabilities.†

Appendix F—Soviet Army.†

Appendix G—Soviet Air Force.†

Appendix H—Threat to Internal Security.†

JOINT INTELLIGENCE COMMITTEE

STRATEGIC APPRECIATION

1. Aim

To determine the capabilities of the U.S.S.R. to attack the North American continent within the next ten years including possible forms and scales of attack and an estimate of the probable amount of warning to be expected.

2. Assumptions

Since the UK, the USA and the Soviet Union are the only powers emerging from World War II with armed forces and industrial potential capable of engaging in a major war, it is considered that the USSR is the only potential enemy in the next 10 years.

3. Factors

(a) Political

(i) It is considered unlikely that a war between the USSR and the USA, involving Canada, would be embarked on by the Soviet Union, either deliberately or as a result of a succession of accidents, within the next ten years. The possibility of the USA provoking such a war is disregarded for purposes of this appreciation.

(ii) The most important factor is undoubtedly the economic one. Unless the Soviet rulers consider that they have overtaken the present United States preponderance of power within the next ten years, they would be unlikely to embark on a war. It is also unlikely that the Soviet Government would stumble into a war through the action of its agents or satellites. The continuation of friction and disputes is, however, to be expected.

[2]Le document suivant./The immediately following document.

(iii) Within the next ten years it is anticipated that the Soviet Government will continue to attempt to consolidate its gains in Europe and elsewhere, and it will continue its efforts to bring countries on the periphery of the Soviet Union within its sphere of influence.

(iv) The period ten to twenty-five years from now is likely to be one of great danger. Not only will the Soviet Union possess and be able to use weapons of mass destruction, but its basic economic strength may by the end of that period be approaching that of the United States. Parts of Western Europe may be under governments sympathetic to the Soviet Union. A situation would then have developed in which the opportunities open to the Soviet rulers might seem to them irresistible. If the Western democracies were firm and united, and if they pursued strong but fair-minded policies, the Soviet Government might be disposed to postpone indefinitely the accomplishment of their ultimate aims. The Canadian Government cannot ignore, however, the danger that Soviet policies may end in war.

(v) The probability of war is considered more fully in Appendix "A".

(b) Economic

(i) The basic economic strength of the USSR is still well below that of the USA. Although the pre-war level of economic activity may be reached in 1948 or 1949, it must be remembered that Soviet national income just before the war was probably less than half that of the United States. By 1950 the production of oil and, possibly, steel, will still be below the pre-war figures. At present the most serious weakness is transport. Oil and rubber will be limiting factors for some years.

(ii) Economic self-sufficiency for a major war, involving large-scale movements and supply problems, may not be attained before 1960. Economic parity with the USA could not conceivably be reached before 1965-1970, but this may not necessarily be regarded as a prerequisite for waging a major war. The development of new weapons might radically alter the period of time needed by the Soviet Union before it would be in a position to enter upon a new war.

(iii) An assessment of Soviet war potential is included in Appendix "B".†

(c) Geographic

(i) The shortest distance joining the industrial heartlands of the Soviet Union and the North American continent lies across the Polar cap and approaches Canada from the North-East. Direct assault and entry by enemy forces from the North are feasible and it is from this direction that the major air effort is expected after 1957.

(ii) An attack via the Pacific based in Asia would require the overpowering first of Asia, then of the outlying bases such as the East Indies, the Philippines, and the Pacific Islands, requiring a long costly campaign.

(iii) An attack from Siberia via Sakhalin, Kamchatcha, and Komandorski Islands, the Aleutians, Alaska and Canada would be a most difficult and triphibious operation depending for supply on the Trans-Siberian railroad which has only a normal capacity at present of 15,000 tons daily. Therefore, the logistics problem would seriously limit the scale of an attack on the North American continent originating over this route.

(iv) An attack via the North Atlantic would presume a conquered Europe, UK and possibly Africa, and an attack on Europe would probably involve the USA long before a decision in Europe was reached. The distance of the nearest Russian air bases would preclude an attack on the East coast of North America for the present.

(v) It is, therefore, clear that an operation against the North American continent will involve inter-continental movement of troops and supplies. Thus Soviet capabilities for the commitment of men on this Continent will be directly dependent on the capabilities of the air and sea transport of the USSR.

(d) Manpower

(i) It is estimated that for the period of the next ten years, the maximum number which the USSR can maintain in the armed forces will fluctuate from 4,400,000 to 5,600,000.

(ii) By 1952, in the event of a major war, the USSR could absorb into its armed forces a maximum of 24,000,000 men; by 1957, a maximum of 26,000,000 men. These figures would not represent the total personnel of the armed forces at any one time. Thus, by comparison, during the recent war, the USSR mobilized a total of 22,000,000 men, although no more than 12,000,000 men were under arms at any one time.

(iii) The assessment of Soviet manpower for the present and the next ten years is included in Appendix "C" attached.†

(e) New Weapons

(i) It is tentatively estimated that the USSR will not produce any atomic bombs before 1950. By January 1952, their stocks of bombs might be from 5 to 25 and by the end of 1956, 40 to 60. Thus, on the basis of best present estimates, the USSR would not be capable of achieving a decisive result by atomic warfare, even against the UK alone, before 1957. By 1961 the USSR will be capable of producing a sufficient number of bombs to carry out a full scale atom bomb attack against the North American continent. It is thought that an attack on Canada would only follow large scale attacks on US industrial centres. If more than 20 atom bombs were used, then one or two might be launched against Canadian cities.

(ii) The USSR possesses all the potential resources for success in the field of biological warfare, yet it is doubtful if she would base her ability to wage war primarily on biological weapons. It is believed that chemical warfare might play an important part in the ability of the USSR to wage an offensive war, and, if war should occur within 2—5 years, it is estimated that the USSR would be more likely to employ chemical rather than biological agents.

(iii) Although the USSR controls many of the German scientific personnel formerly engaged in guided missile research and occupies some of Germany's greatest research centres, it is highly improbable that she will possess guided missiles with which she can bombard North America from presently occupied land bases in less than 10 years' time. However, sea or air-launched attack is now feasible from ranges up to 200 miles.

(iv) A more detailed assessment of present and future capabilities is included in Appendix "D" attached.†

(f) Navy

(i) At present the Soviet Navy lacks sufficient surface vessels both Naval and Merchant either to make or support any large scale amphibious operation and such surface forces could not be built within the next ten years. There is, however, a serious submarine threat to our sea communication, which will increase as Russia's building programme is developed, and as German methods of prefabrication and use of German equipment and weapons are applied to the Russian submarine arm.

(ii) Shore bombardment by submarine and their use for the transportation of sabotage and raiding forces cannot be overlooked as developments in submarine warfare.

(iii) It must be emphasized that an overpowering submarine force can be developed in a much shorter time and at a fraction of the cost that would be required for an equivalent surface fleet.

(iv) An assessment of present and future capabilities of the Soviet Navy with respect to operations against Canadian Territory is included in Appendix "E" attached.†

(g) Soviet Army

(i) The Soviet Army is not prepared for a major war until the current re-organization, re-equipping and mechanization of a large proportion of its divisions is complete.

(ii) Its capabilities are, and, for the next ten years, will remain, those of an army of great numbers, equipped with first-class armour and artillery. Present inferiorities to the British and American armies with respect to mechanization, intercommunications, engineer and airborne equipment, radar, etc. will be steadily reduced.

(iii) Due to numerical superiority and relative general preparedness, the Soviet Army is now capable of overrunning Europe (possibly exclusive of the UK), the Middle East, and North China. Within the next ten years, it will not likely be capable of more than isolated airborne attacks against this continent, of progressively increasing scale, as the capacity and range of air-transport increase.

(iv) At present, it is capable of mobilizing 6,370,000 men by D plus 30, including some 80,000 airborne troops. By 1952, within the same period, the USSR will be capable of mobilizing 10,000,000 men including approximately 200,000 airborne troops. This figure will probably remain steady until 1957.

(v) An assessment of the capabilities of the Soviet Army for the period up to 1957 is included in Appendix "F".†

(h) Air Force

(i) Threat of air attack constitutes the primary factor in determining the forms and scales of attack during the period. Present Soviet capabilities are limited, by her lack of a modern strategic air force, to conventional air attacks against Alaska and the north-west fringes of Canada, or one way missions reaching as far as the Western borders of Ontario. Should the Soviet Government give high priority to the development of a strategic air force and long range bomber aircraft of the B-29 type, it is possible that the next five years will bring Western Canada to the borders of Ontario and the US as far south as Los Angeles within range of air attack. By 1957, the USSR is capable of producing a sufficient number of long range bomber aircraft to bring all the North American continent within range of two-way air bombardment.

(ii) Soviet capabilities of air transporting a large fighting force against the North American continent are limited by the short range of her air transport. As range and lifting capacity of her transport increase, large airborne attacks on the vital areas of the North American continent become an increasing menace.

(iii) An assessment of Soviet air capabilities to attack the North American continent during the period is included in Appendix "B".†

(j) Subversive

(i) Communist elements now engaged in penetrating the Canadian democratic system may be expected to lend their active assistance to the Soviet Union by all methods possible, either by the exertion of political pressure prior to the outbreak of hostilities or by resort to force and violence according to the exigencies of the situation and the time proper for this manner of attack. The means adopted will include engagement in espionage and sabotage; the bringing about of conflict between the constituted authorities and Communist dominated groups whose allegiance is to Soviet Russia rather than to Canada; attempts to hamper the war effort of the country and the production of supplies, etc. by calling strikes; and by every means possible the rendering of assistance to the Soviet Union to the detriment of the Canadian defense effort.

(ii) An outline of the Communist apparatus and the development of its programme with respect to a threat to Canada's internal security is included in Appendix "H" attached.†

4. Conclusions

(a) Because of the lack of detailed information any conclusions as to the forms and scales of attack against this continent are only tentative and will require revision as further information becomes available.

(b) It is highly improbable that the Soviet Government will embark on a war likely to involve the Canadian and United States Governments during the next ten years.

(c) Forms and Scales of Attack

If the Soviet Government becomes embroiled in a war that involves the Canadian and United States Governments, the following forms and scales of attack against the North American continent may be expected:

(i) Scientific

In the period 1947-1952 attacks would not involve the use of atomic weapons but might include biological and chemical weapons. Pilotless aircraft could be launched from sea or air, but the range for useful accuracy would be limited to 300 miles.

By 1957 attacks involving, in addition to the above, the limited use of atomic bombs, guided rockets with a range up to 500 miles, and pilotless aircraft launched from sea, land or air with a range up to 1,000 miles can be expected.

(ii) Air

Soviet air attacks will change in form and increase in scale with the development of a Soviet strategic air force and new and improved weapons in the next ten years.

Targets in the North-west tip of the North American continent now within range of the Soviet Air Force are not of sufficient importance to require a large force. At present Soviet air raids by up to 100 aircraft carrying HE[3] and incendiary bombs, coupled with the dropping of small sabotage units, can be expected against Alaska and the North-west fringes of Canada only. Aircraft-launched guided missiles of the V-1 type with a range of 200 miles may be employed. Individual aircraft may also undertake one-way missions against high priority targets (such as the plutonium plant at Pasco, Washington) no further East than the Western borders of Ontario and no further South than Los Angeles. After 1948 the increasing use of chemical weapons can be expected in addition to HE and incendiary attack.

By 1952 attacks of a more serious nature can be expected by up to 500 B-29 type bombers carrying HE and incendiary bombs and employing biological and chemical weapons, and atomic bombs not exceeding 10, covering all of the area to the Western borders of Ontario and Western United States as far south as Los Angeles. Aircraft-launched guided missiles of the V-1 type with a range of 300 miles and speed of 600 miles per hour may be employed against heavily defended targets. Individual aircraft may also undertake one-way missions against high priority targets anywhere on the North American continent.

By 1957 attacks can be expected by up to 1,000 high performance jet bombers and improved B-29 type bombers on any one raid covering all of the North American continent and employing biological and chemical weapons on a large scale together with atomic bombs not exceeding 25. Supersonic guided missiles of the V-1 type launched from jet bombers will be employed in attacks against heavily defended targets. These supersonic missiles will be extremely difficult to counteract.

(iii) Naval

The major naval threat at present is that of submarines to sea communications. Russia could keep up to 25 submarines operating continuously in the Atlantic and 12 to 15 in the Pacific, to be used mainly in attacking shipping, although some small scale sabotage missions could be undertaken against coastal targets on either coast.

By 1952 submarines in continuous operation will have increased to 200 in the Atlantic and the same number in the Pacific. They might launch pilotless aircraft against coastal and inland points up to a range of 300 miles and by concentrating large numbers of submarines on these targets, such raids will inflict considerable damage with little or no possibility of detecting or intercepting the submarines.

---

[3]High Explosive.

If the development of a submarine fleet is given high priority by Russia, as well may be, by 1957 Russia may have as many as 2,000 submarines; they may be capable of launching fairly long range guided missiles, will be equipped with aircraft and may be propelled by atomic energy. By 1957 it is still unlikely that Russia's surface fleet could carry out any significant overseas movement of troops and supplies.

(iv) Airborne — The Soviet Army could mount:

(1) Isolated airborne and coastal-landing attacks, each of not more than a few hundred men, until 1952.

(2) By 1952 airborne attack, increased in scale to a total commitment of a brigade-group; (approximately 3500 men) or, the concentrated commitment of an airborne brigade group.

(3) By 1957, attack by an airborne division (approximately 10,000 men).

(v) Subversion and Sabotage

Subversive activities and sabotage will be extensively used.

(d) Probable Areas of Attack

(i) By 1952 the North-West quarter of the North American continent extending as far south as Los Angeles and East to the Western borders of Ontario. The East coast of North America will also be subject to submarine attack.

(ii) By 1957 the entire North American continent will be vulnerable to attack from Russian bases either from the north-east or by north-west.

(e) Timing of Attack

This will be completely dependent on operations mounted by the USSR in Europe or Asia.

(f) Amount of Warning

Up until 1957, the measure of surprise achieved by the USSR in an action involving the North American continent, despite ample strategic warning, will depend on the unorthodox nature of the campaign to be mounted; i.e., fifth column methods of infiltration and new tactical procedures can be expected. Little or no tactical warning can be anticipated.

224. DEA/50028-B-40

Appendice «A» du rapport du Comité mixte du renseignement

Appendix "A" of Report by Joint Intelligence Committee

TOP SECRET Ottawa, March 1947

POLITICAL ESTIMATE OF THE POSSIBILITY OF THE SOVIET UNION PRECIPITATING WAR AGAINST THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

This appendix is divided into four parts:

(1) an introduction;

(2) a discussion of the prospects of war during the next decade;

(3) a discussion of the prospects of war ten to twenty-five years from now;

(4) a conclusion.

Introduction

2. It is not necessary for the purposes of this discussion to assume that the governing class of the Soviet Union is actively ambitious to dominate the world — that its policy is one of all-out aggression. All we need assume is that the governing class of the Soviet Union is anxious to maintain the existing system in the areas now under Soviet political control and that this involves a desire to expand the defence area of that system. The desire of the members of the governing class to maintain the existing system is partly the result of their desire to retain their own personal power and privileges, partly the result of their belief that the Soviet system is better than the Western system.

3. The governing class of the Soviet Union is afraid of two kinds of attack from the Western world — armed attack and psychological warfare. It believes that the governing classes of the Western world are afraid that the capitalist system which gives them personal power and privileges would be undermined by the success of Soviet institutions and they might, therefore, launch an armed attack against the Soviet Union before the Soviet system has had a chance to demonstrate to the peoples of the Western world its superiority over the Western system. It is afraid of the penetration of the lands on the borders of the Soviet Union (the Soviet defence area) by Western ideas and it therefore resists the Western attempt to introduce Western democratic concepts into those areas.

4. The desire on the part of the Soviet governing class to expand the Soviet defence area may be as dangerous to the security of the West as a desire for all-out aggression would be. By its very nature a desire on the part of a great power to extend its defence area is an illimitable process. The appetite for security grows with eating.

5. The distinction between the two assumptions is, however, of very great importance. If the issue is one of active aggression by the Soviet Union, the responsibility for war is placed entirely on the Soviet side. If, however, the issue is one of a desire to defend themselves against attack from the Western world the responsibility for war, if one should break out, is a joint responsibility and the responsibility for keeping the peace is joint. It is no longer, for example, possible to disregard the possible efficacy of moves and attitudes on the part of the Western world which might minimize the belief on the Soviet side in the necessity of defensive measures; on this assumption provocative actions and attitudes should be avoided.

6. What we are concerned with in this memorandum is the possibility of war between the Soviet Union and the United States. Such a war might be deliberately embarked on by either side or it might occur as the result of a succession of accidents. In this memorandum, the possibility of the United States taking the initiative in precipitating such a war is disregarded, though the concept of a preventive war has been a subject of discussion in the United States. The question at issue so far as this memorandum is concerned is, therefore, the likelihood of the Soviet Union precipitating a war with the United States or stumbling into such a war. For reasons which are developed later in this memorandum,[4] it is believed that the chances of the Soviet Union stumbling into a war with the United States are remote. A war, if one comes, is likely to arise out of a deliberate decision on the part of the Soviet governing class.

7. Given the nature of that governing class, it is highly improbable that they would embark on a course which might lead to war with the United States unless, in their opinion, (a) the balance of forces in the world was such that their chances of winning the war were much greater than the chances of defeat or of a stalemate; or (b) even though their chances of victory were no more than even, the balance was constantly tipping more and more against them and they feared that unless they precipitated a preventive war, they would soon be at the mercy of the United States.

8. To try to assess the balance of forces at any given time is an extremely difficult task since on either side of the balance there are so many factors which cannot be weighed. It is not only, for example, a question of the possession of arms and armaments, strategic positions, and industrial potential, but it is also a question of the willingness of the nations concerned to use their armed forces. Since modern war has to be waged with the total force of a country, it is also essential to take into consideration the unity or disunity of each country in the event of the outbreak of a first-class war and this unity, particularly in the kind of war under discussion, would depend in part on what people in each of the Western countries felt about the issues at stake and the incidents which had precipitated hostilities. Thus it is difficult to assess the nature of the balance today and impossible to assess, with any degree of precision, the nature of the balance at any given time within the next ten or twenty-five years.

9. A great deal will depend upon how successful the Soviet Government is in carrying out their present plans for the industrialization of the Soviet Union. These plans are designed to bring the economic potential of the Soviet Union, from a military point of view, first up to that of the United States and then beyond it. If the Soviet Union is successful in carrying out these plans, the increase in population of the Soviet Union would then tend to tip the scales of the relative balance of power in favour of the Soviet Union. Doubts are, however, now beginning to arise as to the ability of both the Soviet leaders and the Soviet peoples to undergo the great sacrifices in comfort and leisure necessary to bring to realization the three five-year plans.

10. One factor which is clearly important in trying to assess the nature of the balance in the future is the ability of either of the main combatant states to secure, either by force or persuasion, allies or friendly neutrals. The Soviet Union is today posing as the principal defender of the rights of coloured and colonial peoples. It is also posing as the principal defender of the sovereignty of small powers. It would seem probable that, if the Western powers are unable to remove racial discriminations rapidly and to satisfy the demands of colonial peoples for self-government,

---

[4]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document :/The following was typed on this copy of the document:
see paragraphs 24—25 below

the Western powers may have the great majority of the colonial and coloured peoples hostile or unfriendly to them in the event of war with the Soviet Union or at least doing their best to fish in troubled waters. In this context the term "colonial peoples" may well include a considerable section of Latin America, as well as the whole of Asia and Africa and the South West Pacific.

11. The sympathies of the peoples of Western Europe would undoubtedly be divided in the event of a Soviet-American war and, moreover, it is possible that, by the time such a war occurred, Soviet-dominated governments might have succeeded in securing power in such countries as Greece, Italy and France.

12. Even within the hard core of the present Western alliance which exists in fact, though not on paper, (the United States, the British Commonwealth, the Netherlands, and Belgium), there would be differences of opinion within each country in the event of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States and it is impossible to forecast how large and influential a group in each country would either be pro-Soviet or neutral. This depends, in part, on whether, during the next ten years or so, the governments of the Western powers, and particularly the United States, are able to take measures to prevent serious economic depressions. The chances of adequate preventive measures being taken do not appear to be very good. The size and strength of the dissident minority would also, of course, depend on the ability of the governments of the Western powers to convince their peoples that they are in the right should war occur. A dissident minority in a Soviet-American war would not for the most part be pacifists; they would be saboteurs and even rebels. Already Soviet sympathizers have secured a large measure of control of the trade unions in certain communications industries which are vital for war.

13. Thus, what we are dealing with in any discussion of the balance of forces between the Soviet world and the Western world are not for the most part "hard facts" but the imponderable things which go on in the minds of men.

14. Moreover, a decision to go to war or to embark on a course knowing that it may lead to war is a decision which is made in the minds of men. The reality with which we are concerned is not the imponderable balance of power but the picture of that imponderable balance in the minds of the members of the governing class of the Soviet Union. What matters is not the actual balance but what people in authority think is the balance.

15. In order to avoid the grave dangers of over-simplification, it is also necessary to keep constantly in mind that an armed attack against North America is scarcely likely to occur until after North America has been subjected to a softening up process and a nibbling away at its outer ring of defences. In order to expand its defence area, the Soviet Union will pursue its orthodox policy of constantly probing for the weak spots in the outer ring of defences of the United States — when it finds a weak spot, that is to say a spot which it has decided it can secure control of without running the danger of precipitating a war, it will secure that control. Thus if it were to discover that it could secure control of Spitzbergen, it would in due course probe to find out whether it could safely advance its area of control farther west across the North Atlantic bridge. Similarly, it will continue to probe in the Middle East, in China, in Europe, Africa and Latin America. At the same time, it will try through its many propaganda agencies to strengthen its defensive position by undermining national unity within the United States and other Western countries. It will also try to strengthen its defensive position by promoting economic as well as political instability in the areas outside its control.

16. On the assumption that the Soviet Union is out to secure domination of the world, it is clear that the Soviet Union's ambition would be to secure that domination without recourse to a first-class war. The Soviet Union does not want to inherit a desert but a going concern. The Soviet Union would therefore hope to secure domination as the result of a gradual extension of power — an extension of political power over adjoining territory, and extension of economic power, and extension of power over the minds of men — until the balance was so weighted in its favour that the governments of the remaining Western powers would become more and more under its influence, and would finally become subservient.

17. No attempt is made in this memorandum even to guess at a future more remote than twenty-five years from now. The chances of the maintenance of peace between the Soviet Union and the United States during the whole of that twenty-five year period are not bright. The most we can hope for now is that we can get through that twenty-five-year period without war and that, during that twenty-five-year period, developments in the Western world and in the Soviet world will have made eventual war between them less likely. One thing we can probably count on is that the longer the two worlds live side by side in peace, even if it is an uneasy peace full of frictions and crises, the more similar to each other they will become. There will be more of capitalism in the Soviet system, more of Socialism in the Western system. It is even possible that if the Soviet system produces a greater flow of consumer goods and the population becomes less dissatisfied, there will be less necessity in the Soviet Union for systematic misrepresentation of the outside world and for intensive state control over the actions and beliefs of individuals. The more similar the two worlds become the more manageable will become the problems and crises which will arise between them. This would not mean that peace was secure but merely that some of the peculiar reasons for conflict between the Soviet Union and the Western World would no longer be so powerful.

17A. On the other hand there is another school of thought who hold the view that if the Soviet leaders are successful during the next ten years or so in accomplishing their ambitious plans for industrialization, this will result not only in a greater flow of consumer goods for the population of the Soviet Union but may also lead the leaders to become convinced that if they intensify their efforts they may be able to surpass the military-economic war potential of the United States. Those who hold this view believe that there is a better chance of avoiding war if the Soviet leaders become discouraged in their efforts to catch up technologically with the United States and resign themselves to remaining masters in their own sphere while avoiding any clash of interests that might lead to war with the United States.

Prospects of war during the next decade

18. On such information as is available, it appears unlikely that the Soviet Union would be in a position to win a war against the United States in the next decade, and for this reason it is improbable that the Soviet Government would run the risk of deliberately provoking such a war. As a result of the last war, the Soviet Union has suffered so heavily in terms of a general disorganization of its economy, material destruction and loss of manpower that a breathing space seems clearly indicated as a main objective of Soviet policy. It is not possible to do more than guess at the period of time which will elapse before the Soviet Government considers that it is in a position to wage another war should it desire to do so. It may be that the completion of each of the three five-year plans now contemplated will be considered necessary before the Soviet Government feels strong enough for such a struggle. On the other hand, there is no doubt that the Soviet Government will spare no efforts to strengthen the Soviet economy and build up Soviet war potential (already very powerful) at the earliest possible date.

19. This conclusion that it is improbable that the Soviet Union would, during the next decade, precipitate a war with the United States would not be agreed to by a number of authorities. The reasons for their doubts about the validity of the conclusion might usefully be examined.

20. One school of thought believes that the Soviet Union may develop weapons of mass destruction of such a nature or in such quantities as radically to alter in its favour the existing balance of forces. From the information now at our disposal, this contingency seems, however, remote. During the next ten years the United States ought to be able to maintain its present scientific and technological advantage over the Soviet Union in ability to use weapons of mass destruction effectively against the other country.

21. Another possibility which should be mentioned is a radical change in the balance of forces resulting from a profound economic depression in the United States and other countries of the Western World. Such a depression, if the USSR as seems probable were relatively unaffected, would tend to pull the countries on the border of the Soviet defence area inside that area. National unity in the other Western countries, and most important in the United States, would be adversely affected. However, though a profound economic depression in the Western world would undoubtedly alter the balance of forces to the advantage of the USSR, it is unlikely that it would alter it to such an extent as to lead the governing classes of the Soviet Union to believe that it would be in their interest to precipitate a war with the United States. It is much more likely that they would be content to take advantage of the opportunity to extend their defence area and to intensify their battle for the minds of men in the Western world.

22. A third possibility which is mentioned is that the factors on which our present calculations are based might be materially affected by the situation which might arise in the event of Stalin's death. It seems unlikely, however, that the transfer of power from Stalin to his successor would seriously affect the power of the Communist party in the USSR or the main considerations which affect the decisions on grave issues of peace and war by the governing class in the Soviet Union. Even if the transfer of Stalin's immense political power did not take place smoothly and personal ambitions among potential successors precipitated a crisis in the Soviet Union, it is unlikely that the struggle would be more than a palace intrigue.

23. Finally there is the theory strongly held in some informed quarters that the whole of the preceding analysis of the prospects of the Soviet Union precipitating a war in the next decade is vitiated by the fact that it is based on the assumption that, if a war comes, it is likely to arise out of a deliberate decision on the part of the Soviet governing class and that the chances of the Soviet Union stumbling into a war with the United States are remote. It is contended that, in the past, most great wars have not been deliberately sought but have been accidental. A great power has been dragged into war by an ally which it could not refuse to support for fear of weakening its whole alliance structure. A commander in an area of friction or a diplomat has precipitated a crisis from which it was impossible to escape. A government has been so misinformed about public opinion abroad that it based its policy on the false assumption that it could, without running a risk of war, secure control of a certain area.

24. Soviet generals and Soviet diplomats are, however, so well-disciplined that they would not take any serious step without instructions. If they did and their acts might precipitate an unwanted war, the Soviet Government would not hesitate to disavow them. Nor would it hesitate to disavow the actions of one of its satellites even if that satellite had been acting under orders from Moscow. While it may well be true that the Soviet Government is misinformed by its embassies abroad, it has other sources of information and it is adept at flying kites to test, for example, the possibility of the United States being willing to go to war in defence of Turkey. It would therefore seem reasonable to conclude that the likelihood of the Soviet Union blundering into war with the United States is remote. (If the United States Government were desirous of finding an issue over which to go to war with the Soviet Union, the Soviet Government might well provide them with such an issue. The question of the possibility of the United States precipitating a war with the Soviet Union is, however, outside the scope of this memorandum).

Prospects of war ten to twenty-five years from now

25. While, therefore, we do not consider that there is any substantial likelihood during the next decade of the Soviet Union precipitating a war with the United States, it must be recognized that there are powerful forces at work which may in the end bring about a war between the Soviet Union and the United States.

26. One of these is the idea, which is a basic part of Marxist philosophy, that an ultimate struggle between communism and capitalism is inevitable and that communism will emerge victorious. It is difficult to say how much the present rulers of the USSR are affected by this concept, but it is certainly not without influence on Soviet policy. It may be assumed, however, that Soviet foreign policy will be dictated less by a conviction of the inevitability of conflict than by a realistic estimate of Soviet interests as they are understood in the Kremlin.

27. At the same time the Soviet Union is a police state in which individual liberties and democratic methods of government, as these are understood in the West, can hardly be said to exist. Between such a state and the Western democracies a fundamental cleavage inevitably exists. This conflict of principle runs deep in all the relations of the Soviet Union with the Western world. Moreover, the insecurity which makes it necessary for the Soviet Government to rule by such methods also makes it essential that the peoples of the Soviet Union should not be exposed to the unsettling effects of contact with the Western democracies or their nationals. The Soviet Government, therefore, not only keeps their people in ignorance of our conditions of life, but employs unceasing propaganda to instill into the population fear and suspicion of the intentions of the Western democracies. In addition, there will always be a tendency, when things are going badly in the Soviet Union, for the Soviet Government to distract popular attention from their own shortcomings by starting a campaign of abuse and misrepresentation directed against one or other of the Anglo-Saxon democracies. Such methods are obviously dangerous to international peace.

28. Apart from the desire to further world revolution, the Soviet Government may be led in the direction of war by two other motives. One is the desire for expansion — perhaps for eventual world domination — and the other is fear of a threat to Soviet security by the Western powers.

29. It is obvious that the Soviet Union is an expanding power. The Soviet Union has annexed Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Koenigsberg district, Eastern Poland, Carpatho-Ukraine, Northern Bukovina, Bessarabia, Tannu-Tuva, Port Arthur, Karafuto and the Kurile Islands. It has taken the Petsamo and Viberg areas from Finland. It is attempting, with considerable success, to establish a zone of exclusive Soviet influence beyond these territories, in Poland, the Soviet zone of Germany, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Albania, Persia, Azerbaijan, the Mongol People's Republic, Northern Korea, Dairen, and the trunk railways of Manchuria. In Czechoslovakia, Soviet influence is strong but not as yet exclusive.

30. These represent formidable acquisitions of power and influence; and the Soviet Government is undoubtedly willing to extend its influence and power as far as it can safely go. There is perhaps, however, a valid distinction between admitting the Soviet Union's expansionist tendencies and attributing to it schemes for world domination, although the distinction may be rather one of method than of eventual objective. It seems unlikely that the Soviet Government is contemplating grandiose schemes for world domination of the kind which fascinated the restless dictators of the 'thirties'. The Soviet rulers have always despised what they term "bourgeois adventurism". The gambling spirit that is willing to take great risks in the hope of immense returns seems to have little appeal for the Soviet Government. On the record of their past policies, it is rather difficult to imagine the rulers of the Soviet Union unleashing at a stroke a world struggle. It seems more probable that the Soviet Government will pursue a course of deliberate and cautious consolidation of positions already acquired, together with a process of probing for the weak spots in the adversaries' positions. Such a policy might operate on the political, military or economic planes. We have already had ample experience of these methods in negotiation with the Soviet Government. The tactics are familiar: the spun-out negotiation, the bargaining price, the war of nerves, the manipulation of facts for propaganda purposes, the abrupt change of front and the retreats pour mieux sauter. These have become the commonplaces of Soviet diplomatic methods.

31. Behind these tactics, the strategy of the Soviet Government seems to be emerging with increasing clarity. It is to undermine the position of the Western powers, and to weaken and divide them at every opportunity. In pursuit of these aims, the Soviet Government is anxious to prevent the formation of any Western bloc of powers. They strive to separate the United States from the United Kingdom, and to isolate the latter in difficulties over some issue in which they hope that the support of the United States may not be forthcoming. Moreover, the Soviet Government, in its role as defender of the oppressed, is carrying on propaganda against "imperialist" powers in general and against the British and American democracies in particular. In this capacity, the Soviet Government claims to be the champion of the poorer classes in all countries and of all racial minority groups.

32. In our estimation it is no longer possible to doubt that the Soviet Government aims at dividing the Western world against itself and increasing discord and instability. Such policies are plainly incompatible with friendship or co-operation as we understand these terms. On the other hand, they could be pursued for a prolonged period by the USSR without implying that the Soviet Government intended to precipitate a world war. They may very possibly be carried to the length of fomenting civil war in certain countries in which the USSR would give under-cover support to its adherents (e.g. in China and Greece).

33. The Soviet Government will inevitably, whatever its own ultimate objectives, be influenced in its policies by the reaction which it encounters from the Western powers. The Soviet governing classes have a healthy respect for the immense industrial resources of the United States and for its war potential. They are aware of the attraction which Western democratic ideas exercise over the minds of people all over the world. They are alarmed at the possibility that the socialist experiment may succeed in Britain and that the example of this alternative to Communist revolution might undermine their influence among the industrial working classes of Western Europe. So long as they think that the Western democracies (and in particular the United States and the United Kingdom) are strong and united, and so long as firm but fair-minded policies are pursued by those powers in dealing with the Soviet Union, the Soviet Government may be disposed to proceed with caution.

34. If, however, they see signs of weaknesses in the internal economies of the Western democracies or instability in the conduct of their foreign affairs, they may be tempted to follow more aggressive policies. They will certainly seize upon any evidence of vacillation as an encouraging sign of weakness. They anticipate, and would exploit to the fullest extent, a serious economic depression in the United States. They are well aware of the fact that such a depression would have incalculable effects in the other Western countries. On the other hand, should they become convinced that the Western powers have aggressive intentions against the Soviet Union, they might feel impelled to provide in haste for their security by further annexations of territory or infiltration into countries in strategic positions. In estimating the possibilities open to them, they will be guided less by reports from their representatives abroad or from Soviet sympathizers than by the reaction to their probing.

35. In our discussion of the prospects of war with the Soviet Union within the next decade, it was not necessary for us to consider the influence of the United Nations. However, an analysis of the possibility of war ten to twenty-five years from now would be seriously incomplete if it did not contain some assessment of the influence of the U.N.

36. The U.N. is an instrument which can be used by both the Soviet Union and the Western world to weigh the balance of forces in their favour. The Western world can use the machinery for economic co-operation provided by the U.N. and the specialized agencies to raise standards of living in the Western world and to diminish conflicts between the Western powers over tariffs, monetary questions, cartels, shipping, aviation and such things. The leading powers of the Western world can use the U.N. as a forge on which to hammer out a greater political and economic unity of the Western world — a potential alliance against the Soviet Union. It is even possible that there may develop, through an agreed interpretation of the Charter or by the conclusion of a supplementary international agreement, an undertaking by all the Members of the U.N. to go to war against any state which resorts to force even though formal sanctions against that state are vetoed in the Security Council.

37. Similarly, the Soviet Union may try to sabotage the machinery for economic co-operation provided by the U.N. and may use the U.N. as an instrument in psychological warfare against the Western world.

38. Both sides can thus use the U.N. as an instrument against the other. Both sides can also use it as an instrument for resolving conflicts between them, especially in the political field, and for working out compromises. However, it cannot yet be assumed that plans for general disarmament will eventually be realized or that the effective control of atomic energy will be instituted.

Conclusion

39. Thus, while the possibility of the Soviet Union precipitating a war with the United States in the next ten years seems slight, there seems little prospect at present of sincere co-operation with the Soviet Union.

40. Disagreements since the end of the war have been mainly over the peace settlements. It would be unjustifiable to assume that a solution of the German problem, satisfactory to both the Soviet Union and the Western powers, can be reached. The most that can be hoped for is an equality of dissatisfactions. There is, however, danger that the practical result of Soviet policy will be the creation of a closely integrated Eastern German state with a communist or near-communist system of government, well-organized and possibly even powerful. Such a state would have a very considerable attraction for Western Germans, and the Soviet Government must be expected to do everything in its power to increase the communist influence in the zones occupied by the Western powers. Nor will the struggle for the allegiance of Western Europe be confined to Germany; the political future of France and Italy is also in doubt. To a considerable extent the outcome of this struggle will be determined by the international economic policy of the United States. It will be fraught with the gravest consequences for the balance of power in the world.

41. If, at the same time, as seems likely for the reasons outlined in Appendix "B",† the basic economic strength of the Soviet Union is approaching and perhaps even surpassing that of the United States, a situation will have arisen in which the opportunities for aggrandizement open to the Soviet rulers may well seem to them irresistible.

42. Undoubtedly the best likelihood of averting such a catastrophe would be for the Soviet Government to be convinced of the strength and unity of the Western democracies, and at the same time convinced that they have nothing to fear from them. It is conceivable that they might then postpone indefinitely the accomplishment of their ultimate aims. The world might settle into a period of uneasy peace.

43. Canada, for its part, should do what it can to foster the strength and unity of the Western world and to avoid provocative actions and attitudes likely to strengthen Soviet determination to extend the Soviet area of defence. Canada cannot, however, ignore the danger that Soviet policies may end in war, and it must, in self-protection, consider the defensive measures entailed by this possibility.

225. CH/Vol. 2104

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

SECRET Ottawa, June 7, 1947

Dear Mr. Robertson:

I enclose a copy of Despatch No. G.1 of April 25th from Mr. Wilgress, in which he gives his appreciation of developments in the Soviet Union and of relations between the Soviet world and the Western world. Mr. Drury's[5] memorandum of March 20th† and Mr. Ford's letter of February 17th† were forwarded to you on March 20th.

2. Mr. Wilgress' despatch is most interesting. His suggestions for a positive Canadian policy towards the Soviet Union and its satellites deserve very careful consideration.

3. I suggested to the Minister that Mr. Wrong and you be authorized to disclose the contents of Mr. Wilgress' despatch to the State Department and the Foreign Office. Mr. St. Laurent has concurred in this suggestion.

4. Unless you see objection you should therefore use Mr. Wilgress' despatch as an occasion for a discussion with the Foreign Office on policy towards the Soviet Union and its satellites. You may, at your discretion, disclose the contents of this despatch to the Foreign Office with the omission of paragraph 16. I should hope that in return you might obtain the most recent views of the United Kingdom Government.

[5]C.M. Drury, Première direction politique.
C.M. Drury, First Political Division.

5. I should be grateful for your own comments on this despatch as well as for any information you may be able to obtain from the Foreign Office.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le ministre désigné en Suisse
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister Designate in Switzerland
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH G.1. Geneva, April 25, 1947

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Mr. Pearson's letter of March 21st,† addressed to me in Moscow and enclosing a copy of a memorandum prepared by Mr. Drury.† This memorandum commented on a letter submitted by Mr. Ford, dated February 17th,† concerning certain aspects of British policy in the Eastern European area.

2. In his letter of March 31st,† Mr. Pearson asks for a full account of my views on recent developments in the Soviet Union and in the relations between the Soviet world and the Western world. He points out that the new "Truman doctrine" and other recent developments will make it necessary for Canada to reconsider some of the basic principles governing our foreign policy.

3. First of all, in regard to the policy of the Western powers in Eastern Europe, I am in accord with what Mr. Ford wrote in his letter of February 17th and with Mr. Drury's comments on that letter.

4. For a long time it has appeared to me, as I have repeatedly stated in despatches sent from Moscow, that the Western powers were making a mistake in choosing Eastern Europe as the testing ground for the clash between Western and Soviet policies. Not only did the balance of power situation make it impracticable for us to exert any real influence in opposition to the Soviet Union, but also we were leading the Soviet Government to think that we wished to gain a foothold in the very security belt which they had been able to establish as a result of the war. Our continued interest in Poland and Roumania made the Soviet Government believe that we were anxious to deprive them of some of the fruits that had fallen into their lap.

5. From the point of view of Soviet policy, their dominance of Poland and Roumania is vital, not so much for security reasons in themselves as for the reason that these two countries provide the bridge with the outer ring of the Soviet security belt. The Soviet Government feel that they must exert the dominating influence over Poland because this country connects them with Germany. To a less important extent Roumania is vital because it provides the connection with Bulgaria and Yugoslavia.

6. The attempt to influence the situation in Poland and Roumania by boycotting their governments was bound to fail. In the first place, it was not possible for the United Kingdom and the United States to counteract effectively the influence of the neighbouring Soviet Union. In the second place, the boycott could not be maintained indefinitely because our own interests demanded that we should not cut ourselves off too completely from these countries.

7. British, and also American, policy in respect of both these countries has been to support political elements hostile to the Soviet Union. By our continued pressure for implementation literally of the Yalta formula on free and unfettered elections, we have given the Soviet Government reason to believe that we wish to see in power in Poland and Roumania governments which would not be friendly to the Soviet Union. This would be, in Soviet eyes, tantamount to depriving them of any sphere of influence in Eastern Europe and would confine Soviet influence to the borders of the Soviet Union.

8. This does not mean that we should support the Communist-dominated regimes now in power in Poland and Roumania, because this would only lead us into becoming the dupes of those governments. The correct policy, rather, should be to recognise as inevitable the fact that, contrary to the wishes of their peoples, Poland and Roumania are likely to have, for some time to come, governments in which Soviet influence will be predominant. Our attitude towards these governments should be that of mild tolerance.

9. This implies extending help to Poland and Roumania in their efforts to reconstruct their economies. In extending help of this kind, it is most important that we should take care to avoid giving the appearance of competing with the Soviet Government for the favour of the Polish and Roumanian Governments, because it would be out of the question ever to undermine Soviet influence by these means. Rather, our objective should be the negative one of preventing accusations being levelled at the Western powers of denying economic assistance to these countries for political reasons.

10. There is, however, a selfish reason for extending help to these countries to get on their feet in that by so doing we make them less dependent upon the Soviet Union. We enable them to maintain those ties with the West which the peoples of these countries are so anxious to preserve. We create a healthier atmosphere in which it is more difficult for Communism to take root.

11. It is true that by following such a policy we are helping to strengthen allies of the Soviet Union in the future struggle for world supremacy. This is offset by the fact that the strength of Poland and Roumania can be only a fraction of the military economic potential of the Soviet Union and its satellites taken as a whole. On the other hand, this factor is a reason for not being too lavish in the economic assistance which we render to these countries. In other words, we should take care to see that our economic assistance is confined as much as possible to that which can be justified on a financial or commercial basis. Any appearance of subsidizing these countries would be as fatal as the past policy of ostracizing them.

12. What I have just stated in regard to Eastern Europe applies in some degree also to our relations with the Soviet Union. Here too we should endeavour to follow a course which is neither that of excessive flattery nor that of excessive ostracism. I was struck, on my recent visit to Moscow, by the complaints of Russians that we were exercising economic pressure on the Soviet Union. It would be a grave mistake to follow the policy advocated by Mr. Wallace[6] and endeavour to win over the Soviet Government by means of generosity. The Soviet leaders would take full advantage of this policy of appeasement and would use our generosity to make themselves stronger for the future struggle. At the same time, we should not refuse to do business with them simply because we disapprove of their general policy. The co-operation should be on a strictly commercial basis, free from the taint of political considerations.

13. On my recent visit I was impressed by the deterioration in the general economic position of the Soviet Union since I left Moscow last June. Not only was this the result of the calamity suffered in the poor harvest of last year, but also of a general disruption of the economy owing to the strains to which it had been put by the war. There has been a wearing-out of industrial and transport equipment. Most marked of all is the general weariness both of the Soviet people and of their leaders. Apathy is the only word which can describe the attitude of the Russian people to-day.

14. All of this goes to confirm more strongly than ever my belief that the Soviet Government would never undertake the risk of provoking a major war until the Soviet Union is much stronger economically than it is to-day. I am also coming more and more to believe that a feeling of frustration is growing up not only among the Soviet peoples but also among the leaders and that before many decades have passed we will find a petering out of that dynamic force to which the Revolution gave vent.

15. If we view the "Truman doctrine" in this light we really have little to fear from the consequences of that policy, provided it is not pushed to too great an extent and provided we do not lose our heads. The chief danger is that some of the proponents of that policy seem so bent on humiliating the Soviet Union that before long a feeling of sympathy for that country may gain support and this may lead to another of those marked reversals of United States policy that are such a danger to the world.

16. Undoubtedly the "Truman doctrine" will bring us into still greater dependence upon the United States and to this extent away from the United Kingdom. It is really the coming into being of that "Atlantic Community" envisaged by Walter Lippman in his book on "United States War Aims". The Atlantic Community envisaged by Lippman was one dominated by the United States but in the same benevolent fashion as the world susceptible to sea power used to be dominated by Great Britain. In other words the Pax Britannica of the nineteenth century is to be replaced in the later twentieth century by a Pax Americana. On account of our proximity to the United States this gives rise to all sorts of problems for us and it makes it necessary for us to subscribe to the main lines of United States policy.

---

[6]Henry A. Wallace, ancien secrétaire au Commerce des États-Unis.
Henry A. Wallace, former Secretary of Commerce of United States.

Hence, in our relations with the Soviet Union, we have no alternative other than to accept and follow the "Truman doctrine".

17. Under all circumstances we must keep our heads. I think the most important need is to maintain an attitude of being more or less indifferent to what is taking place in the Soviet Union and its sphere, provided that what they are doing does not overflow into the sphere of the Western powers.

18. We must begin to realise that the Soviet Union is not nearly so strong as many people believe and that they need our help much more than we need theirs. This help we should give but only on the basis on which we usually give economic assistance and not on a more generous basis. We should cease endeavouring to woo the Soviet Government, as this only encourages them into believing that they may after all succeed in breaking down the present policy of firmness and perhaps in dividing the other Western countries from the United States.

19. I would welcome less attention being paid to the Russians whenever they appear on the scene. I would like to see them treated the same as we treat other peoples. Nothing could so bring home to the Soviet leaders the possibility that they will not achieve their aims than a general attitude of indifference on the part of those abroad.

20. It is very difficult to express what I mean in a positive way and therefore I find it necessary to resort to a negative approach. When I was in Moscow I sent you a telegram indicating that I considered our policy in relation to recent Arctic developments to have been a mistake insofar as our attitude to the Soviet Union is concerned. I have thought that, considering the little we have done towards strengthening our defences in the north, there has been too much explaining and our attitude has been too apologetic. All this makes the Soviet Union think that we fear them and that we believe them to be stronger than they actually are. They are encouraged to think that we are not aware of their economic weaknesses and that perhaps we can be, in course of time, encouraged to give them economic assistance on terms which we would not think of giving to other countries with whom we are not on exceptionally friendly terms.

21. From all this you will see that I think that the basic principles of the "Truman doctrine" are correct, although I do not always approve of the manner in which United States policy is put into effect. In particular, I think that they should exercise more tact in their dealings with the Soviet Union, since firmness need not necessarily be accompanied by rudeness. In fact, some minor manifestations of the "Truman doctrine" are sure to win sympathy for the Soviet Union. Recent visitors to Moscow must have been impressed by the unreasoning hostility towards all things Soviet shown by some of the United States representatives on the spot. Our detestation of totalitarianism and all that it stands for should not lead us into treating the Russians differently to the manner with which we would treat any other country with which we were not on particularly friendly terms. Let us not be alarmed at the prospect of the Soviet Union returning to isolationism, and, if they do return to isolationism, let us treat them with that indifference which this attitude deserves.

22. Owing to my preoccupation with the work of the Trade and Employment Conference, I have not been able to give the attention to the preparation of this despatch which the importance of the subject deserves, but I trust that this attempt to comply with Mr. Pearson's request for some comments may help towards a triangular exchange of views between Ottawa, Moscow and Geneva which will assist you in a reconsideration of the basic principles governing our foreign policy.

23. I am sending a copy of this despatch to Mr. Ford and am also handing a copy to Mr. Kirkwood.

I have etc.
L.D. WILGRESS

226. DEA/52-F-(S)

Projet de note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique
Draft Memorandum by Head, Second Political Division

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], August 30, 1947

THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION: A STUDY OF THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR AND SOME OF THE IMPLICATIONS FOR CANADIAN POLICY

Prefatory Note

This draft has been prepared in a good deal of a hurry. It bears marks of this and of the fact that it is to some extent a scissors and paste job. It is submitted as nothing more than a rough first draft of the kind of memorandum which I think it would be useful if we were to prepare in the Department in order to help us clear our minds on this fundamental question.

The memorandum is divided into seven parts:

Part One	–	The Source of Conflict
Part Two	–	The Conditions under which Conflict might Lead to War
Part Three	–	The Concept of the Balance of Power
Part Four	–	The Possibility of War
Part Five	–	Measures to Diminish the Possibility of War
Part Six	–	Some Implications for Canadian Policy
Part Seven	–	Conclusions

The last two parts are particularly weak. My feeling is that Part Six should be expanded considerably and be much more precise on the implications for Canadian policy of the present and probable future relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

E. R[EID]

PART ONE

THE SOURCE OF CONFLICT

1. The governing class in the Soviet Union is anxious to maintain the existing system in the areas now under Soviet political control; this involves a desire to expand the defence area of that system. The desire of the members of the Soviet governing class to maintain the existing system and to expand the Soviet defence area is partly the result of their desire to retain their own personal power and privileges, partly the result of their belief that the Soviet system is better than the Western system.

2. This anxiety to maintain their system makes the Soviet leaders afraid of two kinds of attack from the Western world — armed attack and psychological warfare. They believe that the governing classes of the Western world are afraid that the capitalist system, which gives them personal power and privileges, would be undermined by the success of Soviet institutions, and that the leaders of the Western countries might therefore launch an armed attack against the Soviet Union before the Soviet system has had a chance to demonstrate to the peoples of the Western world its superiority over the Western system. The Soviet leaders are afraid of the penetration of the lands on the borders of the Soviet Union (the Soviet defence area) by Western ideas and they therefore resist Western attempts to introduce Western democratic concepts into those areas.

3. Similarly the United States, as the most powerful and highly developed democratic and capitalist state, is anxious to maintain the existing system of democratic values and of free enterprise in the areas under United States political control, and this involves a desire to expand the defence area of that system. This desire, which is shared by the overwhelming majority of the population of the United States, is partly the result of a desire to retain the benefits of a free way of life and partly the result of the dominant belief that the capitalist system is superior to the Soviet system. The majority of the people in the United States fear two kinds of attack from the Soviet Union which they identify with communism — armed attack and psychological warfare. They believe that the present governing classes in the Soviet Union fear that their personal power and privileges would be undermined by the success of western institutions, and might therefore launch an armed attack against the West before the free enterprise system has had a chance to demonstrate to the peoples of the world its superiority over the communist system. They oppose the penetration of territories which now lie just outside Soviet control (what might be called the United States defence area) by communist ideas and therefore resist the communist attempt to introduce communist conceptions into these areas.

4. Each side desires to expand its defence area because each side believes that the other constitutes a menace to its way of life. It constitutes a menace because its way of life is so different from the way of life of the other.

5. The Soviet Union is a police state in which individual liberties and democratic methods of government, as these are understood in the West, can hardly be said to exist. Between such a state and the Western democracies a fundamental cleavage inevitably exists. This conflict of principle runs deep in all the relations of the Soviet Union with the Western world. Moreover, the insecurity which makes it necessary for the Soviet Government to rule by such methods also makes it essential that the peoples of the Soviet Union should not be exposed to the unsettling effects of contact with the Western democracies or their nationals. The Soviet Government, therefore, not only keeps its people in ignorance of our conditions of life, but employs unceasing propaganda to instill into the population fear and suspicion of the intentions of the Western democracies. In addition, there will always be a tendency, when things are going badly in the Soviet Union, for the Soviet Government to distract popular attention from its own shortcomings by starting a campaign of abuse and misrepresentation directed against one or other of the Anglo-Saxon democracies.

6. Each side desires to expand its defence area because each side fears the threat to its security which results from the other's expansionist moves.

7. It is obvious, indeed, that both the Soviet Union and the United States are expanding powers. The United States has, in the past seven years, annexed no territory but it occupies Japan, it dominates Greece, and it has developed Arctic defences from Alaska to Greenland.

8. The Soviet Union has annexed Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, the Koenigsberg district, Eastern Poland, Carpatho-Ukraine, Northern Bukovina, Bessarabia, Tannu-Tuva, Port Arthur, Karafuto and the Kurile Islands. It has taken the Petsamo and Viborg areas from Finland. It is attempting, with considerable success, to establish a zone of exclusive Soviet influence beyond these territories, in Poland, the Soviet zone of Germany, Austria, Hungary, Roumania, Bulgaria, Yugoslavia, Albania, the Mongol People's Republic, Northern Korea, Dairen, and Manchuria. In Czechoslovakia, Soviet influence is strong but not as yet exclusive.

9. It seems probable that the practical result of Soviet policy in Germany will be the creation of a closely integrated Eastern German state with a communist or near-communist system of government, well-organized and possibly even powerful. Such a state would have a very considerable attraction for Western Germans, and the Soviet Government must be expected to do everything in its power to increase the communist influence in the zones occupied by the Western powers. Nor will the struggle for the allegiance of Western Europe be confined to Germany; the political future of France and Italy is also in doubt. To a considerable extent the outcome of this struggle will be determined by the international economic policy of the United States. It will be fraught with the gravest consequences for the balance of power in the world.

10. The desire on the part of both the Soviet Union and the United States to expand their defence areas brings them into conflict in all the borderlands between their present defence areas from Korea to Finland. It is idle to suppose that this source of conflict could for long be removed by an agreement between the two powers on the boundaries of their respective defence areas. Such an agreement might stabilize the situation for a few years, but by its very nature a desire on the part of a great power to extend its defence area is an illimitable process. The appetite for security grows with eating.

11. Moreover, any attempt to stabilize the defence areas of the Soviet Union and the United States is made, at the present time, impossible because the Soviet defence area is not merely a geographical concept. Yugoslavia is a Soviet defence area in that is serves to protect the Soviet Union against attack. But the Communist party in France (and in other countries) serves the same purpose: it protects the Soviet Union from attack because it makes it more difficult for any French Government to adopt a course of action which the Soviet Government considers contrary to Russian interests. The same is true of Soviet sympathizers throughout the whole of the non-Soviet world. They constitute, as it were, zones of Soviet influence in the midst of the non-Soviet world. Moscow is still the Mecca of many of the disenchanted and disinherited of the whole world.

12. The events of the last two years have demonstrated clearly the Soviet strategy. It is one of deliberate and cautious consolidation of positions already acquired, together with a process of probing for the weak spots in the adversaries' positions. Such a policy operates on the political, military and economic planes. We have already had ample experience of these methods in negotiation with the Soviet Government. The tactics are familiar: the spun-out negotiation, the bargaining price, the war of nerves, the manipulation of facts for propaganda purposes, the abrupt change of front and the retreats pour mieux sauter. These have become the commonplaces of Soviet diplomatic methods.

13. Behind these tactics, the strategy of the Soviet Government has emerged with increasing clarity. It is to undermine the position of the Western powers, and to weaken and divide them at every opportunity. In pursuit of these aims, the Soviet Government is anxious to prevent the formation of any Western bloc of powers. It strives to separate the United States from the United Kingdom, and to isolate one in difficulties over some issue in which it hopes that the support of the other may not be forthcoming. Moreover, the Soviet Government, in its role as defender of the oppressed, is carrying on propaganda against "imperialist" powers in general and against the British and United States democracies in particular. In this capacity, the Soviet Government claims to be the champion of the poorer classes in all countries and of all racial minority groups.

14. It is no longer possible to doubt that the Soviet Government aims at dividing the Western world against itself and increasing discord and instability. Such policies are plainly incompatible with friendship or co-operation as we understand these terms. On the other hand, they could be pursued for a prolonged period by the U.S.S.R. without implying that the Soviet Government intended to precipitate a world war. They may very possibly be carried to the length of fomenting civil war in certain countries in which the U.S.S.R. would give under-cover support to its adherents as, for example, in China and in Greece.

15. It can thus be expected that, until conditions in either the Soviet Union or the United States undergo a radical change, conflicts between them will continue. The question is whether these conflicts are likely to lead to war.

PART TWO

THE CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH CONFLICT MIGHT LEAD TO WAR

16. Given the nature of the United States Government and people, it is highly unlikely that the United States would deliberately embark on a course which would lead to war with the Soviet Union unless it was generally believed in the United States that the balance of power between the United States and the Soviet Union was constantly tipping more and more against the United States and that, unless the United States precipitated a preventive war while it was stronger than the Soviet Union, it would soon be at the mercy of the Soviet Union.

17. The Soviet leaders are realists. They have always despised what they term "bourgeois adventurism". The grandiose schemes for world domination of the kind which fascinated the restless dictators of the thirties, the gambling spirit that is willing to take great risks in the hope of immense returns, seem to have little appeal to the Soviet leaders. On the record of their past policies it is difficult to imagine the rulers of the Soviet Union deliberately embarking on a course which would lead to war with the United States unless in their opinion (a) the balance of forces in the world was such that their chances of winning the war were much greater than the chances of defeat or of a stalemate and (b) the chances of their achieving their aims without recourse to war were not good.

18. The second point is of great importance. The Soviet rulers believe that truth and time are on their side; that an ultimate struggle between communism and capitalism is inevitable and that communism will emerge victorious; "that capitalism contains the seeds of its own destruction and must, in view of the inability of the capital-owning class to adjust itself to economic change, result eventually and inescapably in a revolutionary transfer of power to the working class.....The Kremlin is under no ideological compulsion to accomplish its purposes in a hurry. Like the Church, it is dealing in ideological concepts which are of long-term validity, and it can afford to be patient."[7]

19. Even if we were to dismiss this argument drawn from Marxist theology, the argument drawn from the calculated realism of the Soviet leaders leads to the same conclusion. A war between the United States and the Soviet Union would cause tremendous devastation in the Western world. Even assuming that the ultimate aim of the Soviet leaders is world domination, the Soviet Union would want to inherit not a desert but a going concern. The Soviet leaders would therefore make great efforts to achieve their aims without recourse to a first-class war. They would try to extend their defence area until ultimately it might cover the whole world, not as the result of a first-class war but as the result of a gradual extension of power — an extension of political power over adjoining territory, an extension of economic power, an extension of power over the minds of men in the Western world — until finally the balance of power between the United States and the Soviet Union was so weighted in favour of the Soviet Union that it would not be necessary to engage in a first-class war in order to bring the governments of the remaining Western powers, including the United States, under Soviet influence and ultimately Soviet domination.

[7]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:/The following was typed on this copy of the document:

"X": The sources of Soviet conduct. Foreign Affairs, July, 1947

20. One possible flaw in this argument is that the Soviet leaders might become so frightened by a steady tipping of the Soviet-American balance of power in favour of the United States that they might give up their faith that truth and time are on their side and precipitate a war even though they did not have an overwhelming preponderance of force.

PART THREE

THE CONCEPT OF THE BALANCE OF POWER

21. The stress in this analysis so far has been on the concept of what United States and Soviet leaders and people consider at any time to be the balance of power between the Soviet Union and the United States. This concept requires further examination since it is crucial to the argument.

22. A decision to go to war or to embark on a course knowing that it may lead to war is a decision which is made in the minds of men. The reality with which we are concerned, therefore, is not the actual balance of power but the picture of that actual balance in the minds of the members of the governing classes of the world.

23. The attempt of people in authority to assess the balance is an extremely difficult task since on either side of the balance there are so many factors that cannot be weighed. It is not only, for example, a question of the possession of arms and armaments, strategic positions, and industrial potential, but it is also a question of the willingness of the nations concerned to use their armed forces. Since modern war has to be waged with the total force of a country, it is also essential to take into consideration the unity or disunity of each of the possible belligerents in the event of the outbreak of a first-class war and this unity, particularly in the kind of war under discussion, would depend in part on what people in each of the Western countries felt about the issues at stake and the incidents which had precipitated hostilities.

24. The nature of the future balance of forces will depend to a very great extent on how successful the Soviet Government is in carrying out its present plans for the industrialization of the Soviet Union. These plans are designed to bring the economic potential of the Soviet Union, from a military point of view, first up to that of the United States and then beyond it. If the Soviet Union is successful in carrying out these plans, the increase in population of the Soviet Union would then tend to tip the scales of the relative balance of power in favour of the Soviet Union. Doubts are, however, now beginning to arise as to the ability of both the Soviet leaders and the Soviet peoples to undergo the great sacrifices in comfort and leisure necessary to bring to realization the three five-year plans.

25. One factor which is clearly important in trying to assess the nature of the balance in the future is the ability of either of the main combatant states to secure, either by force or persuasion, allies or friendly neutrals. The Soviet Union is today posing as the principal defender of the rights of coloured and colonial peoples. It is also posing as the principal defender of the sovereignty of small powers. It would seem probable that, if the Western powers are unable to remove racial discriminations rapidly and to satisfy the demands of colonial peoples for self-government, the Western powers may have the great majority of the colonial and coloured peoples hostile or unfriendly to them in the event of war with the Soviet Union or at least doing their best to fish in troubled waters. In this context the term "colonial peoples" may well include a considerable section of Latin America, as well as the whole of Asia and Africa and the South West Pacific.

26. The sympathies of the peoples of Western Europe would undoubtedly be divided in the event of a Soviet-American war and, moreover, it is possible that, by the time such a war occurred, Soviet-dominated governments might have succeeded in securing power in such countries as Greece, Italy and France.

27. Even within the hard core of the present Western alliance which exists in fact, though not on paper, (the United States, the British Commonwealth, the Netherlands, and Belgium), there would be differences of opinion within each country in the event of war between the Soviet Union and the United States and it is impossible to forecast how large and influential a group in each country would either be pro-Soviet or neutral. This depends, in part, on whether, during the next ten years or so, the governments of the Western powers, and particularly the United States, are able to take measures to prevent serious economic depressions. The chances of adequate preventive measures being taken do not appear to be very good. The size and strength of the dissident minority would also, of course, depend on the ability of the governments of the Western powers to convince their peoples that they are in the right should war occur. A dissident minority in a Soviet-American war would not for the most part be pacifists; they would be saboteurs and even rebels. Already Soviet sympathizers have secured a large measure of control of the trade unions in certain communications industries which are vital for war.

28. In order to avoid the grave dangers of over-simplification, it is also necessary to keep constantly in mind that an armed attack against North America is scarcely likely to occur until after North America has been subjected to a softening up process and a nibbling away at its outer ring of defences. In order to expand its defence area, the Soviet Union will pursue its orthodox policy of constantly probing for the weak spots in the outer ring of defences of the United States. When it finds a weak spot, that is to say a spot which it has decided it can secure control of without running the danger of precipitating a war, it will secure that control. Thus if it were to discover that it could secure control of Spitsbergen, it would in due course probe to find out whether it could safely advance its area of control farther west across the North Atlantic bridge. Similarly, it will continue to probe in the Middle East, in China, in Europe, Africa and Latin America. At the same time, it will try through its many propaganda agencies to strengthen its defensive position by undermining national unity within the United States and other Western countries. It will also try to strengthen its defensive position by promoting economic as well as political instability in the areas outside its control.

PART FOUR

THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR

29. Our conclusion in Part One of this memorandum was that, until conditions in either the Soviet Union or the United States undergo a radical change, conflicts between them over the desire of each to consolidate and extend its defence area will continue. Our conclusions in Part Two were:

(a) that it is highly unlikely that the United States would deliberately embark on a course which would lead to war with the Soviet Union unless it was generally believed in the United States that the balance of power between the United States and the Soviet Union was constantly tipping more and more against the United States and that, unless the United States precipitated a preventive war while it was stronger than the Soviet Union, it would soon be at the mercy of the Soviet Union; and

(b) that the Soviet leaders believe that, by a process of gradual expansion of power they can, in the long run, secure their ends without the necessity of risking a first-class war; that, because of this and because they are realists, they would not be likely to precipitate a war unless their chances of winning were much greater than their chances of defeat or of a stalemate; but that in spite of their Marxist religion and their realism they might precipitate a war if instead of their power gradually expanding it steadily and remorselessly contracted.

Our conclusion in Part Three of the memorandum was that the balance of power was not a simple concept but complex, involving military, economic and psychological factors; and that Soviet power flowed not only from their control of territories under Soviet domination but also from the support which they might be expected to receive from people who lived within the borders of the non-Soviet world.

30. If this analysis is correct, the danger of war diminishes if the forces on the United States side of the balance are much greater than the forces on the Soviet side, provided that the Soviet leaders are not driven by too relentless an increase of United States power to risk a desperate gamble.

31. In this analysis, the prospect of war during the next ten years appears to be remote. The forces on the side of the United States are now much greater than those on the side of the Soviet Union, and though the relative power of the Soviet Union is likely to increase over the next few years, it is not likely to increase to an extent sufficient to frighten the United States into precipitating a war.

32. One main source of Soviet weakness today results from the effects of the last war; the Soviet Union suffered so heavily in terms of general disorganization of its economy, material destruction and loss of manpower that a breathing space seems clearly indicated as a main objective of Soviet policy. There has, during and since the war, been a marked wearing-out of industrial and transport equipment. Most marked today is the general weariness both of the Soviet people and of their leaders. Apathy is the only word which can describe the present attitude of the Russian people. The Soviet economy is weak today and it is probable that it would be necessary for the Soviet Union to complete successfully the three five-year plans now contemplated before Soviet power would approach equality with that of the United States.

33. This conclusion, that it is improbable that the Soviet Union would, during the next decade, precipitate a war with the United States, would not be agreed to by a number of authorities. The reasons for their doubts about the validity of the conclusion might usefully be examined.

34. One school of thought believes that the Soviet Union may develop weapons of mass destruction of such a nature or in such quantities as radically to alter in its favour the existing balance of forces. From the information now at our disposal, this contingency seems, however, remote. During the next ten years the United States ought to be able to maintain its present scientific and technological advantage over the Soviet Union in ability to use weapons of mass destruction effectively against the other country.

35. Another possibility which is mentioned is a radical change in the balance of forces resulting from a profound economic depression in the United States and other countries of the Western world. Such a depression, if the U.S.S.R. as seems probable were relatively unaffected, would tend to pull the countries on the border of the Soviet defence area inside that area. National unity in the other Western countries, and most important in the United States, would be adversely affected. However, though a profound economic depression in the Western world would undoubtedly alter the balance of forces to the advantage of the U.S.S.R., it is unlikely that it would alter it to such an extent as to lead the governing classes of the Soviet Union to believe that it would be in their interest to precipitate a war with the United States. It is much more likely that they would be content to take advantage of the opportunity to extend their defence area.

36. A third possibility which is mentioned is that the factors on which our present calculations are based might be materially affected by the situation which might arise in the event of Stalin's death. It seems unlikely, however, that the transfer of power from Stalin to his successor would seriously affect the main considerations which determine the decisions on grave issues of peace and war by the governing class in the Soviet Union. Stalin's successor will probably be a realist, not an adventurer; he is unlikely to try to cure disunity at home by embarking on a foreign war.

37. Finally, there is the theory strongly held in some informed quarters that the whole of the preceding analysis of the prospects of the Soviet Union precipitating a war in the next decade is vitiated by the fact that it is based on the assumption that, if a war comes, it is likely to arise out of a deliberate decision on the part of the Soviet governing class and that the chances of the Soviet Union stumbling into a war with the United States are remote. It is contended that, in the past, most great wars have not been deliberately sought but have been accidental: a great power has been dragged into war by an ally which it could not refuse to support for fear of weakening its whole alliance structure; a commander in an area of friction or a diplomat has precipitated a crisis from which it was impossible to escape; a government has been so misinformed about public opinion abroad that it based its policy on the false assumption that it could, without running a risk of war, secure control of a certain area.

38. Soviet generals and Soviet diplomats are, however, so well-disciplined that it is highly unlikely that they would take any serious step without instructions. If they did and there was danger that their acts might precipitate an unwanted war, the Soviet Government would not hesitate to disavow them. Nor would it hesitate to disavow the actions of one of its satellites even if that satellite had been acting under orders from Moscow. While it may well be true that the Soviet Government is misinformed by its embassies abroad, it has other sources of information and it is adept at flying kites to test, for example, the possibility of the United States being willing to go to war in defence of a certain country. It would therefore seem reasonable to conclude that the likelihood of the Soviet Union blundering into war with the United States is remote.

39. Our conclusion, therefore, is that during the next ten years the possibility of the Soviet Union precipitating a war with the United States or blundering into such a war is remote. A war, if it comes, is more likely to arise out of panic in the United States, should there occur, as is possible, a steady increase over the next ten years of Soviet power in relation to that of the United States.

PART FIVE

MEASURES TO DIMINISH THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR

40. In order to diminish the possibility of war, the first requirement is that the Western powers maintain an overwhelming balance of force relative to that of the Soviet Union, that they use the threat of this force to hold back further extensions of Soviet power, but that they do not provoke the Soviet Union into any desperate gamble.

41. In order to maintain an overwhelming balance of force, action by the Western powers is necessary along many lines.

42. The first is to give economic assistance to that part of Europe which is outside Soviet control in order to restore stability, prosperity and hope and thus to lessen the possibility of pro-Soviet elements capitalizing on discontent in order to get power.

43. The second is to guarantee the states of Western Europe against the establishment by force of pro-Soviet governments.

44. The third is to press for the establishment in countries such as Italy, Greece and Turkey of governments which, while excluding communists and semi-communists, would be based on the parties best calculated to put into effect political, economic and social reforms.

45. The same sort of policy should be applied in the borderlands of the Soviet Union in the Middle and Far East.

46. The successful pursuit of this policy would be rendered impossible by a serious economic depression in the Western world, and particularly in the United States. Soviet policy is now based on a gamble that this depression is coming. Such a depression would have incalculable political and economic effects in the other Western countries. It would also have a profound moral effect since it would raise doubts in the minds of many people, especially in the borderlands, whether Western civilization is in fact preferable to Soviet civilization. A serious depression would therefore give the Soviet Union a great opportunity to extend its defence area. Therefore the Western powers must do everything they can to prevent a depression, and to prepare for it, so that if it should come, it can be mitigated and the Soviet Union can be prevented from capitalizing on its effects. This will demand from the Western powers a measure of unity which it will be very difficult for them to attain, given particularly the obstacles arising out of the constitutional procedure of the United States.

47. Western civilization, and particularly that of the United States, must also, in order to gain the allegiance of Western Europe, demonstrate by actions that it really believes in and practises the democratic faith. The Soviet leaders are aware of the attraction which Western democratic ideas exercise over the minds of people all over the world; thus they are alarmed at the possibility that a liberal-socialist experiment may succeed in Great Britain and that the example of this alternative to communism might undermine their influence among the industrial working classes of Western Europe. A denial in the United States of democratic beliefs by witch-hunting, unfair legislation against labour, racial discriminations, would weaken the appeal of the Western world.

48. It is particularly important that rapid progress should be made in the Western world, particularly in the English-speaking countries, in the removal of racial discriminations. About two-thirds of the peoples of the world are coloured. The Russian section of the white race can make a successful appeal to the coloured peoples of the world because the Russians do not practise racial discrimination. In order to save itself from Soviet domination, the Western section of the white race must meet this challenge.

49. The same sort of considerations apply to the treatment of colonial peoples. There are dangers in giving colonial peoples self-government before they are ready for it. But the dangers in not giving them self-government quickly are probably greater, since the longer independence is delayed the greater are the chances that the colonial independence movements may come under Soviet influence or control.

50. The technological advance of the Western countries must be maintained, especially in new weapons of warfare. This means spending large sums of money on general scientific research as well as on specifically defence research.

51. The armed forces of the Western world must be kept extremely efficient and at a level which is reasonable in relation to the armed forces of the Soviet world.

52. Precautionary measures of defence which are taken against the Soviet Union, such as the building up of defences in the North American Arctic, should be taken in a non-provocative way but not apologetically. Too much explaining and too apologetic an attitude make the Soviet Union think that we fear them and that we believe them to be stronger than they actually are. They are encouraged to think that we are not aware of their economic weaknesses and that perhaps we can be, in course of time, persuaded to give them economic assistance on terms which we would not think of giving to other countries with which we are not on exceptionally friendly terms.

53. One danger in the maintenance of a preponderant Western balance of power is that the power may be unfairly exerted against the Soviet Union. Another danger is that an influential number of people in the Western world may come to believe Soviet propaganda that the power is being unfairly exercised against the Soviet Union even though in fact it is not. Some of the advocates in the United States of a policy of firmness in dealing with the Soviet Union seem so bent on humiliating the Soviet Union, that before long a feeling of sympathy for the Soviet Union may gain support in the United States. This might lead to another of those marked reversals of United States policy that are such a danger to the world.

54. It is therefore essential that the policy of firmness and of "containing" the Soviet Union should not be pushed too hard and too fast and that we should keep our heads. While every effort should be made to confine the Soviet Union within its present defence zone, it would be a mistake to try to extend the Western defence area into those Eastern European states which are now included in the Soviet defence area. Our immediate aim in those states should be to help them to be less dependent upon the Soviet Union; to help them maintain those ties with the West which most of the peoples of those countries are so anxious to preserve; to create a healthier atmosphere in which it will be more difficult for communism to take root. Our longer-run objective should be to help them to become buffer states between the Soviet and the Western world.

55. In order to minimize the danger that an important body of opinion in the Western countries should become convinced that the Soviet Union is being unfairly treated, the Western powers should do their utmost to prevent any break with the Soviet Union from occurring on any issue unless they are satisfied that they can demonstrate to their people that they have exercised the utmost patience and forbearance, and have exhausted every possibility of reconciling opposing viewpoints. The Western powers should never lay themselves open to the charge of driving the Soviet Union out of an international organization. If a break on any issue becomes unavoidable the Western powers should do their best to ensure that the break occurs on ground that they have carefully chosen for its propaganda value. A break in the United Nations on sanctions or the veto would, for example, not have nearly as much propaganda value as a break on these issues accompanied by a demonstrable failure of the Soviet Union to agree to reasonable, carefully thought out proposals on such matters as an international bill of human rights, an international declaration of the rights and duties of states, and an international convention on freedom of the press.

56. The possibility — even though it is thought remote — of a gradual mellowing of the Soviet system must always be kept in mind. This means that as many bridges as possible should be kept open between the Soviet and the Western worlds so that, if this mellowing occurs, it may be as easy as possible for the Soviet leaders gradually to change their policies without loss of face.

57. The conclusion of the writer in Foreign Affairs about United States policy applies equally to the policies of the other Western countries which share responsibilities with the United States for the containment of Russian expansive tendencies. He wrote:

"In these circumstances it is clear that the main element of any United States policy toward the Soviet Union must be that of a long-term, patient but firm and vigilant containment of Russian expansive tendencies. It is important to note, however, that such a policy has nothing to do with outward histrionics: with threats or blustering or superfluous gestures of outward 'toughness'. While the Kremlin is basically flexible in its reaction to political realities, it is by no means unamenable to considerations of prestige. Like almost any other government, it can be placed by tactless and threatening gestures in a position where it cannot afford to yield even though this might be dictated by its sense of realism. The Russian leaders are keen judges of human psychology, and as such they are highly conscious that loss of temper and of self-control is never a source of strength in political affairs. They are quick to exploit such evidences of weakness. For these reasons, it is a sine qua non of successful dealing with Russia that the foreign government in question should remain at all time cool and collected and that its demands on Russian policy should be put forward in such a manner as to leave the way open for a compliance not too detrimental to Russian prestige."

With these considerations in mind, what should be the policy of the Western powers in their dealings with the Soviet Union in the United Nations?

58. Firmness need not be accompanied by rudeness. Our detestation of totalitarianism and all that it stands for should not lead us into treating the Russians differently from the way in which we treat any other country with which we are not on particularly friendly terms. We should endeavour to follow a course which is neither that of excessive flattery nor of excessive ostracism.

59. The Russians have recently been complaining that the Western powers are exerting economic pressure on them. It would be a grave mistake to adopt the policy advocated by Mr. Henry Wallace and to try to win over the Soviet Government by generous economic assistance. The Soviet leaders would take full advantage of this policy and would use our generosity to make themselves stronger for a future struggle. At the same time we should not refuse to do business with the Russians simply because we disapprove of their general policy. The economic cooperation which the Western powers should be prepared to extend to Russia should be on a strictly commercial basis.

60. The general despair of the United Nations becoming effective as long as it is paralyzed by the Soviet veto in the Security Council is leading to demands in the United States that the time has come for a showdown with Russia; that it is necessary to clear the air; to see where we stand; to stand up and be counted. There are those who are so anxious for reforms in the United Nations that they are willing to advocate their adoption even though they could be adopted only at the expense of the secession from the United Nations of the Soviet Union and its friends.

61. Such a policy would be essential if it were necessary in order to maintain an overwhelming balance of force against the Soviet Union. But it is not. The Western world must organize its economic and social life so that it will be stronger materially and less divided internally by the existence of depressed economic groups who have little or no loyalty to the ideals of the Western world. But the Western world is not prevented by the Soviet Union or by Soviet membership in the United Nations from organizing its economic and social life. It has created in the specialized agencies the framework of international cooperation in this field. The Soviet Union is a member of only one of the eight existing specialized agencies. It is in no position therefore to stop the Western world from changing the specialized agencies into international federal institutions to deal with international economic and social questions. These changes should be made in order to strengthen the Western world in its struggle with the Soviet Union. If they are not made we have only ourselves to blame and not the Soviet Union. The veto on these changes is not a Soviet veto; it is usually a United States veto.

62. Similarly we do not need to drive the Soviet Union out of the United Nations in order to unify the Western world politically, and thus strengthen it in its struggle with the Soviet Union. The balance of power against the Soviet Union would be greatly increased if the nations of the Western world were, for example, to organize in advance an alliance which would become immediately effective if the Soviet Union should commit aggression. The Western nations can do this today without amending the Charter of the United Nations. They can, consistent with that Charter, create a new "regional" security organization in which there would be no veto and in which each state would undertake to pool all its economic and military forces with those of the other members if any power should be found to have committed aggression against any member.

63. Thus the Western nations can, without driving the Soviet Union out of the United Nations, do virtually all the things which, if they tried to do them within the United Nations, would drive the Russians out.

64. The danger is that the pursuit of a policy of uniting the non-Soviet world by changing the specialized agencies into international federal institutions, and by creating a non-Soviet security system, might lead to Russian withdrawal from the United Nations. But it is better to run a risk of Russian withdrawal than to adopt the other policy of "reforming" the United Nations since this would make Russian withdrawal certain. If the Charter of the United Nations itself remains unchanged it is possible, even probable, that the Russians would still find it in their interests to remain in the United Nations; so long as they remain in, there will continue to exist a constitutional structure which includes both worlds and which can in course of time be strengthened if the Soviet system becomes more mellow.

PART SIX

SOME IMPLICATIONS FOR CANADIAN POLICY

65. Most of the implications of all this for Canadian policy are obvious and need not be developed. Attention might usefully be drawn, however, to some of the implications which may lie somewhat beneath the surface.

66. The first is that Canada is being brought into still greater dependence upon the United States. The "Atlantic Community" advocated by Mr. Walter Lippman in his book on "United States War Aims" is coming into existence. That Atlantic Community was one dominated by the United States but in the same benevolent fashion as Great Britain in the nineteenth century dominated a world which was susceptible to sea power. The Pax Britannica of the nineteenth century is to be replaced in the later twentieth century by a Pax Americana.

67. In the event of war we shall have no freedom of action in any matter which the United States considers essential. We shall be all-out belligerents from the day the war starts. In peacetime our freedom of action will be limited but it will not be non-existent. It will still be open to us to oppose the United States on certain issues in United States-Soviet relations. Indeed the fact that we are in the same boat with the United States makes it wholly proper for us to tell the United States to stop rocking the boat or driving holes in its bottom.

68. When we are compelled to differ with the United States publicly on an issue which the United States Government considers important, we should always remember that, while on the face of it the conflict will be between one entity called Canada and another entity called the United States, actually in view of the similarities between the people of the United States and Canada it will be a conflict between certain groups of Canadians and Americans who will support United States policy, and other groups of Canadians and Americans who will support Canadian policy.

69. One weakness of United States policy is that the United States, because of its size and its constitutional structure, finds it even more difficult than other countries to follow a consistent policy — a policy which is consistent in its various aspects at any one time or consistent over long periods. If Canada can follow a policy which is consistent in purpose, though variegated and resourceful in application, it can exert a very considerable influence upon United States policy.

70. Because of the factors mentioned in the two preceding paragraphs and because of other obvious factors, the weight of the influence the Canadian Government can bring to bear on Washington is considerable. If we play our cards well we can exert an influence at Washington out of all proportion to the relative importance of our strength in war compared with that of the United States. The game is difficult; the issues will be delicate; but with skill we can play it successfully.

71. The cost to us of a war with the Soviet Union, whether our side wins or loses, would be so vast that any conceivable contribution we could make to preventing it would be a small insurance premium to pay. Consequently any national decision of importance should be examined in the light of whether or not it contributes to increasing or lessening the chances of war with the Soviet Union, e.g., decisions on how much we contribute to international relief or reconstruction, decisions on the admission of displaced persons, on the removal of racial discriminations in Canada, on loan and tariff policy, on policies in the specialized agencies, on policies in the United Nations, in the Atomic Energy Commission and so on.

PART SEVEN

CONCLUSIONS

72. According to the analysis in this memorandum, the Western powers should be able to prevent war within the next ten years if, by the pursuit of adequate political, economic and social policies, they remain stronger than the Soviet Union, and if at the same time they pursue a firm, patient and fair-minded policy towards the Soviet Union which would not arouse fear in the Soviet Union of Western aggression and thus goad the Soviet Union into war. But suppose we can, for ten or fifteen years, contain Soviet power within pretty much its present confines by confronting "the Russians with unalterable counterforce at every point where they show signs of encroaching upon the interests of a peaceful and stable world,"[8] what is our hope in the longer future?

73. Our chief hope must be that the leaders and people of the Soviet Union are tired in mind, body and spirit by thirty long years of relentless, revolutionary drive. In Russian history, comparatively short dynamic periods of activity have been followed by long periods of inertia. Already a feeling of frustration is growing up not only among the Soviet peoples but also among the leaders and it may be that before ten or twenty years have passed the dynamic force to which the Revolution gave vent will have petered out, especially if the Messianic urge to carry the gospel abroad has been continually frustrated by the power of the West. The Soviet system may mellow or collapse.

74. It is moreover true that no curtain, even of iron, is impenetrable. No two civilizations have, in the past, been able to live side by side without becoming more and more like each other. The longer, therefore, that the Soviet and Western worlds live side by side in peace, even if it is an uneasy peace, full of conflicts and crises, the more similar to each other they will become. The more similar they become the more manageable will become the conflicts and crises which will arise between them, for the less will each have to fear from the triumph of the other's way of life, and the less will each want to impose its way of life on the other.

227. DEA/2-AE (S)

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre en Suisse

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister in Switzerland

SECRET. PERSONAL. Ottawa, September 9, 1947

Dear Mr. Wilgress:

In my letter of June 10† I mentioned that I was asking Mr. Robertson and Mr. Wrong to make use of a suitable opportunity to disclose the contents of your despatch No. G.1 of April 25 to the Foreign Office and State Department respectively, and to obtain their appreciation of developments in the Soviet Union and of relations between the Soviet Union and the Western world.

[8]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document:/The following was typed on this copy of the document:
"X" in Foreign Affairs article already cited.

2. Mr. Wrong, as you will remember from his letter of July 14,† dealing with his conversation with Mr. Bohlen[9] of the State Department on the "Marshall Plan", a copy of which was sent to you with my letter of July 21,† gave a slightly edited copy to Mr. Hickerson, and directed our attention to the article from the July issue of Foreign Affairs entitled "The Sources of Soviet Conduct" which was sent out as Circular Despatch No. A.59 of July 17.† This article is considered to have been written by George Kennan[10] and expresses views in many respects not far removed from your own.

3. Mr. Holmes spoke to the Foreign Office on the subject dealt with in your despatch No. G.1 and has recently sent me a letter, dated July 19, from Mr. R.M.A. Hankey of the Foreign Office dealing with United Kingdom-Soviet relations and United Kingdom policy in Eastern Europe. A copy of Mr. Hankey's letter is attached.† You will note that he requests that it be treated as top secret and personal. Mr. Hankey was one of the first United Kingdom diplomats to go to Eastern Europe at the conclusion of hostilities. As Chargé d'Affaires of the British Embassy in Warsaw he arrived in Poland shortly after the end of the fighting and some time before the Ambassador. I think you will find his views of considerable interest.

4. Although Mr. Hankey stresses that his views are purely personal, I think his treatment and justification of United Kingdom policy in Eastern Europe represents the views held in the Foreign Office as a whole. Mr. Holmes informs me, however, that there is one aspect of the matter in which Mr. Hankey is not in entire agreement with Mr. Warner, the Superintending Under-Secretary in charge of the Northern Department of the Foreign Office, namely, in the view expressed by Mr. Hankey that a sea change may come about in Soviet policy with the passage of time and after the death of Stalin. In this supposition Mr. Hankey is in agreement with the view expressed in the article "The Sources of Soviet Conduct". Both he and the author of the Foreign Affairs article would be in agreement with your view in despatch No. G.1 that, by the wise application of counter-force at crucial points on the periphery of the Soviet sphere, the Soviet onslaught may be contained with the result that we may find a gradual petering out of Soviet revolutionary dynamism.

5. In this connection, however, I might point out to you that Mr. Thompson, the Chief of the Eastern European Division of the State Department takes rather the opposite point of view. I am attaching a copy of Mr. Wrong's letter of July 26† dealing with his talk with Mr. Thompson regarding Soviet relations. Although Mr. Thompson, in his conversation with Mr. Wrong, does not deny the present state of strain and weariness inside the Soviet Union, he thinks that there might be a revival of civilian morale in time, with the result that the Soviet attitude, far from mellowing as a result of frustration, will become much more aggressive. The point of debate therefore, lies I think not so much in the policy to be pursued with regard to [9]C.E. Bohlen, conseiller, Département d'État des États-Unis.

C.E. Bohlen, Counsellor, Department of State of United States.
[10]George F. Kennan, chef, Service de planification des politiques, Département d'État des États-Unis.
George F. Kennan, Head, Policy Planning Staff, Department of State of United States.

the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe as with our judgement regarding the Soviet reaction to that policy.

6. It is agreed that Western policy must avoid being one of appeasement, since such a policy in the end defeats its own purpose. Whether, on the other hand, the application of effective counter-force will result in eventually forcing upon the Kremlin a greater degree of moderation, and whether it will promote, as the author of "The Sources of Soviet Conduct" suggests, "tendencies which must eventually find their outlet in either the break-up or the gradual mellowing of Soviet power" is hard to foresee. It may well be that, given the fact that the Soviet mind is conditioned by its sense of opposition to the outside capitalist world and that the Soviet Union will grow industrially stronger with the passage of time, Soviet reaction may be just the opposite and the frustrated movement, far from adjusting itself to the state of affairs, will eventually seek to attain its ends by violent means.

7. I think I may be right in saying that Mr. Ford, from his vantage point in Moscow, has not observed any tendencies pointing to a possible mellowing of the Soviet attitude in the foreseeable future. His account of recent Soviet legislation, in his letter of June 26† sent to you under cover of Circular despatch No. A.58 of July 12† tends to re-enforce the view that Soviet reaction may become even more aggressive with the passage of time. If that is so, we are indeed facing a dangerous period.

8. I think that present indications also point to the fact that the Soviet Union in the foreseeable future will not relax its grip on the Eastern European states and will not permit any groups in those countries to enjoy the freedom to influence the course of their nation more in conformity with Western democratic traditions and policies. The articles entitled "Democracy of a Special Type" referred to by Mr. Thompson as stated in Mr. Wrong's letter of July 26, adopt the thesis that the popular front governments in Eastern Europe will give way in time to a one-party system where the last vestiges of capitalist bourgeois society will be completely liquidated. I do not know, therefore, whether the policy of extending economic assistance to the Eastern European states would in fact enable those countries to become less dependent upon the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, I would agree that to ostracize those countries economically would mean drawing the Iron Curtain even further down, while to have dealings on a commercial basis, in spite of political differences and in spite of the Marshall Plan, would serve to retain the ties which might some day prove of benefit.

9. Should you care to give me any further views on the above questions, I shall be glad to have them. I am having the article "Democracy of a Special Type" in the third issue of "World Economics and World Politics" translated, and will send you a copy.

Yours sincerely,

[L.B. PEARSON]

228. DEA/52-F (S)

Le délégué à la Commission de l'Énergie atomique des Nations Unies au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Delegate to the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET New York, September 19, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

With reference to your letter of September 13th,† I have read Escott Reid's draft memorandum with interest and find myself in agreement with the arguments expressed.

I have one or two suggestions for revision to make. I would emphasize a little more the conclusion in paragraph 30 on page 11, that the danger of war diminishes so long as the "balance" of forces on the United States side are greater than on the Soviet side. In fact, in dealing with a group of leaders whose strategy is governed by shrewd calculations of the "balance" of forces, it is the "unbalance" against themselves rather than the "balance" that really counts.

I think that something along these lines might be included in the concluding paragraph in part 3 of the memorandum. Escott also makes an important point that balance of power must be considered as a complex concept, including economic, political, social, psychological, as well as military factors. I think that perhaps a little more emphasis might be made on the economic and social factors in the estimate of the balance of forces from the Soviet viewpoint. Marxist dialectics, as we know, lead to the conclusion that an inevitable economic crisis leading ultimately to war for markets will mark the collapse of capitalism. It is for this reason that it is so important that the countries of the West, in resisting Soviet pressure, should do everything that is possible to maintain economic stability, raise standards of living and, by international agreement, increase and stabilize international trade. This thought might be a little more developed in paragraph 27 of the memorandum.

As regards the military factor in the balance of forces, I think it is important to note that the scientific and technological advantage of the U.S.A. over the Soviet Union enables the United States to maintain a substantial superiority in all quality weapons, especially in the field of aviation, long range missiles, and naval equipment, as well as in weapons of mass destruction, referred to in that paragraph.

The manufacture of atomic weapons requires particularly complex and large-scale technological equipment, as well as trained personnel. It is a field in which the Soviet Union is generally regarded as possessing a peculiar disadvantage. Obviously for this reason, the Soviet Union has been foremost in pressing for action through the United Nations to forbid the use and manufacture of atomic weapons and has insisted that plans for disarmament should cover armaments as well as armed forces.

I might say that my observation regarding the importance of maintaining "unbalance" in forces relative to the Soviet Union is well brought out in the summarized remarks in part 5 of the memorandum, particularly paragraph 40, but I think that the supporting argument might be a little further developed in parts 3 and 4.

I think that, generally, part 5 is excellent but I should have thought that one of the points that should be mentioned in order to diminish the "possibility of war" is the importance of the peace settlements in Germany and Japan. For while I know that it was an open question whether "time was on our side", in the case of both the Far East and Germany, prolongation of the state of uncertainty and unrest now seems definitely to be against the interests of the Western countries. In particular, it is important that agreement should come as soon as possible, with Russia or without, on the question of Germany.

I think that reference to the Canadian interests in the peace settlement should be included also in part 6.

In concluding these observations, I must apologize for not putting them into the form of specific paragraphs but Escott and yourself, I am sure, will appreciate that the atmosphere of the opening days of the Assembly is not conducive to the reflection and concentration required to produce useful suggestions for this text.

Yours sincerely,

G. IGNATIEFF

229. DEA/52-F (S)

Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Prague, September 25, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

I have read with a great deal of interest Escott's draft memorandum which accompanied your letter of September 13th.† I agree with the general lines of the argument and the conclusions which, indeed, follow those used in papers prepared last November or December for discussions with the United States.[11]

I wish that I had the time to do a reasonably thorough job of commenting on this paper. I think, for one thing, that the first five parts could be shortened without omitting any important points, which would improve the chances of the memorandum's being digested by Ministers and others who should read it. Unfortunately I am single-handed at present, while McCordick[12] is on leave, and I am pretty well

[11]Voir le volume 12, document 994./See Volume 12, Document 994.
[12]J.A. McCordick, deuxième secrétaire, légation en Tchécoslovaquie.
J.A. McCordick, Second Secretary, Legation in Czechoslovakia.

submerged in a morass of passports, immigration cases and people whose fathers-in-law have fallen down wells. However, some revisions have occurred to me and I enclose two copies of a memorandum on the subject.

When Escott recovers from the Assembly I wish he would dash off a memorandum applying the arguments of paragraph 54 to Canada's relations with the satellites. I would like to have his views on what Canada should do vis-à-vis Czechoslovakia, Poland and Yugoslavia "to help them to be less dependent upon the Soviet Union; to help them to maintain those ties with the West which most of the peoples of those countries are so anxious to preserve; to create a healthier atmosphere in which it will be more difficult for Communism to take root". It is a puzzling question, and I haven't yet any very useful ideas on what Canada could or should do for Czechoslovakia beyond sending a hockey team. That would really help the Czechs and Slovaks to maintain ties with the West.

Yours ever,

RONNIE [MACDONNELL]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie

Memorandum by Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia

TOP SECRET Prague, September 25, 1947

COMMENTS ON DRAFT MEMORANDUM OF AUGUST 30TH, 1947
"THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

I agree with the general lines of argument and the conclusions of this memorandum. The comments which appear below are chiefly on matters of shading and emphasis.

To begin with, I suggest that there is not such an exact parallel between the aims, hopes and fears of the United States and the Soviet Union as is claimed in the opening paragraphs. The exact mathematical balance does not seem to take sufficient account of the differences between the two countries. For example, in paragraph 1 it would seem true to say that "the governing class in the Soviet Union is anxious to maintain the existing system in the areas now under Soviet political control and to extend those areas as widely as possible." In paragraph 3 I would prefer to see something like this: "the United States, as the most powerful and highly-developed, democratic and capitalist state, is anxious to see maintained a system of democratic values and of free enterprise wherever it exists today and to see it extended as widely as possible. This applies whether or not the areas can be considered to be under United States political control."

I think that paragraph 16 would be improved by placing even more emphasis on the improbability that the United States could ever deliberately embark on a course leading to a preventive war. I would add the following to the paragraph: "Given the constitutional structure of the United States Government and the diversity of public opinion on issues of peace and war, it is almost impossible to conceive of a situation arising in which the Congress of the United States could be persuaded that a preventive war was necessary or desirable. This, incidentally, weakens the hand of the United States Government in the international poker game. However, the weakness may not be entirely realized by Soviet leaders who are so used to thinking in terms of their own system of arbitrary decisions and are so convinced of the ruthless imperialism of monopoly capitalism that they assume the Government in Washington to have greater ability to take the country into war than it actually has."

At the end of paragraph 17 I should like to see the following sentence added: "The fundamental difference between the United States and the Soviet Governments is that if the latter became convinced of the desirability of launching a preventive war, it would encounter far fewer domestic political difficulties in choosing the time and the occasion than would the United States Government."

If paragraph 16 were amended along the lines suggested above, the conclusion in paragraph 29(a) would have to be qualified. This could be done by adding "and that it is also virtually impossible to conceive of the United States precipitating a preventive war."

In para. 39 I should question the validity of the last sentence — "A war, if it comes, is more likely to arise out of panic in the United States, should there occur, as is possible, a steady increase over the next ten years of Soviet power in relation to that of the United States." I think this should be supported by argument or left out.

In paragraph 54 on the subject of helping Eastern European states which are included in the Soviet defence area, another two sentences might be inserted: "While it is not easy to take positive steps toward these objectives, we can at least avoid the temptation of treating those countries as outcasts because they are dependent on the Soviet Union. They will be driven into more complete dependence on the Soviet Union if, instead of displaying intelligent sympathy for their predicament, we lump them all together with the Soviet Union as black sheep."

In paragraph 67 I would alter the emphasis somewhat and re-arrange the material along the following lines: "But if Canada is being brought into greater dependence on the United States, the United States, for military and geographical reasons, is in one sense being brought into greater dependence on Canada. In peacetime, when the United States Government decides that certain measures of defence preparation in Canada are desirable, it can go about them in two ways; by insistence or by friendly discussion. Insistence might take the form of demanding that the Canadian Government do certain things or demanding that the United States be allowed to do them in Canada. Either course would arouse resentment and antagonism among Canadians which would prejudice the success of those measures. Therefore, it is in the interest of the United States to achieve its objectives by friendly discussion. This gives Canada a certain bargaining power in peacetime, but only on condition that Canada is prepared to assume a respectable share of the responsibility and expense, a share that may be high in terms of Canada's manpower and national income. Although in the event of war we shall have no freedom of action in any matter which the United States considers essential, and shall be all-out belligerents from the day the war starts, we will retain a limited freedom of action in peacetime . . .".

On thinking over paragraph 70, it seems to me that the question of the influence which can be brought to bear on Washington is worth developing, both as regards methods and subject matter. I would hope that the people in the Department and the Washington Embassy who are dealing with United States problems could expand this.

In conclusion, I find the last two paragraphs unduly optimistic, and I would prefer a concluding note of gloom as follows:

"73. A ray of hope is seen by some people in the possibility that the Soviet Union, tired by thirty years of relentless revolutionary drive, will give up the struggle and accept the fact that the West cannot be undermined. It is true that already a feeling of frustration is growing up, not only among the Soviet peoples, but also among the leaders; and it may be that before ten or twenty years have passed, the dynamic force to which the revolution gave vent will have petered out, especially if the messianic urge to carry the gospel abroad has been continually frustrated by the power of the West. The Soviet system may mellow or collapse. But, on the other hand, it may not.

"74. It is also argued that no curtain, even of iron, is impenetrable and that no two civilizations have, in the past, been able to live side by side without becoming more and more like each other. It is possible, therefore, that the longer the Soviet and Western worlds live side by side in peace, even if it is an uneasy peace, the more similar to each other they will become. The more similar they become, the more manageable will become the conflicts and crises which will arise between them, for the less will each have to fear from the triumph of the other's way of life, and the less will each want to impose its way of life on the other. But, at best, this can only be a pious hope, capable of realization over a very long period of years. Moreover, it can be argued with equal conviction that tension breeds tension and that after ten or fifteen years of containment the Soviet Union — patient and willing to wait — will be as restless as before and even more consumed with a sense of frustration.

"75. The two preceding paragraphs show that a measure of hope exists that in the long run the Soviet Union will come to terms with the West on a live and let live basis, but that, on the other hand, this hope may be doomed to disappointment. One of the great problems facing leaders of public opinion in the West in the coming years will be to convince the public of the need to maintain overwhelming strength, and there will be a natural temptation to hope for the best and to pin wistful faith on the mellowing or collapse of the Soviet system. It is always unrealistic and often dangerous to base policies on wishful thinking, and it must be recognized that the period of uneasy peace which requires adequate and expensive strength on the part of the West may extend for much longer than the ten or fifteen years mentioned in the first paragraph of these conclusions."

R.M. MACDONNELL

230. DEA/52-F (S)

Note du chef de la mission militaire auprès de la Commission alliée de contrôle en Allemagne

Memorandum by Head, Military Mission to the Allied Control Commission, Germany

Berlin, September 29, 1947

COMMENTS ON ESCOTT REID'S DRAFT PAPER "THE UNITED STATES AND SOVIET UNION, A STUDY OF THE POSSIBILITY OF WAR AND SOME OF THE IMPLICATIONS FOR CANADIAN POLICY"

PART ONE

THE SOURCE OF CONFLICT

1. Title

What about making this title read: The possible source of conflict? While direct opposition there certainly is, war is by no means certain.

2. Para 1

(a) The paper repeatedly refers to the defence area of both the Soviet and Western systems. So far as the Russians are concerned, this is often referred to as the former 'cordon sanitaire' in reverse. The word defence connotes the idea of resistance to physical force which may or may not be intended. Later on, the paper speaks of the penetration of ideas. It may just be that a phrase such as 'security area' or 'belt' might be more apposite.

(b) The principle comment that I should like to make with regard to the thought expressed in this paragraph is that possibly undue emphasis has been given to the desire of members of the Soviet governing class to retain their own personal powers and privileges and to their belief that the Soviet system is better than the Western system. It seems to me that to complete the picture, it would be desirable to bring in the thought that present Soviet foreign policy is simply a continuation of Russia's age old policy of expansion.

I well remember the effect made on my mind, upwards of ten years ago, by Jules Cambon's observation that "Foreign policy is not a matter of sentiment; its object is to shape events in conformity with the laws which govern natural destiny. These laws exist and we cannot alter them . . . National interests are determined by nature, geography and the character of a nation."

And as regards geography, I remember in September, 1938, Mussolini bellowing from somewhere in Northern Italy "geography is not an opinion — it is a fact."

And lastly, do I commend to you E.L. Woodward's aphorism that internal revolution does not in the long run materially influence external policy.

3. Para 2

(a) I wonder if armed attack and psychological warfare have been put in the right order. I wonder also if the Soviet leaders really fear armed attack. I agree that their propaganda, both to their own people and to the outer world, conveys this idea but I am inclined to doubt if in their own minds they really believe this to be a reasonable possibility. Rather, does it seem to me that, amongst other things, they want security or, in other words, ample room in which to cultivate their own garden in peace, and that the capitalist swine keep their snoots well out of it.

In this connection the thought occurs to me (though this might come in better towards the end of the paper) that the Russian desire for a 'cordon sanitaire' is as natural and as reasonable as the United States desire for bases as far away as Greenland and Dakar. In a study of this kind it seems to me very desirable to strike a fifty-fifty note. If we wish to keep the microbe of Communism from gaining a lodgement in our bodies politic, and we do, our philosophy of life induces us to do so by achieving, through good government, the well being of our people. Some of us, alas, also indulge in witch-hunting.

The Russian, on his part, is intent on achieving his great social experiment, the underlying idea of which is directly opposed to ours, and one of his means to this end is his iron curtain, the object of which is to prevent the slightest penetration of the free air of Western political philosophy. Granted the premises, one curtain is as reasonable as the other.

(b) I am inclined to quarrel with the use of the words 'psychological warfare' which picture to me, showers of pamphlets and a blare of propaganda over the radio. We do neither, and if we attempted the latter, it would do us no good because the Russian people would not, or do not, listen to our stuff. The Russian black-out aims are much more far reaching than ours, e.g. the purging of the Moscow dramas just a year ago for doing some Ibsen and too much Shaw.

4. Para 5

There is certainly a fundamental cleavage between the Soviet Union Police State and Western democratic thought but, as I have noted immediately above, there is more than a cleavage, there is an unalterable antagonism.

5. Para 8

In my search for objectivity, I cannot avoid the thought that Czechoslovakia's foreign policy position vis-a-vis Russia is really no different from Canada's position vis-a-vis the United States under the above-mentioned head.

6. Para 9

I entirely agree that Soviet policy aims at the creation of a closely integrated Eastern German state, with a Communist or near-Communist system of government, but I am inclined to doubt if it would be possible for me to concur in the view that such a state would have a very considerable attraction for Western Germans. Like the Poles, as I reported in my letter of 23rd June, 1947,† to Mr. Pearson re Count Zamoyski, I believe that so great is the hatred of Germans for the Russians, so strong is their determination never to accept the annexation of their Eastern territories, that they feel that ultimately a successful war is the only action which will restore to them that which they feel rightfully is theirs.

In this connection I remember that in May, 1936, the French workers voted Left and brought in Blum's Front Populaire government because they felt they could not elsewhere obtain redress and as they put it at the time "ont ne peut plus". I agree it might be that if Western Germany were to continue in hopeless chaos, and if there were no hope of betterment, the Communist party might gain many votes. I can picture a situation which might make it politically expedient for the Germans to join up with the Russians but as I have so often reported, the Western Occupying Powers would be too inept for words were they to allow this to occur.

7. Para 10

(a) Again as a man of peace, I would suggest that perhaps the word "opposition" is more apposite than "conflict" in line three of this paragraph.

(b) I am not convinced that it is idle to suppose that this source of conflict could for long be removed by an agreement between the two Powers on the boundaries of their respective 'defence' areas. I of course agree that, for at least a long time to come, Russia will strive to gain political adherents in the Western democracies, in order to establish therein, governments disposed to look favourably on Russian philosophy and aspirations. That is one thing, but there is also another, which is the Russian desire to bring to successful completion the great social experiment to which they set their hands thirty years ago. It has a long way yet to go and a very great deal has yet to be done before they will have succeeded in providing their people with what we should judge to be less than an acceptable minimum standard of living.

Attempts at political penetration we may always expect but granted we more or less accept the presently defined lines of demarcation and stand firmly on those areas on which we are on good ground, it seems to me quite possible that we might see a welcome détente. I wonder if our interference(?) in the affairs of Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and Roumania has not had the sole effect of goading the Russians to fury.

8. Para 11

I find myself both in agreement and disagreement with the views expressed in this paragraph and this I think is because the distinction between attack and the penetration of political ideas, is not sufficiently clearly drawn. I am led here to recall that in 1914 the Germans went in for physical sabotage in the United States (but not to the extent that is popularly believed). In the last war German tactics changed and they indulged in what I should be inclined to call moral sabotage e.g. Lindbergh, the Bund et al. The Russians wish to capitalize to the last ounce the favourable position in which they found themselves at the close of hostilities. He has therefore kept up the pressure but not the pressure of arms. The more governments favourable to the Soviet system between Russia and the United States the more effective is his security belt and the more he will feel able to dig his cabbages in peace. I think his "defence area" is a geographical concept i.e. as much geography as possible.

9. Para 14

I think that to round off the thought contained in this paragraph, it would be helpful to invite the reader's attention to the fact that in nearly all Western countries the Communists have gained little or no success in the general elections held over the last year and more. It seems too, the Communist party in France has lost ground during the past summer. If the Marshall proposal meets with success, the Communists will lose still more ground. They of course will not give up trying.

10. Para 19

I wonder if (a) an extension of power over the minds of men in the Western world (b) an extension of political power over adjoining territory and (c) an extension of economic power, is not a better order. The thought contained in this paragraph seems a bit at variance with the thought contained in the preceding paragraph 17. I suggest that the contingency referred to in paragraph 17 is somewhat remote.

11. Para 26

The view that the sympathies of the peoples of Western Europe would undoubtedly be divided in the event of a Soviet-American war, seems to be somewhat emphatically stated.

12. Para 27

While I like forthright statements of opinion, one such as the remark that a dissident minority in a Soviet-American war would not for the most part be pacifists; they would be saboteurs and even rebels, I find a little hard to take. A Soviet-American war would mean, I imagine, a Western advance toward Russia. Now, a miner in the Borinage district of Belgium may vote Communist, but I am inclined to doubt if he would relish the thought of Russian armies entering Belgium.

13. Para 56

I agree that a gradual mellowing of the Soviet system is a rather remote possibility.

14. Para 67

Rather than to say it would still be open to us to oppose the United States in certain issues in United States-Soviet relations, I think it would be truer to say that it would still be open to us to endeavour to restrain the United States. If I know anything of that country, it is that when they rightly, or wrongly, feel that their security is threatened or that their interests may suffer, they brook no opposition.

15. Para 68

I think that if the United States Government ever feels obliged to go to war with Russia, that the number of dissidents amongst its people would be insignificant. Take a look at United States public opinion today with regard to Russia. Judging from here, Mr. Marshall has all the public support that any member of the Government could desire.

16. Para 69

(a) I think that the fact that United States find it more difficult than other countries to follow a consistent policy with regard to Europe, derives more from its remoteness from Europe, than from its size or its constitutional structure.

(b) The last sentence of this paragraph reminds me of a remark once made to me by Admiral Johnson, USN, sometime member of the PJBD. During the course of a rather heated discussion he was having with some of his United States colleagues, the Admiral, who abounded in good horse-sense, quietly observed to me that whereas it was inexcusable in one's course through life to try to kid others, it was far worse ever to kid one's self.

17. Para 72

I do not think this paper can too greatly stress the necessity of pursuing a firm, patient and fair-minded policy towards the Soviet Union. There may be some "inside ball" going on that I cannot perceive but I cannot avoid the conclusion that United States, and to some extent British, monkeying in Polish, Bulgarian, etc. affairs, has had the effect of unnecessarily goading the Russians.

18. Para 73

The Soviet system may just possibly collapse or weaken in our time but I am not optimistic enough to allow myself to believe that it might mellow.

19. Para 74

(a) I emphatically disagree with the dictum that no curtain even of iron, is impenetrable. Come and live behind one for a couple of years and you will agree.

(b) I am afraid that I must record the thought that the peroration with which this paper ends, smacks of sentimentality. Russia has lived a long time alongside Western Europe and has always differed from it. Even if the Soviet system collapsed, Russia would still remain. Rather do I think it more reasonable to hope that the two groups of people on opposite sides of the iron curtain can be brought to the belief that they can each cultivate its garden in peace and that it is not necessary for the one to feel an irresistible urge to put a spade in that of the other.

20. Conclusion

In May of this year some earnest E.A.[13] officer went to great pains to hold a post mortem on a dead duck i.e. the Moscow Conference of the previous March and April. As the author has said, it is to some extent a scissors and paste job, yet it aims to elaborate a line of policy for the next ten or twenty years.

I suggest, in consequence, that it be roundly discussed in old room 123 and elsewhere and that then the author write it out all over again without consulting a note! Only in that way will it achieve the sparkle of conviction.

M. P[OPE]

[13]External Affairs.

231. DEA/52-F (S)

Note du cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

STRICTEMENT SECRET Ottawa, le 7 octobre 1947

Je vous transmets sous ce pli copie d'un projet de mémoire qui a été préparé par M. Escott Reid concernant: "Les États-Unis et l'Union Soviétique". L'introduction explique l'objet du mémoire.

Des copies ont été transmises par M. Pearson et moi-même, avec une lettre personelle, aux personnes suivantes:

Représentants à l'étranger:	Fonctionnaires à Ottawa:
M. Robertson	M. Riddell
M. Wrong	M. Johnson
Général Vanier	M. Mayrand
M. Wilgress	M. Watkins
M. Doré	M. Smith
Général Pope	M. McKay
M. Dupuy	M. Hébert
M. Désy	M. Warren
M. Chipman	M. Menzies
M. Macdonnell	M. Cadieux
M. Ford	M. Hopkins
M. Norman	M. Rae
M. Holmes	M. Moran
M. Ritchie	M. MacDermot
M. Ignatieff	M. Starnes
	M. Crean
	M. Teakles
	M. Heeney

Nous leur avons demandé de bien vouloir nous faire parvenir leurs commentaires concernant ce mémoire, et nous espérons qu'éventuellement il nous sera possible de le publier comme mémoire du ministère.

232. DEA/52-F (S)

Le chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Moscow, October 10, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th September,† enclosing a study of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, prepared by Escott Reid. This is an excellent and inclusive survey. In accordance with your suggestion, I have prepared a number of revisions in the form of additional draft paragraphs and changes to existing ones, which I enclose herewith.[14] I hope you may find these of use.

There are, however, some fundamental qualifications I should like to make on the conclusions of the memorandum, which I offer for your consideration. Mr. Reid believes that the policy most likely to succeed is one of containment of Russia within her defence area, a policy which is in fact likely to avoid war in the near future, but which is in essence a defensive one. The U.S.S.R. might be contained physically within this area, but this does not mean that she would necessarily be on the defensive. On the contrary, her international war by means of the Communist Parties and a revived Comintern would continue unabated. It is generally agreed here that Russia will try to continue in the United Nations, to use it as a vast sounding-board for her ideas, and for causing international unrest, and in general will continue indefinitely her policy of a war of nerves to keep Europe psychologically on the defensive and unprepared for recovery.

At the present time the Soviet system does not seem to give any indication of either mellowing or collapsing. So far as one can see, Stalin is at the peak of his power, with no visible opposition from groups or rivals within the Party. People here with whom I have discussed Kennan's article in Foreign Affairs in general think that that is the weak point of his argument. Elbridge Durbrow, Counsellor of the United States Embassy, told me confidentially that he thought Kennan had developed this theory because he has an intensely logical mind, and the idea of the Soviet system mellowing on Stalin's death was the only ray of hope he saw, and the only possibility of building up a consistent argument. It may well be true, but I wonder if a foreign policy should be built up on this one hypothesis, based to a certain extent on wishful thinking. In any case this contingency is likely to be many years off and in the meantime we still have to deal with a resourceful and dynamic group with vast ambitions, a philosophy attractive to millions, and with allies and sympathisers everywhere in the world.

In this war of nerves, we may have many of the physical resources on our side, but it is a moot point if the Americans and ourselves are capable of withstanding successfully the impact of Soviet obstruction and propaganda over a long period of time, particularly if we are caught up in another depression. I can offer no alternative to all this, but I simply suggest this as one of the dangers before us.

Yours sincerely,

R.A.D. FORD

[14]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree with this letter. E. R[eid]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du chargé d'affaires en Union soviétique

Memorandum by Chargé d'Affaires in Soviet Union

TOP SECRET [Moscow, October 10, 1947]

PART ONE

Para. 1 — I think this is too simplified. I suggest the following alternative paragraph:

The Soviet authorities are anxious to maintain Communism within the Soviet Union, to increase its effectiveness by rapid industrialisation, and to protect it from economic and/or military attack by the capitalist countries. This involves as a minimum maintaining the existing system of satellite states surrounding the U.S.S.R., that is, of maintaining in these states governments subservient to Moscow, either through Communist dictatorships, as in Jugoslavia, in Communist-controlled governments, as in Czechoslovakia and Roumania, or by independent governments which are nevertheless irrevocably committed to closest co-operation with the U.S.S.R., as in Finland. Given the nature of power politics, and the basis of Communist thought, there will always be a desire to expand the defence area of the system in Europe, and to establish a comparable area in the Middle East and the Orient. This is due in part to the desire of the governing class in the Soviet Union to maintain its own personal powers and privileges, partly the result of the expansionist nature of Marxist ideas by which they are to a certain extent governed, partly as a result of a purely Russian imperialism which has existed off and on for several centuries.

Paras. 2, 3 and 4 — I would not alter these paragraphs, but would suggest the addition of the following paragraph:

4 (a) An important factor in assessing sources of conflict is the tendency to estimate falsely each other's position. The Russians undoubtedly are counting on an economic depression in the United States which will reverberate throughout the whole capitalist world. They fear that, to diminish the effect of the depression, and to divert the attention of its people from the attendant miseries which would endanger the American ruling classes, the latter will launch an attack on the U.S.S.R. and are, in fact, already preparing for this psychologically. The Americans, on the other hand, perhaps tend to underestimate the strength of their country, and the support which its leaders have from the people. Mutual underestimation may lead to overconfidence, as in the suggestion in many quarters in the United States that the whole question could be settled now by dropping a few atomic bombs on Russia. However, there is one optimistic factor. Both countries clearly believe that history is on their side and that they therefore have everything to gain and nothing to lose by waiting for time to work in their favour.

Para. 5 — No change

Para. 6 — Suggest addition of following sentence:

But there is also a deep-seated, almost mystical feeling in each nation of the rightness and justness of its own cause, the superiority of its system over all others, and the inevitability of (a) American democracy, or (b) Soviet Communism eventually spreading all over the globe. In Russia this is accompanied by a centuries-old imperialist history and a Messianic tradition.

Paras. 7-15 inclusive — No changes

PART TWO

Paras. 16-19 — No change

Para. 20 — Suggest addition of following sentence:

Given a not impossible combination of factors, war might easily be precipitated. For example, a strongly anti-Communist, isolationist administration in the United States, unable to distinguish between socialist friend and Communist foe, might stop aid to its foreign allies, and at the same time goad the Moscow leaders into war. On the other hand, even though the Soviet leaders are realists, there are circumstances under which they might be prepared to take the risk of war, such as the necessity of diverting their people's minds from the miseries of repeated Five Year Plans, particularly if a depression in the United States had weakened that country and its European allies.

PART THREE

Paras. 21-25 — Unchanged.

I suggest the addition of a paragraph 25(a), which might read as follows:

The Near East and all those areas in Africa and Asia which contain large Muslim populations are a potential field of exploitation by the Soviet Union which from the beginning of the Bolshevik Revolution has showed an acute awareness of the importance of the relations of the U.S.S.R. with these peoples. This has not yet been fully followed up by Moscow due to preoccupation with other areas, and a tendency to go slow in a region in which they are not experienced. But the sending of Muslim pilgrims to Mecca and the Near East, the skilful use of propaganda about the U.S.S.R. as the great Muslim power, a changed policy towards religion, and the use of Muslims as consuls and agents to Arab countries is indicative of a new policy full of great importance in drawing a picture of the balance of power.

Paras. 26-28 — Unchanged

PART FOUR

Paras. 29-39 — Unchanged

PART FIVE

Paras. 40-44 — Unchanged

Para. 45 — Suggest following addition to para. 45:

The United States will be forced to recognize that the "Truman doctrine" may have to be extended to such countries as Iran and Afghanistan, and that Washington cannot expect these countries to respond to its urging to resist Soviet pressure if it is not prepared to guarantee armed support in case of invasion. There is always the danger that American "idealism" confronted with the facts of political life in Greece, Turkey, Iran, and indeed in Italy and France, may be disgusted and discouraged with its inability to form these states into good copies of American democracy, and Washington give them up as bad jobs, thus playing straight into the hands of Moscow.

Paras. 46-47 — Unchanged

Para. 48 — Suggest addition of following sentence after word "discrimination":

Having a large Asiatic population which is relatively better off than that of neighbouring oriental and Near Eastern states, the Russians are in a position to influence directly and perhaps favourably large areas of the oriental world which would not understand American propaganda.

Paras. 49-52 — Unchanged

Para. 53 — Add following sentence:

The Soviet leaders count heavily on the support of fellow travellers, or even liberal sympathisers. They seem to over-estimate the strength of this support in the United Kingdom and the United States, but would likely in the event mentioned above, redouble their efforts to win the support and sympathy of these people.

Paras. 54-64 — Unchanged

PART SIX

Paras. 65-68 — Unchanged

Para. 67 — Suggest addition of following sentence:

But this policy must first be determined, and once determined should be adhered to regardless of (a) tactical changes in Soviet policy which might give the impression of a long-term change, or (b) those meteoric changes in United States policy to which that country is addicted.

Para. 70 — Suggest addition of following sentence:

But so long as we have relatively few people who are acquainted with Russia in an expert way, it will be difficult to exert influence on the State Department in the sphere of Soviet relations. We should at once, therefore, start training Canadian diplomats in the Russian language, history, psychology, Marxism, and so on. As soon as feasible we should increase the staff of the Embassy at Moscow to provide better facilities for training, and for more complete reporting, particularly in economic questions.

Para. 71 — No change

PART SEVEN

Paras. 72-74 — No change

233. DEA/52-F (S)

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, October 13, 1947

RE DRAFT "THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

I doubt whether a memorandum of this character should ever be published. The following are some comments about it:

1.- In order to realize that Paragraph 5 properly fits in between 4 and 6, one has to remind himself that there are certain implications which are obvious but which are not stated. Perhaps it would be clearer to make one sentence of the two first ones as follows:

"The Soviet Union is a Police State in which the individual liberties and democratic methods of government as these are understood in the West can hardly be said to exist, and there is inevitably a fundamental cleavage between such a State and the Western democracies."

Then there might be added at the end of the paragraph:

. . . "On the other hand, it is obvious that the Soviet system would be intolerable to people who have known and enjoyed the freedoms secured to the individuals by our systems of government."

2.- I would add to Paragraph 20 some such words as these:

"However, at the present time, this is regarded as quite improbable."

3.- I would strike out the five last lines of Paragraph 39.

4.- The four last lines of Paragraph 46 give the impression that the measure of unity indispensable to avoid the disasters of depression is not apt to be achieved. I would suggest replacing the words "will be difficult" by the words "will not be easy."

5.- I would combine the two first sentences of Paragraph 53 to read as follows:

"A danger in the maintenance of a preponderant Western balance of power is that an influential number of people, etc. . . ."

I do not think there is a danger of a preponderant balance of power being used unfairly, but if it exists, there may be the danger of Soviet propaganda about it being accepted.

The last part of that paragraph might also be modified somewhat, because there does not seem to be much danger, at present, of sympathy for the Soviet Union gaining support in the United States.

6.- The same remarks would apply to Paragraph 55.

7.- I would not care to state, as a matter of policy, as is done in Paragraph 61, that the specialized agencies should be transformed into international federal institutions.

8.- Paragraph 63 seems to be rather ambiguous. I suppose what is intended to convey is that the Western nations can, without making over the charter of the United Nations in such a way as would drive the Russians out, make regional arrangements or set up specialized agencies for themselves.

9.- I do not like the words "able to prevent war" in Paragraph 72. Would it not be as well to say "able to avert any danger of war"?

10.- Paragraph 74 appears to me to hold the balance too evenly between our system and that of the Soviets. It seems to me that it is the civilization which most nearly conforms with the true nature of man that is bound to affect the other.

Now we have all reaffirmed our faith in fundamental human rights and in the dignity and worth of the human person, and I would expect that evolution in systems of government would be towards the systems which tend to implement that faith rather than away from them. I think the concluding paragraph of this paper should, in some way, indicate that trend as a hope for the future.

L.S. ST. L[AURENT]

234. DEA/52-F (S)

Note de M. Cadieux, du cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, pour J.M. Teakles, du cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from M. Cadieux, Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to J.M. Teakles, Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], October 17, 1947

I find myself in disagreement with Mr. Reid's thesis outlined in the first part of his memorandum, that we now have the spectacle of two expanding powers, the Soviet Union and the United States which are scaring each other into further expansions of their defence areas and are thus brought into conflict. My own view is that essentially, the U.S.S.R. alone is an expanding power and that such attempts as have been made by the United States to extend its defence areas have been warranted by the aggressive policies of the U.S.S.R.

2. I have revised considerably Part 1 of the memorandum, The Source of Conflict, to bring it into line with this principle. I would, therefore, suppress the word "similarly" at the beginning of paragraph 3 and add at the end of this paragraph: "The United States considers that in the areas where the Soviet writ runs, fundamental human, political and often national values have been sacrificed and that the United States has some responsibility in allowing this state of affairs to continue outside of Soviet borders."

Paragraph 4 is changed substantially. It should, I suggest, read as follows: "The Soviet Union desires to expand its defence area because it believes that the United States constitutes a menace to its way of life. This expansion of the Soviet defence areas has, however, been effected through military occupation, aggressive political and economic policies and ruthless intervention into the internal affairs of other countries in a manner which is incompatible with American concepts and methods. This aggressive attitude on the part of the U.S.S.R. has provoked the United States into a progressively stiffer defensive attitude."

Paragraph 5 is unchanged, but between paragraphs 5 and 6 I would insert a paragraph referring to the influence on Soviet policy of the Stalinist theories on class warfare and world domination of the proletariat through the intervention of the Soviet State and armed forces.

Paragraph 6 is amended as follows: The Soviet Union desires to expand its defence areas because it fears the threat to its security which results from the existence of a block of powers headed by the United States, which is not prepared to tolerate indefinitely Soviet expansion and interference with national independence and personal freedom in countries outside Soviet borders.

I would suppress paragraph 7 and state at the beginning of paragraph 8: "It is obvious indeed that the Soviet Union is an expanding power," and then continue with the rest of paragraph 8.

Paragraph 9 is unchanged.

Paragraph 10 would be amended as follows: "The desire on the part of the Soviet Union to expand its defence areas and to extend its control brings it into conflict with the United States, which is concerned about its own security and that of other nations now outside Soviet Control, the independence of which is important to the security of and prosperity of the United States. This conflict is apparent in the borderlands between the present defence areas of these two countries from Korea to Finland. It is idle to suppose that this source of conflict could for long be removed by an agreement between the two powers on the boundaries of their respective defence areas. Such an agreement might stabilize the situation for a few years, but by its very nature, the desire on the part of the Soviet Union to extend its defence areas is an illimitable process. The U.S.S.R. appetite for security grows with eating."

No change in the rest of Section 1.

No change in Part 2.

3. Part 3, some changes are necessary to bring the various paragraphs in this section in line with the idea that the U.S.S.R. is the aggressor, but will not go to war unless it reaches certain conclusions concerning the balance of power.

Thus, paragraph 21 should be along these lines: "The stress in this analysis so far has been on the concept of what the Soviet leaders and people consider at any time to be the balance of power between the Soviet Union and the United States. This concept requires further examination, since it is crucial to the argument."

At the end of paragraph 22, "the actual balance in the minds of the governing classes in the Soviet Union."

23, beginning of paragraph: "The attempt of the governing classes in the Soviet Union to assess the balance is an extremely difficult task," etc. End of paragraph

23: "In a sense peace may depend on how well the Soviet leaders are informed about the various factors which may effect the balance of power."

4. Part 4 should be changed considerably, starting with paragraph 33. I would suggest the following alternative text: "This conclusion that it is improbable that the Soviet Union would within the next decade deliberately precipitate a war with the United States may be affected by a number of developments. For instance, the situation may change radically under the following circumstances:

(a) If the Soviet Union were able to develop weapons of mass destruction of such a nature and in such quantity as radically to alter in this field the existing balance of forces. From the information now at our disposal, this contingency seems, however, remote. During the next ten years the United States ought to be able to maintain its present scientific and technological advantage over the Soviet Union in ability to use weapons of mass destruction effectively against the other country. Our sources of information, however, on developments in the U.S.S.R. are limited and it is difficult to know what progress, if any, the Soviet Union have made in the development of weapons of mass destruction.

(b) Another development which might affect the balance of forces would be a profound economic depression in the United States and in other countries of the western hemisphere. Such a depression, if the U.S.S.R., as seems probable, was relatively unaffected, would tend to pull the countries on the border of the Soviet defence area inside that area. National unity in the other western countries and most important, in the United States, would be adversely affected. A profound economic depression in the western world, would alter the balance of forces to the advantage of the U.S.S.R., but it is unlikely that it would alter it to such an extent as to lead the governing classes of the Soviet Union to believe that it would be in their interest to precipitate a war with the United States. It is much more likely that they would be content to take advantage of the opportunity to extend their defence area. This, however, might create such alarm in the United States that the situation envisaged in paragraph 29(a) would arise. The United States would launch a preventive war.

(c) Paragraph 36 should be quoted here.

(d) Paragraph 37 should be quoted here, together with paragraph 38 with the addition: "The U.S.S.R., in endeavouring to extend its defence areas, might create incidents which would provoke the United States and which might well become uncontrollable and thus lead to war. The Soviet Government will probably try not to stumble into a war, but their aggressive policies may create a situation which will get beyond their control."

Paragraph 39 is revised.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that during the next ten years the possibility of the Soviet Union deliberately precipitating a war with the United States or blundering into such a war cannot be overlooked. It is also possible that war could arise out of panic in the United States should there occur, as is possible, a steady increase over the next ten years of Soviet power in relation to that of the United States.

5. Part 5, no change.

6. Part 6, no change as regards implications for Canadian policy vis a vis the United States.

A number of suggestions are made as regards our policy towards the U.S.S.R. It would be difficult for us to exert direct influence, but it may be all important from the point of view of the safeguard of our vital interests to realize the implications of the conclusion reached in Part 1, e.g. that the U.S.S.R. is pursuing expansionist and aggressive policies which may lead to war.

It will not do, for instance, to consider any longer the representatives of the Soviet or of Soviet dominated states as the usual kind of diplomatic agents. They are spies, agitators, saboteurs, anything but traditional diplomats, and they will make as much trouble for us as we will allow them to do. In this respect, I think that the time has come when they should be given exactly the same treatment and facilities as our own representatives receive in the areas under Soviet control. No less but no more.

If it be admitted that the Soviets are bent on expansion by any means, it follows that international relations will be considered by them from the point of view of how they can facilitate or delay their plans for domination. I venture to suggest that in this regard also, our relations with the Soviet in international matters should be envisaged from this point of view and dealt with accordingly. For instance, if through the repatriation of their nationals Yugoslavia is attempting to prove that Canada is a reactionary country and that the enlightened Yugoslavs who are free not to do so prefer to return to Yugoslavia, we should also envisage the problem from a propaganda point of view and attempt to defeat this Yugoslav scheme. No other approach will have the effect of countering the Soviet techniques. In other words, we must be prepared to meet aggression of any kind by a similar type of attack. Take the case of Mayor Lewis'[15] visit to Moscow. The U.S.S.R. obviously intends to use him for propaganda. The thing to do would be to give the necessary information to Mayor Lewis (this could have been done before his trip) and then make sure that the Soviet scheme backfires completely. A few experiences of this kind would soon teach the Soviet that we know some of the ugly holds too and that we can play the game according to their rules.

We should also be on the lookout for possible allies against the U.S.S.R. both as an insurance in case of trouble and as a warning to keep the Soviet in check. For instance, we should examine carefully what could be done with the various Ukrainian groups in the Allied countries. They could be used to persuade the Soviet that if they must intervene in our internal affairs, we are not entirely unable to reciprocate. While it is true that there is no racial discrimination within the areas under Soviet control, certain national aspirations are being denied and these sentiments could eventually be exploited against the Soviet Union with telling effect. If merely for protection purposes, we should try to pick up as many tricks as possible.

The same applies to moral and spiritual forces. It seems to me that religious freedom is a farce in the Soviet Union and that the religious sentiment that is known to exist in the masses under Soviet control should be appealed to. It is inexcusable also that we should let the Soviet pose as a protector of the Orthodox and the Moslem religious groups.

[15]Stanley Lewis, maire d'Ottawa.
Stanley Lewis, Mayor of Ottawa.

In summary, we must be in a position to counter any act of aggression by the U.S.S.R. in any field by an equivalent force in the same field or a similar one.

If we accept the principle that the U.S.S.R. is attacking us, we should consider expanding our intelligence facilities to learn more and more about the U.S.S.R. so as to be in a position to better understand its policies and occasionally to take advantage of its weaknesses by applying pressure at the right time and in the right manner to discourage its aggressive tactics.

The U.S.S.R. is continually appealing to public opinion in democratic countries over the heads of their government. It is important that leaders in Canada, those who can influence public opinion, be kept informed as fully as possible of Soviet activities and schemes so that they may perform their function. The trouble now is that a too small number of experts in each country knows what sort of a game the Soviets are really playing. In domestic policy, once it is realized that we are under attack politically, psychologically and otherwise on the part of one of the two most powerful blocs of states in the world, the need for certain measures of defence and counter-attack becomes evident. It seems to me that some sort of political and psychological defence committee with appropriate means of action is required.

7. As regards the Commonwealth, the problem is to determine how best the Commonwealth can resist the aggressive policies of the U.S.S.R., contribute to a favourable balance of power against the U.S.S.R. and to victory in case of war. The objectives of Canadian policy are so obvious as not to require elaboration. The first objective is, of course, the recovery of the United Kingdom to enable her to resume her traditional role in Europe and to enable her to discharge her responsibilities. We have also an interest in the eventual transition of the main Crown colonies to Dominion status and in the successful organization of international trade on such a basis and to such a degree of effectiveness that the old as well as the new dominions have a stake in opposing a Soviet dominated world.

8. To put it into a nutshell, the U.S.S.R. is waging war against us in all but a military sense. Our civilian defences and our diplomatic methods are devised to deal with normal relations with potentially hostile states, but not with this unorthodox type of aggression. We should therefore systematically undertake a revision of our internal and external "peacetime" resistance apparatus to meet these new circumstances.

Conclusion

9. Part 7, Paragraph 72. I would suggest the addition of the word "probable" after the words "western powers should be able."

10. Paragraph 73, no change.

11. Paragraph 74. It is moreover true that no curtain, even of iron, is impenetrable. No two civilized countries have in the past been able to live side by side without exerting some influence on each other. The longer, therefore, that the Soviet and western world live side by side in peace, even if it is an uneasy peace, full of conflicts and crises, the more probable it is that war will be averted. The western world may become progressively better able to withstand Soviet civilian attacks and thus discourage continuation of present Soviet aggressive policies. Then too, the Soviet leaders may also eventually be convinced that while western states cannot be weakened in peace and defeated in war, they have no hostile designs towards the Soviet Union. They may then relax their grip on the people under their control and gradually evolve policies that are more moderate, more human, more similar to our own. It is therefore possible to foresee that the Soviet states will come eventually closer to our own way of life. Their fears and motives of aggression will decrease accordingly and normal diplomatic intercourse between the Soviet states and the western world may again become possible. This will require a long time, and considerable restraint and vigilance on the part of the western states, but it seems to be the only chance that we can have to avert war.

M. CADIEUX

235. DEA/52-F (S)

Note de la Direction économique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État par intérim aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Economic Division
to Acting Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], November 4, 1947

I refer to your memorandum of October 3, 1947† to which was attached a draft study relating to the United States-Soviet relations. I have read this excellent paper prepared by Mr. Escott Reid with great interest, and I have but one comment to offer.

The Soviet [Union], after succeeding in liquidating all effective political opposition in most of the satellite countries, must certainly have serious misgivings about the influence that the organized churches continue to exercise behind their lines. To them this inimical influence must appear as a constant threat, particularly as it has so far successfully resisted every effort to eradicate it.

The churches are probably capable of doing for us in Poland and Hungary (if they are not already doing it) the sort of work that the "National" Communist parties of France and Italy are doing for the Soviet.[16] Don't you think that an appreciation of the value of the organized churches (particularly the Roman Catholic Church) as allies of the Western Powers belongs in your paper?

After studying the question, you may be led to the conclusion, for instance, that to have indirectly supported the Roman Catholic Church in Poland with post-UNRRA relief funds (as unsuccessfully proposed by Mr. St. Laurent) would have been a wise move, particularly if taken after consultation with the United Kingdom and United States Governments. Again, you may also be led to suggest that it would be to our advantage to keep in touch with the Vatican regarding the organization of this "resistance" and that our policy with respect to our representation to the Holy See needs to be reconsidered.

[16]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree. E. R[eid]

I am returning herewith copy No. 36 of the study under reference.

C.P. HÉBERT

236. DEA/52-F (S)

Note du conseiller de l'ambassade en France

Memorandum by Counsellor, Embassy in France

Paris, November 6, 1947

Paragraph 1—Comment:

Russian expansion is attributed too exclusively to the character of the Soviet regime and insufficient account is taken of its historical origin.

Add Paragraph 1 (a)

Russia is an expanding power and might continue to be so whatever regime were in charge of her destinies. She is conscious of her immense and still only partially developed potentialities, human and material. Her peoples have deeply engrained in their souls a belief in the mission of Russia and a misty and mystical concept of Russia's "message" to the world. These national characteristics existed long before the Communist regime and will probably outlive it. Russian expansionist tendencies also manifested themselves under the Czars and even then took many of the same forms which we recognize today. The pressure of the Slav masses on the eastern frontiers of Europe which has been going on for centuries now takes the form of a fighting force which makes converts either by conviction or at the point of the sword.

Paragraph 4—Comment:

This paragraph might be omitted. The point is sufficiently made in the preceding and following paragraphs.

Paragraph 5

Add after the last sentence of the present Paragraph 5 "Conversely there may be a tendency, when things are going badly in capitalist countries, to start a "red scare" and to attribute all sorts of inconvenient and unpleasant economic and social phenomena to Communist influence."

Paragraph 8

The last sentence should read: "In Czechoslovakia and Austria Soviet influence is strong but not as yet exclusive."

Paragraph 9

Insert after the second sentence the following: "The control of the Anglo-Saxon powers over the industrial areas of western Germany represents from the Soviet point of view the outpost of Anglo-American power in the heart of Europe. The Soviet Government will never be at ease until this potential arsenal of Europe is out of American control and in the hands of authorities subordinate to Soviet interests. With this aim in view they will play upon the natural fears of Germany's neighbours and former victims and will picture United States policy as aimed at the early recreation of German industrial and hence military power."

Paragraph 16—Comment:

The memorandum as it reads at present is rather thrown out of balance by its concentration on Soviet policies, motives and intentions. A fuller appreciation is needed of the factors which mould United States foreign policy, of the conceptions which govern United States strategy and of probable economic developments in the United States (e.g., the likelihood of a serious depression in the United States and its effects on the international situation). No doubt the Canadian Ambassador in Washington has already been consulted in order to obtain an appreciation of the role of the United States in Soviet-American relations. It is the more important to include an analysis of United States policy because (as pointed out in this memorandum) the Canadian Government may be able to exercise some influence on its development whereas we are hardly in a position to affect the decisions of the Kremlin.

Paragraph 16 (a)

The conclusion reached in Paragraph 16 of this memorandum therefore is that it is highly unlikely that the United States would precipitate a preventative war unless it was believed that if the United States did not make war while they were in the stronger position they might find themselves at the mercy of the Soviet Union.

Again, in Paragraph 19, after concluding that during the next ten years the possibility of the Soviet Union precipitating a war with the United States or blundering into such a war is remote, it is stated "A war, if it comes, is more likely to arise out of panic in the United States, should there occur, as is possible, a steady increase over the next ten years of Soviet power in relation to that of the United States."

This conclusion raises a number of questions which require further analysis. The most obvious and undoubtedly the most difficult to answer is whether, in fact, the power of the Soviet Union is likely to increase (apart from the population factor) in relation to that of the United States within the next ten years. But, irrespective of whether this theory of the inevitable increase of Soviet power relative to that of the United States is well founded or not, if it is deeply engrained in American thinking, it may have a decisive influence on United States policy. In order to estimate the possibility of the United States moving in the direction of war further appreciation of the following (among other) questions is required: (a) How far, if at all, does there exist in politically or militarily influential circles in Washington a group who are thinking seriously in terms of a preventative war? Is there a powerful and responsible body of opinion which is convinced that war is inevitable and that preparations for it should be put in hand lest the United States find itself in a relatively weaker position later on? If a body of opinion with such a clearly defined objective does not yet exist in the United States, are there signs that it may be in process of formation?

(b) Paragraph 39 of this memorandum refers to the possibility of panic in the United States. This element in the situation may be considered separately from the kind of realistic appraisal by a group of planners, military or political, which has just been mentioned, although the two might develop simultaneously. There might be a violent nerve-storm in American public opinion compounded not only of "panic" at growing Soviet strength but of resentment and anger aroused by the treacheries and brutalities of Soviet power and of despair of finding any way out of the stalemate in international relations by any method short of war. How far does this mood already exist in the United States? Is it growing, and what are the factors that may be expected to offset it?

(c) What effect would severe economic depression in the United States have upon Soviet-United States relations? It is, of course, the Communist theme that fear of a depression will drive the United States to make war. Putting this aside the possibility remains that the development of adverse economic conditions and unemployment in the United States, or the fear of these developments, may affect the issue of war and peace between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Discussion of the likelihood of a preventative war waged by the United States is apt to seem unreal to those who know the United States and the profoundly peace-loving character of the American people. Nor is it easy to imagine the planning of a war under the United States constitution and in the full glare of publicity which plays upon all the processes of American Government. Indeed the vast and secret preparations, the sudden unleashing of surprise attack seem totally incompatible with American realities as we have learned to know them in the past. If the preparation of a preventative war is thought of in terms applicable to a European dictatorship, the only conclusion must be that it would be an impossibility in the United States. Hence, the question is only worth raising if it is to be considered in the context of American thought and action. It is highly improbable that in the United States the process would take the form of a conscious and deliberate preparation for waging an offensive war. But this does not exclude the possibility that the United States Government might come to the decision that as war was inevitable there was nothing to be gained and much to be lost from postponing it and might base its policy on this decision. Such a development would indeed only be possible if the decisive mass of public opinion was moving in the same direction. It would result from the interplay of Government policy and aroused national feeling. Once this stage had been reached, preparations for war, both public and secret, could be put in hand. But the sole condition on which this whole developing process could come about would be the conviction of the American Government and people that they were acting in self-defense. This essential psychological condition could be provided by the continuing aggressive behaviour of the Soviet Union. War could be precipitated by some particularly gross manifestation of Soviet aggressiveness which would be regarded in the United States as the "sticking point" beyond which it was impossible to tolerate Soviet pressure. At this stage, if United States offensive-defensive preparations were far enough advanced, the United States might launch the first blow in the belief that if they did not do so the Soviet Union would have the advantage of a surprise offensive.

Paragraph 29 (a)

Whether or not there is in fact any likelihood that the United States would start a preventative war, there is no doubt that the Soviet Union through all its propaganda agencies is busily accusing the United States of planning aggression. They are likely to have a good deal of success in convincing the peoples of Russia and of the Soviet satellite states as well as a substantial minority of the people of Western Europe. A generation of Europeans reared in fear and violence and accustomed by the events of recent years to the merciless application of power politics will not find it difficult to believe that the United States is following a policy which appears to be in accordance with her own interests, i.e., taking advantage of her rival's temporary weakness to knock her out of the field.

It is always difficult to know how far the rulers in the Kremlin are convinced by their own propaganda but it would not be altogether surprising to find that they genuinely believe in the probability of American aggression. If the Soviet Government themselves considered war inevitable and found that they were in a stronger position for war-making purposes now than they would be in ten years' time, it is unlikely that they would refrain from attacking in the most favourable conditions for victory. They may, therefore, be judging the United States by their own standards of action. Their conviction that the United States was able and ready to take the offensive might bring about the situation envisaged in Paragraph 20 of this memorandum in which the Soviet Government themselves precipitated a war even though they did not have a preponderance of force. It may be taken for granted that the Soviet Government will seek to avoid such a dilemma at all costs short of abandoning power or giving up the militant leadership of world communism. It is also true that in the past they have been willing to make tactical retreats in the face of superior force, but, if in the long run, they are to be met with "unalterable counterforce" and if in the short run they come to believe that the United States is preparing for war, the Soviet Government may think that it would be dangerous to retreat from any position which would be important in the coming struggle. On the contrary, while pressing forward with their own war preparations, they may seek to secure even at the risk of war as many advanced positions as possible. Whether one believes that the Soviet Union will prove capable of reacting to "containment" by the United States without provoking a war depends on one's estimate of the skill and realism of Soviet foreign policy. The consideration set forth in Paragraphs 16 to 19 of this memorandum would lead one to believe that the Soviet Union may play a cautious waiting-game and thus avoid war in the near future at any rate. On the other hand, no one who has followed the course of Soviet diplomacy since the end of the war can feel reassured about the quality of Soviet statesmanship. The Soviet Government have again and again behaved as though they were the victims of compulsive fears and suspicions rather than cooly rational judges of their own interests. They have again and again created the very dangers which they sought to avoid. In 1945 they had a unique opportunity to establish stable relations with the Western powers and thus to ensure for themselves a long period of security. This opportunity they are in the process of throwing away. They are also in danger of creating against themselves an overwhelmingly powerful alliance of Western nations many of whom will have been forced into such an alliance by the intransigence of Soviet diplomacy. Similarly, within the countries of Western Europe they are forcing the moderate political parties, and particularly the Socialist parties, into the anti-Communist camp and are thus in danger of creating Right-Wing dictatorships in the countries concerned. The Soviet rulers trapped in the narrow confines of their Marxist-Leninist analysis seem obsessed with the inevitability of war with the capitalist world and unable to make the statesman-like effort of adaptation which might have secured cooperation with the West on terms highly advantageous to themselves. With this record of blunders behind them, who can confidently prophecy that the Soviet Government will not by some crude piece of "scratch and grab" give the signal to the United States that the moment has come beyond which it would be dangerous to hold their hand.

These considerations modify to some extent the conclusions in Part Four of this memorandum "The Possibility of War". This section of the memorandum may somewhat underestimate the part which fear, bluff and ignorance play in starting wars. As is pointed out in Paragraph 22 "the reality with which we are concerned, therefore, is not the actual balance of power but the picture of that actual balance in the minds of the members of the governing classes of the world." Mr. Churchill said that the last war should be known as "the unnecessary war". In the same sense a war between the United States and the Soviet Union is thoroughly unnecessary and could not come about if the Soviet Union based its policies on genuinely enlightened self-interest. The danger lies in the fact that they do not appear to be doing so. The conclusion to be drawn from Paragraphs 16 (a) and 20 (a) appears to be that the principal danger of war within the next ten years would arise as a result of —

(a) the growth in the United States of the idea that Soviet pressure made war inevitable and that the United States should be prepared to wage it at their own time rather than at a later date which might suit the Soviet Union better;

(b) The simultaneous growth in the Soviet Union of the belief that the United States intended to make war and hence the accentuation of aggressive policies aimed at securing advanced positions in preparation for the coming struggle.

These two developments in acting on each other could produce the clash.

Paragraph 27 (a)

The possibility that there would be important pro-Soviet minorities in some Western countries in the event of a war between the Soviet Union and the United States is undoubtedly a serious one. It now seems probable that before any such war came about governments would have been established in the more important Western states which were committed in advance either to one side or another in the struggle. In the countries of Continental Europe, at any rate, it is likely that in the event of war either Communist governments will be in control or governments avowedly committed to anti-Communism at home and to the American connection abroad. The middle political parties in these countries which cling to a precarious neutrality between the two "blocs" are likely to be eliminated from power as the crisis in international relations develop. But, the coming into power of Communist or extreme anti-Communist parties implies the forcible suppression of their opponents. This is of course already obvious in the Communist-controlled countries. It is to be feared that the Anti-Communist parties which may come to power in certain Western countries, e.g., France, may find themselves obliged to resort to force to suppress their Communist opponents. Once war seemed inevitable the ruthless suppression of the Communists and their sympathizers would appear as a measure of national security. Where Communist parties have strong support such a policy would lead to bitter and deep divisions in the nation. The Communist parties long trained in sabotage and with the experience of fighting against the German occupation forces would no doubt go underground and would adopt violent methods. Reprisals would be exacted by the government which might flare into civil war if the vigilance of the government was relaxed or the tide of war appeared to be turning in favour of the Soviet Union.

Apart from the Communist minorities who would be actively sympathetic to the Soviet cause, there will be many in Europe who are principally concerned with their own safety and that of their families and with salvaging what they can out of the disaster. There is widespread fear that if a war should break out between the Western world and the Soviet Union the Soviet armies would over-run the entire European Continent in a short space of time. The peoples of Western Europe have had painfully recent experience of this kind and they have no reason to suppose that the treatment which will be meted out by the Soviet armies of occupation and their local collaborators to those who had opposed them would be any more humane than that which was experienced at the hands of the Germans. Many Western Europeans believe that in the long run the United States would be victorious in a war against the Soviet Union. They would thus be placed before the agonizing choice of short run or long run salvation. In all these circumstances it is difficult to forecast how reliable would be the support of the countries of Western Europe in a war against the Soviet Union. It might be argued that these factors would to some extent be balanced by the existence of groups of Western sympathizers in countries within the Soviet zone of influence, but it seems probable that firm action will have been taken to reduce such groups to impotence long before a war begins. In any event, not the least horrible aspect of a war with the Soviet Union would be that it might entail civil strife not only within some of the countries of Western Europe but elsewhere in the world.

Paragraph 42 (a)

American economic aid to Europe, however, should not appear to be conditional on terms which can be represented as threatening the independence of the countries involved. Otherwise, it may defeat its own political purpose by arousing national resentment in countries which having so recently escaped from foreign domination are peculiarly sensitive where their independence is concerned. This situation raises delicate and difficult problems for the United States Government. For example, is it wise and expedient for the United States to demand as a condition of material aid that no Communists shall participate in the government of the country aided; or that further nationalization of industries shall not be proceeded with for the time being in the countries to which the United States extends credits; or that compensation for United States aid should be forthcoming in the form of commercial concessions or bases in colonial territory? The answers to these questions must of necessity differ in the varying circumstances of the countries receiving aid and will also be influenced by the state of American public opinion and the extent of the pressure of private interests in any given case. But, in principle, American economic aid to European countries will achieve its maximum political effectiveness if it involves the minimum of direct interference with the independence of the countries concerned and if it is combined with an effective programme of self-help in the borrowing countries and with mutual self-help among the countries of Western Europe. It is for this reason that the "Marshall Plan", in spite of all the difficulties which it may encounter, offers the only sound basis for approaching the problem of economic support for the nations of Western Europe.

Paragraph 43 (a)

While it may be the duty of the Western powers, and particularly of the United States, to oppose the imposition by force of Communist governments on Western European countries, there remains the possibility that Communist governments may in some countries of Western Europe come into power not by force but legally in a free election. The same kind of problem has already presented itself in earlier parts of this memorandum. The principle of national independence may some day appear to be threatened by the conditions attached to American economic aid. The suppression of Communism, at any rate in some European countries, may mean the suppression of civil rights for a minority of the population. How far is outside interference to forestall or mitigate the verdict of political democracy expressed in free elections justifiable or expedient? It is to be hoped that these difficult decisions may be avoided but the underlying dilemma will remain. How far will the Western nations in the course of a political, economic, diplomatic and perhaps finally military struggle with a completely ruthless opponent be obliged to sacrifice the very principles for which they are avowedly fighting — national independence, human rights and political liberty?

Paragraph 45—Comment:

This paragraph should be reconsidered. To apply "the same sort of policy" to the border lands of the Soviet Union as may be applicable in Italy and Turkey is a practical impossibility at the present time. To set up governments excluding Communists and semi-Communists in countries like Rumania, Yugoslavia and Bulgaria is an objective which could only be achieved by war. This paragraph should be considered in connection with Paragraph 54 with which it is, to some extent at least, in contradiction. The more moderate expression of possible aims to be pursued in the Soviet satellite states contained in Paragraph 54 is more in accordance with the facts of practical politics. A real problem in dealing with the states of Central and South-Eastern Europe is to know to what extent the Western powers should support political opposition to the existing Communist or near-Communist regimes. It is clear enough that we should do our utmost to strengthen cultural and economic ties with these countries and should protest against infractions of human freedom and political and civil rights. It is more difficult to know whether it is politic to encourage active resistance movements on the part of opposition parties. Relying on Western encouragement our friends in these countries may take public position against the regimes in power and will no doubt be liquidated as a consequence. If they are to exercise any future influence it would be wiser not to encourage the liberal elements to make martyrs of themselves at this stage.

Paragraph 47 (a)

This positive approach to the problems of Western democracy is the only one which holds out any real hope for the future. The notion that we, in the Western democracies, have attained to the perfection of human civilization and that our only duty is to uphold it against the barbarian hordes of Communism is a sterile one. The Western democracies have plenty to do if they are to implement the Christian and democratic principles which they proclaim and they should not allow themselves to be prevented from setting their house in order either by Soviet obstruction or by anti-Communist obsession. The dangers of complacency are clearly demonstrated by the decline in the influence of Western political ideals in Europe since the end of the 1914-18 war. The ecstatic welcome given to President Wilson when he came to Europe was the high water mark of this influence. There is no comparable admiration either for Anglo-Saxon political institutions or for the moral qualities of American civilization in Europe today. The Europeans admire the United States principally because it is a rich and powerful country where life is enviably easy. Should these conditions change, their feelings might change also. Moreover, the Labour Government's attempt to introduce socialism within the framework of the British parliamentary and constitutional system is taking place in such adverse economic circumstances that it is not proving a very attractive example to the peoples of Continental Europe.

While it is evident that a merely negative and defensive anti-Communist attitude is not enough, we cannot afford to relax our vigilance where the dangers of Communism are concerned. This means denouncing Communist tactics and exposing Communist lies and conspiracies. It is often hard in practice to maintain a clear distinction between performing this public duty and unleashing an anti-Communist crusade.

Paragraph 49 (a)

The views advanced in Paragraph 49, should be balanced by other considerations. Paragraph 49 advocates giving self-government to colonial peoples on the ground that the longer their independence is delayed the greater are the chances that the local colonial independence movements may come under Soviet influence or control. It is to be remembered, on the other hand, that the newly enfranchised states in the Middle and Far East offer a favourable foothold for Communist infiltration and domination. To leave politically immature and militarily undefended territories as an easy spoil for Soviet influence would be foolhardy. Nor would it be a prudent policy to grant independence to peoples who are not yet ready for it for the sole reason that their independence movements might otherwise fall under Soviet influence. The long-term interests of the peoples affected should take precedence over political strategy.

Paragraph 70 (a)

One of the peculiar and potentially dangerous features of the present international situation is the concentration in Washington and Moscow of the power to make decisions which may be fateful for the future of our civilization. Due to the shattering effect upon them of the Second World War, former great powers such as France, Germany, Japan, Italy and to a large measure, the British Empire, are in various degrees incapacitated from playing their former part in international affairs. At the same time most of the middle and smaller nations of Europe are much weakened by the economic and political effects of the war and some of them are dominated or terrified by Soviet power. Outside Europe, the disorganization of China and India, the divided and uneasy condition of the Middle East, the presence of virtual war conditions in Indochina and Indonesia, make it impossible for great masses of the human race to influence the course of events. The weakness of so many members of the international community leaves the Soviet Union and the United States facing each other across a vacuum which would normally be filled by many and powerful states. This situation is an artificial one and should not be expected to continue indefinitely. The sooner it is ended, the better are the prospects for world peace. The restoration of the states of Western Europe and the peaceful settlement of the disturbances that wrack the Chinese, Indian and Arab worlds would make for a balanced international community and are therefore in the interest of Canada as of every other peace-seeking nation.

The division of the world into two groups of nations under the respective leadership of Washington and Moscow means for Canada that, as stated in Paragraph 67 "in peace time our freedom of action will be limited but it will not be non-existent." Owing to our friendly relations with the United States we do not feel our national independence to be threatened but we have also to think of our position in the eyes of the world and in the eyes of the world appearances count for a great deal. From this point of view it is important that Canada should continue to emphasize as much as possible her independent position and make her individual contribution to international cooperation in association not only with the United States but with the nations of the Commonwealth and the middle and smaller powers. It is therefore in Canada's interest —

(a) to work towards the restoration of a more balanced equilibrium in the international community by encouraging and, where possible, aiding the re-establishment of stability and prosperity in the war-shattered nations;

(b) in particular to give all possible support to the United Kingdom in her desperate effort to maintain her position. This support would not be based primarily on sentimental considerations but on our appreciation of the fact that the moderating and steadying influence of the United Kingdom, her wide international connections and experience make her a most valuable force for peace. Moreover, the grave deterioration since the war in the fortunes of the United Kingdom by weakening the counterpoise of British influence has increased the dependence of Western nations, including Canada, on the United States in a manner which is neither healthy for the countries concerned nor for the United States;

(c) maintain and strengthen our association with the middle and smaller powers and with the nations of the Commonwealth. This policy can be followed within the framework of the United Nations and by the extension of our diplomatic and commercial relations with the countries concerned;

(d) continue our active participation in the United Nations and its specialized agencies. This will no doubt entail the assumption of further responsibilities and initiatives by Canada, perhaps along the lines suggested in Paragraph 61 and 62 above.

These are indeed the broad policies which the Canadian Government has pursued since the end of the war to attain the objective of international peace and stability.

Paragraphs 72 (a) and 73 (a)

But the dangers implicit in the policy put forward in these paragraphs and expressed by Mr. Kennan in his article on foreign affairs should not be ignored. The theory that the continual frustration of the Soviet Union by the power of the Western nations will lead to the mellowing or collapse of the Soviet system is indeed a curious one. Frustration does not usually lead either in an individual or a nation to mellowness, nor does it seem likely that the frustration of Soviet aims will lead to the collapse of the system. Such a collapse could only come about as the result of war or internal revolution and probably only as the result of internal revolution after defeat in war. The feeling of "encirclement" perhaps accompanied by the fear of revolution which would grow up on the Soviet Government as they found themselves confronted in their expansion with "unalterable force" might be more likely to produce an explosion of aggression than the nerveless collapse of the regime or its modification into milder forms. The possibility that fatigue may overcome the Soviet Union cannot be ignored but there is little likelihood that the present masters of Russia will allow her to sink into supine inertia. They will rather redouble all the pressures at their command to maintain the energies of the people and will combine these methods with the incessant stimulus of a propaganda which threatens the nation with foreign encirclement and attack if the people relax in their endeavours. In the last analysis the Soviet Government would prefer the gamble of a war to a relapse into lethargy which would mean the end of their own effective power and the abandonment both of international Communism and of Russian expansion.

These arguments do not invalidate the necessity for the Western powers to command overwhelming force in relation to the Soviet Union. They illustrate how much self-restraint and moderation will be needed to employ this force wisely.

Paragraph 74 (a)

Cultural assimilation between different civilizations has not in the past prevented wars breaking out between them. Indeed Mr. Arnold Toynbee in his Study of History has assembled a wealth of historical examples to prove that "standardization" as between civilizations is a sign of desintegration and a prelude to war. The fact that civilizations become more like each other does not necessarily mean that they like each other any the better — "Mieux comprendre" is not always "mieux pardonner". The fact that the Japanese were much more similar to the Americans in the 1940's than in the 1840's did not prevent Pearl Harbor. The Sixteenth Century religious wars, which are the nearest historical equivalent to the divisions which now split many countries of the world between Communists and anti-Communists, took place between men of the same race and cultural heritage.

Conclusion

Real as the danger of war is, it is by no means inevitable. The most encouraging element in the situation is that neither the United States Government nor the Soviet Government can reasonably be considered to want a war. In such circumstances, if the Western world is strong enough and is restrained in the use of its strength, and, if the Soviet Union is sufficiently confident in its ultimate destiny and sufficiently cautious, war may be avoided. But, we shall still be faced with a more or less prolonged period in which the struggle between the Western and Soviet worlds will go on by all methods short of war. If either side yields to panic or presses the other too far, this struggle may shift from the economic, ideological and political planes to that of military force. We shall be living on the narrow edge of risk. The only two alternatives seem to be the conclusion of a settlement between the two systems based on hard bargaining but with some promise of stability and even of fruitful development, or a tacit agreement to go our separate ways abandoning attempts at cooperation, yet trying to avoid war. After weary months of negotiations the first alternative seems further away than ever. Perhaps increasing danger of unwanted war might bring about an eleventh-hour agreement. The second alternative may be attainable. It would be a truce rather than peace and it would be a difficult truce to maintain in a world in which our two ways of life and thought meet at so many points and threaten to collide.

[C.S.A. RITCHIE]

237. DEA/52-F (S)

Le ministre en Suisse
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister in Switzerland
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET. PERSONAL. Berne, November 6, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I wish to apologize for the delay in replying to your letters of September 9th and 13th† with regard to "The Soviet Question". When your letters were received I was so much involved, first of all with the crisis in the trade negotiations, and then with the winding-up process, that I did not have time to give consideration to your request for my views on the enclosures to your letter of September 9th and also the revision of the draft memorandum prepared by Mr. Escott Reid on "The United States and the Soviet Union". At the time I felt that the most effective way in which I could contribute to the solution of "The Soviet Question" was to bring to a successful conclusion the trade negotiations then taking place in Geneva.

2. I regret that since coming to Berne I have also had little time to give consideration to these all-important questions because I have had to pay some sixty calls and receive return visits of some forty diplomats before leaving for Havana on November 13th. I have, however, at odd moments been thinking over some of the points brought out in the enclosures to your two letters, and I would ask you to regard this letter as merely a preliminary response to your request for a further expression of my views.

3. First of all, I would like to mention that I am somewhat alarmed to note from paragraphs 6 and 7 of your letter of September 9th that you have expected a possible immediate change in the Soviet attitude as a result of the increasing firmness of the United States. I hope that my despatch No. G/1 of April 25th did not lead you to expect that Soviet frustration would be a matter of months, because what I had in mind was a period of frustration after ten or twenty-five years when the Soviet leaders eventually came to realize that it was impossible for them to catch up industrially with the United States. I also had in mind the possibility that the successors to the present Soviet leaders might lack that dynamic quality which has enabled them to extract so much out of the Soviet people, but at the same time at great cost in energy to themselves and long hours of work for all those in positions of responsibility.

4. The Soviet reaction to the United States policy of firmness has been exactly what one would expect. They have yet to be convinced of the consistency of the United States policy and they must have been encouraged in this by the writings of Walter Lippman and others. In fact, their whole policy is based on an effort to shake the United States from their present policy of firmness and they are banking everything upon the coming depression which their deep study of Karl Marx has convinced them is the best opportunity for them to divide the Western world and thereby secure the openings for the realization of some of their expansionist plans. In the meantime they feel that they must, at all costs, preserve what they have gained as a result of the war and do not want to see any weakening of their influence east of the Stettin-Trieste Line.

5. I am wondering what those who preach an alternative to the policy of firmness think could be achieved by any different attitude towards the Soviet Union. An attitude of sweet reasonableness might have delayed for a year or two the complete seizure of power by Communist parties in certain of the satellite countries but it would not have made possible a solution of the all-important German question except on Soviet terms. It is this question of Germany that is the root of all the problems facing the relations of the Western powers with the Soviet Union. Both sides fear that the other wishes to make use of the Germans against them, and so long as this fear exists the only solutions of the German question that are possible are either the splitting of Germany into two or the giving in by the Western powers to Soviet desires.

6. I have considered the possibility of revising the very excellent memorandum prepared by Escott Reid on "The United States and the Soviet Union" but have had to give up the idea for lack of time. As Escott Reid mentions in his preface, the draft memorandum is to some extent a scissors and paste job. I can see that the material has been taken from George Kennan's article, from a previous departmental memorandum, and from despatches from Moscow. I do not feel inclined to disagree with anything coming from these three sources but I fear that in quoting too laboriously from my previous despatches the memorandum gives the impression that we beg too much the question of the unlikelihood of war in the near future.

7. The great difference, I find, from living in a country like Switzerland, which is relatively near to the "Iron Curtain", and living in North America, which is separated from the "Iron Curtain" by Western Europe and the Atlantic Ocean, is that in the former no one thinks or talks about the possibility of war, whereas in North America this seems to be the obsession which is colouring all thinking about the Soviet Union. For this reason I would like to see another attempt made to put the whole matter in proper perspective. This would have to be an entirely different approach than merely putting together scraps from Geo. Kennan and Moscow despatches.

8. My idea of such a memorandum would be that the first chapter could be a thesis on Russian expansion throughout the last three hundred years. Chapter 2 could then be a review of British diplomatic history from 1878 to 1905. It could be shown that in this period those responsible for British foreign policy first commenced to realize the threat to British interests of further Russian expansion and that this dominated British foreign policy during the period in question. The final paragraphs could show that never once during this period was there a really serious threat of war between the two countries in spite of the fact that British policy was effective in preventing Russian expansion at the expense of British interests.

9. The third chapter could jump the intervening period and deal with the United States effort in the last war. This could be an impressive account of how the industrial might of North America was brought to bear in such a way as to be the decisive factor in the war on many fronts, leading to the overthrow of the two great military powers of Germany and Japan.

10. Chapter 4 could commence by stating that Stalin is very much aware of this United States contribution to victory in the last war. He realizes the extent to which the industrial military potential of the Soviet Union is so greatly inferior to that of the United States. Information could then be given as to the plans the Soviet leaders have formulated for increasing the industrial military potential of their country, but a full account should also be given of such factors as the relative inefficiency of the Russians and the difficulties which they will have to surmount before they are in a position to contemplate even the possibility of war with the United States.

11. After this there could be a chapter summarizing the conclusions, and in this chapter use could be made of some of the material now contained in Mr. Escott Reid's memorandum. It is only, however, by treating the subject historically that I feel that the whole question of the possibility of war can be viewed in the proper perspective. This I consider very desirable, not because we should in any respect cease our vigilance, but because we should once and for all stop arguing about the proper method of dealing with the Soviet Union and give every support to that policy of firmness upon which the United States is embarking since any wavering from that policy would be sure to be exploited by the Soviet leaders for their own purposes and hence is the most dangerous course which we could undertake.

12. I am very sorry that this expression of my views has had to be so sketchy and falls so far short from what you requested in your letters of September 9th and 13th, but I really have had so much to do of late that I am not in a position to contribute much to the consideration of the all-important Soviet question.

13. With kindest regards and best wishes,

Yours sincerely,
L.D. WILGRESS

238. DEA/52-F (S)

L'ambassadeur en Argentine
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in Argentina
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Buenos Aires, November 7, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I have your letter of September 13th† with its enclosure of Escott Reid's draft memorandum on the United States and the Soviet Union, which I have read with the greatest interest.

2. With the general nature of the memorandum I agree, but subject to certain broad criticisms, one of them I think basic; and, before making any suggestions as to particular revisions or additions, I might set out these criticisms as follows:

3. Concentration upon the two principals in the duel described has resulted in a failure to deal with the parallel interests and concern of the rest of the Western Powers as principals. So unimportant are they in the discussion of the first four Parts that there has been no attempt to define them, unless they be covered by the passing reference under Section 27 to the "present Western Alliance". The Alliance might well be an expanding body, depending upon the interests involved; and without discussion of these, there is a missing link between Parts IV and V. In Part V we find all the "Western Powers", other than the United States, making common cause with it, without any reason given for suddenly finding them on the same side. They seem to be brought in as mere adjuncts of United States policy, and in answer to the question of what should be done to prevent war between the United States and Russia; whereas they must have interests and, therefore, should have policies of their own. I would suggest that if there is to be co-operation, as described in Part V, it must be the common measure of their interests and of those of the United States that would determine the lines of it.

4. And the discovery of those common interests would not only affect the measures to be taken by the "Western Powers", but also would determine the countries to be included under that head; and, if properly appreciated, might materially alleviate the problem. Where some of these Powers are Socialist, the defence of Capitalism will hardly be the common ground. But liberty and security against aggression are the basic interests of all of them and of far more than they.

I have, in consequence, tried my hand very inadequately at a Part to be inserted between Parts IV and V.

5. Assuming that a basic common cause exists, the same concentration upon the two-Nation duel results in an under-estimate of the power and importance of the other Nations, however presently handicapped, to further it; and this, if reflected in policy, would be detrimental both to their power to defend the common cause and to themselves.

It has been the fashion in the last few years unduly to exalt the United States and to depreciate the rest of the Western World. This is not a healthy basis for world security. Undoubtedly, at the moment the United States is by far the strongest of us, but the rest of us are not negligible, nor should we underrate ourselves by excessive modesty. The United States has to go a long way yet in training, experience and discipline before it can give the world a satisfactory substitute for the Pax Britannica. The whole of the Western World is needed for this; and its parts, other than the United States, particularly the members of the Commonwealth, must appreciate and make appreciated their considerable power.

6. A reminder of the importance, as principals, of the rest of the Western World will help the common interest by alleviating the dualism that has developed in the particularly dangerous form of two rival Nations. If dualism there must be because of the provocation and intransigence of Russia, our side will be more formidable, more wise and more secure, the more it is a partnership of self-respecting Powers, and will have a better hope of bringing that provocation and intransigence to an end without war.

7. In Part V, I would think that Sections 43, with 62 to 64, should be made much more of, possibly even to the extent of being given an independent Part to themselves. A pact against aggression, with definite obligations and sanctions, is today the most imperative of international objectives. It is feasible now on a wide scale as it never was before. In this connection, the article by H.F. Armstrong in the New York Times of September 14th last is very much in point.

8. Note that there seems to be a substantial difference between a pact under Section 51 of Chapter VII of the United Nations Charter and the regional arrangements of Chapter VIII. "No enforcement action shall be taken under regional arrangements or by regional agencies without the authorization of the Security Council"; but a pact of collective self-defence can operate "until the Security Council has taken the measures necessary to maintain international peace and security." If, by reason of the veto, the Security Council failed to go into effective action, the collective defence would go on. Such a pact then would be the best means open to us today to limit the veto, while putting on the side of the law and within the scope of the Charter a practical security scheme.

9. The extent of any proposed Pact should be as great as possible; there should be no attempt to limit it to "the Western Alliance"; all within range of Russian policy should be in it. Indeed, there seems to be no reason why it should not be proposed, for adherence, to Russia and her satellites as well.

10. Apart from the disadvantages of a regional agreement, as distinguished from a Pact, any acceptance by Canada just now of a merely regional agreement might be inconsistent with reluctance to enter a limited Pan-American region while there was any hope during Canada's membership in the Security Council of making the United Nations work as a whole. There would be no inconsistency in a broad and fundamental Pact of collective defence under Section 51, offered to Russia as well.

If she and her satellites declined, there would, at least for the rest, be a common defence.

11. I would suggest then that the discussion in the Sections mentioned be broadened. It might perhaps be put on a two-fold basis, going from a more limited to a more general scheme.

12. The failure to give due weight to the remainder of the Western Powers colours Part VI, and results in too easy an acquiescence in a dependent position for Canada. A Canada that accepted the main implications of Part VI would be going back to a new colonialism and a position not much better than that of some Latin-American States. It would not only mortgage its future but prevent itself from ultimately paying off the mortgage. With its independence, it would lose any prospects of large-scale immigration, and it might even lose much of its present younger population.

13. I would think that a policy that could lead to such a consequence was an unsound policy for us and for our world, and much too costly a price to pay for protection against aggression. And I see no need to be hypnotized into such a position if we properly assert the importance of the rest of the Western World and the real principles that should join us all together.

14. From this standpoint it is very difficult to suggest revised or additional paragraphs to Part VI. If the above thoughts be valid and if a new Part were inserted between Parts IV and V, Sections 66, 67 and 71 would be radically affected, particularly there would be a toning down on the statement "that any conceivable contribution we could make would be a small insurance premium to pay." The loss of independence would be a very costly premium to pay for insurance against domination.

15. Apart from the foregoing, and from a separately enclosed Part IV-A, I have noted the following:

16. Section 23 towards the end, after "Western Powers" add: "including the people of the United States itself."

17. Section 27 Should there not be the suggestion that the "Western Alliance" might yet be extended to include France and Italy, if not more?

18. Section 40 Here and elsewhere there should be a definition of the "Western Powers". It is conceivable that the phrase might have to include among others Turkey and Greece, possibly even South American countries, as well as those countries enumerated in Section 27 as making up the de facto Western Alliance.

19. Section 43 This, I think, should be tied up with Sections 62-64.

20. Between Sections 45 and 46, it might be important to insert a Section pointing out the desirability of acting so as not to convey the idea that the policy is merely the policy of the United States.

21. Section 42 At the end, I would like to see something to the effect that we should be careful not to convey the idea that Canadian territory is at the disposal of United States policy, and to see what we can do to obtain reciprocity in any arrangements made. Such a line would be both more impressive and less provocative than a line which could be stigmatized as a line of subservience.

22. Sections 62-64 See my remarks in paragraph 7 above. Note that Pact should not be regional.

23. Section 66 and 67 See my remarks in paragraph 14 above.

24. Section 69 At the end, add: "It will be more able to do so if its other fellow members in the Western group also make their weight felt."

25. Section 71 See my note in paragraph 14 above.

26. Section 74 Either in this or after this section, I should be inclined to repeat the need of making clear the fundamentals of our joint policy as a policy of a released and wholesome world, free to go about its business. This in the long run will penetrate the curtain as nothing else could, and will not only be the most effective counter-attack and the encouragement of our friends, but will offer a way of life that Russians themselves may prefer, and can ultimately join without any sense of defeat, should they eventually liberate themselves.

27. My draft of Part IV-A will follow by the next Courier.

I have etc.

WARWICK CHIPMAN

239. DEA/52-F (S)

L'ambassadeur en Argentine
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in Argentina
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Buenos Aires, November 13, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

I now enclose, with all diffidence, a suggested Part IV.A., as promised in my letter of November 7th.

2. I appreciate that it does not quite fit what follows, but that is almost inevitable in any projection into someone else's draft.

3. The more I think of the general outlook, the more I am convinced that what we should be attempting now is a Pact of collective self-defence under Article 51 of the Charter. I should like to see Canada taking a lead in suggesting it.

4. The local papers are, in despatches from Washington, resurrecting the possibility of a United States purchase of Greenland. I would hope that if Greenland were on the market, it would be Canada that would buy it, otherwise we are condemned to the perpetual position of a satellite.

Yours sincerely,

WARWICK CHIPMAN

PART IV.A

39. (a) We have been describing an actual conflict that has declared itself between the United States and the Soviet Union as principals. What is the position of the rest of what we have called the Western de facto Alliance, to say nothing of those who may be added to their ranks? If they are affected both by the conflict, and by what is at stake in the conflict, they cannot take the position of onlookers, wondering if there is to be a war and if they are to be dragged in, or even of honest mediators ready to be called in if the conflict threaten a crisis. To wait upon events would be to resign all control over them, to withhold any contribution from their own experience and wisdom to the shaping of them, and to encourage a continual aggravation of the peril. If in truth they are Allies, what makes them so? What, if anything, in the Russian policy above described concerns them as much as it concerns the United States? What, if anything, in the United States reply should enlist their cooperation?

(b) One of the most serious features of the conflict lies in the very fact that it has become expressible in terms of a two-country antagonism. If it be more than this, then the concentration not only makes the conflict more explosive, it may also result in the true issues being obscured or unduly particularized and narrowed. An excessive insistence, for example, on one objective, such as the defence of capitalism, may leave undefended other objectives still more vital and still more uniting.

(c) Further, it must be acknowledged that the United States, now so immensely strong and for the moment so greatly determined to oppose the present brand of aggression, was not long ago the world's chief isolationist, and has hardly had time to grow to the measure of wisdom, steadiness, continuity, and restraint required for the creation of a Pax Americana to take the place of the Pax Britannica; or even for the role of our voluntary and uncontrolled champion. We may not find ourselves able to endorse all the policy and counter-policy of the United States. Some of it may seem to some of us wrongly founded; some of it may seem to be tarred with the same brush as the Russian. Some of it may seem to be too self-centred to be welcome without modification. More than this, undistributed power can play strange pranks. Even the United States, with all its tradition and upbringing, has not been above aberrations in the past and might not be above them in the future if left to wield too much power alone. We must be profoundly grateful that the United States has waked up to a sense of responsibility; but if that responsibility has a proper foundation, we must share it and contribute common wisdom and power to the common defence of what we find to be at stake.

(d) We can do so; and we do not help the common cause by depreciating our own power. In particular, it is a great error to think of Great Britain as permanently relegated to a minor role. 45,000,000 of determined and united people, with such a history, are not going to abdicate, for all the unwise expressions that some, British or others, may have used. Even within the critical period that we have been describing, they will again be pulling their weight, a weight much more valuable than their numbers suggest. The other Commonwealth countries are continually growing in strength. If the cause to be served be common, they should not, in power any more than in policy, accept the position of satellites, or permit controls that, not being relevant or reciprocal, would put any of them permanently in a subordinate position.

(e) To whatever human unit we belong and to whatever brand of political economy we may subscribe, we all have one basic interest in common, and never more so than today — the pre-eminent need of a world of law, free from aggression or the fear of it, and enabled in peace to prosecute a positive civilization. We went to war to achieve this freedom, but so far have only succeeded in having one aggressor replaced by another. The attack is two-fold: against the territorial integrity of those in the neighbourhood, and in an especial way against the existing political independence of those farther afield. The recent resurrection of the Comintern in the shape of the Cominform brings this latter form of aggression into the open. As long as the threat of aggression hangs over the world, there can be no peace or lasting reconstruction. We must end it, or it will end us.

(f) The immediate question then is, not whether there will ultimately be an all-out war between the United States and Russia, in which we will be involved, but how to get our world out of its actual insecurity. This fundamental interest we share with the United States. What it requires, and not any side-issue, will govern what we all should do as principals, and how we should do it.

(g) At bottom, the issue behind the duel between the United States and Russia is the fundamental issue of security. It cannot be met by indifference or appeasement on the one hand, or by national rivalries on the other. As a general issue, it requires a general cooperation, and the broader the grounds of that cooperation and of the measures taken under it, the greater the hope for peace.

240. DEA/52-F (S)

Note de R.A. MacKay de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum by R.A. MacKay, Second Political Division

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], November 22, 1947

COMMENT ON MR. REID'S PAPER OF SEPTEMBER 13, 1947, ENTITLED "THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

The general argument of the paper is sound. I am, however, rather doubtful of Mr. Reid's conclusion that we have an opportunity of exercising considerable influence at Washington. I doubt whether our views on relations with Russia would be viewed very seriously although no doubt we would be given the courtesy of a hearing.

2. I suggest that we should endeavour to follow as far as possible a "buffer state policy". We are so much within the United States orbit for defence purposes and idealogically [sic] that an out-and-out buffer state policy is impossible. On the other hand, I do not think that we should be content with mere formal autonomy in defence relations with the United States — I feel we are in some danger of this. I suggest that we should press very strongly that the Service Departments and the Department of Transport man northern stations as quickly as possible. Further, we should insist in the fullest information of the activities of the United States forces in Canadian territory. There are rather disturbing rumours about a good deal of flying over northern Canada and it appears to be obvious that we are not getting complete photographic records made by the United States army air service in our northern territories. It may be absurd that the United States does not seem to have formally recognized the "sector principle" which we have long advocated with respect to sovereignty over the arctic regions. It is not improbable that this principle might be challenged by the United States unless we are more active in the arctic islands.

3. The world would probably be safer if Great Britain and the countries of Western Europe could play more effective roles in the world politics. The United Kingdom's weakness economically and strategically has to some extent compelled her to become a satellite of the United States. It would obviously be in Canada's interest to see Great Britain a much stronger world power. Whether Canada could do much to strengthen the British position is open to question. I suggest however that our traditional policy of no-commitments towards Great Britain and our traditional suspicion of anything savouring of centralization or diminution of status should not be allowed to interfere with our interests. Closer association of Canada and the United Kingdom, perhaps closer association of the whole British Commonwealth, might very well have a stabilizing effect in the jockeying for position that will inevitably go on between Russia and the United States. The time has perhaps come for serious rethinking of our British Commonwealth association.

R.A. MacKay

241.

DEA/52-F (S)

L'ambassadeur aux Pays-Bas
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in The Netherlands
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 363

The Hague, December 1, 1947

TOP SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Mr. Escott Reid's memorandum entitled "United States and the Soviet Union" of which Copy No. 32 was forwarded to me under cover of a letter dated 3rd October† from the Associate Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs with a request for my comments. My reply has been delayed due to the recent concentration of the activities of this Mission on the visit of the Prime Minister to the Netherlands, and because I felt that the subject merited the most detailed and profound examination and meditation by my colleagues and myself.

2. It is obvious to us that Mr. Reid has read very widely on, and has given considerable thought to, the possibilities of war between the United States and the Soviet Union. His memorandum embraces most of the relevant issues and is deserving of the most careful perusal by all interested officials of the Canadian Government.

3. It had been my original intention to provide you with my criticisms and comments by dealing with the memorandum paragraph by paragraph. I realize that this would be particularly useful in permitting you to examine each paragraph, and indeed each sentence, in the light of observations made by my colleagues in other Canadian Diplomatic Missions as well as by myself. However, upon reflection I feel that this might prove cumbersome, as in dealing with each paragraph seriatim my comments would eventually prove to be far more voluminous than the memorandum itself. This results from the fact that, although I concur in the great proportion of what Mr. Reid says or suggests, the approach of my two colleagues and myself varies widely from that of the author. As this approach is, in my opinion, of fundamental importance, I feel that it would be more profitable to set forth our difference of approach in broad terms rather than have the difference appear constantly in the consideration of each paragraph.

4. The basic difference in approach results from the fact that the memorandum, as appears in the actual sub-title, is discussing "the possibility of war," while I believe that that war is well past the stage of possibility and in fact is now being waged. Unquestionably, the study of the problem can be considerably facilitated if there is a primary agreement upon the definition of the term "war". The memorandum speaks of "war" in a general sense as well as referring to "psychological war" and "first-class war". In common parlance today people speak of "hot war", "cold war", "propaganda war", "shooting war", etc.

5. In by-gone years the difference between peace and war was so clearly defined that authors on international law were able to devise categorical rules to cover the relations of nations in either of these two states. The position of belligerents was radically different from that of non-belligerents. The concept of total war has, however, largely obliterated earlier distinctions and the war to which this study is devoted will complete that process. In my opinion, historians will find it a practical impossibility to set the outbreak of today's war; it will probably be equally difficult to establish the exact moment of the assumption of military operations. Indeed, it is my hope that we shall be able to fight and win the war in which we are now engaged without recourse to arms.

6. The aggression clearly comes from the Soviet side, which is striving to break down and destroy the system under which the great part of the world has been operating for many centuries. Soviet weapons are far more numerous and are being more vigorously used than our own. We have, however, the advantage of being in strongly established ideological positions, although I shall later demonstrate that these positions are not invulnerable but must be defended by means equal in vigour and imagination to those of the attackers.

7. Before following this line of thought further, I would like to point out that in my opinion the title of the memorandum "United States and the Soviet Union" is not only productive of awkward restrictions in discussing the basic problem involved, but of itself results in a fundamental misconception as to the issues. Perhaps it is not surprising, therefore, that the whole subject has been discussed in precisely the manner in which the Soviets would wish to have it discussed by the entire world. Undoubtedly far wider moral support will be found for the Soviet position so long as the struggle is regarded as one between American capitalism and Soviet communism.

8. I would like to emphasise that the real battle is between Communism (found in varying degrees everywhere, though emanating from Moscow) and the concepts of freedom on which all truly democratic governments are established. It happens, as a result of the circumstances controlling the history of recent years, that the United States is by far the strongest of the freedom-loving democracies and is consequently the chief and eventual target of Soviet aggression. At this juncture, however, as was revealed with absolute clarity in the pronouncement accompanying the establishment of the Cominform, the more immediate communist objective is the liquidation of the democratic socialist regimes now controlling most European nations. There can be few informed observers in the United States who do not recognise that the present "Battle of European democratic socialism" is only one phase of the larger struggle which so acutely and inevitably affects their own country.

9. While it is true that the United States in defending the ideals of freedom also defends the free-enterprise system (call it by the horrible name of capitalism if you wish), I do not believe that the United States is fighting for any narrow and selfish method of life, whether it be called "capitalism" or "Americanism". I am firmly convinced that the motivation is far higher and broader and that the struggle involves all those ideals and principles upon which our own nation is founded and that, therefore, we Canadians have equally as much at stake as has the United States. Consequently, it scarcely behooves us to adopt an Olympian attitude and, with a quasi-neutral approach, to think of exerting "an influence on Washington" through the skilful playing of a difficult game — (paragraph 70).

10. In the examination of "the sources of conflict" in Part I, the memorandum uses almost identical terminology in describing the approach of the Soviet and "United States" systems to each other. It almost suggests that each of the systems is something new which fears that it may not have full opportunity to display its merits to the world before it is adversely affected by the other. In my opinion, the so-called "capitalist" system is well-established and well-known throughout the world both for its faults and its merits. The communist system, on the other hand, is relatively new and is naturally aggressive in its desire to replace the earlier type of civilisation.

11. It is equally misleading to speak (as indeed the Soviets would like the whole world to speak) of the "defence areas" of the "capitalist" and "communist" systems. I feel that there is little profit in speaking of "defence areas", but if the term is to be used, I would suggest that the entire world outside the Soviet Union is the "defence area" of the democratic nations, although a considerable number of the immediate neighbours of the U.S.S.R. have already been overrun. The Communists, being clearly the aggressors, do not act in terms of "defence areas" for themselves but in terms of bases being constantly advanced in the development of their programme of aggression.

12. While there may have been certain defensive aspects in the cordon sanitaire which the U.S.S.R. built up to meet the coming Nazi attack, it cannot seriously be maintained (particularly as it is generally agreed that the democratic powers will not precipitate a war — and this is undoubtedly duly appreciated by the Soviet leaders) that the Soviet Union has annexed all of the countries listed in paragraph 8 of the memorandum for "defensive" purposes. The same pattern of aggression has been followed in these countries as has been attempted in a number of others, specifically in Greece, Italy and France. The communist organisation first fires its ideological guns and then attempts a maximum of infiltration in the key positions of the trades unions. From the strategic positions thereby attained it is not difficult to advance to the parliamentary battle-fields. Unhappily, in countries contiguous to the U.S.S.R. a small parliamentary minority of communists has been able to rout the great majority of democratic parliamentarians and, backed by Soviet force, has been able to seize power.

13. Where such tactics do not succeed, as is the case at least temporarily in France, the communists readily switch from parliamentary weapons to others. The "big stick" of the strike through control of the trades unions is potent enough to force most governments into submission or dissolution, particularly as it is so easy to develop a strike into an open conflict between the police and government supporters on the one hand against the communist strikers on the other — a development which if pushed far enough would produce not only tragic disruption in the national economy but even civil war.

14. The communists follow this pattern (it varies somewhat according to local conditions) in all countries of the world, although for obvious reasons the final seizure of power is accomplished progressively according to the geographical situation of the victim. As it is obvious that Soviet expansion operates even within the United States it is patently misleading to speak of the "boundaries of the defensive area" of the Soviets. Therefore, in seeking a definition of war, as suggested in paragraph 4 of this despatch, one must not be restricted by historical conceptions of that term. The Soviet technique is, unhappily, all too original.

15. Greece, for example, is today a point of immediate friction not because it falls within the "defensive area" of American capitalism or Soviet communism but rather because the United States, as a counter-move, feels that it is essential to maintain Greek democracy to prevent the progressive march of communism in a country which by its geographical position is the next to be engulfed.

16. I am convinced that American capitalistic expansionism is not responsible for the present activities of the United States in Greece or, for that matter, in other countries in which the United States is demonstrating a similar interest. It was not expansionism which prompted General Marshall's proposals for the economic rehabilitation of Europe. True, United States trade and prosperity will benefit from world prosperity but the different purposes and methods in the use of economic weapons by the United States and the U.S.S.R. respectively are too apparent to warrant description here.

17. I concur in Mr. Reid's suggestion that the democratic nations should do everything possible to remove racial discrimination and to raise the standard of living of all classes of the population. While these matters should not be ignored, it is of fundamentally greater importance that the democratic nations should co-operate in fighting the war already launched by the communists. I would like to consider the operation in four basic divisions: ideological, economic, security, and military.

18. In the ideological field I am convinced, as mentioned in paragraph 6 above, that the democratic nations must adopt and use weapons as varied and vigorous as those of the Soviets. Much useful work can be done by developing various governmental organizations to spread information. However, the most effective (and to date largely ignored) method would be by co-operation with the press in democratic countries. The recent establishment of the Cominform has not only set us a useful example but will permit the democratic nations to adopt the procedure I have in mind without opening themselves to the attack that they have instigated aggressive action.

19. My suggestion is that a conference be arranged in each democratic country between government officials and representatives of the press. The government chairman could point out that the communist campaign, in threatening democratic institutions, was above all (as has been amply demonstrated in Russia) a threat to the freedom of the press. Consequently, frequent liaison should be maintained to adopt a consistent and effective propaganda line in the newspapers. Even the falsehoods propagated by the Daily Worker and its equivalent in other countries have had a considerable effect on the masses. Consequently, truth ably presented by the free press should exercise an even greater force.

20. The press should be invited, therefore, to publish clear statements of communist objectives and the implications of communist activities in each country. The stories of martyrs like Petkov and Maniu should be fully exploited. Indeed, a cumulative effect would be produced if the papers daily reproduced biographies of one or other of the scores of recent victims in Soviet-occupied nations. For this purpose it might be useful to establish a permanent press-government committee. Above all, however, it should be emphasised that the press is under no absolute obligation to publish anything. It will remain the free choice of a free press to publish or neglect to publish the items proposed by such a committee. A further and logical development would be for the press-government committees in all of the democratic countries to maintain liaison with each other for effective co-ordination of operations.

21. In the economic field communism can be fought by wealthier democratic nations assisting those others which are in need, and in the adoption of plans for the liberalisation of world trade. Much has already been done in this field and much more is already planned. It would be inappropriate, therefore, for me to develop these ideas at length.

22. As the Soviet technique involves the large-scale and progressive use of local communists in each country in its war of eventual world domination, it is obvious that special internal security measures must be adopted — to a degree far more intensified than was necessary against the Germans and Japanese — in order to counteract this menace. I assume that police bodies such as the R.C.M.P. and the F.B.I.[17] are fully alert in this respect, but it is probable that their activities are circumscribed by the pressure of political considerations and the instinctive detestation by freedom-loving peoples of espionage methods. The greatest care must be exercised to avoid the abridgment of our civil liberties and to eliminate the possibility of the destruction of public and individual peace of mind as occurs in "police states", where every man becomes an informer against his brother, every child against his parent.

[17]Federal Bureau of Investigation.

23. Nevertheless, as the Soviets are using not merely "secret service agents" but also ordinary civilians of "friendly nations" for purposes of espionage and sabotage, it is obviously necessary to have recourse to other than regular police activities to counterbalance these tactics. Consequently, I feel that public-spirited citizens, educated to the danger by publicity methods outlined in paragraph 20 should be encouraged to assume the duty of reporting on activities which appear to be designed to abet the Soviet cause. Furthermore, while safeguarding civil liberties and taking precautions against the development of any gestapo mentality, the existing police agencies should be enabled to build up effective counter-espionage machinery.

24. In the military field the democratic nations should remain vigilant and develop weapons (and defences) by scientific research in the realms of bacteriological, atomic, and jet-propulsion warfare. There should be a conviction both in the minds of the democratic peoples and in the minds of the Soviets that the democratic powers are militarily stronger than any potential enemy and thus able to counteract any aggression. Care should be taken not to give the communists any ground for asserting that democratic governments were inciting their peoples and thereby preparing them for the undertaking of aggressive warfare. It is my hope, and indeed my belief, that recourse to military weapons will not be necessary. The need of the U.S.S.R. for several years in which to recover from the devastation of the last war should give the democratic powers sufficient time to strengthen their position by ideological and economic means to such a point that the Soviets will recognise the futility of adopting military methods.

25. It should always be borne in mind that democratic peoples must direct ideological weapons at compatriots in their own midst who have become influenced by communist propaganda. At the same time, we can use psychological warfare (in the sense in which that term became current during the past war) against the peoples of Soviet-occupied territories. The elimination of one democrat like Petkov will produce a state of mind in many others which would be conducive to the planting of democratic ideas.

26. In conclusion, may I be permitted to repeat and to emphasise one aspect of what I have said, namely, that we must not spend our time in considering the possibility of a future war but must immediately take steps to fight the war which the communists are already waging against us.

I have etc.

PIERRE DUPUY

242. DEA/52-F (S)

Note de la Troisième direction politique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Third Political Division
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], December 4, 1947

On 13th September last you invited our comments on a Memorandum entitled "The United States and the Soviet Union".

I am very sorry there has been a long delay. I am now enclosing a memorandum prepared by Mr. Eberts of this Division, commenting on the earlier Memorandum.

D.M. JOHNSON

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note de la Troisième direction politique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Third Political Division
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], November 29, 1947

SUGGESTIONS FOR REVISION OF MR. REID'S DRAFT MEMORANDUM "THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

My chief criticisms of this paper are that, in several places, particularly in the first sections, it seems to misinterpret Soviet aims and the position of the United States and to contain inconsistencies. Also, parts of it need reorganization. If, moreover, the arguments were more closely knit, the length of the paper could be reduced and a certain number of repetitions eliminated. As there are a considerable number of points at which revisions are required, it will probably be easier for those in charge of the preparation of the final draft if, instead of submitting a great number of amended paragraphs, I summarize my comments.

2. The following are the main points that appear to need modification:

Para. 1 states that, liking and wishing to maintain, their system and personal positions, the Soviet leaders feel a need for expanding their defence area. Are not a desire to extend the area of their system and of their personal power and to bolster the economy of their country the real reasons why they seek control of nearby countries? Can we properly call those countries a "defence area" when the bulk of the troops of the Western Allies have long since left Europe and there has been no possible danger of a Western attack except as a result of continued aggressiveness on the part of the U.S.S.R.?

Para. 2 states that the USSR feels that the West might attack it in order to prevent the successful extension of the Soviet system and that it also fears the influence of Western ideas in the borderlands. The first part of this statement does not place the USSR in a primarily defensive position but in that of an attacker objecting to being hit back. It comes near to the obvious truth that the USSR has taken the lead, since the war, in the field of aggressiveness. As regards the second part, the Soviet Union has no reason to fear that Western ideas can successfully penetrate its national censorship controls, and it can only claim that it is on the defensive in a struggle of ideas in its neighbours' countries if it admits that it wishes to take control of such countries or argues that the West is seeking similar domination in that area. What special right has the Soviet Union to decide the pattern of ideas desirable for its neighbours?

Para. 3 Here reference is apparently made to the United States as controlling other than its own territories and an overwhelming majority of the U.S. public are said to favour the expansion of the U.S. "defence area". Clearly it is impossible to describe the very different and limited influence of the U.S. in other countries in the same terms as Soviet control in the countries of its neighbours. The United States does not seem to have had much control over the situation in Italy or France in recent months or even over the British scene. Since the inception of the Good Neighbour Policy, the U.S. Government has, in many respects, been a most benevolent uncle to many Latin-American countries. It has even come to accept General Peron[18] as a friend. Also, there is, after all, at least some reality in the new independence of the Philippine Republic. The memo recommends, in paragraphs 40 -52, measures that are obviously defensive but which will nevertheless entail some U.S. "control" of other territories. Thus far, to our loss, the "overwhelming majority" and Congress have presented a pretty lame picture of a country preparing an area of defence.

Para. 4 As already suggested, one cannot speak, without further explanation, of a "defence area" as though it were the same thing in the case of both the Soviet Union and the United States.

Para. 5 Towards the end of this paragraph it seems to be suggested that the Soviet leaders slander the West to their people because of their own insecurity arising from political opposition and discontent over economic hardships. Presumably the slander is also due, in great measure, to a desire to justify to the people a markedly aggressive and ultimately risky policy abroad.

Para. 6 Can we, with any realism, say that the USSR has developed a defence area because it has feared the threat to its security of U.S. moves? Who started this business of expanding in 1945, if not earlier?

Para. 7 Here the U.S. is described, with the Soviet Union, as an "expanding power", although para. 16 suggests that the nature of the Government and people of the United States is such that they would only go to war for purposes of self-preservation. Its record of expansion appears a meagre affair in comparison to the Soviet record outlined in para. 8. Has the U.S. occupation of Japan been an expansionist move? Is there any reason to doubt that, provided the USSR is not by that time threatening Japan, the U.S. will get out of Japan when matters there are properly in hand? Is the none-too-effective assistance of the U.S. to Greece the work of an expansionist power? Paragraphs 43 to 45 advocate, obviously without favouring expansion, a guarantee of Western Europe against the imposition of Communist governments and also Western pressure for the establishment in the Mediterranean area and Asia of progressive but non-Communist governments. Again, it is clearly not considered that the development of the Arctic defences is an expansionist move as para. 52 recommends the preparation of these defences.

[18]Juan Domingo Perón, président de l'Argentine.
Juan Domingo Perón, President of Argentina.

Para. 9 There is perhaps another possibility in Germany. Economically, the western portion is the more powerful. If the Western Allies are forced to set up anything resembling a "state" in their area, its economic power, German nationalism and possibly even the long-standing disdain for the "barbarians of the East", might give the western portion of Germany the upper hand in the psychological tug-of-war between the two portions of the country — even though, unless Soviet policy changes, a prostrate eastern portion could not respond to the attraction of the other by actually joining it.

Para. 10 Here again reference is made to "the desire on the part of . . . the Soviet Union . . . to expand [its] defence area", which gives one a far too comforting picture of recent and current Soviet efforts to dominate other countries. Similarly, it is difficult to agree with the suggestion in the last line of this paragraph that the Soviet Union has an "appetite for security". As for the U.S., it would appear to have had far too little appetite for its own good.

Para. 11 Certainly the Communist movement outside the USSR has, at times, been in part a Soviet "defence area". However, is it not now an "offence area"? The Communists in France and Italy seem to acknowledge this fact quite openly.

Para. 17 Here the Soviet Union is presumed not to be interested in "grandiose schemes for world domination" or "gambling". Their schemes seem to be quite grandiose enough for the average Western consumer of political ideas. In fact, there seems to be every reason to believe that they are as far-reaching, geographically, as those of the Fascist megalomaniacs. As the general argument about the normally deliberate character of Soviet decisions seems reasonable, the remarks in para. 46, to the effect that Soviet policy is now based on a "gamble" that a depression is coming, would have to be modified. Doubtless the word "expectation" or something similar was meant in that paragraph.

Para. 18 The Soviet leaders are here said to believe that "truth and time" are on their side. In paragraph 2, however, they are said to fear possible armed attack from a United States refusing to allow its "seeds" to destroy it and, in para. 20, it is admitted that the Soviet Union might give up their faith in the workings of "truth and time". If, as is said in paragraph 47, the Soviet leaders are aware of the attraction which Western ideas exercise all over the world, it seems reasonable to believe that they have not too much faith in "truth and time" being on their side.

Para. 28 Here softening-up measures preparatory to Soviet armed attacks on the West and on the Far East are described thus: "In order to expand its defence area, the Soviet Union will pursue its orthodox policy of constantly probing for weak spots in the outer ring of defences . . . also it will try through . . . propaganda . . . to strengthen its defensive position by undermining national unity . . . and . . . try to strengthen its defensive position by promoting economic as well as political instability." Used in this way the words "defence" and "defensive" lose all normal meaning. At least when the Soviet Union is visualized as marching across the North Atlantic islands we can refer to that region as an "offensive" area.

Para. 31 It should perhaps be made clearer that the choice of a ten-year period of peace is a very arbitrary one.

Paras. 34—38 Again, it should be made clearer that the tentative conclusions reached in these paragraphs (regarding the effect of increased Soviet arms production, a Western economic depression, Stalin's death and the possibility of an accidental war) contain a strong speculative element. While it is concluded in para. 35 that a depression in the West would probably not alter the balance of power enough to tempt the Soviet Union into an armed attack, para. 46 states "such a depression would have incalculable political and economic effects on the other Western countries."

Paras. 44 & 45 The establishment of progressive but non-Communist governments in the Mediterranean area and the Far East will, of course, make us feel better but will not remove any Soviet desire that exists to gain control of those areas. As para. 47 points out, the possible success of this type of Government in the U.K. (a Government which was in no sense elected as a containing or defensive measure) is already "alarming" the Soviet Union.

Para. 49 It is, of course, difficult to generalize about the granting of independence to dependent peoples. In some cases the withholding of independence can drive them into the arms of the Soviet Union but, in others, premature independence can make them an easy prey to Soviet penetration.

Para. 57 When one remembers Mr. Vishinsky's first major address to the U.N. Assembly in September and his subsequent press conference in which he sought to reply to General Marshall's key-note speech, it is interesting to read the following description of the Soviet regard for self-control, quoted in this paragraph of the memorandum:

"The Russian leaders are keen judges of human psychology, and as such they are highly conscious that loss of temper and of self-control is never a source of strength in political affairs. They are quick to exploit such evidences of weakness. For these reasons, it is a sine qua non of successful dealing with Russia that the foreign government in question should remain at all time cool and collected."

Paras. 62 & 63 Here it is said that we need not drive the USSR out of the United Nations by making a Western alliance within the terms of the Charter. The ground is, however, shifted in paragraph 64 where such an alliance is favoured as worth the risk of Soviet withdrawal from the organization.

Paras. 66 to 70 need coordination. The picture starts off, in paras. 66 and 67, as rather gloomy but ends up, in para. 70 with the possibility of our having great influence in U.S. decisions. The part about "rocking the boat" in para. 67 needs toning down as it makes the U.S. sound like the villain of the piece. Also it might be pointed out, in the same paragraph, that while, in case of war, our freedom of action will be limited, the ability of the U.S. to undertake a great part of our defence will, in many important respects, be a very real compensation.

3. As the foregoing paragraphs indicate, my main criticism of the paper is that at various points it miscasts the roles of the Soviet Union and the U.S. Presumably, a realistic view of their aims and actions is based on the following two assumptions:

(a) While making allowances for distortions in the reports received in Moscow from Soviet representatives abroad, it can be assumed (as does the draft memorandum in para.) that the Soviet policy-makers receive at least some of the Western newspapers and periodicals together with the reports of some of the broadcasts made from Western countries and therefore have sufficient means of gaining a reasonably accurate picture of the aims and temper of the Western countries.

(b) If this is so, it can be assumed that the Soviet authorities have long known what value to place on the outpourings of private individuals in the West which have often been quite irresponsible.

4. This being the case, and as the later parts of the memorandum make it clear that it does not see much of the defensive in the Soviet position, the emphasis in describing Soviet and U.S. purposes and actions in the earlier sections of the paper might be slightly shifted so as to picture them on something like the following lines:

A liking for, and a desire to maintain, their political system and personal positions at home and an awareness of their economic and other weaknesses that the war has accentuated, quite possibly led the Soviet governing class, up to roughly early 1946, to consider an expansion of their control in neighbouring countries, and an encouragement of dislocations elsewhere as in part necessary to the security of the USSR.

However, at least since that time, when the Western military forces withered away and Soviet censorship controls remained intact, it has been obvious that they risked no armed attack or any psychological attack of any importance (unless as a result of their own aggressiveness). Since that time their motives for continuing to press for control of nearby countries and for maintaining their efforts to create disunity elsewhere have, as their own statements have so often demonstrated, been little more than the desire to extend the area of their political system and personal power just as far as possible coupled with a desire to bolster the economy of the USSR. There were no grounds for defensive motivation in the circumstances described.

The bitter campaign of slander against the Western countries that they have carried on since that time has been motivated by a desire to blunt domestic dissatisfaction over the harshness of their system and over economic difficulties but also, and even more, by a desire to justify to their people an expansionist policy and the risks to their people's lives and treasure which such a policy implies.

It cannot be denied that, as they have carried out an openly aggressive and expansionist policy for about two years and given every indication of intending to maintain that policy, they fear the effects of the defensive measures that the Western countries have been or are being forced to take, and also fear that the Western countries may ultimately attack them for purposes of self-preservation. That, however, is not to say that they are on the defensive: merely that they behave as though they have a prerogative for aggression.

They know just as well as we do that if, even at this stage, they were to cease outward pressure and be content to live as a peaceful nation, all Western defensive and containing measures would be abandoned forthwith and economic aid to war-torn areas would become a purely human undertaking and one which would benefit them. Despite the differences of political and economic systems, Western critics of the Soviet system could, in such circumstances, not succeed in mounting anything approaching an armed crusade against the U.S.S.R.

In view of this situation and the repeated refusal of the Soviet Union to participate in reasonable schemes for the solution of such vital questions as the control of atomic energy and the future of Germany, it is not surprising that the United States and the rest of the Western world have taken certain measures of defence. The main error of the West appears to be its slowness in adopting effective measures of that kind.

5. I assume that the revised edition of the memorandum will inevitably contain references to the U.S. which, however dispassionate, might upset U.S. readers, and that this will be taken into account if portions of the memorandum are passed to such bodies as the J.I.C.

243. DEA/52-F (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Washington, December 5, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

At long last I am answering your letter of September 8th† with which you enclosed a draft memorandum of Escott Reid's on the United States and the Soviet Union. If Escott Reid had not sent me a few days ago a copy of Ritchie's comments on the memorandum, I would still not have found time to comply with your request. The detailed and well-phrased suggestions forwarded by Ritchie under cover of his letter to you of November 6th made my task a great deal easier.

I am now enclosing two copies of two different papers. The first is a comment, paragraph by paragraph, on the original draft, which is intended to supplement and not to replace Ritchie's comments. The second is a memorandum entitled "Influences Shaping the Policy of the United States Towards the Soviet Union". This, except for the last two paragraphs, is based on a draft prepared by Hume Wright.[19] Paragraphs 21 and 22 are my contribution.

---

[19]H.H. Wright, troisième secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.
H.H. Wright, Third Secretary, Embassy in United States.

The purpose for which Reid's memorandum is being prepared and circulated has not been made clear in the correspondence that I have received. I suppose that it is probably intended to be a political appreciation on the chances of war with the Soviet Union, intended to supplement a military appreciation approved by the Chiefs of Staff. If so, the most important paragraphs in the memorandum would be paragraphs 31 and 72, which put the predictable "safe period" on current prospects at ten years. I have not received sufficient secret intelligence material to support this estimate without qualification, although my instinct is to agree that it is sound.

Yours sincerely,

HUME [WRONG]

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Note de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Memorandum by Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET Washington, December 3, 1947

COMMENT ON DRAFT MEMORANDUM DATED AUGUST 30TH ENTITLED "UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

The comments made below should be regarded as supplementary to the comments and suggested revisions made by Mr. Ritchie in his memorandum from Paris of November 6th. Mr. Ritchie selected for comment a large number of points which I had previously noted in reading the draft memorandum as needing alteration or amplification. I am in general agreement with almost everything that he writes, and think that the textual changes which he proposes might be incorporated pretty much as they stand.

There are a number of other points, however, which were not touched on by Mr. Ritchie that seem to me to be worth making. Some of them, it will be noted, are drafting points only.

Paragraph 1 I find the use of the phrase "defence area" in this paragraph and at many other points in the memorandum unsatisfactory. This may be a personal idiosyncracy. I suppose that what is meant is the geographical region which either the U.S. or the U.S.S.R. believes must be under its control or at least subject to its influence in order to protect effectively the homeland from attack. In modern warfare, however, a "defence area" must also be at least in part an "offence area", since, especially in aerial warfare, the counter offensive is the most effective defence.

In view of the alliance, or even the integration, of international communism with the policies of the Soviet state the strategy of the Soviet Government is very different from that which marked older imperialisms. It is not satisfied by gaining control of particular territories since the set objective is world revolution. Only the attainment of that objective could turn the U.S.S.R. into a "satisfied power". Too much emphasis on defence areas appears to me to obscure the issue.

On a minor point in paragraph 1, I suggest substituting another phrase for "the governing class" at the beginning.

Paragraph 3 I doubt that anything like an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States have a conscious desire to expand their "defence area". In this paragraph and at some other points in the memorandum the attempt to place in parallel terms the situations of the U.S. and U.S.S.R. results in distortion. I am pretty sure that if you asked a miscellaneous collection of Americans whether they wanted to expand their "defence area" nearly all would fail to understand what was meant, and, if it was explained to them, would then deny any such desire. They would, however, indulge in some pretty violent language about the Soviet Union and the "Reds".

Paragraph 4 As Mr. Ritchie suggests, I would omit this paragraph and also paragraph 6.

Paragraph 8 The phrase "Soviet influence" is used in the last two sentences. This has no very precise meaning. It seems to mean from the context that the U.S.S.R. demands that governments in the border regions mentioned should be amenable to Soviet control on any matter of concern to the Soviet Union. It does not mean that the extension of Soviet influence over the governments has influenced the inhabitants of these territories to love the Soviet Union. In short, the influence is on the governments and the communist parties rather than on the population as a whole.

Paragraph 9 A Communist and Soviet dominated state in eastern Germany ought not to have "a very considerable attraction" for other Germans if the three other occupying powers avoid making a mess of the rest of Germany. I agree with Mr. Ritchie's proposed addition after this sentence.

Paragraph 10 I doubt that the last two sentences are an historically sound generalization. The United States, after all, had shown by its record in the first war that it could be a great military power, but instead of "extending its defence area" the pressure was to reduce external commitments.

Paragraph 11 Should the role of the Communist parties outside the Soviet sphere be regarded as defensive or offensive? Is their part in the present disturbances in France and Italy defensive only?

Paragraph 13 I wonder whether it is still true to say that the Soviet policy is "to separate the U.S. from the United Kingdom." Lately they have been attacking both "imperialisms" in the same speeches and on the same lines. It looks as though they had for the present given up hope of splitting the two countries (and indeed their present degree of solidarity is attributable largely to Soviet attacks), and are concentrating now mainly on the European Continent.

Paragraph 14 I think the last sentence might begin "They are carried."

Paragraph 16 Ritchie's lengthy comment is useful and timely. The phrase "preventive war" is thrown about pretty loosely these days. I believe that, while concern is growing in the U.S. that war with Russia is inevitable sooner or later, those who would advocate an attack on the U.S.S.R. under the guise of a preventive war are negligible in number. What is happening, however, is spreading public support for effective military preparation for war, and this is likely to continue to grow unless there is a marked change in Soviet policies, or at least in their public expression.

Paragraph 17 In this paragraph and at other points later in the memorandum emphasis is placed on the realism of Soviet policy. This seems to me to be an abuse of language for anyone except a convinced Marxist. In paragraph 29 the phrase occurs "in spite of their Marxist religion and their realism." One can call Soviet policy hardboiled, brutal, uncouth, hardhitting, and so on, but in what sense can it be said to have been realistic in the last two years? The Secretary of State pointed out in his recent Chicago speech lost opportunities since the end of the war, which were lightly thrown away by the Soviet leaders presumably because they did not recognize them. I am glad that they have made so many blunders, because more than anything else this has produced a vigorous foreign policy in the United States. Let us not call their blundering diplomacy realism. It probably has, of course, a fairly realistic domestic purpose in that it may help to maintain the hold of the Politburo over the Russian masses through threatening them with a series of foreign bogeymen.

Paragraph 27 I should drop the sentence reading, "The chances of adequate preventive measures being taken do not appear to be very good." It may be true, but it is at least arguable and the point is not necessary to the general argument.

Paragraph 28 One of the most difficult things to weigh in considering the argument of Part 3 of the memorandum is the degree to which it is proper to consider Communist parties outside the Soviet sphere as agents of Moscow in peace and in war. The leaders of these parties, nearly all of whom have been Moscow trained, can probably be considered as acting in the dual role of Communist propagandist and agent of the Soviet Government. As they lay down the local party line, it also appears that the membership of the Communist parties is more dominated by Moscow than is in fact the case.

Paragraph 31 The last phrase about frightening the United States has an unnecessarily supercilious flavour.

Paragraph 32 While I think it is probably quite true that the U.S.S.R. requires a long period for economic reconstruction, I can detect in declarations of Soviet policy little evidence that this is "a main objective". The explanation may well be that they feel confident, as they should, that nobody is going to attack them and that it is therefore safe for them to whip up the emotions of the Russian people by indiscriminate charges of warmongering against the rest of the world in order to induce the Russian people to be obedient, to forego consumers' goods and to direct a large part of their productive effort into the rebuilding and expansion of plant. The last sentence of this paragraph might be construed as meaning that the United States was expected to stand still in power during the period of the Soviet five-year plans. On another point, is there general evidence of weariness of the Soviet leaders? Stalin seems to be aging fast, but Molotov, Zdanov[20] and others seem to retain their energy. On a verbal point, I think lots of other words besides apathy can be found to describe the attitude of the Russian people.

[20]Probablement A.A. Jdanov, chef, Commission des Relations étrangères du Conseil de l'Union de l'Union soviétique, secrétaire du Comité central du Parti communiste; président, Conseil de l'Union. Probably A.A. Zhdanov, Chief, Commission on Foreign Relations of Council of Union of Soviet Union; Secretary, Central Committee of Communist Party; President, Council of Union.

Paragraph 34 I doubt that we know nearly enough to speak confidently about the development of new weapons in the U.S.S.R. From the evidence it seems very likely that they are a long way from producing atomic explosives, but what about some of the other "weapons of mass destruction" including particularly biological warfare.

Paragraph 39 This seems to repeat in different language what has already been said in paragraph 31. I think another word than "panic" should be found for the state of mind which might conceivably arise in the United States.

Paragraph 40 In this and the next paragraph and also later the need is emphasized for "an overwhelming balance of force" on the side of the Western powers. The word overwhelming rather disturbs me, and I think it would be better to substitute for it some phrase such as "evident and certain".

Paragraph 42 One of the aspects of U.S. policy and opinion which disturbs me at present is that it seems very negative with respect to the neutral and dissident elements inside the Soviet sphere. For instance, on the figures Poland was entitled to a share of post-UNRRA relief. The State Department recommended a much smaller share than the figures seemed to warrant, but this was refused by Congress. A boycott of countries regarded as under Soviet influence has the effect of matching the iron curtain by another curtain closed from this side. It is admittedly a very difficult question to decide what can or should be done to aid and comfort those sympathetic to western ideas in countries such as Poland, Hungary and Roumania, and it is still more difficult to decide whether anything valuable can be done to appeal to persons inside the Soviet Union who may be fed up with the Soviet way of life.

In connection with this and other points of the memorandum I sometimes wonder how valid is the underlying assumption behind the policy of the United States, Canada and other democratic countries that, if given a fair trial, our aims directed towards personal liberty would triumph. Mr. Ritchie has something to say about this in his redraft of paragraph 43.

Paragraph 47 I particularly like Mr. Ritchie's comment on this.

Paragraph 52 I do not understand the last part of the last sentence. How can the Russians expect by misleading us about their economic strength to get more assistance than the countries with which we are "exceptionally friendly"?

Paragraph 53 I think that this might be expanded a little. I have sometimes commented to American friends here that the Soviet capacity for blundering diplomacy is not a very firm foundation for a forward American foreign policy. It is agreed that the Russians have never let us down by avoiding the making of blunders at critical times. If the Russians were able to change their tune entirely and go back to the sort of line that they took in 1942 and '43, a feeling of sympathy for them might again grow up. They show, however, no tendency to do this. It is, nevertheless, an unhappy fact that the major incentive for the United States to assume its world responsibilities is dislike of Russia and Communism.

Paragraph 55 I think the last sentence, which is not really relevant to the argument, is better omitted as it introduces side issues.

Paragraph 61 The same comment applies to the last five sentences of this paragraph, which would lead one off the track into meditation on what sort of an international federal institution UNESCO might be turned into. This paragraph and the rest of Part 5 both have for me a doctrinaire flavour and might with advantage be recast with a number of omissions.

Paragraphs 68 to 70 I think that these may possibly exaggerate the extent of our potential influence in Washington on U.S. policy. Certainly at a time when control of Congress is in the hands of a party opposed to the Administration it is unusually hard to guess what our weight would be if we sought to exercise it to deflect U.S. policy from a line liked by the majority in Congress.

Paragraph 73 I do not know how it is possible to tell that the Soviet leaders are suffering from frustration. Ritchie's comments on this paragraph are to the point. What we want to make the Soviet leaders think is that they cannot get away with the line they are taking and that a much more co-operative line is both practicable and desirable from their point of view.

Paragraph 74 Like Ritchie, I consider the historical generalization about similar civilizations living peaceably together is unsound. We need not go back further than 1914 to find impressive examples to the contrary.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Note de l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Memorandum by Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET Washington, December 4, 1947

INFLUENCES SHAPING THE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES TOWARDS THE SOVIET UNION

This paper is an examination of the United States' long term policy towards the U.S.S.R., with particular reference to current popular thinking and to the criticisms which are being levelled against it. Tendencies towards belligerence, interference and insensitivity to national preferences in dealing with other states are accusations not automatically absurd through wild extravagance.

2. The broad purposes of U.S. policy as defined by Mr. Marshall at Harvard are beyond criticism. On that occasion he said: "Its purpose should be the revival of a working economy in the world so as to permit the emergence of political and social conditions in which free institutions can exist . . . . Furthermore, governments, political parties or groups which seek to perpetuate human misery in order to profit therefrom politically or otherwise will encounter the opposition of the United States." The general policy of containing Soviet expansive tendencies (without considering for the moment its geographical application) is in this paper accepted as deserving support.

3. Given these admirable general purposes, a very significant point in U.S.-U.S.S.R. relations is the question of the ability of the United States to support a long term policy of reviving the world economy, and of containing the Soviet Union patiently and firmly with due regard for Mr. Kennan's caveat: "It is important to note, however, that such a policy has nothing to do with outward histrionics: with threats or blustering or superfluous gestures of outward 'toughness'." The European recovery programme, as Mr. Marshall made clear in his statement concerning it before the Congressional Committee on November 10th,† is designed to prevent the domination of the continent of Europe by a single great power. Consideration therefore of the U.S. policy for containing the Soviet Union must include at least all Europe.

4. Although the main direction of American foreign policy in international affairs must be welcomed in all democratic countries, there are flaws in its structure which could become fissures. It may seem carping and idle to concentrate on flaws in U.S. foreign policy, when that of the U.S.S.R. can be damned practically in toto. But it is precisely the character of Soviet foreign policy that puts a premium on the soundness and wisdom of U.S. policy when the perils for the world in the struggle are considered.

5. While it is fantastic to assert that the people of the United States or their leaders wish to dominate the world, or to start a preventive war, it would be dishonest to ignore both the existence of influences in the United States which work towards some U.S. domination of the lives of alien peoples, and also an attitude which might result in dangerously noisy and provocative methods in the task of stemming the flow of Soviet influence. The incipient risk of putting the Soviet Government in the position where it would feel bound to go to war is contained in these trends, but perhaps a greater danger is that the confidence and support of other nations in the intentions of the United States may be weakened to the extent where the broad aims of U.S. policy would be gravely undermined. Of course, the mere fact that the United States is so rich, strong and physically undamaged by war makes her an object of automatic suspicion in the international community. Incidentally, all this should not be taken to mean that no one in the United States talks about a preventive war. For instance, Joseph Alsop, writing of the reaction of isolationist Congressmen abroad, states they were "suddenly heard saying, all over Europe, that we might as well have another war and get it over with." This kind of thinking is occasionally evident in private conversation. It would be wrong, however, to regard such opinions as necessarily supporting an early onslaught on the Soviet Union. They are the product of a sense of acute strain, not unlike that which prevailed between the German occupation of Czechoslovakia and the attack on Poland. "War is the only way out", these people reason, "Let's get the beastly prospect out of the way as soon as we can."

6. Mr. Sumner Welles's[21] view of some undesirable aspects of U.S. policy merits consideration. He wrote on September 23rd: "The military mentality predominates in Washington . . . . There is an increasing tendency in our diplomacy to assume [21]Ancien sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis.

Former Under-Secretary of State of United States.

that, because the United States has the armed forces and the dollars upon which the safety and the recovery of other peoples presently depend, the right of these peoples to determine their own internal policies, and their right to be treated as sovereign equals, may be wholly disregarded . . . . Unless those now in charge of American foreign policy recognize the need for a basic change of attitude in their dealings with our democratic allies, we may well fail to achieve our national objectives." Justice Jackson of the Supreme Court has spoken of "careless, threatening or boastful words by Americans in places of responsibility." An indication of sentiment in the country at large was supplied by a Gallup Poll, published on October 29th, which contained the question: "Do you think that in dealing with Russia and other countries the United States is insisting too much on having its own way?" The vote was Yes..12%, No..78%, and No Opinion..10%. The question is, of course, somewhat loaded in the favour of a high No vote, since Russia and other countries are lumped together, but the percentages are nevertheless significant.

7. A trend in Congressional sentiment towards some U.S. direction of the internal economy of countries receiving assistance was revealed when the provisional conclusions of the Select Committee on Foreign Aid (Herter Committee of the House of Representatives) were published. The Herter group proposed among other things that local administrative boards be set up in each of the recipient countries, with U.S. citizens in majority control, to manage the proceeds in local currencies of the sale of U.S. goods. Such funds would be utilized for rebuilding the wealth of these countries, and also for producing some critical materials for stockpiling in the United States. This scheme, however, is prompted rather by distrust of the capacity of some of the governments concerned to refrain from use of these funds for unwise and transient purposes, such as to finance budgetary deficits, than by a desire to fashion their economic development on an American pattern.

8. A number of these indications of undesirable influences emanate from responsible sources. This is certainly not true of the raucus [sic] editorial page of the Washington Times Herald, which provides an almost comical example of swaggering and vicious belligerence. Infuriated by charges about imperialism, the Times Herald said: "If these insults about 'imperialism' and the like go on and on and on, there can come a time when our mass feeling will be: 'Okay; if they insist on calling us Hitlers, let's do some Hitlering' — meaning let's go out and kick a few of these smear artists' store teeth down their lying throats . . . . If we really put our backs into it, we could probably lick the world."

9. It is a tantalizingly difficult problem to attempt judgment on the significance that should be attached to these unfortunate tendencies. However, the appealing conclusion that little weight should be accorded to them, because U.S. society has frequently exhibited in the past strident and sometimes vicious characteristics, is insufficient. The United States is no longer in isolation but occupies a position, in a period of nerve-cracking tension, where her actions basically affect the day-to-day existence of whole countries. The unstable and irresponsible side of the United States is inevitably of vital concern to the world. In fact, this seems to have been in Mr. Kennan's mind when he mentioned threats and blustering and wrote of the sine qua non that "the foreign government in question should remain at all times cool and collected."

10. The most tangible cause for the potential shifts and changes in emphasis of American policy is, of course, found in the U.S. Constitution. But in addition to the uncertainties, deadlocks and frustrations to which a system of divided powers is peculiarly susceptible, the Administration's lack of control over the legislature tends to debase the framing and execution of foreign policy. The necessity for appeasing Congress to get foreign policy dollars has an important bearing in the formulation of policy by the Administration, and the same sensitivity to Congressional reaction in its application is compelled by the critical vigilance of Congress, and the fact that hearings for appropriations are never far away. And, of course, Congressional pressure is directly exerted by important amendments which are voted into the Administration's measures.

11. In this general connection it is crystal clear in the case of Congress that no single reason or combination of reasons can approach the basic motive of rabid anti-Communism as the driving motive for expending huge funds for a European recovery programme. This Congress after all is eager to cut taxes and slash federal expenditures, and has economized on such domestic matters as soil conservation payments, school lunch funds, reclamation and power projects.

12. One concrete explanation of the cheapening effect that Congress exerts on foreign policy is that thinking in the House of Representatives, where there is little compulsion for a member to look beyond the borders of his own district, is not apt to be farsighted, disinterested or knowledgeable. Although the Senators are inclined to take a somewhat broader view, the same conditions often apply on a state-wide scale. It is to be remembered that as foreign policy now has a very high dollar content, the House of Representatives, which must appropriate the money, is no longer willing to leave Congressional direction to the Senate.

13. The Congressional factor alone serves to indicate the very difficult task of keeping U.S. foreign policy on a high and level plane. This difficulty is, however, multiplied and complicated by a complex of forces inside the United States which threaten to promote bluster and confusion in the short run. In the more distant future, the pressure of economic forces could lead to the abandonment of an adequate policy. The component parts of the mixture of more immediate concern may perhaps be listed as inexperience in international affairs, unbalanced and blinding hatred and fear of Communism, an inability to comprehend the state of the European mind, and lastly, plain ignorance of some elementary historical facts.

14. Inexperience is partly responsible for several noticeable U.S. characteristics in international affairs. Henry L. Stimson[22] wrote in the October Foreign Affairs that "it is no wonder" that the United States "suddenly placed in the center of the alarms and excursions of international affairs is abnormally sensitive." This sensitivity is not diminished by the fact that from the high moral ground of isolationism the United States has long been accustomed to indulge in indignation over the machinations of imperial ambitions of European powers. This combination of inexperience and self-righteousness in international affairs does not make it any easier for the U.S. to see the point of view of others. Acting generously as she is, this country feels entitled to admiration, affection and respect and feels inordinately abused when her motives come under suspicion.

[22]Ancien secrétaire à la Guerre des États-Unis.
Former Secretary of War of United States.

15. Many grounds are, of course, woven into the blinding unbalanced fear and hatred of Russia and Communism prevalent in this country. One simple element which has not much to do with ideology is that the United States is glitteringly wealthy in an impoverished world. "We have got a stack of groceries", General Hershey, wartime head of Selective Service, said in a speech, "and you cannot rely on goodwill to protect you from hungry people." Yet, of course, it would be a gross over-simplification to explain the antagonism by this reason alone. In addition to being the only power which is now strong enough to threaten the national security of the United States, the Soviet Union is the center of an ideology devoted to the overthrow of capitalism. Thus there are practical and immediate reasons for the total hatred of the Soviet Union and Communism inside and outside Russia displayed by very powerful groups in the United States. Lastly, and most importantly, Communism is now disliked by virtually all the citizens of the United States. There is no pressure or temptation to forfeit the enjoyment of personal freedoms at a time of unprecedented prosperity and full employment. As Gunther says in his recent book: "The Communists, no matter how they are belaboured by rightwing fanatics, represent no authentic indigenous American force." This deep and inclusive dislike of Communism is given a vicious twist by national groups which use indiscriminate anti-Communism against all criticism aimed at them. Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr., writing in the New York Times, stated in this connection: "Many conservatives are happily pouncing upon the Communist scare as an excuse for silencing all critics of business supremacy." At this point, anti-Communism becomes pernicious, and it unfortunately seems to have penetrated the State Department, perhaps as a result of Congressional pressure. Granting, of course, the Government's right to protect itself against Communists and Communist dupes, the published account of the hearing given a State Department employee, who was dismissed as a security risk, shows that he was presented with no inkling of the charges against him in spite of what appeared to be desperately earnest enquiries on his part.

16. The inability to comprehend the European outlook may have been ameliorated by the exodus of 250 Congressmen to Europe this summer. It would, however, be surprising if this country understood the overriding sense of instability and fear which plagues Europe. While it would be a fantastic perversion of fact to belittle the immense contribution of the United States in the Second World War, it is nevertheless true to say that the war's impact was very slight here in comparison with what Europeans lived through and are now living with in consequence of war. With respect to the attitude of Americans towards Europe, Mr. Stimson made some pertinent remarks in his article. "As we take part in the rebuilding of Europe, we must remember that we are building world peace, not an American peace. Freedom demands tolerance, and many Americans have much to learn about the variety of forms which free societies may take . . . . We cannot ask that Europe be rebuilt in the American image."

17. The ignorance of history heightens these difficulties, and both Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Marshall have remarked on it. Mr. Marshall asserted in a recent speech that many Americans did not know enough history to understand what was happening in the world, and then said: "I have felt in our dealing with Congress that one of our great troubles is the limitation in the knowledge of what has happened in the past." In his book, Mr. Byrnes wrote that few Americans are well informed on Russian history. The fact that Czarist Russia acquired more territory than the Soviets have to date (including the Baltic Republics) has no significance for most Americans. It is not generally recognized, as Mr. Byrnes puts it, "that expansionism is not an innovation of the Communist regime. It is rooted in Russian history. Only the personalities and the tactics have changed." Soviet acquisition of territory is generally attributed solely to Communistic wickedness, which does not contribute to perspective in dealing with the problems of Eastern Europe.

18. Rolled together, these underlying fears seem to produce to a large extent typical U.S. traits in international affairs. One is the attitude at times taken by U.S. officials, when they give the impression that the only criterion that governs their attitude, regardless of the merits of the issues involved, is that it should be rigidly anti-Soviet at every turn. These attributes may also explain why, in Sumner Welles's words, "public opinion in this country seems to be blandly unaware that a parallel might be drawn between the policy pursued by the United States in the past three years toward some of its neighbors, and the policy of the Soviet Union toward the smaller states of eastern Europe." The danger of under-estimating the attachment of other nations to their own culture and institutions, while over-estimating the sales value of the American way of life, is also wrapped up in these influences. The central factor of rabid anti-Communism produces a feeling that if every vestige of Communism were to disappear overnight, no real problems would remain. In his article, Mr. Stimson got to the roots of this delusion, when he wrote:

"The essential question is one which we should have to answer if there were not a Communist alive. Can we make freedom and prosperity real in the present world? If we can, Communism is no threat. If not, with or without Communism, our own civilization would ultimately fail."

In its more extreme form this kind of wishfulness inspires thoughts of a preventive war without any consideration of the questions that would have to be given attention in its aftermath, such as the occupation of the U.S.S.R., and perhaps trying to prevent revolt or the spread of anarchy in a vast area in Europe and Asia, with the spectre in the background of an Eurasian onslaught against the West far more terrifying than Communism.

19. At present these tendencies may shape U.S. foreign policy towards the satellites bordering the Soviet Union and towards Germany. In his "Cold War" series, Lippmann was critical of the objectives of U.S. foreign policy in the borderlands of the U.S.S.R., claiming that it could be implemented only by an unreliable "coalition of disorganized, disunited, feeble and disorderly nations, tribes and factions around the perimeter of the Soviet Union." This policy of attempting to ring the Soviet tightly, he saw as not only unworkable but as resulting also in the alienation of the nations of the Atlantic community, the natural allies of the United States.

From this position he proceeded to exhort the United States to concentrate on the main task of accomplishing the evacuation of Europe by the allied armies. This advice was no doubt superfluous and unhelpful, but his first criticism, while perhaps overstated, seems to be substantial. It is illogical to suppose that a victorious Russia, whether Czarist or Communist would not have spilled over the confining borders imposed by the Treaty of Brest-Litovsk. But, more to the point, it is difficult to see what means the western powers have at their disposal for eliminating Soviet domination from the belt of her satellites in eastern Europe. To act effectively in this region under the present conditions would mean to act aggressively; to act ineffectively and noisily would be to act provocatively.

20. As for Germany, it does not yet appear to be certain that the development of U.S. policy there will not depart from the essential considerations of policy, history and psychology in favour of the "practical and efficient approach" of treating Germany like a bankrupt company, which should be made profitable and productive as quickly as possible. Despite the fact that many people in the U.S., obsessed with the perils of Communism, seem to be forgetting that the war was fought against German aggression, the nations of western Europe will not. Broadly speaking, it can hardly be disputed that policy in the West must be squarely aimed at assuring the safety of the western democracies from renewed German aggression, and making the Ruhr's steel and coal serve the economies of western Europe rather than Germany's alone. The economic goal will be missed if an unrepentant and unregenerated Germany is reconstituted under a central government, or if the western half is rebuilt and permitted to coalesce. The political objective would also be in real jeopardy in either case. If a provisional and central authority in a federated German state is established (which seems unlikely, although Mr. Marshall presented it as an aim of U.S. foreign policy at Chicago on November 18th), it seems probable that the Soviets will not withdraw from their zone without having conceived some ruthless scheme to hold eastern Germany under their grip. For instance, it sounds only too probable that the rumoured "free German" army under Von Paulus was trained for the purpose. If the Soviets hold on to their zone, German unity as a whole might well have to be bought at the Russian price. Those who are attempting to conceive a strong western Germany as a barrier to Communism might do well to remember that western Germany is not a gun with a traverse of 90° only, facing east.

21. It is apparent from what has already been said that the consciousness of the people of the United States of their responsibilities in the world community depends too greatly for comfort on their dislike and fear of the Soviet Union and the Communist ideology. This dislike and fear results in distortions and exaggerations which increase the difficulty of achieving a negotiated settlement between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. It also provides the Soviet propaganda mill with a steady supply of useable material. It has to be remembered, nevertheless, that if there had not been developed such powerful and widespread popular emotions, there would have been strong tendencies to move backwards from the wartime position of full involvement in international affairs all over the world, towards the pre-war aloofness which it took Pearl Harbor to terminate decisively. The contest between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. is providing the necessary popular foundation for a vigorous foreign policy, and it has put those leaders who still possess strong isolationist leanings, such as Senator Taft and Speaker Martin, in the position of opening themselves to charges of lack of patriotism if they attack the general trend; they are therefore reduced to the role of critics of its details.

22. The extravagances appearing in the press and in speeches in Congress are, of course, embarrassing to those responsible for the actual conduct of U.S. policy; but we must bear with them, for without them the rest of the world would be worse off. For example, they are part of the price to be paid for the Marshall Plan. It seems likely that in historical retrospect there will stand out as a supreme example of ignorant and short-sighted leadership the way in which the Soviet Government threw away the immense prestige earned by the Soviet Union by its record in the war. The masters of Russia might by different tactics have attained all, or nearly all, their immediate purposes without arousing the hatred and suspicion of the people of the United States, who might have slipped back towards the mood of the fool's paradise of the Kellogg Pact. The rest of the world should probably be thankful for the folly or ignorance of the Politburo.

244. DEA/52-F (S)

A.C. Smith, du Collège de la Défense nationale, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

A.C. Smith, National Defence College, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Kingston, December 10, 1947

Dear Sir:

I apologise for delaying so long before replying to your memorandum of 13th September† and sending in, as requested, my comments on the top secret memorandum drafted by Mr. Reid on "The United States and the Soviet Union."

2. Needless to say, I found the memorandum intensely interesting. This memo, revised perhaps in the light of comments from the various members of our service, should prove most valuable in clarifying our minds on the fundamental question of relations with the USSR, and in helping us toward a consensus which, while inevitably not final or dogmatic, should make for increased consistency and effectiveness in day-to-day policies. In a matter so crucial as relations between the West and Russia such a consensus seems to me particularly desirable, since decisions on day-to-day questions, often themselves only very indirectly related to the USSR, will over a period of time go far to determine the background against which the big issues with the USSR are settled.

3. However my second comment is to register dissent from the "bi-polarity" aspect of the analysis, which is expressed in the title ("The United States and the Soviet Union") and which underlies section one and to a lesser extent some of the other early sections. This bi-polarity analysis implies that international tension, and the main danger of war, arises from the interplay of U.S. and Soviet expansion, and from the existence of two overwhelming centres of power in the present world.

4. My own view is that the danger of war arises almost exclusively from the existence and expansionist policies of the present regime in the USSR. If the United States did not exist as an overwhelming centre of power, or if its policies were isolationist rather than what Mr. Reid calls expansionist, the danger to the rest of us of war or of the results of a lost war would be greater, not less. Without U.S. strength and firmness, other countries would I think be increasingly faced with the choice between war (on less favourable terms) or surrender and subjection without war — as were e.g. Estonia and Finland in 1939 and 1940. In my view, therefore, the "bi-polarity" analysis is objectively somewhat misleading.

5. I also consider the "Two poles" theory somewhat dangerous, to the extent that it becomes widely current, in its psychological implications for national policies. For it tends to encourage a feeling of neutrality ("a pox on both your houses"), which is already dangerously widespread in such regions as Latin America, Scandinavia, and to some extent in Western Europe as a whole. This "neutral" psychology tends to favor the totalitarians by throwing on to one strong power (the U.S.) almost the whole weight of resistance to a common menace.

6. There are two other points of underlying analysis, in which my own views differ somewhat from those expressed in Mr. Reid's memorandum. And while I am in general agreement with most of Mr. Reid's practical conclusions regarding desirable lines for western policy during the next few years, I am inclined to come to opposite conclusions about the relative advantages and disadvantages to the democracies of continued Soviet participation in the United Nations.

7. My second basic point of difference concerns the role, in the present conflict, which is played by the existence of the two very different ideologies and ways of life represented by Western democracy and Soviet totalitarianism. I do not believe that the Soviet regime can be said to be inspired by a "belief in" their own way of life in any sense corresponding to that in which we believe in democracy. I am enclosing a memorandum† which I prepared recently for the Defence College, but which is I think relevant here. In section III of this memo I tried to examine this question of ideologies, and put forward the following theses:

(a) That the Soviet regime is not inspired by a belief in the superiority of its own way of life; but on the contrary that it seems to act on the assumption that its own system is inherently inferior.

(b) That to the extent that Western Societies adopt social systems more like that of the USSR, the fear of the Soviet leaders will increase, not decrease.

There are certain other theses on this general subject in the attached memorandum, but these two will suffice to suggest the important differences between this approach and that which is suggested in the early sections, and in the concluding paragraph (#74), of Mr. Reid's memorandum.

8. My third fundamental point of difference concerns Soviet motives. This is a difficult matter, but in my view it is unwise to assume that basic motives of the Soviet regime are defensive — except perhaps in a very special sense. This last qualification is, briefly, that to the extent that the Soviet rulers believe war is really inevitable, the "offensive — defensive" dichotomy becomes meaningless and the two words represent merely different facets of the same thing. For practical purposes I am inclined to think that the determining motive of Soviet policy, external and internal, can best be described as a nihilist pursuit of power for its own sake. Section II of my attached memo is an attempt to analyse Soviet motives in some detail.

9. The final main point of difference relates to the relative advantages and disadvantages, from the point of view of maintaining peace, of continued Soviet participation in the United Nations. I quite agree with Mr. Reid that there might ultimately be real advantage in having in existence a constitutional structure which includes both worlds, to facilitate an eventual rapprochement if and when the Soviet regime mellows. But we cannot afford to pay too great a cost for this.

10. The most important measure which we can take to diminish the danger of war is to organise an overwhelming and effective preponderance of strength in the non-Soviet three-quarters of the world. For this purpose I think that a UN from which the USSR was excluded would be the most effective instrument. I do not fully share Mr. Reid's view that we can do as much by a "mutual assistance pact" within the UN, (on present membership) as we could do with the UN itself if the Soviet Union were outside. In section V to VIII of the attached memorandum I examine the various considerations which have led me to believe that on balance we would be substantially better off if the Soviet Union ceased to belong to U.N.

11. The most important of my reasons are:

(1) Technical A broad alliance is less effective than an overall international organization in the constitutional weight given to its various members in the determination of its policies; and in its moral appeal — which could be decisive in wavering areas and in such questions as securing bases in e.g. Iceland or the Middle East, where "anti-imperialist" feeling is important. It would be easier for a government to make concessions to a leading international organization in which it is a member than to any foreign country or any mere alliance of foreign countries.

(2) Moral An alliance would be distinct from the various international bodies doing constructive economic, social, and cultural work, and hence would not draw to itself all the moral support which a purged UN (with its Economic and Social Council and a close integration of the Specialized Agencies) could command. It would be easier for wavering nations to stay out of a military alliance (if they could remain as members of UN and the Specialized Agencies) than it would be for them to sit out of the one comprehensive organization of the international community.

(3) Psychological To organize a "mutual defense pact" inside UN [sic], while retaining UN for its useful work in non-military fields and continuing to pay allegiance, at least formally, to all the organs and the Charter of UN itself, would seem to many people somewhat machiavellian and over-subtle. It would inevitably cause confusion among important sections of the public in various countries, at a time when clarity of thought is above all desired.

12. I recognize of course that the USSR, for these very reasons, is unlikely to withdraw voluntarily from UN. A mutual assistance pact may be the best we can do in the immediate future. I should however hope that this is merely a step towards the more complete and co-ordinated organization of three-quarters of the world in one international society, with its various interrelated organs and activities.

13. I am however not certain that the Soviet Union would never withdraw from UN, and in section IX-A of the enclosed memorandum, I have attempted to explore various methods which might in due course be used (if wide international agreement were first obtained on their desirability) to encourage the Soviet Union to secede on its own initiative.

14. I should add that I fully share the hope that the USSR may mellow and eventually be integrated with the world community. I suspect however that (unless there is an internal crack-up in the USSR — which we cannot count on though I do not think it impossible by any means) the process of mellowing may take a very considerable time. If we are wise, meanwhile, we can organize ourselves into a world society (three-quarters of the world, to be exact) sufficiently strong to minimize the danger of Soviet attack, and which will allow us to concentrate attention in foreign policy on constructive questions relating to the economic, cultural, and social welfare of the non-Soviet peoples. The emphasis in such a comprehensive organization would be essentially positive; whereas the emphasis in a "mutual assistance pact" would inevitably be negative, focused on the regrettable necessities of security rather than on the stimulating promises of a richer life in fuller freedom.

15. This positive approach which I am suggesting could (and I am optimistic enough to believe that it will) allow humanity to draw direct benefits even from the terrible menace of another war which Soviet aggressiveness threatens. The creation of Canada, the USA, and other great societies out of smaller and uncoordinated units in the past has been inspired in large part by the necessities of defence. Present dangers may prove similarly creative and useful, in the vaster sphere.

16. Meanwhile, it is important to take with us, psychologically, those nations which we want to bring in to our new organization. Present public opinion in Europe and elsewhere does not as yet seem sufficiently developed to support such a program as here envisaged. This must affect our timing. It is important that North American policy should not seem unreasonable to those in more disrupted, and more immediately menaced, continents.

17. I agree with those who stress the value of combining with our firmness toward the USSR a policy of patience and even magnanimity. I believe however that these two virtues are most likely to govern western policy, and to be effective, after we have made ourselves secure: the policy I suggest is calculated to put us in a position where we can afford to wait, and even to make concessions to save Russian face and to encourage the hoped-for mellowing. In the meantime, we must remember that though in Anglo-Saxon countries there is a traditional tendency to favour the weaker side, this is an emotional luxury made habitual by our centuries of strength. In most other parts of the world the deep-rooted tendency is still the opposite — to side with those who give most promise of strength. Since we want most of these other peoples with us, we must not let them underestimate our power.

18. In conclusion, I should add that I am sending under separate cover, in a day or so, a memorandum embodying the few comments I have to offer on detailed points in Mr. Reid's memorandum, as distinct from my more general comments which I have tried to set out here.

19. The memorandum attached to this letter, which I have called "The Russians and the Rest of Us", is one which I drafted some time ago as notes for the directing staff of the National Defence College on two of the problems which we are setting our students. Naturally I made it clear that it represents only my personal views, and not necessarily those of the Department. I shall however welcome any comments which members of the Department have to make on it.

Yours sincerely,

ARNOLD C. SMITH

245. DEA/52-F (S)

Le ministre en Italie
au sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Minister in Italy
to Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TRÈS SECRET Rome, le 11 décembre 1947

Mon cher ami,

En réponse à votre lettre du 3 octobre,† qui ne m'est parvenue que vers la minovembre, j'ai le plaisir de vous remettre, sous ce pli, les commentaires que me suggère le projet de mémoire de M. Escott Reid sur "Les États-Unis et l'Union Soviétique."

Comme vous le verrez, ces commentaires ont pour objet de compléter cette Partie 6e du mémoire qui s'intitule "Incidence sur la politique canadienne." Ils ont été rédigés avec la collaboration de M. Manion.[23]

Je vous prie d'agréer, mon cher ami, toutes mes excuses pour ce retard involontaire à répondre à votre invitation de vous faire tenir mes observations, en même temps que l'expression de mes sentiments les plus cordiaux.

JEAN DÉSY

[23]J.P. Manion, conseiller (Commerce), légation en Italie.
J.P. Manion, Commercial Secretary, Legation in Italy.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note de la légation en Italie

Memorandum by Legation in Italy

TOP SECRET Rome, December 11, 1947

COMMENTS ON MEMORANDUM "THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION"

Propaganda should take the form, not of justifying the Capitalist system "per se", but of underlining the results upon the masses of the people of a system which has ceased to be purely capitalistic in its present state of evolution.

The word Capitalism is necessarily weak as a point of departure for counter-propaganda and should be deleted altogether from our vocabulary, since it has been stigmatized to such a degree as to immediately create a counter-indication in the mind of the patient. The word Democracy by itself is equally weak, since the USSR has constantly used this term to describe their own form of government.

I think the best counter-propaganda term is "The Western type of Democracy", which immediately makes a distinction with that of the USSR, and suggests the possibility of a disparaging comparison.

In describing the "Western type of Democracy", the stress should be laid not so much on freedom of enterprise, which is the financial or capitalist approach, but on the benefits derived by the worker — freedom of movement, freedom to choose employment, freedom to relinquish incompatible employment, the freedom from "fear of the boss" that these other freedoms entail, and, finally, the freedom to strike which is denied in the USSR.

Stress should be laid on the fact that in the more highly developed of the Western democracies, Trade Unions and the workers themselves have accumulated enough wealth to be able to strike, if necessary, for several weeks or even months, thus having a hold over industry which is impossible in the less-developed areas.

Thus, in a country like Italy, for instance, circumstances have prevented full development, which can be achieved only gradually in the future. The Italian workmen cannot afford to strike for more than one or two days, and therefore the only effective weapon becomes the general strike. But the general strike immediately places the worker in the hands of power-seeking individuals who use the workers merely as tools for the purpose of political manipulation. That is to say, the strike is no longer the means by which a group of workers can obtain satisfaction of their personal revendications, but becomes merely a manoeuvre useful to certain leaders in obtaining power. As soon as such individuals had obtained power, then even the right to strike would be taken from the worker, and in its place would come static employment under conditions from which there would be no recourse.

When directed to middle-class groups or individuals, our conception of freedom should be explained fully and illustrated. It should include, on a more intellectual approach, the practical applications of our freedoms of thought, self-determination, investigation, expression, and the protection of man against arbitrary measures.

Such approaches as suggested above would do much to counteract the deleterious effects of our previous propaganda, based largely on the conception of freedom of enterprise, a conception which immediately suggests the continuing privileges of a bourgeois economy.

2. The charge of "imperialism" is a double-edged weapon, and I think that here the western democracies could take the offensive in their counter-propaganda efforts.

3. Para. 71 is a basket into which all forms of Canadian policy have been thrown. If we want to outline a consistent Canadian policy, we must rescue some of the items out of the basket. The previous paragraphs have outlined Canada's purely diplomatic aim — to serve as a calmer of US policy and to iron out inconsistencies in that policy.

From the particular point of view of Canada, it should be borne in mind that we have a heavy responsibility and a worthy contribution to make outside of our role vis-à-vis the United States.

Nearly all propaganda now comes from the United States, and emphasises their own particular views of the Western approach to world problems. This plays into the hands of Soviet propaganda, since the latter is able to suggest that America dominates the Western nations by imposing its own ideology.

Canada, as the third largest world power, has the responsibility of demonstrating that individual nations, within the framework of our general policy, have maintained their own freedoms and their own cultures. The idea of domination by the United States within their own sphere of influence would thereby be diminished, resulting in the far lesser effectiveness of Soviet propaganda based on America's economic and cultural imperialism.

An able and sound propaganda would also indicate that the Western political ideal has been arrived at cooperatively and is being transmuted into effective cooperative action; that it represents a unanimity of views, and not the imposition of the purpose and designs of one particular power. Such propaganda would necessarily have to reflect the flavour of a distinct culture, economy and political environment.

Canada, however, can take a more mature leadership in various other fields, and our long-range policy in these fields should be outlined:

Racial discrimination: we could exert considerably more influence on social and racial policies in the British West Indies; eliminate, on paper at least, racial discrimination in immigration policy; improve, and give due publicity to the improvement, of the lot of the Canadian Indian and the Eskimo.

Emphasize the part Canada is taking in IRO and WHO and other international agencies and organizations.

Introduce the sort of widely-publicized and generally acceptable social policies which, because of propinquity, would have the greatest influence on internal policy in the United States: socialized medicine, old-age pensions, industrial disability benefits, stable labour laws, and a more centralized control over educational policy — possibly through a Ministry of Arts, Culture and Scientific Advancement, the establishment of an Employment Stabilization Fund in times of high national income to be used for public works in times of depression, and other social schemes of this nature.

Economically, we should perhaps accept a heavier burden in international affairs than we have so far assumed. It should, by all means, be a more highly publicized burden, in order to dilute the stigma attached to the purely American aid which looks so much like economic imperialism. International reconstruction could be stimulated by private investment abroad: by accepting payment in goods, we would reduce our own dollar unbalance and at the same time give to participating countries that element of pride in achievement which is a psychological concomitant of the system of free enterprise.

Our diplomatic contribution, at the present time, should be on the same level as our contribution economic, military and financial, during war and peace time.

Adequate generous budgetary provisions should be made and could be justified in the eyes of the members of Parliament and of the public by the fact that it is more economical to maintain peace than to prepare war and that peace cannot be maintained without cost.

The above notes all suggest expansion in Part 6 of the report under discussion. I feel that if this part is sufficiently expanded, it will be much more important than the formal conclusion in Part 7, which would remain merely a long-term conjecture: that, if we succeed in containing the USSR by measures such as those we ourselves would propose to take, over a period of ten years or more, there would be a possibility of permanent peace after that period.

246. DEA/52-F (S)

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], December 15, 1947

THE UNITED STATES AND THE SOVIET UNION

It has occurred to me the following thoughts might also be considered.

1. The world is essentially governed by ideas and the forces behind them come into the picture as instruments in the impulsion given by the ideas. The "way of life" referred to in the draft might usefully be spelled out a little. On this level, the possibility of war studied in the draft might be envisaged in the light of the ideas which govern the world, or the so called two worlds, at present. In this connection also, a distinction might properly be made between the governing classes and the peoples governed by them.

2. To a large extent, we live in a materialistic age, that is to say, the enormous development of massive matter absorbs the thoughts and time of mankind more than has ever been seen in preceding ages. The desire of the material possessions in a massive way has largely increased, and the temptation to dominate or exercise hegemony in order to control these material possessions is greater. There lies in the make-up of this materialistic age an increased danger of war, on a big scale.

3. In this connection, there seems also to have developed a massive movement, cutting across the frontiers, to eliminate systematically all spiritual values of every kind. This massive movement makes the danger still greater, because the old living concepts of life have disappeared in large sections of the world. Paganism is not good for the world, but deliberate and systematic rejection of Christian thought already received is worse and tends to produce a perilous disequilibrium throughout the whole world.

4. We cannot ignore these factors, which engender a new and more profound instability.

5. The more these dangerous factors make the light of the world flicker, the more they may lead it into unknown avenues of darkness and, under certain circumstances, give rise to world war.

6. Looking at these factors in terms of Soviet Russia and her satellites on the one hand, and of the United States and the West generally on the other, my view is that the ruling class of Soviet Russia are materialistic and anti-spiritual to the core, and that the ruling class of the latter, though still Christian, are less Christian than they were. The world is menaced by the peril of a conflict, because the balance of values making for peace has become more unstable than ever before.

7. In this respect, the question seems to be, as regards the ruling classes, whether the cleavage between the Christian values on the one hand and the materialistic and anti-spiritual concepts on the other is such as may cause the forces behind them to clash to the point of war.

8. It appears also that the peoples themselves have changed, in some measure, in the same direction which has been given by their ruling classes. This is clearly true of Soviet Russia and her satellites, and this is true, to a less extent, of certain countries of the West, particularly in Europe, for instance in France and Italy, and a similar process seems to be felt, though in a much smaller degree, in America.

9. To put it in a few words, ideas which would be otherwise aiming at peace have degenerated and are aiming at the possibility of destruction. Looking at the picture as a whole, it looks as though this process is spreading, even across and irrespective of frontiers. The focus, however, is Soviet Russia.

10. We are beginning to speak currently of two worlds, and this manner of speech is not altogether far from reality. Very generally speaking, we have, in certain ways, two worlds, one which is materialistic and anti-spiritual, and the other Christian, though perhaps less Christian than before. It is no use, I think, blinking that fact.

11. Looking at Soviet Russia, at least her ruling class, as a focus, it is a generally accepted fact that they have broken away systematically from the old fundamental values — the concept of God, the concept of respect for certain rights of the human person, the concept of freedom, the concept of certain family rights. Their fundamental ideology is the State and almost nothing else. But what is the State if it is not built on respect of certain fundamental values? It is massive tyranny, of the worst kind. This philosophy of life they are trying to impose upon the world. The methods employed to do so essentially partake of that philosophy. The measure of error in the philosophy is the measure of error in the methods in action.

12. The substance of the last paragraph (74) of the draft to the effect that it may be possible to reconcile, in the long run, such philosophy and the old concepts of the Western World does not appear to me to represent altogether a factual analysis of the situation. In my opinion, such reconciliation cannot, and will never, be accomplished. The respective forces aligned behind such philosophy on the one hand and these concepts on the other remain two and irreconcilable camps, and there is danger that they may come to grip.

13. My own view is, however, substantially very much the same as that referred to in the draft, that there is little likelihood of war at present, possibly for the next ten years or so, but my reasons are somewhat different from those put forward in the draft.

14. I believe that subversive ideas cannot gain the upper hand in the world and cannot align on their side enough forces to achieve that purpose. The ruling class in Soviet Russia realize that, I have no doubt, unless they are mad or blind. I do not think they are. The main danger is that the sort of Frankenstein which they have created may become unmanageable in their own hands, through panic or other causes which it may be difficult to predict. In this regard, I do not entirely agree with the conclusion expressed in paragraph 39 of the draft to the effect that panic is more likely to come from the United States under certain circumstances.

15. The Western World, in spite of the spreading of subversive ideas, even across its various frontiers, is largely conscious of the fundamental values of the ideas directing the way of life of the Western States. From that standpoint, Soviet Russia realizes that she has the ideas and, therefore, the forces of the majority of the States of the West determinedly against her.

16. As things stand, she will not fight the other world, which is against her, as she must know she cannot win. Their ideas and the forces behind them are too strong for her.

17. She may, however, become panicky in the future, and there may be the main danger.

18. At present, the ruling class is strongly enough entrenched in Soviet Russia (within her borders) to be content. The efforts being made to propagate the materialistic and anti-spiritual ideas of life outside of her borders will doubtless continue, but these efforts can easily be stemmed and checked by the vigilance of the Western World. These efforts cannot, at any time, upset the balance of values to the point of leading Soviet Russia to hope that she can wage a world war with some chance of ultimate success.

19. The efforts of the Western World should be to do nothing — unless forced to do so — which would inevitably bring a panic of that magnitude, and meanwhile to await the mellowing down or collapse of Soviet ideas, which cannot last.

20. They cannot last, I think, for several reasons: (a) these ideas are subversive, and subversive ideas cannot endure; they either abate or are dispelled; (b) the methods partaking of these ideas are bound to become repugnant to the human nature of those to whom they are preached and on whom the methods are employed. Human nature reasserts itself.

21. I should not be surprised if there was developed in Soviet Russia some kind of a counter-revolution, because we may take it that the Russian people do not all accept the present tyrannic regime with gaieté de coeur. There is, however, I admit, no sign of such counter-revolution, but, to my mind, it will come some day if the ruling class does not mellow down or does not gradually change their concepts of life and consequently their methods.

22. Meanwhile, the Western World should remain calm, patient, vigilant and strong, on the basis of the ideas cherished by it during generations. The forces behind these ideas should also be maintained calm, patient, vigilant and strong. At the same time, the Western World should improve its ideas and methods; it should be as much as possible the Christian World which it has been taught to be, in thoughts and in practice. It may become necessary for many countries to break off diplomatic relations with the Soviet Russia, to isolate her and thus bring her back to her senses. I do not think this would bring panic within her borders to the point of her deciding to declare a world war. Much of the restlessness or unrest, which has been caused at present by the existing system of sovietization has been indirectly brought about by some decline of Christian thought and methods. What I mean is this decline has given an opportunity to subversive ideas and methods to develop. The draft under reference has indirectly mentioned some of these aspects in regard to improvement in the West for the future.

23. Soviet Russia, considered as a system — and a subversive system at that — is a dangerous experiment. As such, however, we have to accept it as a fact, however much we dislike it. How long it may last nobody, I am sure, can tell. One may foresee that it may not outlive the life of another or two generations. What repercussions it may have throughout the world by way of some social or other transformations is not easy to describe or presume. It may be taken for certain that sovietization of life will leave some traces of itself throughout the world. The life and effects of sovietization will not be able ultimately to resist the impact of the patient and firm opposition of united Christianity. Sovietization may change certain things, but will recede before Christian thought and action, which will always be strong enough to prevent their being dominated by it. What deposits receding sovietization may leave behind itself, I shall not attempt to say here.

24. The Soviet World cannot fight the Christian World successfully, and the Soviet World knows it. The main danger is panic in the Soviet World. If there is no panic, I think it will mellow down or collapse in thought and action, whatever it may leave behind, here and there.

25. Christian thought is the greatest strengthening idea, and no other idea can prevail against it. The forces supporting it in the world at large can defeat in the long run the forces at the command of any Soviet ideas.

26. The best example is the catholic idea. No other idea has been able to prevail against it, and no forces have been able to tackle successfully the forces of the catholic idea, which spreads everywhere irrespective of frontiers. The catholic idea is essentially good and aims at peace. If all Christians, including those who continue to live on the fundamental ideas which they have received as an heritage from Christianity, although they may not proclaim themselves altogether Christians, know and learn how to unite themselves against subversive ideas that are aiming at destroying them, we may be confident there is hope for peace and perhaps a long peace. If, on the other hand, Christianity deeply declined, there could not be entertained the same confidence for peace.

27. Subversive ideas, on the other hand, are essentially ephemeral, however largely they may try to spread themselves, which can happen for a time. They can always be successfully resisted.

28. Soviet Russia, I have said, is an experiment in the world, and a very disturbing one at that. The ideas of her governing class are being blown over the world like pollens by the wind, but I cannot see that some 6 or 7 millions regimented men who think them in Soviet Russia (I am speaking of her ruling class), and perhaps an equal number or more, scattered about the Christian World, thinking in the same terms, can upset the ideas and the forces of the Western World, otherwise called the Christian World.

29. The balance of power referred to in the draft is and will remain, to my mind, in the hands of the Christian World, which is very strong and pretty well united in spite of certain divergences here and there. I cannot believe it will ever be tipped in favour of Soviet Russia and those who support her subversive ideology outside of her borders.

30. If the ruling class of Soviet Russia became mad or blind, it is difficult to foresee what might be the outcome as regards the possibility of war, but my own view is that the outcome would be less a possibility of war than a probability of a counter-revolution in Soviet Russia herself.

31. In the meantime, Christianity must remain strong and be united.

32. The above may appear to be oblivious of certain realities. This may be true to some extent, particularly if we think too much in terms of material forces, but if we accept the fundamental fact that the world is mainly governed by ideas, that subversive ideas cannot prevail against constructive ideas in the highest sense of the world, we may conclude there is hope for peace and perhaps a long peace, despite the turmoil of subversive ideas which exists in large sections of the world.

I am sending a copy of this (which is the only copy I have made) to the Under-Secretary.

247. DEA/52-F (S)

Note de J. Starnes, du cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, pour le chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum from J. Starnes, Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Head, Second Political Division

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], January 21, 1948

I regret that, although I made two or three determined efforts, I have been unable to marshal my thoughts sufficiently to comment intelligently on your memorandum entitled "The United States and the Soviet Union", which Mr. Beaudry asked me to let him have before the end of November. I am, however, returning copy No. 33 as I do not wish to have continuing responsibility for its custody after I leave the department.

I found it difficult to comment on a memorandum of this nature and to single out individual chapters or paragraphs without, in fact, suggesting a complete revision.

I found it difficult to agree with a number of premises upon which the appreciation is based, but I realize it is futile to dispute a point without putting forward detailed and cogent arguments for my disagreement.

One of the points which struck me is that you have, for purposes of argument, apparently placed the United States and the Soviet Union on the same basis which, I think, gives a somewhat distorted picture and does not take into account the other important factors in the struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

There is a tendency in your memorandum to discuss the struggle between the Soviet Union and the United States of America as a struggle between communism and capitalism. In a sense I feel that this is perhaps a red herring. I think it could be argued with justification that if the United States and the U.S.S.R. were both communist states that the degree of conflict would be unabated and, if anything, might be even more sharply drawn. In a sense what I suppose I am trying to say is that the theory of communism is simply an instrument in the hands of Soviet leaders and bears no relation to the theory as propounded by Marx and Lenin.

While I have made one or two comments of a very perfunctory character and, for the most part, of a critical nature, I would like to say how useful I think this kind of study is in causing officers in the Department to give thought to these matters. I expect that your experience, after you receive all the comments, will be that the memorandum will have to be rewritten entirely and if it does I am sure that it will lose a great deal. But, nevertheless I feel that the Department as a whole will have gained immeasurably from being forced to clear their ideas on what is a pretty fundamental thing.

J. S[TARNES]

P.S. Please disregard my rude remarks in pencil in the margin,† but I have a habit of reading with a pencil in my hand and I forgot myself.

CHAPITRE VI/CHAPTER VI
ÉNERGIE ATOMIQUE
ATOMIC ENERGY

248. DEA/201-B (S)

Note du Conseil national de recherches

Memorandum by National Research Council

Chalk River, January 7, 1947

COMMENTARY ON THE FIRST REPORT OF THE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL AND ITS IMPLICATIONS FOR THE INTERNATIONAL CONTROL OF ATOMIC ENERGY IN CANADA

The First Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council deals with the work of the Commission from its opening meeting on 14th June to the 31st December, 1946. With the exception of Part I, which recounts the procedural history of the Commission, and Part IV, which explains the scientific and technical aspect of the problem of control, the report records the Commission's conclusions and findings regarding the safeguards that are necessary to prevent those who would illegally manufacture and use atomic weapons from obtaining materials essential for that purpose. The report discusses safeguards to prevent the theft or secret diversion of the essential materials, uranium, thorium, plutonium, uranium 235 and uranium 233, at all stages in their preparation and use from the time they are mined or produced until they are finally consumed. The report also describes methods of discovering secret activities, such as the mining of uranium and thorium, and secret plants for processing these materials and for preparing plutonium, uranium 235 or uranium 233 for the manufacture of atomic weapons. It discusses also precautions which might be taken to reduce the advantages of seizing supplies of the essential materials, or seizing the mines and plants which may be used for their production and preparation.

Nearly all the findings in the report are the views of the representatives of all delegations to the Commission except the Russian. Many of them were acceptable to the Russian representative also. This agreement of opinion was made possible through the better understanding of this complex problem which resulted from detailed discussion in many informal meetings. The discussion in these informal meetings progressed from the least controversial aspects of the problem to those which raised questions of national sovereignty and other political considerations, a method of procedure which was adopted in these discussions on the motion of the Canadian representative. Throughout all the informal discussions, however, the political aspects of the subject were avoided and left for consideration in the General meetings of appropriate committees. Attention was confined to the scientific and technical aspects. Thus the report deals with the scientific and technical feasibility, effectiveness, necessity and desirability of various safeguards such as accounting for materials, guarding stocks, verifying assays and analyses, inspecting plants and shipments, supervising operations and managing operations, and carrying out aerial and ground surveys to discover clandestine activities.

Although political discussion was avoided in the informal discussions, the detailed technical findings did recognize by implication the very fundamental political conclusion that the control of atomic energy to the extent necessary to restrict its use for peaceful purposes could only be made effective by "an international system operating through special organs, which organs would derive their powers and status from the convention or conventions under which they are established." (This conclusion was first formally accepted in the General Assembly in its resolution of 14th December, 1946 on "Principles Governing the General Regulation and Reduction of Armaments"† and was included in the final draft of the report.) The findings also implied that the "special organs" of the international system of inspection and control would have wide powers in establishing and maintaining the various safeguards discussed.

On the 5th December the United States representative presented a text containing a series of findings and recommendations of a general character, and insisted on the inclusion of this text in the report. The events and difficulties which followed this action by the United States representative are described in Part I of this statement.† It is sufficient to mention here that after more than thirty alterations were made as a result of the criticisms by the Canadian delegation, the text which was finally incorporated in the report is consistent with the findings reached by general agreement in the informal meetings and with the General Assembly resolutions of 24th January and 14th December, with the exception of three paragraphs dealing with the veto and possibly a few sentences of uncertain meaning.

Throughout the meetings of the Commission the United States delegation pressed for the adoption of very thorough and comprehensive measures of control, requiring large, very costly organization, large staff with many scientists, and considerable encroachment on the sovereignty of nations. They opposed proposals of other delegations for measures based on a more practical regard of what was essential and feasible. This attitude of the United States delegation was understandable. It arose from their anxiety that, in surrendering the monopolistic possession of a very powerful weapon, they would not run the risk of having it used against them. Without doubt it reflected a strong public opinion in the United States which may have exaggerated the strength of their present position for bargaining and negotiation, and underestimated the scientific ingenuity and industrial resources of other nations.

The Canadian delegation from the beginning has been guided by the belief that the government and the people of Canada accepted the principles on which the United States plan was based, recognized that effective control of atomic energy would involve considerable surrender of national sovereignty but considered it to be not too great a price for deliverance from the menace of surprise attack by atomic weapons. The delegation believed, however, that Canada would not wish to make sacrifices beyond what was reasonable and necessary to make the international control of atomic energy effective. This led to some differences of opinion with the United States delegation on details, but nearly all of these have been reconciled, through discussion in private and in meetings of the Committee, to the satisfaction of the Canadian delegation.

Preliminary Explanation of the Importance of Essential Materials

In discussing the control of atomic energy it is important to bear in mind the different roles played by the five essential materials.

Atomic energy can be released from plutonium, uranium 235 and uranium 233. The process by which the energy is released is called "nuclear fission" and the three substances are called "fissionable" or "fissile" materials, and sometimes "nuclear fuels". Each of these three fissionable materials may be used as the explosive component of atomic bombs if it is pure or is not mixed with too great a proportion of non-fissionable material (such as uranium 238). If mixed in a lower concentration it is unsatisfactory for a bomb, but may be used in a "reactor" as a source of power for industrial purposes. In still lower concentrations it is useless even as a source of power.

Ordinary uranium, as it occurs in the earth's crust, is a mixture of the fissionable uranium 235 and the non-fissionable uranium 238 in such a proportion that it can be used successfully in a reactor but not in a bomb, "Isotope[1] separation plants", such as those at Oak Ridge, are required to extract the uranium 235, or to increase its concentration in the mixture, so that it can be used in bombs. In order to obtain quantities of the extracted uranium 235 or concentrated mixture sufficient for military purposes the isotope separation plants must be huge and costly.

If a reactor contains ordinary uranium or uranium 238, the uranium 238 is slowly converted (or "transmuted") during operation into plutonium. This is the only method of producing plutonium for atomic bombs. Very large and costly reactors, such as those at Hanford, are required to produce quantities of plutonium of military significance.

Natural thorium does not contain fissionable material. It owes its importance for atomic energy to the fact that it can be converted (transmuted) slowly into uranium 233 if it is present in a working reactor.

There is an important difference in regard to control between natural uranium and thorium on the one hand and the concentrated fissionable materials on the other hand. Uranium and thorium occur widely distributed throughout the world in low grade deposits which could be exploited to meet military requirements, but their use for the production of significant quantities of fissionable material for atomic bombs requires very large and expensive reactors or isotope separation plants. In contrast, the fissionable materials, plutonium, uranium 235 and uranium 233, can be used immediately and directly in the manufacture of atomic bombs, and the quantities required are of small bulk and easily concealed. Hence more stringent control is necessary for the production and handling of the fissionable materials than for the mining, processing and handling of uranium and thorium.

---

[1]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document : The following was typed on this copy of the document: elements (like, for example, uranium 235, uranium 238 and uranium 233) which are almost indistinguishable chemically (and therefore very difficult to separate if mixed together) are called "isotopes".

Control of Uranium Mines

As one of the two major producers of uranium ore at the present time, Canada has a particular interest in the discussion of any plans for the international control of uranium mining operations.

The United States delegation has attached special importance to the control of uranium and thorium mining. They point out that, in order to prevent the diversion of essential materials for illegal use in the manufacture of atomic weapons, careful control and record of these materials must be maintained at all stages in their preparation, and should begin in the mines. The views of the United States delegation were expressed in Volume 6 "Technological Control of Atomic Energy Activities" of the "Scientific Information Transmitted to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission by the United States Representative, 14 October." The following paragraphs are quoted from that volume:

"Authorized Mines

In locations containing relatively rich deposits of uranium or thorium, the Authority should be empowered, subject to principles set forth in the treaty, to decide which part of those deposits is to be developed for mining and which part should be held as an undeveloped operating reserve. The Authority should be able to specify the location of shafts and adits and the conditions of operation, including the rate of operation in some instances. Control of such developed locations would have as its primary objectives the assurance that the proper ore bodies are being mined at the specified rate and that all the ore mined is being delivered to the concentrating mill. In addition, the Authority must systematically guard undeveloped locations containing rich deposits and must occasionally check the regions containing leaner deposits, to insure that these regions are not being mined. When uranium or thorium can be obtained as by-products of other mining operations, appropriate measures must be taken to ensure the control of all uranium or thorium produced.

For its control measures, the Authority will require continuous participation in the operations at developed mines, and an inspection headquarters and assay and instrument laboratory in each producing region. Estimation of the amount of material which could be diverted without detection in the presence of a well organized control force obviously depends on the efficiency and the alertness of that force.

Mine Boundaries

The principal problem which arises in the control of uranium and thorium mining is the delineation of the mining area which should be controlled by the Authority. Productive mines commonly occur in regions containing other structure which are geologically similar but are too lean in mineral values to warrant economical operation. These relatively lean deposits might, however, be worked surreptitiously as a source of uranium or thorium for unauthorized activities. Accordingly, when a region is known to contain deposits of uranium or thorium, it will be important for the Authority to make a geological and mineralogical survey which is sufficiently extensive to assure that all significant deposits of uranium or thorium in that region have been located. The Authority must then decide which of the deposits are sufficiently rich to warrant placing under control and which are sufficiently lean so that only an occasional check, to establish that mining operations are not being conducted, is adequate to prevent diversion."

The Canadian delegation has felt that the measures of control of uranium mines which were at first proposed by the United States representative (who spoke of "dominion over raw materials") would involve the surrender of Canadian rights of national sovereignty, make it difficult for this country to protect and conserve its natural resources of this valuable metal, and present practical difficulties in the division of responsibility between international, Dominion, and provincial authorities, to an extent unnecessary for adequate and satisfactory international control of atomic energy.

The Canadian delegation considered it particularly important that no external authority should have the power to determine the manner and the extent of exploitation of uranium ore bodies. There is grave danger that these natural resources might be rapidly depleted through extremely wasteful utilization of the material. The tremendous concentration of potential energy in uranium has been stressed repeatedly in popular scientific articles, but present uses involve the release of only a very small fraction of it. On account of the low cost of the uranium, there is a temptation to use it in atomic energy plants in a manner which releases a fraction of 1% of the potential energy and leaves the uranium after use in a condition that would make it economically impossible to release the remainder of the energy. Thus all but a small fraction of the energy contained in the uranium would be wasted. The Canadian delegation has felt that the Canadian government should be in a position to prevent our deposits from being despoiled prodigally by short sighted or selfish mining policy.

The Atomic Energy Commission was finally able to agree on measures of control of uranium and thorium mines and mills which are less rigorous than those advocated by the U.S. delegation. The report contains the following summary finding: "Adequate safeguards against diversion from declared mines and mills are possible by a system of inspection, including guards, similar to normal managerial operating controls, provided that the inspectorate has unrestricted access to all equipment and operations and has facilities for independent weighing, assay, and analysis."

The word "inspection" as used in this summary finding means close and careful independent scrutiny of operations to detect diversion of materials. Inspection may include the use of guards to prevent the unauthorized removal of ore and concentrates, and the observation of the activities within the mine and mill and at gates and fences to ensure that materials and supplies are flowing in the authorized manner. Inspection also implies accounting for the ore from the time of its removal at the working face of the mine, throughout its handling, grinding and concentrating until it is shipped to the refinery. The accounting for materials would normally be accompanied by measures of analysis and auditing to ensure conformity between the accounts and the facts. "This necessitates adequate independent observation of the measurements, tests of the accuracy of scales and other measuring instruments, and possibly independent duplicate measurements either on a sampling basis or as a whole. It also implies the right to obtain explanations of discrepancies."

The Commission found, however, that: "the system of accounting, guarding and inspection of uranium mines and mills could follow the normal patterns ordinarily used in the control of mining and milling operations"; and "the number of guards and inspectors required for uranium mines and mills would not be great as compared with the operating staff." It also found that "the comparison and weighing and assay of the material at the exit from the mill and on arrival at destination would provide the necessary check on possible diversion in transit."

Control of Declared Refineries, Chemical and Metallurgical Plants

For the control of the refineries, such as those at Port Hope, Ontario, and other plants for the extraction and chemical and metallurgical processing of uranium and thorium, the United States delegation urged that the operations in the plant should be under either supervision or management by officers of the international control agency. They argued that a quick and precise inventory of the quantity of the materials in process throughout the plant was difficult on account of the nature of the processes and that therefore inspection alone did not provide sufficient control.

The informal discussions led finally to the proposal of less rigorous control as recorded in the following summary finding: "Adequate safeguards against diversion from declared refineries and chemical and metallurgical plants are possible by a system of inspection including guards," similar to that which is normally practised in the operational control of ordinary refineries, chemical and metallurgical plants to ensure efficiency of operation and protection against the theft of materials, "provided that the inspectorate has unrestricted access to all equipment and operations and has facilities for independent weighing, assay and analyses and provided that it has the right to require the plant to be shut down for purposes of clean up and accounting at appropriate times and to require efficient operating procedure." The report states: "An adequate system of inspection could be so organized as not to interfere seriously with normal refining and chemical and metallurgical operations."

Control of Reactors

The terms "reactor" and "pile" are used interchangeably in referring to installations for the release of atomic energy. They may be of many types, including the very large reactors at Hanford and the small pilot plant at Chalk River, Ontario, that are capable of producing plutonium which, after extraction in the chemical plant associated with the reactor, may be used directly in the manufacture of atomic weapons. Reactors intended primarily for the production of industrial power are likely to be very large because the use of small units for power purposes is difficult to justify economically. These large power units will either produce plutonium or other fissionable materials as by-products or can be easily adapted to that purpose. A plant of size sufficient to supply power requirements of an industrial city is capable of producing fissionable materials at a rate having considerable military importance for use in atomic weapons. For this reason the United States delegation has contended that such reactors, with their associated chemical plants for the extraction of fissionable materials and radioactive by-products, should be under the direct management of the international control agency.

Some of the other delegations, particularly that of the United Kingdom, expressed opposition to control through management by the international control agency. They believed that management might be necessary for the chemical extraction plant but that adequate control of the reactor was possible through inspection.

Canadian interest in the discussion of the control of reactors was concerned chiefly with its application to the reactor in Chalk River. This plant, which was designed originally as a pilot plant for the investigation of an alternative method of producing fissionable materials for military purposes, is regarded in Canada as purely a research plant. It will be used as a source of radiation for research in atomic energy and its peaceful applications, and as a means of producing radioactive materials for the treatment of disease and for research purposes. Owing to the small power level at which it can be operated it is incapable of producing material for atomic weapons at a rate sufficient to have great military significance. For this reason it has been the hope of the Canadian delegation that it would not be necessary to impose rigorous control measures in this plant which might interfere with its full use in fostering research in atomic energy in Canada and in the training of young Canadian scientists.

The control measures which are applied in large power producing reactors are a matter of less concern to Canada than perhaps to other nations less well provided with waterpower or favourably located near sources of fuel. Operation of such plants has many disadvantages, particularly in regard to maintenance difficulties and the protection of operating personnel, in comparison with the use of coal or water power. Canadian scientists have generally been less optimistic than enthusiastic persons in the United States regarding the early advent of large scale atomic power production. They believe that atomic power on a scale of national industrial importance is economically unsound at the present time. Until great technological difficulties are overcome large scale utilization of atomic power would rapidly exhaust the medium grade uranium and thorium ore resources of the world which are being worked at the present time. The attitude of the Canadian delegation, therefore, is influenced by a regard for the conservation of our natural resources of uranium and by the fact that we possess undeveloped waterpower beyond our present needs.

The report records the following summary finding: "Safeguards required for the control of reactors will depend on their size and design and especially on their content and possible rate of production of nuclear fuel (plutonium or uranium 233). The safeguards available to the international control agency should include licensing and inspection, supervision and management of the operation of the reactors. In addition, close supervision of the design and construction of the reactors is essential in all cases."

The word "supervision" in this finding means "continuous association and cooperation in day to day operations with the management together with authority to require that the management comply with certain conditions so as to facilitate the execution of measures of control. For example, it may include the right to require that plants be designed and constructed in such a manner as to hinder diversion of materials, the right to require that the processes be conducted in a specified manner or the right to order cessation in order to take a complete inventory of materials in process."

The word "management", as used here, means "direct power and authority over day to day decisions governing the operations themselves as well as advisory responsibility for the planning," such management being established by and responsible to the international control agency.

The purpose of the close supervision of the design and construction of the reactor, which is called for in the above finding, is to ensure that features are not built into the reactor which would facilitate the secret diversion of materials.

The report further finds that "adequate safeguards for chemical extraction plants associated with all except small research reactors are only possible through management by the international control agency." The insistence on a more rigorous method of control in the case of the extraction plant than in the reactor is based on the fact that it is very much easier to steal the plutonium or uranium 233 after it is extracted and separated from the accompanying radioactive products which emit dangerous radiations.

The report also includes the finding that: "Periodic inspection together with licensing is an adequate safeguard in the case of small research reactors and their associated chemical plants unless their total content of nuclear fuels or potential rate of output in any area is of military significance. The Chalk River plant might perhaps be considered to fall within this category. If not, some degree of supervision might be required in addition to inspection. Quite apart from the size of the Chalk River plant, however, the manner in which it is constructed would make the secret diversion of materials more difficult than in some other types of plants, and the Canadian delegation feels that a strong case can be presented for limiting the international control of this plant to inspection.

Control of Isotope Separation Plants

The findings in the report state that the plants for the separation of the isotope uranium 235 from natural uranium should be controlled through management by the international control agency. These plants are not essential for any peacetime applications of atomic energy now foreseen and will probably never be constructed in Canada. The opportunities for diversion of materials are very great and these materials could be used directly in the manufacture of atomic weapons. For this reason control through management is considered necessary.

Detection of Clandestine Activities

In discussing the use of aerial surveys and ground surveys as a means of detecting clandestine mining operations and other activities related to the production and use of atomic energy, the Commission was unable to reach general agreement. The United States delegation attached great importance to such methods of discovering secret illegal activities and advocated wide unhampered use of them with little or no restriction. The United States delegation felt that they were particularly necessary as a means of discovering secret uranium and thorium mines, because the illegal manufacture of atomic weapons must depend on such mines for materials if the diversion from authorized legal plants is prevented by satisfactory control. Professor Alexandrof, who represented the U.S.S.R. delegation in these discussions, stated "that the proposals made in this connection by the United States delegation had, to a great extent, touched more on economic and other spheres not related to atomic energy than on the question of the detection of clandestine activity in the mining and refining of uranium and thorium ores. On this basis he declined to participate in the discussion of those sections of the report dealing with this type of detection."

The Canadian delegation has also been opposed to the unrestricted authorization of aerial survey in search of secret mining activity. They have felt that the importance and value of this method of control has been exaggerated, and that it would be an extremely costly undertaking to carry out a satisfactory survey of the entire land surface of the earth.

The report as finally accepted by a vote of 10 to 0 on the 30th of December includes the following summary finding: "The international control agency will require broad privileges of movement and inspection including the rights to conduct surveys by ground and air. These privileges should, however, be very carefully defined to ensure against misuse."

With more particular reference to mining, the report states: "Safeguards against the dangers of clandestine mining would be provided by the right of inspection with air and ground surveys based on adequate geological knowledge. Neither air surveys nor ground surveys alone provides adequate information; both are essential and they must be used in combination." In further explanation the report continues: "Aerial surveys are essential in some circumstances for the detection of clandestine operations in areas difficult of access or sparsely populated. The international control agency must therefore be granted the right, under appropriate limitations, to conduct such surveys. In some cases it will be necessary for the agency to have the permanent right to conduct periodic aerial surveys over areas where uranium and thorium ores are known or likely to be found. The air survey should be authorized in every case where grounds for suspicion of clandestine operations are shown, in accordance with the procedural requirements referred to in Finding 1."

"Finding 1" mentioned in the above paragraph, states: "The right of authorized personnel of the international control agency to direct access and inspection subject to appropriate restraints, and the right of travel without restraint, is essential in the detection of clandestine activities." The report explains further: "It would in general be necessary to require that demonstrable ground for suspicion exists as a justification for inspection and to establish reasonable legal procedures for the regulation of inspection. The procedures must not delay legitimate access by the international control agency." However the report points out that the mere existence of mining operations and ores known or likely to contain uranium or thorium in significant amounts is justification for their inspection.

Another finding reads: "The international control agency would need periodic reports from states on categories of information directly related to the production and use of atomic energy." These reports would include information upon:

(a) geological formations in which uranium and thorium might occur,

(b) mining operations large enough to be potential sources of uranium or thorium,

(c) production, shipments, location and use of certain specified types of specialized equipment and supplies.

The report then cites the following finding: "The international control agency should coordinate the available information and thereby determine what areas and installations required further inspection to resolve reasonable doubt that they contain clandestine activities."

Conclusion

The Atomic Energy Commission's report marks the completion of the preliminary stage of its work. Its purpose in this stage was to discover by what measures atomic energy might be controlled to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes. The next stage of its work presents a more difficult and complex problem: the nature of the international agency required to carry out the control measures, its organization, powers and duties, privileges and limitations, its relations with the organs of the United Nations and with national governments and persons, its financing and the enlisting of qualified scientific staff. The assistance of many specialists, consultation with nations, organizations and persons concerned, and months of discussion and negotiation may be required for a clarification of this subject to a degree necessary to form a basis for the drafting of a treaty to establish a suitable international control agency.

Fear has been expressed that the action of the United States representative on the 30th December, in forcing a vote on the Commission's report to the Security Council, including its controversial paragraphs, might result in developments in the Security Council that will make it difficult for the Commission to undertake its next duty of discussing the nature of the international control agency. It was the hope of most, if not all, delegations that this will not prove to be the case and that the Commission can proceed with the discussion early in the new year.

249. DEA/201-F (S)

Procès-verbal de la dixième réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 16 janvier 1947

Minutes of Tenth Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, January 16, 1947

TOP SECRET Ottawa, January 21, 1947

The following were present:

Mr. A.D.P. Heeney (in the chair)
Mr. L.B. Pearson
General A.G.L. McNaughton
Dr. O.M. Solandt
Dr. C.J. Mackenzie
Mr. J.K. Starnes
Mr. J.H. Warren[2] (Acting Secretary)

1. U.N. Atomic Energy Commission; Report to Security Council

General McNaughton drew the attention of the Panel to the Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council stating that, apart from the section on the veto, it was satisfactory from the point of view of the Canadian delegation. He suggested that the Report might be placed before Cabinet.

2. It was agreed that the Report should be submitted to Cabinet for their early consideration possibly under cover of a memorandum summarizing the work of the Canadian delegation and analyzing the Report from the Canadian point of view; the memorandum should be accompanied by a recommendation by the Panel that the Report be tabled in Parliament at the appropriate time.

3. Atomic Energy Control Board; Organization of Work

General McNaughton reviewed the work of the Atomic Energy Control Board and stated that draft regulations, designed to implement the Board's terms of reference, had been prepared and were now under revision. He also stated that The Patent Act, 1935, was being amended to conform with the provisions of the Atomic Energy Act.

4. Government Organization in Relation to Scientific Subjects; Ministerial Committee; Secretariat

Mr. Heeney suggested that consideration be given to the organization of the work of the Committee of the Privy Council on Industrial and Scientific Research. The functions and responsibilities of this Committee were now extensive under the recent revision of the N.R.C. Act and the Atomic Energy Control Act. In fact this Committee constituted a Ministerial body for the settlement of government policy in the whole scientific field and a means of co-ordinating a number of important related activities. Consideration had already been given to appropriate revision of their terms of reference and the provision of a secretariat.

---

[2]J.K. Starnes, Direction du personnel; J.H. Warren, Première direction politique.
J.K. Starnes, Personnel Division; J.H. Warren, First Political Division.

5. The meeting agreed that the first step would be the appointment of a secretary for the Committee (from the Cabinet Secretariat) who should draft a re-organization programme for consideration by the Committee's Chairman, Mr. Howe.

6. Mr. Heeney suggested that Mr. Baldwin[3] (Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet) might be made available for this purpose for the organization period, on the understanding that an assistant secretary, with some scientific background, who could eventually assume full responsibility, would be provided by Dr. Mackenzie or Dr. Solandt.

7. Scientific Liaison and Representation in Washington

Reference was made to a decision, reached by the Panel at their 9th meeting, that a Scientific Attaché be appointed to the Embassy in Washington to act as assistant to Mr. Bateman on atomic energy matters. It had not yet been possible to obtain the services of a suitable person.

6. It was agreed that it was important to obtain the early appointment of such an officer, for liaison with the B.C.S.O.,[4] with the newly established U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, and with U.S. defence committees on atomic warfare; it would be useful to have such a person in Washington to assist Mr. Bateman in connection with Combined Policy Committee and the Combined Development Trust matters. It was agreed that Dr. Mackenzie and Dr. Solandt would be responsible for making a recommendation in this connection.

8. Combined Policy Committee; Canadian Representation

Some discussion took place as to having the Canadian Ambassador in Washington act on the Combined Policy Committee when Mr. Howe was not available. This matter was presently before Mr. Howe for consideration.

A.D.P. HEENEY
Chairman

J.H. WARREN
Acting Secretary

[3]J.R. Baldwin.
[4]British Commonwealth Scientific Office (North America).

250. DEA/201-F (S)

Procès-verbal de la onzième réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 1er février 1947

Minutes of Eleventh Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, February 1, 1947

TOP SECRET Ottawa, February 8, 1947

The following were present:

Mr. A.D.P. Heeney (in the chair)
General A.G.L. McNaughton
Mr. G. Bateman
Dr. O.M. Solandt
Mr. G. Ignatieff[5]
Mr. J.K. Starnes (Secretary)

also present:

Mr. C.D. Howe

Combined Policy Committee Meeting, Washington, February 3

Mr. Heeney reported that Mr. Wrong had been instructed to act as Mr. Howe's alternate at the forthcoming meeting of the C.P.C., and that Mr. Stone would act as Canadian Secretary replacing Mr. Bateman. It had accordingly seemed desirable to call a meeting of the Panel to consider what instructions should be given Mr. Wrong in respect of the various items on the agenda which had been drawn up for the meeting of the C.P.C.

The meeting was then given over to a detailed discussion of the agenda. The attached copy of telegram EX-313 of February 1 contains the instructions which it was agreed by the Panel should be sent to Mr. Wrong.

A.D.P. HEENEY
Chairman

J.K. STARNES
Secretary

[5]George Ignatieff, délégation à la Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies.
George Ignatieff, Delegation to UNAEC.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-313 Ottawa, February 1, 1947

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Wrong from Heeney, Begins: Reference to Teletype WA-390 of January 31st† and previous messages, the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy met this morning with Mr. Howe, and discussed the various items on the draft agenda for the meeting of the C.P.C. to be held Monday morning.

George Bateman was present and at Mr. Howe's request will arrive in Washington tomorrow afternoon to be available for the meeting. He will be able to supplement this message in detail.

For your guidance the conclusions of the Panel on the agenda items are as follows:

Item 1 — Previous Minutes, no comment.

Item 2 — Joint Secretaries' report. It was assumed that under (a) you will record the nomination by the government of yourself as alternate to Mr. Howe and of Stone's nomination as Canadian Joint Secretary vice Bateman.

Under 2(b), I am inclined to think that our records on C.P.C. to date are pretty incomplete; certainly they are divided between Mr. Howe's office and the East Block. Mr. Howe is quite agreeable to our reviewing his and our files with a view to requesting copies of any documents from the Secretariat which we think provide an important link in the story insofar as the Canadian government are concerned. We also agree with your suggestion of keeping a complete third copy of all C.P.C. papers at the Embassy from this date forward.

Item 3 — U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. It was assumed that no decision on your part will be called for under this head. Acheson might raise various difficulties resulting from the establishment in the United States of their Atomic Energy Commission in relation to the tripartite agreement. Mr. Howe is of opinion that it is not necessary in the Canadian interest to take any initiative to re-define the obligations and rights of the parties to the Quebec Agreement. In any event I assume that you have no intention of doing more than hearing what U.S. and U.K. representatives may have to say on this subject and reporting for consideration here.

Item 4 — Monazite sands, etc. Bateman will have an opportunity of giving you more detail on this subject before the meeting. The Panel felt that while in general the Canadian position should be as indicated to you by Mr. Howe in his letter of December 26th quoted in your WA-378 of January 30th† you should, in advance of the meeting, state to U.K. representatives on the C.P.C. the Canadian requirements; the object would be to obtain an assurance that Canada will receive (annually) from Thorium Limited as thorium chloride the serium content of seventy-five tons of monazite sands and in addition that we will be able to obtain as thorium oxide rods approximately three to four tons.

You should also state these requirements on Canada's part at the meeting.

Item 5 — Patent applications. We do not appear to have received in the East Block Clutterbuck's memorandum, nor have we seen it. However it has been considered by Mr. Howe who has replied to Clutterbuck in the following terms (letter dated January 25th). Letter begins:

"I have your letter of January 13th with reference to the Combined Policy Committee Memorandum on Patents which was accepted in September, 1944, together with a memorandum setting out in detail the points now at issue.

I note that your Government is now suggesting that it might be well to review the former decision as, according to the proposed new International Convention on Patents, it will be necessary in the near future to file patent applications immediately if the rights are to be maintained.

The direct interest of Canada in this question is not great, and I feel that we should not attempt to influence the opinions of the United States and United Kingdom Governments. It is true that we have a number of patent applications which, under normal conditions, we might file in countries other than the United States and the United Kingdom, but since we entered the field later than the two countries mentioned, the majority of our applications are just coming to the forefront.

From the general standpoint, my opinion would be that fundamental patents in connection with primary processes in the atomic energy field should not be disclosed through patent applications in non-participating countries at the present time. On the other hand, there may be patents covering ancillary processes, such as improvements of instruments, etc., which might be useful in ordinary industrial processes and which in themselves would not disclose any secrets. It may well be that these might be patented without disclosing anything of significance in connection with atomic energy processes.

Canada takes the view that all such moves should be made with caution and that the screening in the case of each application should be carried out thoroughly by a body authorized to act on behalf of the Combined Policy Committee.

Canada will not press for any change in the existing agreement but will concur in any decision along the lines indicated herein." Letter ends.

The Panel agreed that this represented the attitude which the Canadian representatives should take on this question.

Item 6 — Declassification procedure. The Panel agreed with the substance of the U.K. paper and you should support the proposal that a group be appointed for the purpose. C.J. Mackenzie should be named as the Canadian representative. He would name someone to represent him and to do the detailed work involved. Probably this would be the Scientific Adviser to the Embassy, if and when somebody appropriate is found and is appointed.

Item 7 — Other business. The Panel agreed that Canada had no interest in the question of Belgian supplies which you thought might be raised under this head.

We will, however, be interested to have any information which is divulged at the meeting.

Mr. Howe feels and the Panel agree that it should be emphasized to the Secretariat that the Canadian representative on the C.P.C. should, in future, be given adequate notice of meetings. Not only is it difficult for Mr. Howe to make arrangements to attend without longer notice but it is hard for us to give proper consideration to questions which may be up for discussion, in time to advise you properly. Perhaps you would have an opportunity of raising this question at the meeting.

We will be most interested to have your report on what transpires. Ends.

251. DEA/201-B (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 359 New York City, March 18, 1947

IMMEDIATE

Following from the Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: ATOM No. 78.
Following from McNaughton, Begins: My immediately preceding message. Draft of tentative text follows:[6]

As we resume our work in the Atomic Energy Commission, I feel that the time which has passed since our last meeting will have been well spent, providing that we now approach our tasks with a fuller perspective and a clearer vision of our objectives. I am confident that such will be the case as a result of the opportunity which we have had in submitting the work which we have done to date to the review and careful consideration not only of ourselves but of the Security Council and of the Governments we represent. The Resolution of the Security Council which is before us for discussion appropriately changes nothing in the tasks which were set us by the General Assembly in its Resolutions of January 24th and December 14th of last year. The discussions in the Council however have added valuable information on the attitudes of the respective Governments. In this connection, the Canadian delegation was happy to note the accord registered by two of the new members of the Commission, Belgium and Colombia, with the Report which was submitted by the Commission as a result of our work during 1946. We would be happy to know that this agreement is also shared by the other new member, Syria.

2. Our discussions last year led us to the conclusion that an International Control Agency was needed which should be charged with the responsibility for the system of safeguards and control, which we mentioned in our Report to the Security Council. Our examination, however, of the problem of safeguards and measures of control has, as stated in the introductory paragraph to Section "C" entitled "General Findings", been "limited to the more technical aspects of the control of atomic energy."

[6]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
L.B. P[earson] This seems alright to me.

3. Our terms of reference require us to make specific proposals for effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violation and evasion.

4. As we proceed with our work, I believe that we should examine carefully what degree of protection the various forms of safeguards would actually provide against the hazards of violation and evasion of an international agreement on atomic energy. We are called upon in this Commission to recommend rules and devise mechanisms which will provide for the utilization and development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only while affording protection in the way of effective safeguards to all States that participate in the plan of control. We will need to consider carefully the relevant effectiveness of the rules and mechanisms which come up for consideration, and the place which they would have in an effective plan of international control, bearing in mind that some of the safeguards to protect complying States will inevitably lie outside the provisions of the Treaty or Convention drafted in the Commission. I have in mind, for instance, the fact that protection to complying States against the hazards of violation or evasion will necessarily depend not only upon an effective system of inspection and control, which will give due warning to complying States, but also in the event of violations or evasion upon an effective system of collective security which can enforce any Treaty on atomic energy which may be agreed upon.

5. As to our method of work, I find myself in cordial agreement with those who suggest that we should seek to express our conclusions in a specific form in which connection we should bear in mind the second paragraph of the Security Council's Resolution in which it is expressly recognized that the final acceptance of any part of the recommendations or findings we have made to date is conditioned upon acceptance of all parts of the control plan in its final form.

6. I think also that the method of work which proved so effective in Committee II should be adopted as it enabled us to exchange our ideas freely. This method of procedure is, I think, essential when we are exploring new ground and when we are seeking by frank discussion to bring about a meeting of minds. Text ends. Message ends.

252. DEA/201-B (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 450 New York City, April 11, 1947

ATOM No. 88. Following from the Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Reference my ATOM No. 87.†

STATEMENT IN MEETING OF COMMITTEE II THURSDAY, APRIL 10TH, 1947

I support the proposal of the United States representative that we should now adopt an order of business in this Committee and commence a systematic programme of work.

The outline of topics offered by the United States representative which I understand has been circulated provides, in my opinion, a satisfactory framework for our discussions. It is comprehensive in scope, precise in content, and logical in arrangement. I agree also that we should start by defining the terms we are to use.

I attach equal importance to precision in reasoning. We are dealing with proposals for a form of international co-operation in the field of atomic energy which takes us into a new and hitherto unexplored field of international organization. As I have had occasion to say previously, each one of us will be required to explain our proposals both to our respective Governments and to the Parliaments and public to which our Governments are responsible. It is essential therefore that we should firmly establish the premises [sic] our reasoning.

Referring to the remarks made at a meeting of the Working Committee by the distinguished representative of France, I think that we should establish a basis in our argument for an international agency having operational and developmental functions in addition to the functions of inspection, supervision and management which we have outlined in our "First Report on Safeguards."

We should establish the reasons why the agency must have wide operational and developmental functions before deciding in detail what responsibilities must be assigned to it.

Some of these reasons we have already considered in this Commission. In my opinion, three considerations stand out which should be accepted as the major premise of our argument:

(a) That in order to minimize the possibility of atomic warfare certain activities known to be intrinsically dangerous, in the sense that they contribute directly to the manufacture of atom bombs, should be taken out of the hands of individual nations and made the exclusive responsibility of the international agency.

(b) That in order that nations should have ample warning of any major violation or evasion of the international Treaty or Convention, the agency must have sufficient powers and functions to fulfil this purpose.

(c) That in order to minimize the possibility of dangerous international rivalries the international agency should ensure a fair distribution of the benefits of atomic energy to all peoples.

It seems to me that in order to ensure the protection of complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions, it is evident that an international agency must have the necessary attributes to meet the considerations I have indicated. I am sure that we all agree that we must give primary emphasis to security; for mutual security is the essence of our problem.

I suggest that these considerations be included in an introduction to the Commission's Second Report to the Security Council; they might also form the basis of a statement of the purposes of the system of international control which would appear in the preamble of the Treaty or Convention which we are required to draft. Ends.

253. DEA/14000-1-10

Procès-verbal de la douzième réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 18 avril 1947

Minutes of Twelfth Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, April 18, 1947

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], April 29, 1947

The following were present:

Mr. A.D.P. Heeney (in the Chair),
General A.G.L. McNaughton,
Mr. L.B. Pearson,
Dr. C.J. Mackenzie,
Mr. George Ignatieff,
Mr. John Starnes (Secretary).

Also present (for discussion of question of applications for patents)

Mr. G.M. Jarvis[7]

Atomic Energy Patents; Applications for in Other Countries

Mr. Heeney suggested that as Mr. Jarvis of the Atomic Energy Control Board was present, the Panel might like to discuss first the problems raised by the United Kingdom proposals concerning Atomic Energy Patents referred to in teletype No. WA-951 of March 26th† from the Canadian Ambassador to the United States and subsequent communications. These had been circulated to all members of the Panel under cover of letters of March 27th† and April 3rd.†

2. The Panel accordingly considered a memorandum of April 11th† on this subject prepared by Mr. Jarvis and Mr. Helferdahl[8] of the National Research Council (copies of which had been circulated to all members on April 12th).

---

[7]Secrétaire, Commission de contrôle de l'énergie atomique.
Secretary, Atomic Energy Control Board.
[8]A.C. Helferdahl.

3. After discussion the Panel agreed that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be informed that in the opinion of the Panel, there would be no objection to Canada being represented at a meeting with United Kingdom and United States representatives to discuss the filing of patent applications in non-C.P.C. countries. Canadian representatives at such a meeting should bear in mind that paramount security considerations should not be sacrificed for any possible commercial advantages which might accrue. If the meeting were to be at an expert level, either Mr. Halferdahl or Mr. Jarvis, or both, should attend; if the meeting were to be carried to a political or diplomatic level, Mr. Wrong or Mr. Stone would represent us. (Teletype 1087 of April 24th† to the Canadian Ambassador, Washington attached.)

United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; International Control of Research

4. The Panel gave consideration to a number of matters arising out of recent discussions in the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations.

5. General McNaughton submitted a draft working paper† prepared by Dr. G.C. Lawrence[9] to represent the views of the Canadian delegation to the Commission on international control of research on atomic energy.

6. After discussion, the Panel agreed that the draft paper as submitted was not suitable and that the Canadian delegates should redraft substantially, omitting specific references to the Chalk River plant; Dr. Lawrence to be instructed immediately that in the opinion of the Panel the paper should not be used as a basis for discussion with other delegations.

United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; Control of Raw Materials

7. The Panel gave consideration to a paper submitted by General McNaughton containing the text of a proposed statement of the United States delegation (attached)† in respect of item A(2) of document AEC/C.2/16 (attached).†

8. There followed a discussion of the attitude which the Canadian delegation should adopt in the Commission in respect of raw materials.

9. The Panel agreed that it would be impracticable to establish any interdepartmental body at this time to study Canada's raw material position; it would, however, be useful to make experts such as Mr. Parsons, (Chief of the Bureau of Mines of the Department of Mines and Resources) available when discussions on these matters took place in the Commission. (Mr. Heeney to ask the Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources if Mr. Parsons could be made available to the delegation in New York the following week).

Membership of Panel

10. The Panel agreed to a suggestion made by Mr. Heeney that, if possible, Dr. Keenleyside in his capacity as Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources be made a member of the Panel.

JOHN STARNES
Secretary

---

[9]Conseil national de recherches.
National Research Council.

254. C.D.H./Vol. 10

Note du ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements pour le président du Conseil national de recherches

Memorandum from Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to President, National Research Council

[Ottawa], April 19, 1947

I have been giving some consideration to disposal of Canadian uranium. In view of the uncertainties as to the future of the Eldorado mine, it seems to me that we should be prepared to store a substantial part of the production in the form of uranium metal rods.

I understand that experiments in the production of uranium metal from uranium oxide have given satisfactory results. I also understand that you are testing methods of purifying uranium oxide. I also understand that the capital cost involved in both is not likely to exceed $500,000.

It occurs to me that since operation of the Chalk River plant will not commence until May 1st, your appropriation for Chalk River may be sufficient to include the capital cost of the required facilities.

I will be glad if you will explore the situation, and suggest ways and means of getting on with this project. I dislike being in a position of dependency on the U.S. for uranium rods under present circumstances. Nothing would please me more than to tell the U.S. that we are no longer interested in that source for uranium rods. I would also like to be in position to market all our uranium in the form of rods.

255. DEA/201-B (S)

Procès-verbal de la treizième réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 6 juin 1947

Minutes of Thirteenth Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, June 6, 1947

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], June 23, 1947

The following were present:

Mr. A.D.P. Heeney (in the Chair)
General A.G.L. McNaughton
Dr. C.J. Mackenzie
Dr. O. Solandt
Dr. H. Keenleyside
Mr. G. Ignatieff
Mr. J. Starnes (Secretary)

United Nations Atomic Energy Commission;

General McNaughton and Mr. Ignatieff reported at some length on recent developments in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Particular reference was made to the discussions which have been taking place in Committee 2 on the functions of an international agency in relation to research and development, ownership of materials, etc.

Consideration was given to the proposals for the establishment of an international agency for Research and Development outlined in telegram No.636 of May the 27th† and subsequent telegrams from General McNaughton. Dr. Mackenzie's letter of June 3rd† in which he expressed certain reservations was circulated and considered at the same time.

While admitting the desirability of having all research and development work on atomic weapons carried out exclusively by an international agency, Dr. Mackenzie was uncertain that a large international establishment for the prosecution of research and development in all fields of nuclear science would be desirable. One harmful effect of the establishment of such an international agency would be the depletion of national laboratories. For the present, therefore, Dr. Mackenzie was of the opinion that it would be better to establish an international agency to stimulate and support fundamental research and development through existing and proposed national research establishments.

Consideration was also given to the five papers referred to in telegram No.678 of June 5th† from General McNaughton. Mr. Ignatieff explained it was intended that the draft texts should first be referred to the governments of the countries represented on the Commission and then voted upon in the Commission.

The Panel noted the reports made by General McNaughton and Mr. Ignatieff on the progress made in the Atomic Energy Commission's deliberations.

United Nations Charter; Registration of Atomic Energy Agreements;

The Chairman said that consideration was being given by the Department of External Affairs to the desirability of registering under Article 102 of the United Nations Charter certain agreements which have been made between Canada and the United States. In view of the various agreements between Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom in respect of atomic energy, the Panel might consider whether Canada has any obligation to register.

After discussion the Panel agreed that insofar as the Combined Development Trust was concerned, Canada had no obligation, it being primarily a matter for the United States and United Kingdom Governments. The various contracts for delivery of uranium ores to the United States were between Eldorado Mines Limited before its transfer to the Crown and various private United States companies, and the question of an international agreement did not therefore arise. It was agreed we might have some obligations to register any agreements we had entered into under the Combined Policy Committee, but it was felt that Canada should be guided in this respect by the attitude adopted by the United States authorities. It was agreed that a memorandum outlining the present position might be prepared and submitted to the responsible Ministers for their information.

Uranium Ores; Exploration in Canada;

Dr. Keenleyside explained that it was the intention of the Department of Mines and Resources to propose an extensive exploration program, involving considerable expenditures, in certain parts of Canada with a view to discovering new mineral deposits. It was possible that such a survey might lead to the discovery of additional uranium deposits and he would like to have the opinion of the Panel as to the desirability of putting forward such a proposal at this time.

It was agreed by the Panel that such a program would be useful, in view of our limited known uranium supplies.

JOHN STARNES
Secretary

256. WEAE/File 10

Le secrétaire de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique au ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Secretary, Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy to Minister, Embassy in United States

TOP SECRET Ottawa, July 16, 1947

Dear Mr. Stone,

You will have seen in the minutes of the 13th meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy held on June 6, that it was agreed by the Panel that a memorandum outlining the present position with respect to our obligation under the C.P.C. and C.D.T. would be prepared and submitted to the responsible Ministers for their information. On looking through our files here, it would appear that there are large gaps in our information concerning the exact position with regard to the C.P.C. and C.D.T.

Mr. Heeney has agreed therefore, that I might write to you for additional information in this respect, in order that it may be possible to prepare a draft memorandum for consideration by the Panel at an early date.

I would be grateful therefore, if it would be possible for you to let me have any information which you consider might be useful in the preparation of such a memorandum and in particular any information with respect to your understanding of our obligations under the Quebec Agreement, the C.P.C. and the C.D.T. I think that the Panel's understanding of our position is adequately explained in the minutes of the 13th meeting, but it would seem from the file, that there may be a good deal to add to this and it might be that your files can supply some of the missing information.

Yours sincerely,
JOHN STARNES

257. WEAE/File 10

Le secrétaire de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique au ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Secretary, Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy to Minister, Embassy in United States

TOP SECRET. PERSONAL. Ottawa, July 16, 1947

Dear Tommy [Stone],

I have written you to-day a letter requesting any information which you may be able to give us concerning our obligations under the Quebec Agreement, the C.D.T. and C.P.C. which Arnold Heeney has authorized me to do.

Strange as it may seem, the departmental files are most incomplete and even more curious, those members of the Panel who should know, such as Jack Mackenzie and Arnold Heeney, are more than vague about our position.

A good part of the reason for this lies in the fact that Mr. Howe has, from the first, done most of the negotiating and a good deal of our commitments never seemed to have been put on paper and if they were, copies were never made available to this Department. For obvious reasons we cannot ask Mr. Howe at this stage for information which, it is proposed, should be the basis of a memorandum written for his information.

While it would appear from the minutes that Arnold Heeney raised the question in the Panel, it was of course, in fact this Department which needled the Panel into taking some action. Quite apart from the rather academic problem of whether we have an obligation to register under Article 102 of the Charter, I think it is highly desirable for other reasons to have our position vis-a-vis the United States and the United Kingdom with respect to the C.P.C. and C.D.T. clearly understood by all members of the Panel, as well as by those members of the Cabinet who are responsible for these matters. At the present time, this can hardly be said to be the case. In fact, but for Mr. Howe (even his information may be inaccurate) no member of the Cabinet seems to have ever had the position clearly explained to him. At a time when the Government may shortly have to reconsider our whole attitude towards participation in the Atomic Energy Commission and when there is a possibility we may have to consider some joint action on atomic energy with the United Kingdom and United States outside of the United Nations, I think it is important to have this part of the record as straight as possible.

I told you the other day when you were here that I am hoping to go away on leave in the early part of August and if possible, I should like to prepare the draft memorandum before leaving. If on the other hand, it seems to you that it would be impossible for you to gather this information together within the next few days, I think it might be better to leave the whole question over until September. The matter has waited now for some three years and I suppose it can wait another month or two.

I am sorry to have troubled you at this time but any memorandum which we could prepare on the basis of the information available here would be of little or no use to any one.

Yours as ever,
God bless,
JOHN [STARNES]

258. DEA/201 (S)

Le ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis au secrétaire de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique

Minister, Embassy in United States to Secretary, Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL Washington, July 23, 1947

My dear John [Starnes]:

I send you herewith our Top Secret Atomic files for the years 1945, '46 and '47. As I told you on the phone, I think it best that you should have these files so that you can take copies of any documents on them which you think should be in the Department.

You will find copies of the original Declaration of Trust and the Trust Agreement.[10] We do not seem to have in the Embassy, however, a copy of the Quebec Agreement. You will also find on these files the minutes of all, or nearly all, C.P.C. meetings, as well as the minutes of some other meetings in which no Canadian representative took part.

I think that you will find enough information to establish pretty well our present obligations. Both the C.P.C. and the Trust exist, of course, on their original basis. As you know, the proposals for setting up a new Trust Agreement and a new C.P.C. Agreement hang in mid-air. The next move in this as in certain other matters is up to the Americans, who seem to be little inclined to do anything in these fields at the moment.

Ralph Collins[11] is carrying these files to you and I should be grateful if you could get them back to me before you go away on leave.[12]

Yours ever,
TOMMY [STONE]

P.S. An advantage of sending the files to you as they are is that you will find duplicates of many of the papers. If there is more than one copy of any documents which

---

[10]Voir le volume 11, les documents 660 et 666.
See Volume 11, Documents 660 and 666.

[11]R.E. Collins, deuxième secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.
R.E. Collins, Second Secretary, Embassy in United States.

[12]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante : The following was written on this copy of the document: If you have any papers in Ottawa which are not on our files please add them. T [A. Stone] you want, you can take the duplicate from our files. If you take any documents in this way from the files, please make a note of them.

259. DEA/201 (S)

Le secrétaire de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique au ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Secretary, Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy to Minister, Embassy in United States

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL Ottawa, July 30, 1947

Dear Tommy [Stone]:

I am returning the Embassy's "Top Secret" files on atomic energy for the years 1945, 46 and 47, which you were kind enough to let me have last week.

I have had copies of the original Declaration of Trust and of the Trust Agreement made and I have placed a note to this effect on the appropriate file (1945). Happily, I have not found it necessary to copy any further material on the files, but they have proved of inestimable value in piecing together what remains a very complicated matter.

So far as I am able to determine, while perhaps not legally bound by the C.D.T. Agreement, we are active participants in the C.P.C. and have certain definite obligations in that connection. The most interesting part of my research reveals that on January 30th, 1946, the Cabinet gave consideration to the re-drafts of the Agreements between the United States, United Kingdom and Canada with respect to the C.P.C. and the C.D.T., which you will recall it was intended should replace the Quebec Agreement. Upon Mr. Howe's recommendation the Cabinet agreed these re-drafts represented a satisfactory basis for governing Canada's relationships with the United States and the United Kingdom and that the Canadian Government should participate in the Committee and the Trust on that basis. As you know, the re-drafts were never agreed to because the United States Government balked at the last moment, but this represents, I think, an interesting statement of Government policy.

I note that you do not appear to have copies of the Quebec Agreement on your files and I am therefore enclosing copies of correspondence between Mr. Churchill and Mr. King, plus a copy of the Articles of Agreement signed at Quebec on August 19, 1943.

I am satisfied that I now have enough material to draw up a memorandum for the information of the Ministers responsible which will, I hope, make our present position known to at least some members of the Cabinet.

As I am not very happy about bandying these files back and forth, I am sending them off to you today. I would be grateful if you could acknowledge receipt of them by teletype, so that I can enjoy my leave unhampered by thoughts that they may have been delivered by mistake to the Russian Embassy in Washington.

God bless,

J.K. STARNES

260. DEA/201-B (S)

Le secrétaire de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique au conseiller de la délégation à la Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies

Secretary, Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy to Adviser, Delegation to Atomic Energy Commission of United Nations

SECRET Ottawa, July 31, 1947

Dear George [Ignatieff]:

I am enclosing for your information two copies of the Memorandum for Cabinet in its final form, which you may be interested to retain for your files.

When I saw Mr. St. Laurent upon his return this morning, I went over the paper with him and he agreed to give it his support in Cabinet, which is just as well, since it is sponsored by him. I pointed out to him that any reservations which he or the Government as a whole might entertain in this regard could be expressed at the time that Canada is asked to approve the International Agreement. He is still doubtful as to the desirability of controlling so rigidly such a potential source of power and continually made the parallel between the discovery of electricity. He admits, however, be it grudgingly, that it is impossible to draw a safe dividing line between atomic energy for peaceful purposes and atomic energy for purposes of war.

I am leaving the Department on holiday at the end of the week and Gordon Cox will be looking after matters atomic, reporting direct to Mike.[13]

God bless,

[JOHN STARNES]

[13]L.B. Pearson.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 1/ENCLOSURE 1]

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

SECRET Ottawa, July 29, 1947

RE ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION INSTRUCTIONS TO CANADIAN DELEGATION

On June 10th, 1946, Cabinet gave approval to provisional instructions for the Canadian delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. These instructions in effect indicated that the Canadian representative had authority to support the United States proposals as contained in the Acheson-Lilienthal Report.[14] The first report made to the Security Council in December last year led to the conclusion that a single International Control Agency must be responsible for the system of safeguards and controls. The Commission however, had not discussed the general characteristics of such an Agency or its exact powers. Nor had it considered how the various safeguards would be administered in practice as part of an overall system.

During 1947 the Commission has given consideration to the control of atomic energy so as to ensure its use for peaceful purposes only and the measures of safeguard required in the interests of international security to prevent nuclear fuel in "dangerous" quantities being accumulated or seized by any nation. Discussion in the Commission has shown that even the most comprehensive system of external controls through inspection which can be envisaged, is not sufficiently reliable to carry the confidence of all nations that atomic war is not being prepared.

The principal additional measure which is considered necessary by the majority of the Commission is that there should be "ownership" of source materials vested in the Agency, from the time they are separated from the ground, and that the use of nuclear fuel and the products of fission should be made available to nations for non-dangerous uses under leases or contracts in which would be specified the precise controls to be applied. By "ownership" is understood the vesting in the Agency of the complete right of disposal of source materials and nuclear fuel which would be carried out as a trust for the signatory States. Moreover, all dangerous facilities would be prohibited to nations and would be owned and operated by the International Agency. The products of these plants, in the form of electric power or non-dangerous isotopes, would be made available to the nations.

On the other hand, it was realized that nations could not be expected to give wide discretionary powers to an International Agency to make any decisions it might wish regarding these matters. It is proposed, therefore, that the principles, which are to govern production, location, mining, distribution and use of source material and nuclear fuel as well as of plants using these materials in dangerous quantities, (i.e. quantities of military significance) should be written into the International Agreement.

[14]Voir le volume 12, les documents 273, 276, 279.
See Volume 12, Documents 273, 276, 279.

The proposals which have been developed are based mainly on initial United States drafts and, in general, follow the thesis of the Acheson-Lilienthal Report. Soviet representatives however, supported usually by Poland, have participated in informal as well as formal discussions but have declined to take part in the preparation of collective draft Papers. The Soviet delegate has held strictly to the proposals of his Government for the immediate outlawry of atomic weapons and the destruction of existing stockpiles with a separate agreement to establish international control based upon periodic inspection only under the authority of the Security Council. These proposals do not carry conviction and have yet to be discussed as the attention of the Commission has so far been directed to the completion of the draft Working Papers.

These draft Working Papers represent the consensus of opinion of the majority of the members of the Commission as individuals. They are specific and are intended to give the fundamental propositions of an International Treaty for the control of atomic energy, insofar as the functions and powers of the International Control Agency are concerned. The organization of the Agency financial arrangements, geographical allocation and distribution of plants and material, measures of enforcement and stages of transition, have yet to be dealt with. It is not thought that time will permit papers on these subjects to be included in the second report to be made to the Security Council before 16th September.

While the proposals contained in the draft Working Papers are based for the most part on the Acheson-Lilienthal Report, it was thought desirable to obtain the approval of the Government for support of these proposals, on which the Commission will be required to vote when the first revision of the draft text is completed. When adopted it will constitute the main part of the second report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council which is due to be made before the next meeting of the General Assembly on September 16. By expressing views at this time, the Canadian Government will not be finally committed to any plan for the international control of atomic energy for no nation is finally committed until it has had an opportunity to consider the plan as a whole.

The Canadian representative on the Atomic Energy Commission regards these proposals as necessary in the interest of security from the scientific and technical standpoint, and he further recommends that they be given favourable consideration by the Canadian Government from the point of view of general acceptability.

The attached appendix gives a summary of the proposals contained in the draft Working Papers.

[PIÈCE JOINTE 2/ENCLOSURE 2]

Appendice

Appendix

SECRET [Ottawa, July 29, 1947]

(a) Materials

1. "Key substance" includes uranium, thorium and any other element from which nuclear fuel can be produced. "Source material" includes any material containing one or more key substances in such concentration as the Agency may, by regulations, determine. Source material from which atomic energy is derived occurs in natural ores in the earth. After processing, it becomes nuclear fuel. It is then highly "dangerous" being immediately usable in atomic weapons.

2. It is proposed that the Agency would assign "production quotas" to nations to govern the mining, both as regards maximum and minimum quantities, of source material. These quotas would be determined by the principle that comparable national deposits be depleted proportionately. Quotas are necessary to prevent unworked deposits becoming potential reserve of dangerous material and, on the other hand, to prevent excessive production and the accumulation of dangerous stockpiles and also to ensure continuity in the supply of nuclear fuel to nations using it for peaceful purposes.

3. It is proposed that the Agency would assume ownership of all source materials from the time the ore is removed from the ground (in the case of complex ores when other valuable constituents have been removed). If the Agency owns source material from the moment it is capable of diversion, any unauthorized possession or movement of this material would easily be identifiable as a violation of the treaty. The conception of ownership vested in the Agency will facilitate control procedure.

4. It is proposed that ownership of materials would continue throughout the life of the materials from the time it is mined, and would only end when material has been transformed into electrical or other forms of energy, or into non-dangerous isotopes. The Agency would be responsible for the use and security of all such materials, and for their distribution to nations for peaceful purposes under license which will specify the particular conditions to be complied with. This procedure reduces the hazards resulting from unknown or unauthorized accumulation of materials and removes any uncertainty as to conditions to be observed.

5. It is proposed that the Agency would have full control over the movement and handling of all source material, key substances and nuclear fuel.

6. It is proposed that the Agency would take possession of source material when concentration of key substances reaches a point specified by the Agency. The Agency would determine when and how the material would be refined and processed and its subsequent disposal in accordance with the treaty. Operating procedures would be specified so as to prevent loss of key substances and to fit production schedules and avoid unnecessary accumulations.

7. It is proposed that the Agency would pay due compensation when it takes actual physical possession of the material. The prices to be paid would be determined by agreement with the nations concerned. If no agreement is reached, then by arbitration or International Court.

8. It is proposed that both the Agency and the nations would be restricted in the right to stockpile by the terms of the treaty. Stocks of source material and key substances would be kept as low as consistent with efficient operating procedures to minimize danger from seizure. Stockpiles of nuclear fuel represent greater potential danger than stockpiles of source material but, to some extent, will be necessary for large power plants. Policy must be dictated by security considerations. The treaty would restrict the accumulation of nuclear fuel to current requirements and the Agency would not be empowered to anticipate future demands by building stockpiles.

9. It is proposed that all nuclear fuel in dangerous quantities would remain in the direct custody of the Agency, in order to reduce possibilities of diversion of material readily convertible to use in atomic weapons. By "dangerous quantities" is meant quantities defined as specifically as possible by the treaty as being significant for military purposes.

10. It is proposed that nuclear fuel in non-dangerous quantities may be leased to national and private research and development projects, in which case the terms of the lease or contract would specify the controls to be imposed.

(b) Plants and Facilities

1. The general principle involved in considering the control of the various kinds of plants and facilities is that facilities involving dangerous quantities of materials would be owned and operated exclusively by the Agency. Facilities involving non-dangerous amounts may be operated by the nations under license by the Agency and subject to its control.

2. It is proposed that quotas of materials, plants and facilities for the application of atomic energy for peaceful purposes would be specified in the treaty. Within these quotas the Agency would allocate these materials, plants and facilities to nations, dangerous facilities being operated by the Agency on behalf of the nations. The purpose is to maintain a strategic balance defined in the treaty between nations in plants, facilities and materials, so that no one nation would be able to attain, through developments within its territory or by seizure of plants, facilities and materials in adjacent territories, a predominant position. The writing of quotas in the treaty will enable nations to know their relative position in advance.

3. It is proposed that mines, mills and dumps of unprocessed or unconcentrated ore would normally be left to national or private operation subject to control by license and inspection by the Agency. It is proposed that, in exceptional circumstances, the Agency may own and operate mines in which case it would account for and safeguard source material and be authorized to sell other important constituents in the ore.

4. It is proposed that the Agency may own and operate or at its discretion, lease refineries. When a refinery is operated under license, the Agency would make inspections and maintain independent facilities for checking. Refineries engaged in processing of source material for purpose of extracting other important constituents would normally be operated under license. As regards chemical and metallurgical plants for the purification of the compounds of uranium and thorium and the preparation of metallic uranium, it has been decided that until the Agency, as a result of experience in the actual operation and management of chemical and metallurgical plants, is satisfied that considerations of security and economy permit, the International Agency shall own, operate and manage all chemical and metallurgical plants for treating key substances.

5. It is proposed that the Agency would have the exclusive right to own, operate, and manage all dangerous facilities capable of producing or utilizing or processing nuclear fuel. This includes all isotope separation plants, larger reactors and associated chemical and metallurgical plants. The Agency would account for, conserve and protect nuclear fuel and key substances.

6. It is proposed that the designs for all plants and facilities employing materials in dangerous quantities would be subject to check and approval by the Agency and that their construction by nations would be supervised by the Agency.

7. It is understood that nations will have the right to undertake the distribution and use of power and of non-dangerous radioactive by-products produced in atomic plants.

(c) Research

1. It is proposed that the Agency would conduct research in its own facilities and with its own personnel, in order that the Agency may keep fully informed of all developments in the field of atomic energy and attract qualified personnel.

2. It is proposed that research in atomic weapons would be prohibited to nations and that the Agency would have the exclusive duty of conducting research where quantities of materials capable of explosions are involved.

3. It is proposed that research and development involving dangerous quantities would be prohibited to nations.

4. It is proposed that the Agency would be obligated to promote the exchange of scientific information and to facilitate research by national or other institutions, providing materials involved do not reach dangerous quantities. The elimination of secrecy regarding atomic energy and promotion of new knowledge for peaceful purposes are cardinal principles accepted as necessary.

(d) Inspection

1. Inspection by itself is regarded by the Commission as an unreliable means of control as its effectiveness is predicated on the assumption of co-operation on the part of the nations. Nations have it within their power to frustrate and evade inspection while accepting it in principle. For this reason in the controls proposed the emphasis has been placed on the International Agency owning source materials from the time they are mined until they are used up and on the Agency owning and operating dangerous facilities and plants. On the other hand it is recognized that inspection in association with other forms of control is necessary. It is also recognized that limitations must be placed on the discretionary powers of the Agency in carrying out inspections or other controls, especially those intended to detect clandestine or unreported activities so that unnecessary friction should not arise, especially between national authorities and the Agency. The rights of and limits to the powers of the Agency would therefore be set out in a separate paper.

2. It is proposed, subject to the above limitations, that the Agency would be empowered to inspect and check operations or materials in all plants or facilities operated under license from the Agency. This would include mining and milling operations as well as laboratories and research establishments.

3. It is proposed that nations would be obligated to give full information to the Agency on all known reserves of source material. The Agency would be authorized to assist the nations in the conduct of surveys and explorations for source materials by provision of skilled personnel, assistance in equipment and liaison personnel. Reports by nations would be subject to check by the Agency. The Agency would be empowered also to undertake surveys and explorations in areas known or, in the opinion of the Agency, deemed likely to contain source material. The Agency would be required to notify the nation of its intention and if the nation doubted that the area contained source material it would appeal to the International Court. Further, in these areas access to private property, military reservations and the like, would be subject to warrant from either a National or International Court. Nations would be required to permit the Agency personnel ingress, egress and access to carry out these functions subject to the rights and limitations referred to in paragraph (d)1. The International Court referred to in the summary of proposals is not the International Court of Justice as constituted and empowered under the present Statute. The character and powers which may be proposed as amendments to the existing Statute, or for a newly constituted court, have not yet been worked out, but it is generally thought that these would be appropriate for the determination of technical as well as legal matters pertaining to atomic energy.

4. It is proposed that in agreement with the nation concerned the Agency would have the right to carry out aerial surveys to check information on source materials reported by the nation to the Agency. If the nation does not agree, the Agency may appeal to the International Court for a warrant to authorize the Agency to undertake the required surveys and explorations itself.

5. It is proposed that the Agency would be empowered to seek out clandestine activities. For this purpose it may conduct ground, aerial or other surveys and inspections. Agency personnel would be given full freedom of movement for this purpose.

6. It is proposed that nations would provide officers for attachment to the Agency whose sole duty would be to assist and facilitate inspections, surveys and explorations authorized to be carried out by the Agency either under the Treaty or by warrant.

261. PCO/U-41-A

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 886 New York City, August 5, 1947

IMMEDIATE

Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: ATOM No. 158. Following from Ignatieff, Begins: Committee 1 met on Monday, August 4th to consider various questions of procedure concerned with the preparation of the second report of the Atomic Energy Commission to be submitted to the Security Council before the next meeting of the General Assembly.

2. There was some discussion regarding the time limit for various stages in the preparation of the report. There was some hope that there would be a recess of the Commission from the 15th to 25th August, but discussion revealed that this might encroach upon the time for discussion of the new Soviet proposals submitted on June 11th, and the Soviet delegate insisted that no vacation plans must be allowed to interfere with the full discussion of the Soviet proposals. The discussion of the Soviet proposals will begin next Wednesday, August 6th.

3. The meetings at which the Soviet proposals are to be discussed are to be formal ones and, therefore, the views expressed by delegations will be regarded as representing the attitude of their Governments. I should therefore like some guidance regarding the general line of argument I should employ.

4. Assuming that you are in agreement with the general appreciation of the Soviet position expressed in paragraph 9 of General McNaughton's message No. 816 of July 21st,† I take it that I should oppose the idea of a convention outlawing atomic weapons to be supplemented by an international Convention providing for periodic inspection. I should also presumably oppose the idea of the setting up of a Control Commission limited in function to the rights of investigation, checking, studying, and observing and limited in powers to making recommendations to Governments and to the Security Council. There is nothing in the Soviet proposals that provides for an international production policy that would ensure against the accumulation of dangerous quantities of nuclear fuel by nations, and for international ownership and operation of materials and dangerous facilities to prevent nations from acquiring military supremacy with the use of atomic energy.

5. I think it is important that the record in the second report should carry a full refutation of the Soviet position in order to meet the argument that control by international inspection is enough.

6. I should be grateful if I could be informed as soon as possible whether this general line is approved, in time for the meeting on Wednesday.

7. As regards the Soviet amendments and additions to the first report, the Secretariat has prepared the draft of a paper recording the discussions, and at today's meeting a Sub-Committee was set up to prepare a text for inclusion in the second report under the Chairmanship of Canada.

8. It was generally felt that delegations should endeavour to obtain Government instructions to enable them to vote on the draft working papers by August 25th so that the report of the Commission could be presented to the Security Council not later than September 7th to permit of its distribution in time for the meeting of the General Assembly. The draft working papers are those which were summarized in General McNaughton's telegrams No. 816 of July 21st and No. 824 of July 22nd.† The revised texts have been sent forward by diplomatic bag under cover of my despatch No. 2 of August 4th.† Ends.

262. DEA/201-B (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au consul général à New York

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 724 Ottawa, August 6, 1947

SECRET

MOTA No. 51. Following for McNaughton:

Memorandum for Cabinet, copy of which was sent to Ignatieff by Starnes under covering letter of July 31st, has been approved and Cabinet agreed that you should be instructed as indicated in that memorandum.

263. DEA/201-F (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], August 7, 1947

RE ATOMIC ENERGY QUESTIONS; ADVISORY PANEL

We have both been somewhat bothered as to the efficacy of our machinery for giving pre-Cabinet consideration to atomic energy questions and I have been giving this question further thought.

The Advisory Panel can, I think, perform a more useful function as a clearing house for the half dozen senior officials principally interested, as a point of contact with our delegation on the United Nations Commission and as group advisers to the Cabinet on policy questions.

However the volume and complexity of the problems relating to atomic energy coupled with the fact that all members of the Panel are fully occupied with their own duties so reinforce what is perhaps natural inertia that we need something more to stimulate and guide the Panel's deliberations.[15]

Starnes has done yeoman service as Secretary to the Panel. Indeed without him the Panel would of late have been only a paper body. However he as well is occupied with other things.

I had mentioned to you before the possibility of having [A.F.B.] Stannard (who is on secondment to this office from Defence Research) put onto this work. From September 1st he will have some time to devote to it and I have told him that we propose to have him designated Assistant Secretary, with the expectation that he will keep abreast of developments and, in consultation with Starnes, prepare papers for the Panel and arrange for the Panel to discuss questions which should be dealt with as they arise from time to time and require attention at the official or at the Cabinet level.

The Panel should really have recommended to the government the memorandum which was approved on July 31st. In the circumstances, however, there was no chance of their doing so. In future, with Stannard spending some time on this work it should be possible to anticipate such situations and have the Panel's advice before the government in good time.

It might, perhaps, be useful later on for Stannard to go to New York for a short spell with the delegation. However this can await developments.

I take it that you will concur in this arrangement (which I believe I forecast at a meeting of the Panel some time ago) and would be glad to have an indication that you do.[16]

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

264. DEA/201-B (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 912 New York, August 7, 1947

Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: ATOM No. 161. Following from Ignatieff, Begins: Reference my teletype ATOM No. 159.† Following is text of my statement made in Committee 2, Wednesday, August 6th.

2. On behalf of the Canadian delegation I should like to make some preliminary remarks on the proposals on atomic energy control submitted by the representative of the Soviet Union on 11th June of this year, reserving the right to make additional comment on the proposals on points of detail later.

---

[15]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree L.B. P[earson]

[16]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Yes L.B. P[earson]

3. If I understand correctly, these proposals are intended to supplement the purely legal provisions contained in the proposed International Convention on the Prohibition of the Manufacture and Use of Atomic Weapons submitted by the Soviet delegate on June 19th last. In other words, in addition to the purely legal undertakings of an international character envisaged in that Convention, it is now proposed that nations would have whatever assurance of the fulfilment of the legal requirements of that Convention, that may be derived from the proposals submitted on June 11th.

4. The Canadian delegation is happy to note that the Soviet proposals admit the necessity of strict international control in respect of "mining of atomic raw materials and in the production of atomic materials and atomic energy." The important point in our view however, is not how strict the control may be, but how effective it is in preventing atomic war.

5. At the risk of recapitulating some of the points made with such clarity by the representatives which preceded me, and in particular the representative of the United States, I should like briefly to examine what appear to be the essentials of the system of control which is proposed by the Soviet delegation. If I understand them incorrectly, I shall be glad to be corrected.

6. The Soviet delegation proposes a supplementary Convention on the control of atomic energy based on four fundamental provisions. Three of these provisions seem to be entirely of a procedural character; namely the composition of the Control Commission, its right to establish its own rules of procedure, and the basis of selection of inspectorial personnel of the Commission. The fourth provision apparently contains the pith of the Soviet proposal, that is that the Control Commission shall "periodically carry out inspection of facilities for mining of atomic raw materials and the production of atomic materials and atomic energy."

7. In the first place, the inspection proposed relates, apparently, only to declared mines and production facilities. I see no measures proposed which would provide for the detection of clandestine activities, other than a somewhat vague reference to the carrying out of special investigations in cases where suspicion of violation of the Convention prohibiting atomic weapons arises. In other words, it seems that it is suggested that inspection should be limited to reported and declared facilities, that it should be periodic only, and is to be supplemented only by special ad hoc investigations. The nature of these provisions is apparently designed to ensure that once nations have pledged themselves not to manufacture or use atomic weapons, they should each be left alone to carry on atomic activities at their own discretion, subject only to periodic check by the International Control Commission.

8. Such provisions, if adopted, would, in the view of our delegation, "fly in the face" of the substantial arguments based on closely examined scientific and technical facts which established the need for the safeguards contained in the First Report of the Atomic Energy Commission, and which have since been supplemented by the further requirements outlined in the draft working papers which are on the agenda of this Committee. These safeguards of course include measures other than inspection.

9. Periodic inspection however is not defined in these proposals. However, it would seem to amount to a periodic check of facilities and of quantities and concentration of materials in production and in use. Accounting for materials by means of inspection and check has been demonstrated by argument in this Commission as being inadequate in itself as a safeguard to prevent the diversion of materials in quantities of military significance. Periodic accounting, moreover, would provide no check, apparently, in the production and use of materials between the periodic visits and would therefore all the more fail to give signatory States, in our view, an assurance that materials were not being diverted from peaceful applications. Unless the Control Commission can give assurances that no nation can accumulate quantities of nuclear fuel which it can apply without much delay to the manufacture of atomic weapons, it does not, in our view, meet the essential requirements of security.

10. The functions of the Agency, as outlined on page 3 of the Soviet proposals, would apparently be limited to investigation, check, study, observation, collection and analysis of data and the carrying out of special investigations. I point out that there are no reasons given in support of the idea that such limited functions on the part of the Agency would provide the necessary security to signatory States. The proposals, on the other hand, are contradicted by the substantial arguments contained in the draft working papers, and in particular by those summarized in Paper AEC/C.2/44† which establish on the grounds of security, the need to give operational and developmental functions to the International Agency, in order to prevent any nation from preparing for atomic warfare, and in order to give warning to complying States of any violations and evasions of controls. In fact, in the absence of supporting argument, it is difficult in our view to ascertain exactly what the controls envisaged in the Soviet proposals are intended to accomplish towards providing "effective safeguards by way of inspection and other means to protect complying States against the hazards of violations and evasions", which is one of the obligatory objectives which we have been set in the Commission.

11. As regards the powers which are proposed for the Agency in the document submitted by the Soviet delegation, it would appear that the Agency would merely be an inspectorial body, subordinate to the Security Council, with powers of giving advice to Governments and to the Security Council, and of requesting Governments and the Council to take certain action. There appears to be no assurance, if such a body were established that nations would either accept any of the advice or recommendations given to them, still less, that any of the provisions would be carried out. In effect, if we are to have an advisory body of the kind proposed, there would seem to be no necessity for the setting up of a special body, for the present Atomic Energy Commission might well be expected to fulfill these provisions. It seems appropriate indeed that the composition suggested for this body is identical with the present Commission.

12. In short, subject only to the legal undertakings of the outlawing Convention and the periodic visitations of international inspectors, the nations, under the Soviet proposals would apparently be left entirely free to develop their own program of production of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. There appears to be nothing in this plan to prevent a nation from accumulating and having at its ready disposal unlimited quantities of nuclear fuel, convertible at any time into atomic bombs. This is a proposal which, in our view, would be difficult to justify on the grounds of international security and the terms of reference which have been given this Commission.

13. In conclusion, I would only say that our delegation would be glad if the Soviet Union representative would advance arguments in support of the proposals which he has tabled, which would carry conviction that the objectives which have been set for us in the terms of reference of the Commission would be met by any or all of his proposals. Ends. Message ends.

265. DEA/201-B (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], August 8, 1947

RE UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

With reference to Ignatieff's ATOM No. 158 of August 5th, there is, I think,[17] no doubt whatever that the instructions contained in your teletype reply of August 7th[18] are completely in accord with government policy.

The memorandum considered and approved by the Cabinet on July 31st made it quite clear that the draft working papers under consideration went a great deal further with respect to the powers of the Agency than the latest Soviet proposals; further that these powers were necessary in the interests of security from the scientific and technical standpoints.

While the Advisory Panel have been somewhat sceptical as to the possibility of such powers being attributed to the Agency and even somewhat apprehensive as to the Canadian position if agreement were ever reached thereon, all members of the Panel I think have accepted the necessity of our going along with the United States.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

[17]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
there [L.B. Pearson]

[18]Probablement le document suivant.
Probably the immediately following document.

266. DEA/201-B (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au consul général à New York

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Consul General in New York

TELEGRAM 737 Ottawa, August 9, 1947

SECRET

Following for the Atomic Energy Commission delegation, Begins: ATOM No. MOTA 53. Following for Ignatieff, Begins: Your ATOM No. 159,† 160† and 161. The line you took in your admirable statement to Committee 2 on Wednesday, August 6th as reported in ATOM No. 161 is in accord with general policy approved by the Cabinet. If and when it is necessary for you to cast the Canadian vote involving rejection of the Soviet proposals you should do so on the grounds set forth quite admirably in paragraphs 10 and 11 of your statement.

It would seem to us at first glance that a resolution stating that the Soviet proposals are not in accord with the Assembly resolution as contemplated by the United States has a good deal to commend it. In any event, however, unless something quite new develops you are clearly within your instructions in voting to reject the present Soviet proposals. Ends.

267. DEA/5475-AD-40

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 980 New York City, August 22, 1947

Following from the Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: ATOM No. 173. Following for Drury from Ignatieff, Begins: Your teletype No. 769, August 16th, 1947.† Following is draft section on atomic energy for inclusion in Assembly commentary:

(a) Relation of the Commission with the Assembly

1. The Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations was established by Resolution of the General Assembly, adopted at the first part of the first session of the General Assembly on January 24th, 1946. The Commission was set up to deal with "the problems raised by the discovery of atomic energy and other related matter" and submits its reports and recommendations to the Security Council, in view of the Council's primary responsibility for the maintaining of international peace and security. It is provided that "in appropriate cases" the Security Council should transmit reports of the Commission to the General Assembly and members of the United Nations.

2. At the second part of the first session of the General Assembly, a further Resolution was adopted on December 14th, 1946, governing the general regulation and the reduction of armaments which includes several important clauses affecting the Commission. In this Resolution the Assembly recognized that the prohibition of atomic weapons, and the control of atomic energy to ensure its use only for peaceful purposes was an essential part of any overall scheme to regulate and reduce armaments generally. Thus the General Assembly urged the "expeditious fulfilment" by the Atomic Energy Commission of its tasks under the previous Resolution of January 24th, 1946, and urged the Security Council to expedite the consideration of a draft Convention for the creation of an international system of control over atomic energy which would include the prohibition of atomic weapons. As the Commission is also charged with the working out of plans for the elimination from national arms of other "major weapons adaptable to mass destruction", as well as atomic weapons, the Resolution of December 14th, 1946, also urged the expeditious fulfilment of this task.

(b) The First Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council

3. The Atomic Energy Commission submitted its first Report to the Security Council on December 31st, 1946. In this Report the processes employed in the release and use of atomic energy were set out in detail, and the Report recommended certain safeguards, which should be applied at each stage in the production and use of atomic energy, to ensure that materials or plants would not be diverted to the making of atomic weapons. The Report, however, expressly stated that these proposed safeguards "do not represent a plan for atomic energy control but only some of the elements which should be incorporated in any complete or effective plan."

4. This Report was adopted in the Atomic Energy Commission by ten favourable votes, including that of Canada, with the USSR and Poland abstaining. The first Report, which was a progress Report only, was then tabled in the House of Commons by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on March 26th, 1947.[19] The Report was referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs of the House of Commons, and General McNaughton, Canadian delegate to the Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations, appeared on Thursday and Friday, June 5th and 6th, 1947, to explain the Report in detail. The Committee approved the Report.

5. The first Report was considered in the Security Council, and the representative of the Soviet Union stated that he could not accept the proposals in the first Report and tabled twelve amendments and additions. As the differences between the Soviet and other members of the Security Council could not be resolved in the Council, the Security Council adopted the following Resolution on March 10th, 1947:

"The Security Council, having received and considered the first Report of the Atomic Energy Commission dated December 31st, 1946, together with its letter of transmittal of the same date;

---

[19]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume II, pp. 1745-1748.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume II, pp. 1750-4.

"Recognizes that any agreement expressed by the members of the Council to the separate portions of the Report is preliminary since final acceptance of any part by any nation is conditioned upon its acceptance of all parts of the control plan in its final form;

"Transmits the record of its consideration of the first Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Commission;

"Urges the Atomic Energy Commission, in accordance with the General Assembly Resolution of January 24th and December 14th, 1946, to continue its enquiry into all phases of the problem of the international control of atomic energy and to develop as promptly as possible the specific proposals called for by Section 5 of the General Assembly Resolution of 24th January, 1946, and by the Resolution of the General Assembly of 14th December, 1946, and in due course to prepare and submit to the Security Council a draft treaty or treaties or convention or conventions incorporating its ultimate proposals;

"Requests the Atomic Energy Commission to submit a second Report to the Security Council before the next session of the General Assembly." (AEC/20)

(c) Present State of the Discussions in the Atomic Energy Commission

6. Working forward from the first Report, the Atomic Energy Commission has been preparing a second Report to the Security Council, in accordance with the Council's Resolution of March 10th, 1947. The Commission has considered some of the broader aspects of the problem of atomic energy, particularly from the standpoint of what is necessary in the matter of control in the interests of international security.

7. As the materials which constitute the explosive elements of atomic bombs, plutonium and uranium 235, (called nuclear fuels), are applicable directly both to atomic weapons and to peaceful uses, particularly power, it has been recognized in the Commission that their production, distribution and location cannot be allowed to become a matter of international rivalry, if the threat of atomic warfare is to be averted. In consequence, it was recognized in the Commission that nations should not be left free to develop their individual programmes of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, even under the limitations that would be imposed by the safeguards proposed in the first Report.

8. The principal additional proposal envisaged is that all plants and facilities, using atomic materials in dangerous quantities, would be prohibited to nations and, likewise, the right to dispose of atomic materials from the time that they are mined. It is, therefore, proposed that ownership of such materials, in the sense of a trust on behalf of signatory States, should be vested in an International Control Agency. It is likewise proposed that the Agency should own and operate all plants and facilities using atomic materials in dangerous quantities. Nations on the other hand would be permitted, under appropriate safeguards, to carry on the mining of materials, disposing of them to the International Control Agency, according to the terms of the proposed International Agreement, and to carry on research and development activities, not involving dangerous quantities of material.

9. The Commission recognizes also that the nations could not be expected to give wide discretionary powers to an International Control Agency. It is proposed, therefore, that the principles which are to govern the production, distribution, location and use of atomic materials as well as of all plants, should, as far as it is possible, be decided by International Agreement and written into the Treaty. This would involve the establishment of mining quotas, and quotas governing the allocation of plants and materials. It would then be the duty and responsibility of the International Control Agency to implement the Agreement according to its terms.

10. These proposals, which are outlined in the briefest terms, are intended to establish the main characteristics of the functions and powers of an International Control Agency. The proposals are based mainly on initial United States drafts and, in general, follow the thesis of the Acheson-Lilienthal Report. Ten out of the twelve members, including the representative of Canada, have been associated with the working out of these proposals which would constitute a basis for the working out in further detail of a plan for the international control of atomic energy. These proposals constitute the main section of the second Report of the Atomic Energy Commission to the Security Council, which is to be submitted to the Council before the Assembly meets, in accordance with the Council's Resolution of March 10th, 1947.

11. The Soviet and Polish representatives have opposed the majority proposals in the Commission. The Soviet representative submitted additional proposals on June 11th, 1947, whereby the convention to outlaw the use and manufacture of atomic weapons proposed by the Soviet delegation in June, 1946, would be supplemented by a further convention establishing a system of control based on periodic inspection only. Under the Soviet plan, individual nations would be free to plan and execute their own atomic energy programmes, subject only to periodic check by inspectors from the International Control Agency. Nations would be free to accumulate, and have at their ready disposal, dangerous quantities of atomic materials directly convertible into atomic bombs. The functions of the International Control Agency would be limited only to checking and investigation, and its powers restricted to making recommendations to Governments and the Security Council. This plan was discussed at four meetings of Committee 2, and the Committee at the conclusion of the discussions adopted a Resolution, proposed by the Canadian representative, to the effect that these proposals, as they now stand and the explanations given thereon, "do not provide an adequate basis for the development by the Committee of specific proposals for an effective system of international control of atomic energy." This Resolution was adopted by ten favourable votes. The Committee decided to go ahead on the basis of the proposals, worked out by the majority, on the clear understanding that should any new alternatives be submitted by the Soviet delegation or any new arguments be forthcoming, such proposals would be considered. The door is therefore not closed, under the terms of the Canadian Resolution, to further efforts to resolve the differences between the Soviet delegation and the majority of the Commission.

(d) Suggestions for the Second Session of the General Assembly

12. The work of the Commission in preparing a plan for the international control of atomic energy should be allowed to proceed until a draft Treaty is prepared for the consideration of all the nations. The Report of the Commission, which is to be ready by the time the Assembly meets, is only a progress Report. While important differences in principle have become apparent between the Soviet Union, Poland on the one hand, and the majority of the Commission, on the other, efforts to resolve these differences, either by the Commission, or by direct diplomatic negotiation, will undoubtedly continue.

13. In the absence of any satisfactory alternative, the Commission should be left free to develop its plan on the basis of the majority proposals, trying, at the same time, to resolve outstanding differences between the members of the Commission. Efforts should, therefore, be made to avoid a breakdown in the discussions in the Commission, until a plan of control is fully developed, and possible alternatives have been explored. Ends.

268. DEA/201-B (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1031 New York, September 3, 1947

Following from the Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: ATOM No. 179. Following from McNaughton, Begins: Reference my message ATOM No. 178.† The following is a full text of my statement in Committee 2, September 2nd, 1947:

(1) Speaking as the representative of Canada, I should like to make a statement on the proposals contained in the documents on the agenda of this Commission.

(2) I may say that these proposals have been considered by my Government and they are in agreement with these proposals as a basis for further work of this Commission in developing a plan for the international control of atomic energy.

(3) These proposals are based on the main premise that only by giving an international agency, by the terms of an international agreement, the powers and function to own materials in dangerous quantities and own and operate dangerous facilities, will a plan of control meet the requirements of international security.

(4) By proposing to give the international authority operating functions and powers of ownership within the terms of a comprehensive international agreement, we hope to reduce the possibilities of conflict between national authorities in the field of atomic energy, and also to reduce the necessity for restraints and interference with national authorities on the part of an international authority.

(5) In the view of my Government, the Committee was justified in rejecting the idea that requirements of international security could be met by the proposal that nations, having pledged themselves not to use or manufacture atomic weapons, be free to undertake the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes subject only to periodic inspection.

(6) The report which we are to submit to the Security Council is to be an interim report only. It is our duty, not only to improve, in every way possible, the documents which are under discussion, but also to seek to narrow and make precise the areas of agreement and disagreement between those who accept the approach represented in the working documents, and those who disagree with this approach.

(7) I say that the Canadian delegation is willing to accept these proposals, as a basis for the further work of the Commission, but is also willing sympathetically to consider any suggestions for the clarification or improvement of these documents. I understand that some suggestions will be forthcoming, and I hope that such alterations and amendments will be submitted as soon as possible, in order to facilitate the detailed discussion on these proposals.

(8) Some members of the Committee disagree with these proposals on more fundamental lines. I understand that Mr. Gromyko expressed the view that the proposals of the working documents contain "organic" differences which could not be eliminated by mere amendment. On the other hand he referred specifically to the question of quotas, and the proposals on research and development as matters on which he would be prepared to develop further discussion to seek to clarify the differences which exist in the Committee. I think it would be most useful if the Soviet delegation could indicate more precisely the points in the proposals, at least, in regard to these particular matters or others, which they might be willing to accept and the points on which they differ.

(9) I understand, also, that the representative of Poland has undertaken to present a detailed analysis of these documents and to propose amendments. I am sure the Committee would like to hear the statement from our Polish colleague at this meeting.

(10) In conclusion, I would emphasize that in reporting the progress of our discussions to the Security Council, we should endeavour to give as clear and objective a view of the state of our discussions as possible. We should state the views of those members of the Commission who agree with the specific proposals contained in the working papers, and indicate the further work which remains to be done, in accordance with the working programme which we adopted. We should also seek to indicate, as precisely as possible, the views of those who have not found it possible to accept the approach to the problem of international control, which is represented in these papers, and to report what action we propose to take, in continuing our discussions, to clarify and seek to resolve the differences which exist. Ends. Message ends.

269. DEA/201 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-2828 Washington, September 5, 1947

TOP SECRET

Following for Pearson and Heeney from Wrong, Begins: In my message to Heeney WA-2777 of August 30th† and letter of the same date† I reported the proposal under consideration in the State Department concerning co-operation between the United States, United Kingdom, and Canada in the development of atomic energy. I have since seen Ignatieff's ATOM No. 175 of August 26th† reporting his talk with Osborn[20] on this matter.

2. We have made some enquiries at the British Embassy and at the State Department. MacLean[21] (now United Kingdom Secretary of the C.P.C.) sticks to the view that the United States suggestion is occasioned by their desire for the United Kingdom to withdraw their reservations in the United Nations Commission. Apparently Bevin renewed the controversy about sharing secret information and know-how in a rather angry talk with Douglas[22] in London. There has also been an exchange of cables between Marshall and Bevin about the United Kingdom's reservations to the basic principles of the United States plan now incorporated in the working papers of the United Nations Commission. A memorandum strongly deploring the United Kingdom's attitude was recently left at the Foreign Office and is still under consideration. The British are reluctant to modify their reservations, but might, I should think, be persuaded to do so if they get a definite undertaking from the United States that they will receive all the technical information they desire. (I suppose such an undertaking could not be given firmly without an amendment to the McMahon Act.)[23]

3. If this interpretation is correct, the result aimed at would be that the British would support an interim report by the United Nations Commission which would spell out that the U.S.S.R. had obstructed agreement thus far on the United States plan but that the principles of the plan were fully supported by a large majority of the members of the Commission. The United States would supplement this by [20]F.H. Osborn, représentant suppléant des États-Unis, Commission de l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies.

---

F.H. Osborn, Deputy U.S. Representative, Atomic Energy Commission of United Nations.

[21]D.D. MacLean, premier secrétaire, ambassade du Royaume-Uni.
D.D. MacLean, First Secretary, Embassy of United Kingdom.

[22]Lewis W. Douglas, ambassadeur des États-Unis au Royaume-Uni.
Lewis W. Douglas, Ambassador of United States in United Kingdom.

[23]Appelé aussi l'Atomic Energy Act, adopté le 1er août 1946; Brien McMahon était le président de la Commission de l'énergie atomique du Sénat.
Also known as Atomic Energy Act enacted on August 1, 1946; Brien McMahon was Chairman, Senate Committee on Atomic Energy.

announcing their intention of developing co-operation on the beneficial uses of atomic energy with the United Kingdom and Canada, initially at least. I am not sure, however, whether the latter announcement would be made solely as a quid pro quo.

4. Gullion[24] of the State Department had little to add to the information given in the telegrams enclosed with my letter of August 30th.† They have not cleared the proposal for tripartite co-operation with all the necessary authorities in Washington, but he thought that I should be asked within a few days to attend a meeting with Lovett and a United Kingdom representative. I should be glad to receive any observations you may care to offer. Ends.

270. DEA/201 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-2829 Washington, September 8, 1947

TOP SECRET

Following for Pearson and Heeney from Wrong, Begins: Reference my WA-2828 of September 5th on atomic questions.

We showed the British Embassy Ignatieff's report in ATOM 175† of August 26th of his talk with Osborn. As this differed in some respects from the information given the British by Gullion and reported to London in the telegrams enclosed with my letter to Heeney of August 30th, they have approached Gullion again, especially with regard to a possible public statement at the Assembly on the initiation of tri-partite discussions and to the possible notification of certain other countries in advance of such a statement. Gullion confirmed that a public announcement at the Assembly was contemplated by the State Department but that there was still some opposition here to any publicity. He confirmed that they would certainly have to take into account the position of countries such as France and Belgium.

2. Gullion agreed with a suggestion put forward by the British that there should be a private U.K.-U.S.-Canadian meeting before anything at all was done. He promised to give full information on the background of the proposal when he was free to do so, referring apparently to inter-Departmental discussions here which have not yet been completed.

[24]E.A. Gullion, adjoint spécial du sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis; cosecrétaire pour les États-Unis du Comité conjoint de la politique.
E.A. Gullion, Special Assistant to Under-Secretary of State of United States; US Joint Secretary of CPC.

3. Edgar Mowrer[25] told me to say that he had heard of the suggestion of public announcement looking towards an international agreement limited to a few countries to further the peaceful development of atomic research. From the context I think that he had learned this from Senator McMahon who had just told him that Russian obstruction in the Atomic Commission was intolerable and that some way round it must be found at once.

4. I assume you are passing my reports to the Canadian delegation in New York. The question of an announcement at the Assembly might be raised with them rather than with me. Ends.

271. DEA/201 (S)

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire du Cabinet

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Secretary to the Cabinet

TOP SECRET Ottawa, September 8, 1947

Dear Mr. Heeney,

RE ATOMIC ENERGY

Thanks for your Top Secret letter of September 8th† enclosing several despatches from our Ambassador in Washington, indicating the possibility of renewed tripartite activities on atomic energy matters.

Dr. Mackenzie and myself have for some time been considering the desirability of a bilateral approach to the United States, proposing that Chalk River be incorporated into the U.S. programme for developing peacetime uses for the product, provided complete exchange of information can be arranged. Mackenzie and I agree that this would be highly desirable from the Canadian viewpoint.

The position of the U.K. is that it insists on a U.K. programme, but can only carry out that programme with a great deal of help from this Continent. To date, we have been furnishing that help without getting much in return. In fact, until a change of management in Chalk River was effected, our plant was to all intents and purposes an experimental laboratory and designing establishment for the U.K. plant. Although Canada is now in complete control, there is constantly a large group of U.K. scientists at Chalk River for the purpose of obtaining information for the U.K. development.

With reference to WA-2828, paragraph 4, Canada would welcome a resumption of the tripartite arrangement, provided it can be based on a complete interchange of information. It would, however, be well for the Ambassador to keep in mind that a bilateral arrangement between Canada and the U.S. providing for complete interchange of information, would be more advantageous to Canada than the tripartite arrangement. I can understand, however, that Canada could not object to the tripartite arrangement, provided the United States wishes to proceed along that line. Anything that would open the door to atomic work in the United States will be helpful to Canada.

[25]E.A. Mowrer, auteur de publications sur les affaires étrangères établi à Washington.
E.A. Mowrer, writer on foreign affairs based in Washington.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

272. DEA/201 (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, September 10, 1947

I have received copies of Mr. Wrong's telegram of September 8th, No. WA-2859, re atomic questions.

Things seem to be moving rather rapidly toward an invitation to tripartite discussions which I take it we would have to accept.[26]

The suggestion of a public announcement at the Assembly disturbs me;[27] as you will note from the attached correspondence I have asked McNaughton for his comments.

I think the Panel ought to meet when the General is next in Ottawa, which I believe is likely to be within the next couple of weeks.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

P.S. Since dictating the above I have a letter from Mr. Howe (copy attached)[28] expressing some scepticism about the value to Canada of tripartite discussions.[29] I shall send a copy to Wrong, and we might have a word on the subject.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

---

[26]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Yes [L.B. Pearson]

[27]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
Me too! L.B. P[earson]

[28]Le document précédent./The preceding document.

[29]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
But I don't see how we can restrict such conversations to Can[ada]-USA. L.B. P[earson]

273. DEA/201 (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister, Embassy in United States

TELEGRAM EX-2373 Ottawa, September 10, 1947

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Following for Wrong from Heeney, Begins: We have repeated to McNaughton in New York your teletype WA-2859 asking for his comments and any further information which he may have on the proposal to initiate tripartite discussions.

2. The suggestion that there be a public statement at the Assembly concerning three-cornered discussions is certainly one which would have to be considered very carefully from several angles before any decision is taken. For example, has the time now come when in the general interest and in our own interest a clean break should be made with the Soviet Union on the atomic energy problem? The results of so doing would certainly extend beyond the Atomic Energy Commission and perhaps deal a critical blow to the possibilities of accomplishment in any sphere at the forthcoming meeting. Perhaps the time has come for such action but at the least there are strong considerations on the other side.

3. In any event no such decision should be taken until there has been opportunity for full and frank discussion between representatives of the three nations principally concerned. We assume that U.S. authorities appreciate this.

4. Mr. Howe has been informed of what has transpired. He had already been considering with Mackenzie the desirability of a bilateral approach to the United States with the idea of proposing the incorporation of Chalk River into the U.S. programme for development of peaceful uses. On the other hand he would welcome a resumption of the tripartite agreement provided that it could be based on a complete interchange of information. In the latter connection he wishes you to know that in his opinion a bilateral arrangement with the United States on this basis would be more advantageous to Canada than a tripartite agreement. Nevertheless he realizes that Canada could not object to the tripartite arrangement if the United States wishes to proceed along that line.

5. I shall be writing you within the next couple of days and will send you a copy of Mr. Howe's letter. Meantime I will be glad if you will keep me in touch with developments.

274.

DEA/201 (S)

Le secrétaire du Cabinet
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary to the Cabinet
to Ambassador in United States

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL

Ottawa, September 11, 1947

Dear Hume [Wrong]:

Your teletype WA-2859 of September 8th, on top of other recent messages from the Embassy on the possibility of fairly early tripartite discussions and, particularly, your report that the United States are contemplating the possibility of a public announcement, has precipitated here-abouts one of those minor bursts of activity which seem to characterize the course of our consideration of atomic questions.

I am afraid that my personal teletype to you of yesterday shows evidence of its hasty composition. Nevertheless, the more I consider the possibility of a public announcement, the more serious the implications appear to me. Presumably the authors of the suggestion have it in mind to forestall the leakage of information of C.P.C. activities in the past and further tripartite discussions in the present; doubtless they would hope by public announcement and invitation to other nations to participate, to meet the criticism that U.S. participation in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission has been hypocritical from the outset. I can think of no other motive unless the State Department and the other powers that be in Washington have come to the conclusion that the time has come for a clean break with the Soviet Union in all that pertains to the United Nations.

If there be anything in the latter suspicion you will be interested in the following quotations from a draft letter of instruction which has just been handed by your department to Mr. St. Laurent for the guidance of the Canadian delegation at the Assembly.[30] "It is the view of the Canadian government that the time has not yet been reached when any of the issues dividing members of the United Nations should be pressed to a conclusion which would destroy the organization as it is at present constituted." The draft letter goes on "you should (also) endeavour to avoid the premature development of any issue to the point where it is likely to destroy the United Nations or to drive any of its members to withdraw immediately"; and again " . . . at this Assembly the emphasis should be on warning what may happen rather than of forcing issues to the point where things will happen."

As I say, the announcement of tripartite discussions on the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes, coupled with an invitation to other nations to participate would be taken as a decision on the part of the three nations concerned to jettison the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Perhaps I am reading

---

[30]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
and since approved w[ith] terms by the Cabinet [A.D.P. Heeney] too much into it, but taken with the evidence of growing impatience and strong language of the U.S. delegation at the Commission, the pressure on the United Kingdom to prevent any reservations to the second report to the Security Council and the significant expression of a desire in many quarters to have the "air cleared" it does seem that it may be a pretty important indication of intention. I would be very glad to know what you think.
Voir le document 362./See Document 362.

So far as we are concerned we could not, of course, object to discussions with the United States and the United Kingdom. Indeed, I think we should welcome the opportunity, provided that we are not merely being called to Washington to hear our Master's voice. As I said to you in my teletype, Mr. Howe and Jack Mackenzie had already contemplated bilateral discussions but C.D. agrees that, in the circumstances, we could not refuse an invitation to a three-cornered meeting which he hoped, however, would be on the basis of a real exchange of information. I am attaching a copy of his letter to me on the subject.[31]

At all events, surely there will be no possibility of any public statement until there have been discussions with us and with the United Kingdom. I can hardly believe that the U.S. authorities would consider such a move without consulting the "junior partners", after the long history of tripartite co-operation in this field. No doubt you will have further information on the subject before long.

I am hoping that it will be possible to have a meeting of the Panel within the next two or, at most, three weeks, at which this and two or three other subjects can be discussed. It would, of course, be essential for McNaughton to be present as well as Mackenzie and it may be difficult to find an early date which will suit them both, in Ottawa, unless we can manage the 18th or 19th when, of course, Mike[32] would be away at the Assembly. Would there be any chance of your coming up to Ottawa for the purpose? The alternative, which would be preferable if the urgency is removed by later information, would be the 2nd or 3rd of October.

Another question which the Panel might usefully discuss is the conditions imposed by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission upon procurement of isotopes by other nations. Apparently Chalk River is to make application for certain isotopes but compliance with the U.S. conditions might well prove embarrassing. It seems to me offhand that special conditions might be applicable to Canada which, after all, will be a supplier as well as a consumer.

Mackenzie and I are going to spend the weekend with Sir Henry Tizard[33] and his party, in Quebec, and I shall take the opportunity of discussing these matters with the former. We will look forward to hearing whatever further information you may [31]Document 271.

[32]L.B. Pearson.

[33]Président de l'Advisory Council on Scientific Policy et du Defence Research Policy Committee du Royaume-Uni.
Chairman, Advisory Council on Scientific Policy, and Defence Research Policy Committee of United Kingdom.

be able to gather, and I would very much appreciate your own views on the points that I have mentioned.

Yours sincerely,
A.D.P. HEENEY

P.S. Forgive the disjointed form of this communication — it has been dictated under pressure and not revised. You will however get the gist of my worries from it.

A. H[EENEY]

275. DEA/201-F (S)

Ordre du jour de la réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 26 septembre 1947

Agenda of Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, September 26, 1947

TOP SECRET Ottawa, September 22, 1947

1. U.N. Atomic Energy Commission; report of recent proceedings.

2. U.S.-U.K.-Canada; co-ordination with respect to "de-classification" and patent applications. (A.P.A.E. Document 1 circulated herewith)†

3. U.S.-U.K.-Canada; proposed tripartite discussions on peaceful uses. (A.P.A.E. Document 2 circulated herewith)

4. Radio isotopes; conditions of release by United States and by Canada. (A.P.A.E. Document 3 circulated herewith)†

5. Other business.

A.B. STANNARD
Secretary

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

DEA/201-F (S)

Note pour la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique

Memorandum for Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

TOP SECRET Ottawa, September 22, 1947

TRIPARTITE DISCUSSIONS — CO-OPERATION IN ATOMIC ENERGY DEVELOPMENTS FOR PEACEFUL PURPOSES

The U.S. State Department has put forward a tentative suggestion that they might wish to renew tripartite discussions between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada on co-operation in atomic energy matters.

2. The initial reaction of the U.K. was that the State Department might be thus hoping to encourage the United Kingdom delegation at the Atomic Energy Commission in New York to withdraw their reservations to the plan incorporated in the working papers before the Commission.

3. It would appear, however, that the State Department considers that progress at the Atomic Energy Commission is unsatisfactory on account of the Soviet attitude. While they are still prepared to continue discussions in the Commission, they would, however, like to renew the joint development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes with the nations which co-operated in the initial wartime arrangements.

4. The State Department has indicated that a statement along the above lines might be made to the General Assembly. There may be Canadian objections to the issuing of such a statement. The Canadian Embassy in Washington has been advised (teletype EX-2373, September 10th) that the matter should be carefully considered before any decision is made.

5. Insofar as tripartite discussions are concerned, presumably Canada would be willing to participate, but consideration would have to be given to the conditions under which the United States would be prepared to work out arrangements and whether such arrangement would provide for complete exchange of information. (Mr. Howe's letter of September 8, 1947.)

6. The latest information received indicates that the State Department has no intention of making an immediate announcement at the Assembly with regard to tripartite discussions. However, the matter might be raised during the discussions on de-classification (see Item 2).

A.F.B. STANNARD
Secretary

276. DEA/201-F (S)

Procès-verbal de la réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 26 septembre 1947

Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, September 26, 1947

TOP SECRET Ottawa, September 30, 1947

Present:

The Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Heeney), in the Chair,
The Chairman, Atomic Energy Control Board (General McNaughton),
The President, National Research Council (Mr. Mackenzie),
The Chairman, Defence Research Board (Dr. Solandt),
The Deputy Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Keenleyside).
Mr. G.M. Jarvis, Secretary, Atomic Energy Control Board,
Mr. M. Cadieux, Department of External Affairs.
The Secretary (Mr. Stannard), Privy Council Office.

I. SECRETARY TO THE PANEL; EXTERNAL AFFAIRS REPRESENTATIVE

1. The Chairman reported that Mr. J.K. Starnes of the Department of External Affairs (who had been acting as Secretary to the Panel) was being transferred to other duties in the Department. It was proposed that the secretaryship of the Panel would be taken over by Mr. A.F.B. Stannard of the Privy Council Office; Mr. Cadieux of the Department of External Affairs had been designated by the Under-Secretary to assist Mr. Pearson in matters relating to atomic energy. He would also be available to advise and assist the Secretary particularly in relation to matters of concern to that Department.

2. The Panel noted with approval the arrangements reported by the Chairman.

II. UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION; REPORT OF RECENT PROCEEDINGS

3. General McNaughton reported at some length on recent proceedings at the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; in particular upon the second Report of the Commission to the Security Council and the Canadian delegation's part therein.

The introduction to this report was, in effect, a statement of the essential aspects of the problem of effective international control; upon which the Canadian Delegation would wish further direction from the government.

A memorandum had been prepared by the Secretary of the Atomic Energy Control Board dealing with the legal aspects of international ownership (a copy of which is attached, Appendix "A").†

4. The Panel, after discussion, noted with approval General McNaughton's report and agreed that, at the next meeting, the Panel would consider a written report from the Delegation to the Cabinet along the lines indicated. (Copies of the second Report of the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission to be circulated to members of the Panel in the meantime.)

III. U.S.-U.K.-CANADA; COORDINATION WITH RESPECT TO DECLASSIFICATION AND PATENT PROCEDURES

5. The Chairman observed that an explanatory note on these questions had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Sept. 22, 1947—A.P.A.E. Document No. 1).†

6. Dr. Mackenzie stated that discussions on declassification would involve consideration of what changes, if any, were required in the declassification machinery already in existence and originally set up by the C.P.C.

It would be advisable that the proposed discussion be confined initially to problems of declassification; that of patent problems should follow. With respect to patent procedures, the attitude of the Canadian government was closer to that of the U.S. than to that of the U.K.

It was proposed that Dr. W.B. Lewis and Dr. L.S. Cook of the National Research Council would be the Canadian representatives to the meeting on declassification and that Mr. A.G. Helferdahl of the National Research Council and Mr. C.M. Jarvis, Secretary of the Atomic Energy Control Board, would attend any discussions on patent matters.

7. The Panel, after discussion, noted Dr. Mackenzie's reaction and agreed that Dr. W.B. Lewis and Dr. L.S. Cook attend the proposed meetings on declassification as Canadian representatives. It was further agreed that Dr. A.G. Helferdahl and Mr. W.S. Jarvis attend for any discussion on patent applications; the Canadian Ambassador to be kept in close touch with what transpired at these meetings with particular reference to any matters of government policy which might arise.

IV. U.S.-U.K.-CANADA; PROPOSED TRIPARTITE DISCUSSIONS ON PEACEFUL USES

8. The Chairman observed that an explanatory note on this subject had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Sept. 22, 1947—A.P.A.E. Document No. 2).

9. General McNaughton reported that, following conversations with U.S. representatives in New York, it now seemed unlikely that there would be, in the near future, any announcement by the U.S. State Department regarding tripartite discussions on atomic energy matters. In any event no announcement was likely without prior discussions with the Canadian and U.K. governments.

10. The Panel, after discussion, noted General McNaughton's report regarding an announcement on the part of the U.S. government and agreed that, if an invitation were received, Canada should indicate a willingness to participate in tripartite discussions on peaceful uses with the U.S. and the U.K.

V. RADIO-ACTIVE ISOTOPES — CONDITIONS OF RELEASE BY UNITED STATES AND CANADA

11. The Chairman observed that an explanatory note on these questions had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Sept. 22, 1947 — A.P.A.E. Document No. 3).†

12. Dr. Mackenzie stated that, in his opinion, there were no serious problems involved for Canada in the making of applications for the use of radio-active isotopes produced by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission.

With respect to universities and similar "unclassified" research institutions there could be no objection to applications being made under the conditions laid down by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. With regard to Chalk River (and any other secret projects) arrangements already in effect adequately safe-guarded security; these would, for practical purposes, take priority over the published regulations of the U.S. Commission.

13. Dr. Mackenzie reported that Dr. Frigon,[34] the National Research Council Liaison Officer at the Washington Embassy, had been designated as the Canadian representative for procurement of radio-active isotopes from the U.S. Commission. The Board would advise the Canadian Ambassador of Mr. Frigon's designation for this purpose in order that he could so notify Mr. Frigon and the State Department.

14. The Panel, after discussion, agreed:

(a) that the conditions laid down by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for the release of radio-active isotopes were acceptable to Canada, except with regard to Chalk River and other establishments which, in the future, might be subject to security regulations;

---

[34]R. Frigon, deuxième secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.
R. Frigon, Second Secretary, Embassy in United States.

(b) that arrangements for the procurement of isotopes for classified establishments be made directly and privately between the Atomic Energy Control Board and the U.S. Commission; and,

(c) that Dr. Frigon, with the ambassador's consent, act as the Canadian representative for radio-active isotopes procurement for Canadian purposes (under (a) above).

VI. CANADIAN EXPORT OF RADIO-ACTIVE ISOTOPES

15. General McNaughton drew attention to the need for establishing conditions for the export of radio-active isotopes from Canada.

It was intended to propose to the Atomic Energy Control Board that conditions of export from Canada be similar to those established by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission. In this connection it was the intention to confine dealings with respect to Canadian isotopes to transaction between governments.

16. The Panel, after discussion, agreed that conditions to be laid down by the Atomic Energy Control Board should be along the lines indicated by General McNaughton.

VII. INFORMATION CONCERNING CANADIAN DEVELOPMENTS IN ATOMIC ENERGY; REFERENCE TO EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

17. The Chairman mentioned the advisability of keeping the Department of External Affairs informed of developments in the atomic energy field which were of public interest in other countries. For example, it was important that the Ambassador to Washington should, so far as possible, have advance knowledge of any public announcements which were being made upon developments in Canada.

18. The Panel, after discussion, agreed that members of the Panel would bear in mind the point raised by the Chairman and do whatever was possible to keep the Department informed.

VIII. STATUS OF ORDERS IN COUNCIL RELATING TO THE PRIVATE PROSPECTING FOR URANIUM DEPOSITS IN CANADA

19. Dr. Keenleyside pointed out that under the present Orders in Council there was little, if any, incentive for private prospecting for uranium ores.

20. General McNaughton and Dr. Mackenzie pointed out that, in many respects, the present situation was satisfactory in that the supply of uranium was adequate for Canadian purposes and that the opening up of further deposits by private individuals would raise the domestic problem of governmental control (purchase of all ores) and the international problem of stock piling. In this connection, the price obtained for exported uranium was a matter of great importance.

21. The Panel, after discussion, agreed that, under present circumstances, no action should be recommended to the government with respect to the Orders in Council governing private prospecting for uranium deposits.

IX. EXPORT OF URANIUM OXIDE TO INDIA

22. Dr. Mackenzie reported that a request for a ton of uranium oxide had been received from a group of Indian scientists.

In his opinion, the group in question was responsible and doing fundamental nuclear research and their request might well be granted. The amount would be too small to be of military significance and yet would be significant in the furtherance of good-will.[35]

23. General McNaughton pointed out that there might, however, be unfavourable reaction by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission towards such export. The proposal might be explored, by private discussions, to determine the views of U.S. authorities in advance of any commitment.

24. The Panel, after discussion, noted that, after General McNaughton had taken this matter up informally with U.S. authorities, it would be dealt with by the Atomic Energy Control Board.

A.F.B. STANNARD
Secretary

277. PCO/R-100-A

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet

Memorandum by Secretary to the Cabinet

TOP SECRET Ottawa, October 17, 1947

George Bateman called to see me yesterday and again today, following his attendance at meetings in Washington of the Combined Development Trust. The following points were the principal ones which he made during our conversations:

1. The Trust meetings were devoted principally to a review of world supplies of uranium and thorium, with particular reference to the latest information from the Belgian Congo. Production in the Congo is running at the rate of about 3,000 tons annually but the end of known ore bodies is in sight and after 1948 production will fall sharply (to perhaps 1,000 tons) and will run out in about three years. This does not take account of possible new development. Exploratory work is proceeding and it is not unlikely that further resources may be developed in that area.

2. The Trust's new contract with the Belgians has not yet been concluded though apparently there is no reason to expect that this will not be accomplished as in former years.

3. The prospects of substantial new sources of supply from gold areas in South Africa (the Rand and the Orange Free State) are distinctly promising. The Trust now have an arrangement with the South African government under which the former are assisting in the research and development work. I suggested that this might mean that the Union government would have to be brought in to the C.D.T. and C.P.C., as a partner at some stage. Bateman agreed that this was not unlikely.

4. When the Congo production drops at the end of 1948, supplies available to the Trust will be insufficient to meet the requirements of the United States programme (apart, I think, from the stock piles and recoveries from tailings). This prospect is clearly causing U.S. authorities very considerable concern and it may be anticipated that very active efforts will be made to discover and develop new sources of supplies for C.D.T.

[35]Voir les documents 807, 810-811./See Documents 807, 810-11.

5. Bateman thought that the prospective supply position might have the effect of inducing the United States to be more forthcoming from now on in the exchange of information with Canada and the United Kingdom. He agreed that the prospective South African sources might be of further influence in this direction.

6. In answer to my enquiry, he agreed that the new circumstances justified a review of government policy with respect to private prospecting in Canada. His own view is that the restrictive Orders in Council might now be lifted. The conditions which had obtained previously had altered and it might be in the national interest to have more active exploration undertaken. I said that I intended to have this matter discussed again by the Panel at their next meeting.

7. The pending new contract for sale by Eldorado to the United States covers 150 tons (equal to approximately one year's production) and deliveries thereunder will be completed within less than one year (perhaps a matter of several months only). These deliveries will be made almost entirely from stocks on hand rather than from current mining operations. The price is $13.50.

8. Bateman has reported the above fully to Mr. Howe this morning and the Minister has, I understand, agreed with Bateman that there should be no further commitment to the United States beyond fulfilment of the contract referred to above.

9. Bateman will be able to attend a meeting of the Panel early in November and I have told him that I will try to arrange one for about that time.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

278. DEA/201 (S)

Note pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures, le secrétaire du Cabinet et le représentant au sein de la délégation à la Commission sur l'énergie atomique des Nations Unies

Memorandum for Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs, Secretary to the Cabinet and Representative, Delegation to Atomic Energy Commission of the United Nations

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], October 21, 1947

As it now seems probable that the U.S.S.R. will not agree to the proposals embodied in the reports of the Atomic Energy Commission, I venture to suggest that consideration might usefully be given at this time to what our policy should be if international control of atomic energy is to be unattainable.

2. Even if the U.S.S.R. refuses to accept the present proposals, the Commission and the Canadian delegation in the Commission should continue their work and complete the formulation of a detailed plan for the international control of atomic energy. This would be desirable for the following reasons:

(a) For propaganda purposes — We are at an advantage if we can argue that the U.S.S.R. prevents the establishment of an international system of control.

(b) Eventually, if some sort of general settlement is worked out between the U.S.S.R. and the Western states, the U.S.S.R. may be prepared to accept the plan evolved by the Atomic Energy Commission. We should therefore complete the plan.

(c) It may be that, as a result of research in the United States and here, atomic energy may become available for industrial uses and a scheme of international control might then become acceptable to the Soviet leaders, if they were convinced that we do not intend to attack the Soviet states and that they have no chance of defeating us. The Soviet leaders would be forced to make a choice between industrial advantages which could be secured by the sharing of information with the Western states under the plan and security considerations which would then have lost a good deal of validity.

3. While the plan for international control is being finalized and after its completion, we should, however, be pushing ahead vigorously with alternative plans. The plain truth of the matter is that if there is no agreement between the U.S.S.R. and the United States, there is an atomic armament race going on. Our attitude and policy should be determined therefore in the light of our appreciation of the overall strategic position and the possibilities of war breaking out. The alternative policies appear to be the following.

(a) To continue with the present trust arrangement whereby the United States does most of the research and development work and passes on some material and information on an ad hoc basis to other states like Canada and Belgium which are in a position to help the United States. An advantage of this policy is that Canada is not as attractive a target as she would be were the facilities developed by the United States more widely distributed. The disadvantage is that we may have less information than perhaps would be required and we may lag behind the United States if and when the industrial development stage is reached. Besides, in case of war, we may need to expand our facilities here to manufacture atomic bombs and our inadequate preparations may involve a catastrophic delay.

(b) A better policy would be an alliance for all practical purposes, in regard to the development of atomic energy, between the states which are the hard core of the Western bloc and which would bear the brunt of a war against the U.S.S.R. From the United States point of view such a policy would increase risks as regards the disclosure of secret information. This, however, may be offset by the advantages to be gained in reducing the risk of sudden attack through a wider dispersal of facilities. Obviously an amendment of the McMahon Act would be required before this alliance could come into being. From our point of view, the risks would not be much greater. If the U.S.S.R. were to attack the United States, we would be involved in any case and our chance of survival would depend partly on a good dispersal of the nuclear fuel, also partly on our ability to out-produce the U.S.S.R. and to launch quick and powerful retaliatory attacks. If we were to achieve this position, it might act as a powerful deterrent to an eventual attack by the U.S.S.R. and induce it to accept a general settlement and the plan for international conduct of atomic energy.

4. Unless there is agreement between the U.S.S.R. and the United States on the control of atomic energy, our advantage lies in assisting the United States by all the means in our power to maintain their advance in the atomic race and to make sure, even at greater apparent or even real risks to ourselves that we are on the winning side. The stronger our position, the less chance there is of a Soviet attack, it seems.

5. If such a policy were adopted, instructions would have to be sent to our Embassy in Washington and to the Office of the High Commissioner in London to make appropriate representations. We would, in particular, associate ourselves with the United Kingdom request for further exchanges of information in return for integration of planning, research and development.

6. Insofar as domestic policy is concerned, I can see further implications:

(a) larger appropriations may be required as a rapid and substantial development of our facilities could be anticipated; (see c below re assistance of U.S. technicians)

(b) the needs of civilian defence and the basic security plan may have to be reassessed to take into account the change in situation which our closer association with the United States in the development of atomic energy for military purposes would involve.

(c) integration of our efforts toward the development of atomic energy with the plans of the United States could probably be achieved under the aegis of the P.J.B.D. This would present an advantage, in case accusations are levelled against the Government, that our independence and security have been compromised as it would be possible to answer that measures for atomic warfare attack and defence are closely related to plans for the defence of the North American continent and were covered by the statement of the Prime Minister of February 12[36] last as information and facilities might be obtained more easily from the U.S.A. as part of a joint defence scheme.

M. CADIEUX

[36]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume I, pp. 350-353.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume I, pp. 345-8.

279. DEA/201-F (S)

Note pour le secrétaire du Cabinet[37]

Memorandum for Secretary to the Cabinet[37]

RESTRICTED [Ottawa], October 22, 1947

The Canadian delegation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission have requested Cabinet consideration of the Second Report of the Commission to the Security Council.

2. The attached draft memorandum to Cabinet outlines the main points of the Report and notes significant topics which may require future consideration.

B. STANNARD
M. CADIEUX

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet de note pour le Cabinet

Draft Memorandum for Cabinet

RESTRICTED [Ottawa], October 22, 1947

On September 11th, [1947] the Second Interim Report of the Atomic Energy Commission was submitted to the Security Council. This report outlines the work of the Commission since its First Report was submitted to the Security Council on December 31, 1946. The work has had two principal aspects, discussion of the points of disagreement expressed by the Soviet Union and the formulation of specific proposals by the Commission.

2. Twenty-three committee meetings have been devoted to the consideration of the views of the Soviet Union, put forward either as amendments and additions to the First Report or as separate proposals. The discussion on the Soviet Union amendments, which is summarized in Part III of the Report, has not led the Commission to revise the General Findings and Recommendations of the First Report. The discussion on the Soviet Union separate proposals, which is summarized in Part IV, has led to the conclusion that "these proposals as they now stand and the explanations given thereon do not provide an adequate basis for the development by the Committee of specific proposals for an effective system of international control of atomic energy." It is evident, therefore, that these discussions have not led to a reconciliation to the views of the Soviet Union with those of the majority of the Commission on major points of principle.

---

[37]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
This, with some possible amendments (espec[ially] para[graph]s 9 & 10) w[oul]d be quite suitable for submission if it is decided that some report sh[oul]d be made to Cab[inet] at this time. I have come to the personal conclusion, however, that such a report w[oul]d be premature and serve to confuse rather than enlighten in view of UN position. Pl[ease] have this question (of reporting) on agenda for next Panel meeting. A.D.P. H[eeney]

3. In accordance with the terms of reference contained in the General Assembly resolution of 24 January 1946, and in accordance with the resolution of the Security Council of 10 March 1947, the Commission undertook the drafting of specific proposals, adopting for this purpose the procedure of informal discussions and working groups, which is described in Part I. The specific proposals, which are set forth in Part II, deal with the functions and powers of an international agency for the control of atomic energy, which have been evolved from the considerations advanced in the First Report.

4. The ultimate objectives of the plan based on the majority proposals may be stated as follows:

(a) The cessation of the present race in atomic armaments by an International Agreement including prohibition clauses enforced by measures of control and inspection;

(b) The prevention of secret preparations for atomic warfare, in times of peace, by clandestine diversion of materials and plants through measures of international inspection and control;

(c) The prevention of international rivalry of national monopolies in atomic energy by the proposed international ownership of materials, their distribution, according to a quota system, and the operation of all "dangerous" plants and facilities by an International Agency;

(d) In the event of war, the reduction of the possibility of gaining victory by using atomic weapons, by limiting the consequences of seizures of material and plant by a strategic distribution of plants and materials between nations.

5. In defining the basic principles of the functions and powers of an international control agency which they consider necessary to develop atomic energy for peaceful purposes, the majority of the members of the Commission were guided by their findings on the scientific and technical aspects of the control as summarized in the First Report. It was the view of the Commission at that time that "effective control of atomic energy depends upon effective control of production and use of uranium, thorium and their fissionable derivatives" and furthermore that "whether ultimate nuclear fuel be destined for peaceful or destructive uses, the productive processes are identical and inseparable up to a very advanced stage of manufacture. Thus, the control of atomic energy to ensure its use for peaceful purposes, must be accomplished through a single unified international system of control and specifically designed to carry out all of these related purposes."

6. The basic principles which have been agreed to and for which approval of the Cabinet is sought are the following:

(a) Decisions concerning the production and use of atomic energy should not be left in the hands of nations.

(b) Policies concerning the production and use of atomic energy which substantially affect world security should be governed by principles established in a treaty or convention which the agency would be obligated to carry out.

(c) Nations must undertake in the treaty or convention to grant to the agency rights of inspection of any part of their territory, subject to appropriate procedural requirements and limitations.

7. In implementing these principles, the following basic measures are provided:

(a) production quotas based on principles and policies specified in the treaty or convention;

(b) ownership by the agency of nuclear fuel and source material;

(c) ownership, management, and operation by the agency of dangerous facilities;

(d) licensing by the agency of non-dangerous facilities to be operated by nations; and

(e) inspection by the agency to prevent or detect clandestine activities.

There is to be the right of appeal with regard to the agencies' decisions in regard to mining quotas, the distribution of production facilities and the compensation to be given for source material.

8. The Second Report is a statement of the progress made up to date and should be regarded only as an indication of the trend of thoughts of the majority in the Atomic Energy Commission and as a basis for further work. The Security Council's resolution, under which the Second Report was submitted to the Security Council, recognizes that "any agreement expressed by the members of the Council to the separate portions of the report is preliminary, since final acceptance of any part by any nation is conditional upon its acceptance of all parts of the control plan in its final form." The majority of the Commission, however, have come to the conclusion that the specific proposals in the Report which define the functions and powers of an international agency taken together with the general findings and recommendations of the First Report, provide the essential basis for the establishment of an effective system of control to ensure the use of atomic energy only for peaceful purposes to protect the complying states against the hazards of violations and evasions.

9. In drafting the specific proposals contained in Part II, the Commission has been guided by the Summary of Principal Subjects which is included in Part I. In addition to the functions and powers of the international agency, there are other important matters listed for discussion.

One of the important questions to be studied in the future is distribution of plants and facilities to obtain a strategic balance of war potential between the nations and the even more difficult problem of the stages of transition from the present situation to conditions of international control. Pending specific proposals from the United States, which obviously has a primary and special interest in both matters from a security standpoint and is probably the only country in a position to initiate proposals in this regard, there is nothing which can usefully be submitted to the Cabinet for its judgment at the present time on this point.

It is evident that, until unanimous agreement is reached on the functions and powers of the international agency, there will be limitation on the extent to which proposals on other topics in the Summary of Principal Subjects can be worked out in detail. Clearly, much remains to be done before the final terms of a treaty or convention can be drafted. The Commission intends to proceed with the remaining topics in the summary and, at the same time, will continue its endeavours to clarify and resolve, where possible, the existing points of disagreement.

10. Before final concurrence with respect to a treaty for the international control of atomic energy is given, the Cabinet might wish to have expert studies made on the implications of proposals in the fields of research and development, as well as from the point of view of Canadian resources of raw materials.

It is requested that the Cabinet give consideration to the approval in principle of the proposals made so far by the Atomic Energy Commission and embodied in its Second Report and of the continued participation of our delegation to the Commission in the formulation of proposals on the other important matters listed for discussion.

280. DEA/201 (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet
pour le cabinet du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Office of Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, October 30, 1947

I have now had a chance to consider your memorandum of October 21st on Canadian policy respecting atomic energy matters.

In general, I am inclined to doubt whether, at this stage, we have sufficient data upon which to base very firm conclusions as to what is in the Canadian interests if the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission collapses. Nevertheless, I do agree that we should be giving some thought to the problem. It well may be that we shall know a good deal more before long.

In more detail, I have the following comments on your various paragraphs:

Para.2—I agree that work upon the detailed plan should not stop. I should say, however, that your first reason (a) would better be put negatively, i.e. to avoid possible disadvantage. I am not very convinced by (c) though there may be something in it.

Para.3—As I say above, I am not satisfied that we have sufficient data before us to push on very "vigorously" with alternative plans. In any event, I would think that you are wide of the mark at the end of (a) for, as I understand it, no expansion of our facilities would enable us to do any bomb manufacturing.

With respect to (b), I think there is now no chance whatever of the United States accepting a dispersal of facilities for "dangerous" activities. If they change their minds it will be because of their supply difficulties.

Para.4—I agree entirely that we have no alternative to very close association with the United States.

Para.5—We are not yet at the stage to take the initiative you suggest. We are a much more junior partner than most people realize and, as I see it at the moment, we must await developments, first in the U.N. Commission and secondly in U.S.-U.K. relationships.

Para.6—No comment except to say that the P.J.B.D. should certainly be assumed to be taking these developments into account in their consideration of joint plans.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

281. DEA/201-B (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1637 New York City, November 13, 1947

SECRET

ATOM No. 192. Following from Atomic Energy Commission, Begins: Following from McNaughton, Begins: I had an informal meeting yesterday with Osborn and Arneson[38] of the United States delegation and De Rose and Perrin[39] of the French delegation to discuss the future course of the Atomic Energy Commission.

2. We all agreed that we should not, repeat not, take any initiative in calling for a discussion of the Second Report in the General Assembly because of the present political atmosphere of controversy prevailing there. However, if the U.S.S.R. does call for such a discussion, we should be prepared to reply with a dispassionate, factual summary of the work done by the Commission to date.

3. If the U.S.S.R. decides to reintroduce paragraph 4 of its original warmongering Resolution (Document A/BUR/86†) which reaffirms only part of the January 24th, 1946 Assembly Resolution then we should insist on having this latter Resolution reaffirmed in full rather than in part.

4. We all agreed that we should not, repeat not, take up Stages, strategic balance of enforcement in the Commission at the present time. I stated that we should not take up finance either, as the resulting discussion in all four cases would be of an essentially political nature.

5. We all agreed that, above all, we should keep the initiative in the Commission and that we should keep going rather than adjourn indefinitely.

6. We all agreed that the second report should be given as much general publicity as possible.

7. Osborn of the United States delegation seemed reluctant at first to have staffing and organization taken up because he feared that it would raise some essentially political questions, for example, membership of the Board and powers of the [38]R. Gordon Arneson.

[39]François de Rose et peut-être Francis Perrin.
François de Rose and possibly Francis Perrin.

Board. The latter would almost certainly raise the question of sanctions. De Rose pointed out that, if his idea of staffing the Board with international civil servants rather than with representatives of individual countries was adopted, then a great deal of political discussion would be obviated. He indicated that while this was his own view as to the best method of setting up the Board of the International Agency, he knew that other delegates favoured the idea that members should be nominated by Governments. He said he was authorized not to press his proposal but to conform to the consensus of opinion of the delegates on this point. Osborn then seemed to agree that a discussion of staffing and organization might be possible as long as we could maintain our present 10 to 2 majority. He expressed the view that if there were any sign in the Commission that we would lose some of our support or that some of the majority were prepared to compromise with the U.S.S.R., then we should immediately break off the discussion.

8. Arneson of the United States delegation thought that we should not, repeat not, take up chemical and bacteriological warfare in the Commission at this time. He said that this would side-step the main issue and discussion would lead to the conclusion that technical means of eliminating chemical or bacteriological warfare are not available and therefore that a "convention or conventions" is the only solution. The point would then be raised that if a convention is the only solution in the case of chemical and bacteriological warfare it should also be applied to atomic energy as proposed by the U.S.S.R. All present agreed, however, that atomic energy was in a different category as an agent of mass destruction. De Rose and I suggested that the Commission would, in view of its Terms of Reference need sometime to discuss chemical and bacteriological warfare. I pointed out that such a discussion might do something to allay public anxiety about these methods by showing that, while the substances used were undoubtedly most dangerous, yet they were very difficult indeed to apply and, in consequence, both methods were only practicable under very special circumstances.

9. Osborn suggested, as an alternative to taking up staffing and organization, that we should call for a general debate on the second report in the Commission. This would give the report wide publicity which we all favoured.

10. De Rose expressed fear lest any mention of the Commission reaching an impasse might adversely affect American public support to the Marshall Plan. Osborn inclined to the view that it would not.

11. We all seemed to agree that the Commission should not meet again until some time in January. However, we are holding another meeting tomorrow at which Miles[40] of the United Kingdom delegation will be present to further review the situation. Ends. Message ends.

[40]R.T.G. Miles.

282. DEA/201-F (S)

Note pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum for Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], November 19, 1947

At its last meeting on September 26, the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy discussed the status of Canadian Orders in Council relating to the private prospecting for uranium deposits in Canada. The Panel agreed that under the present circumstances no action should be recommended to the Government with respect to these Orders in Council, although it was appreciated that under these regulations there was little, if any, incentive for private prospecting.

2. John Starnes discussed this decision in Washington and on his return enquired whether the Panel should not re-consider their decision. I agreed with him that conditions might change and that we might need in a hurry detailed surveys of our uranium ore deposits. I sent a memorandum to Mr. Heeney on this point (copy attached).† He agreed that the matter should be reconsidered; it will be one of the main items for discussion at the next meeting of the Panel, which it is hoped will be held during the first week in December.

3. Mr. Stannard, who is now the Secretary of the Panel, has circulated to Jarvis and myself for our comments a memorandum on Canadian Radio-Active Resources, setting out the problem as he sees it. I attach hereto copy of his memorandum,† together with copy of my comments thereon.† Mr. Stannard feels now that it would be inadvisable to circulate a detailed memorandum on this point to the members of the Panel and he has suggested that each member of the Panel should be briefed by his advisers on this question. This is the reason why I am bringing these various memoranda to your attention.

4. In short, as I see it, the following elements should be taken into consideration in determining whether action should be recommended to the Government in respect of the Orders in Council under reference.

(a) The requirements of National Defence.

On this point we have already made known to the Chiefs of Staff our views as to the dangers of the present international situation. The Defence Research Board are directly concerned in this aspect of the problem and can be expected to express their viewpoint at the Panel meeting.

(b) The difficulty which may be experienced in case of emergency in finding suitably located deposits.

The Department of Mines and Resources and the National Research Council should provide the answer to this question.

(c) Expenses which may be anticipated if the present Orders in Council are modified with a view to encouraging private prospecting.

On this point, there is little, I think, that this Department can contribute directly.

(d) As regards the method which should be selected to collect information on uranium ore deposits, it seems to me that there is a choice between a system of rewards for private prospectors or a Government scheme of prospection. The reasons for my preference for the latter are indicated in my note to Mr. Stannard of November 6.†

(e) International aspects.

In his memorandum, Mr. Stannard says that if prospection is encouraged, this may lead to stock-piling, which would present inconveniences from an international standpoint. I do not agree with this contention. If we had a stock-pile, this would strengthen our position in discussions concerning atomic energy both with the United States and in the Atomic Energy Commission. Furthermore, if an international system of control is established, we will receive adequate financial compensation for our stock-pile and the surveys which we will have made in order to locate our deposits and build a stock-pile, will not have to be undertaken by the International Agency. If war breaks out, the advantage in having a stock-pile is evident.

5. The crucial point, it seems to me, is whether a stock-pile of uranium ore or detailed surveys to locate our uranium ore deposits are required now for defence purposes. The expenditure involved would determine how large a stock-pile or how extensive surveys we could afford.

6. I understand from Mr. Stannard that the two Orders in Council under reference were passed under the authority of the Emergency Wartime Powers and that they apply only to the Northwest Territories. The provinces which have control of natural resources were invited at the time to adopt similar regulations. To date, three western provinces have done so, but the provinces of Ontario and Quebec have declined to follow suit.

M. CADIEUX

283. DEA/201-F (S)

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

SECRET Ottawa, November 28, 1947

1. Continuation of United Nations Commission on Atomic Energy

The objective of Canadian policy in the Atomic Energy Commission has been to secure an agreement to establish the effective international control of Atomic energy. It is now evident, however, that because of the attitude of the U.S.S.R., there is no prospect of achieving this objective, at least for the next few years. The question arises, therefore, whether, from our point of view, the continued existence of the Commission serves any useful purposes.

It would appear to be in the Canadian interest that the Commission be kept viable and not discontinued at this stage, for the following reasons:

(a) The problem of international cooperation in the Atomic Energy Commission is part of the larger problem of international cooperation within the United Nations; the policy to be adopted in the Commission, should, therefore, conform to that adopted by Canada in the various other United Nations agencies in which the Western powers are faced, in varying degree, with the same obstructionist tactics on the part of the U.S.S.R.

The present attitude of the Canadian Government is that, while no issues should be raised or pressed in the General Assembly or elsewhere to the point where the Soviet Union is forced (or even given a good public excuse) to leave the United Nations, every occasion should be taken to emphasize that continued opposition and obstruction on the part of the U.S.S.R. may lead to the break-up of the organization.

(b) It is not to be excluded that, later on, relations with the Soviet Union may become easier and that the Russians may conclude that the forces against them are such that their interest, for the present, anyway, lies in cooperation within the framework of the United Nations. Against this perhaps remote possibility, or the alternative of an arrangement confined to nations other than those in the Soviet orbit, it would be useful to have available a draft treaty setting out the essential features of an international organization for the control of atomic energy.

(c) If the Commission is to collapse, then, from a political point of view, it is essential that the responsibility for collapse should not fall upon the western nations.

2. Activities of the Commission in the Near Future

If it be agreed that it is in our interest that the Commission should continue to function, the question arises as to what matters should now receive its consideration.

While it may be desirable to concentrate world attention on the Second Report, it is also important that the questions with which the Commission now occupies itself should be such as to avoid the impression that it is merely marking time. If it is to remain in existence for the reasons indicated above, the Commission must continue to do work which is recognized as realistic and constructive. The Canadian delegation should, therefore, support fresh attempts by the Commission to come to grips with the remaining problems insofar as these may be brought into focus under present conditions and insofar as they can be usefully discussed at this time.

In this connection the outline plan for future discussion which was adopted by the majority of the Commission in April 1947 was as follows:

"A. Subjects required to establish the initial framework of a draft treaty or convention (many of these subjects might be discussed concurrently).

1. Definition of terms to be used in the treaty.

2. Operational and developmental functions of the international agency and its relation to planning, co-ordination, and direction of atomic activities.

(a) Functions of the international agency in relation to research and development activities.

(b) Functions of the international agency in relation to location and mining of ores.

(c) Functions of the international agency in relation to stockpiling, production, and distribution of nuclear fuels.

(d) Functions of the international agency in relation to design, construction, and operation of isotope separation plants.

(e) Functions of the international agency in relation to design, construction and operation of reactors.

(f) Rights of and limitations on the agency and its personnel in respect to inspection, operation, and other control functions.

3. Organization and administration of the international agency.

(a) Organizational structure.

(b) Relations to other organs of the United Nations, to other international agencies, and to individual nations and their national agencies.

(c) Status of the agency and its personnel in its operations within individual nations.

(d) Definition of types of operating decisions subject to review and those not subject to review.

(e) Determination of review body or bodies and of principles governing review.

"B. Subjects which can only be discussed effectively in the framework of decisions reached on subjects listed in A above.

1. Principles governing geographical location of dangerous activities and stockpiling.

2. Financial and budgetary organization.

(a) Determination of sources of funds and types of expenditures.

(b) Estimates of financial burden to be borne by individual nations.

(c) Principles governing allocation of expenses to individual nations.

(d) Principles governing financing of both facilities owned and facilities not owned by the agency.

3. Prohibitions and enforcement.

(a) Definition of individual and national prohibitions.

(b) Examination of the nature of direct international jurisdiction over individuals and the principles governing the application of individual punishments.

(c) Examination of the problems related to the application of sanctions against nations, including the veto problem —

(i) Method of determining violations.

(ii) Application of economic and other non-military sanctions.

(iii) Application of military sanctions.

4. Examination of the stages by which transition will be accomplished from conditions of national control to the final conditions of predominantly international control."

(It may be noted that the question of "quotas" for mining, stockpiling and facilities is involved in A2 and also in B1, 2 and 4.)

The First and Second Reports of the Commission deal with headings 1 and 2 of Part A of this Summary, leaving heading 3, "Organization and Administration of the International Agency" as the last subject to be dealt with of those "required to establish the initial framework of a draft treaty or convention." The Commission would therefore be following its announced plan of procedure if it were to continue with consideration of "organization and administration". The subject is a novel and important one, involving the creation of a new kind of international organization, but it could, in the view of the majority in the Commission, be discussed without entering into the political and quantitative questions involved in the Part B subjects.

The subjects listed in Part B of the Summary can, in view of the majority in the Commission, only be discussed effectively after decisions have been reached on all the subjects listed in Part A. It may be that the political content of Part B subjects is such that they can only be dealt with in the light of the conditions under which it is proposed to bring the treaty into force. From the point of view of the Western democracies the most important of these conditions which need to be specifically assessed is the Political, Economic, and Military status of the U.S.S.R. or of its component states.

There may be suggestions of introducing the subjects of bacteriological and of chemical warfare, possibly with the intention of arguing that these methods come within the category of "weapons of mass destruction" which are of the same order of significance as atomic energy; that there is no way of policing them effectively, and that therefore the only practical possibility of control lies in a "convention or conventions". The argument may go on to suggest that if this is so, there is no purpose to be served in setting up more elaborate methods for the control of atomic energy.

While there has been no general discussion on the subject, the Canadian representative on the Commission feels that the majority on the Commission would oppose the introduction of consideration of chemical and bacteriological warfare at this stage. Apart from the fact that neither bacteriological warfare nor chemical warfare can be said to be a proved weapon of mass destruction comparable to atomic energy, the technical questions raised are in most respects dissimilar, and do not seem to lend themselves to concurrent discussions.

284. DEA/201 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-3747 Washington, December 2, 1947

TOP SECRET

Following for Mr. Howe from the Ambassador, Begins: Gullion, the United States member of the Joint Secretariat of the C.P.C., had Stone come down to see him this afternoon to let him know that plans were being drawn for an early meeting of the C.P.C. It is hoped that the arrangements can be completed and the necessary clearances made to hold this meeting on Monday, December 8th. Gullion expects to be able to let us know definitely within the next two days whether Monday will be the date, but, if not, it will be as soon thereafter as possible.

2. Against the background of the present world political situation, the progress that has been made in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, the United States authorities wish to discuss on a very broad basis the kind of regime and the kind of co-operation which should be set up as between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada. They wish at this meeting and immediately succeeding ones, perhaps or working parties, to clear the atmosphere, which as Gullion put it, has been for a number of reasons all known to us rather murky since 1945 as between the three countries. They wish to remove all possibilities of misunderstanding and to go fully principally into the important questions of allocation of materials and exchange of information.

3. Insofar as the question of exchange of information is concerned, Gullion said that the situation is now much clearer here. I believe, in fact, that Carroll Wilson[41] had informal talks with our people and the British who were attending the declassification meetings here, in the course of which he asked them what sort of information they needed. Gullion said that the replies which he received were encouraging, and he added that, with both the Atomic Energy Commission and Congressional Committees having a clearer understanding of where they each stand and the complexities of the question, exchanges of information justified by the description "mutually beneficial" would now probably be possible.

4. The United States would wish to have by the end of a fortnight after the first meeting of the C.P.C. a clear plan formulated for co-operation as between the three countries. The principal reasons which he mentioned for urgency were, first, the security aspect — he felt that the longer we delayed the greater the possibility of leakage which would offer a first class opportunity for the Russians to say that the three countries were sabotaging the U.N.A.E.C. Secondly, Gullion said that there was considerable pressure here to enmesh atomic energy matters into the gears of the Marshall Plan. There has been mention, especially in Congressional quarters, of securing uranium in return for Marshall Plan aid.

[41]Directeur général, Commission de l'énergie atomique des États-Unis; membre du Comité conjoint de la politique.
General Manager, Atomic Energy Commission of United States; Member, CPC.

5. As soon as the date for the first meeting of C.P.C. is definitely set [illegible] agenda which I shall send you immediately. The United States member will make an opening statement which will cover in detail the purposes of the meeting and what they hope might come out of it. Gullion said that they would have both proposals and requests to make. I doubt that this statement will be prepared early enough to be made available to us before the meeting.

6. It looks as though this would be a very important meeting of the C.P.C. which it would be useful for you to attend yourself. Since, however, the session will just have begun, I appreciate that it will probably prove impossible for you to absent yourself from Ottawa and I therefore may have to take your place as alternate Canadian member. In that event, it will be desirable for someone fully conversant with the current status of atomic questions in Canada to come here for the meeting sufficiently in advance to prime Stone and myself on the issues. If the United States tentative plans to discuss these issues in working parties should prove to be practical, it might be necessary for whoever comes from Ottawa to arrange to stay in Washington for some time. Gullion, thinking out loud when talking with Stone, was wondering whether Ignatieff and even General McNaughton would come to Washington during these talks.

7. We shall receive further information in the next day or so, and Gullion said that Lovett[42] may wish to have a talk with me before the end of the week. I shall pass on such data as we can secure. Ends.

[42]Robert A. Lovett, sous-secrétaire d'État des États-Unis.
Robert A. Lovett, Under-Secretary of State of United States.

285. DEA/201-F (S)

Procès-verbal de la réunion de la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique

Minutes of Meeting of Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy

TOP SECRET Ottawa, [December 3, 1947]

Present:

A.D.P. Heeney, Privy Council Office, in the Chair,
C.J. Mackenzie, National Research Council,
A.G.L. McNaughton, Atomic Energy Control Board,
George Bateman,
O.M. Solandt, Defence Research,
H.L. Keenleyside, Mines and Resources
B. Stannard, Privy Council Office, Secretary

Also present:

C.M. Jarvis, Atomic Energy Control Board,
M. Cadieux, External Affairs.

MINUTES OF MEETING—SEPTEMBER 26, 1947; AMENDMENT

1. The Chairman observed that General McNaughton had suggested that paragraph 20 of the minutes of the previous meeting be amplified to indicate that, in the Second Report of the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission, there was now no proposal for ownership by the "International Agency" of ore in the ground; in consequence, so far as the U.N. Commission was concerned, Canada could, without embarrassment, withdraw the restrictions existing under the present Orders in Council if this were deemed advisable for other reasons.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Nov. 26, 1947 — APAE Document No. 4†).

2. The Panel noted General McNaughton's suggestion and agreed that the minutes of the meeting of September 26th, be amended accordingly.

U.S.-U.K.-CANADA; DECLASSIFICATION MEETINGS; REVISION OF "DECLASSIFICATION GUIDE"

3. Dr. Mackenzie reported that meetings of representatives of the respective atomic agencies of the United Kingdom, United States and Canada had recently been held in Washington, D.C. The purpose of these meetings had been to revise and to agree on uniform interpretation of the "Declassification Guide" which had been prepared by U.S. authorities and made available to the United Kingdom and Canada in April, 1946. The Guide set forth rules for declassification of atomic information shared by the three countries.

The meetings had been successful and the measure of co-operation shown and the extent of agreement reached had been gratifying. From the purely Canadian point of view as well the results had been quite satisfactory. In private conversations, senior officials and distinguished scientists of the U.S. Commission had expressed interest in and approval of the Canadian atomic energy programme and had indicated a desire to visit the Canadian establishments.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Nov. 26, 1947 — APAE Document No. 5†).

4. The Panel, after discussion:

(a) noted with approval Dr. Mackenzie's report on behalf of Canadian representatives at the Washington meetings;

(b) agreed that the Atomic Energy Control Board be requested to consider taking the appropriate action to give official sanction to the Declassification Guide in relation to Canada; and,

(c) agreed that visits by senior officials of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission and distinguished U.S. atomic scientists to Canadian atomic energy establishments should be welcomed.

PATENTS; U.K.-U.S.-CANADA DISCUSSIONS

5. Mr. Jarvis reported upon meetings of representatives of the respective atomic agencies of the United Kingdom, United States and Canada held recently in Washington to discuss patent questions relating to atomic energy and affecting the three countries.

All representatives had expressed satisfaction with existing conditions between the declassification and patent agencies.

The main decisions of interest were:

(a) that reference would be made to the C.P.C. before decisions were made as to applications for issue of patents in non-C.P.C. countries;

(b) that, prior to C.P.C. consideration, the United Kingdom would submit to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission particulars of patents which it had under consideration as possible cases for applications in non-C.P.C. countries; and,

(c) that consideration be given to methods of dealing with difficulties that had arisen in connection with the granting to other countries of patents in U.S. relative to certain restricted atomic fields.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Secretary, Atomic Energy Control Board, Nov. 24, 1947 — APAE Document No. 6†).

6. Dr. Mackenzie said that the U.S. Patent Office were presently refusing Canadian applications for patents in the restricted fields while Canadian practice in this respect was not the same. This was a matter of some difficulty and concern.

7. Mr. Jarvis stated that the matter of protecting Canadian applications was being actively considered; for the present it was intended to keep Canadian applications in the United States active by lodging appeals until a more satisfactory agreement could be worked out with U.S. authorities.

8. Dr. Keenleyside, referring to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission's policy respecting returns to inventors, noted that, in Canada, there was no uniformity with respect to the rights of individual patentees within the various government departments and agencies.

9. The Secretary reported that the Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research had requested a report (from the N.R.C. Patent Corporation, presently in process of organization) on the question of standardization of the rules governing patents by government employees.

10. The Panel, after further discussion, noted with approval:

(a) Mr. Jarvis' report of the patent meetings in Washington; and,

(b) that attention was being given to standardization of procedures governing patent rights by government employees; in this connection it was felt that representatives of the various departments and agencies directly concerned (in particular Mines and Resources) should be consulted in preparation of the report.

UNITED NATIONS ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION; CANADIAN POLICY; U.K.-U.S.-CANADA; CO-OPERATION; COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE

11. The Chairman drew attention to the paper which had been prepared and circulated for purposes of discussion on the subject of the future of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission and Canadian policy with respect thereto.

The conclusion suggested in the memorandum was that it was in the Canadian interest that the Commission be kept vital and not discontinued at this stage, also that in the near future the Commission's activities should be directed toward the less controversial subject of organization and administration of an international agency.

Specifically, the memorandum suggested that the Commission should avoid consideration of bacteriological and chemical warfare.

(External Affairs memorandum, Nov. 28, 1947 — APAE Document No. 7†).

12. General McNaughton, supporting the conclusions stated in the memorandum, reported that the immediate programme of the Commission had been the subject of considerable discussion in New York between representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States, France and Canada. It was felt that during the month of December a suitable programme of work should be agreed upon with a view to avoiding the danger of controversy of a political character. In this connection the outline plan adopted by the majority of the Commission in April 1947 provided a programme respecting organization and administration upon which useful progress could be made.

As he had indicated in correspondence with Dr. Solandt it was his emphatic view that the discussion of bacteriological and chemical warfare in the Commission could serve no useful purpose and would certainly lead to trouble.

13. Dr. Solandt agreed entirely with General McNaughton's view that the Canadian representatives on the Commission should resist the suggestion that bacteriological and chemical warfare should be considered. In both of these fields there existed the closest and most satisfactory co-operation with the United Kingdom and the United States. Of their nature these questions were not capable of the same treatment as that which might be effective in the field of atomic energy.

14. Mr. Heeney reported that Mr. Howe had just received a communication from the Canadian Ambassador in Washington indicating that the U.S. State Department wished to convene a meeting of the Combined Policy Committee at a very early date to consider an immediate revision of the arrangements under which the three countries had co-operated in the field of atomic energy during and since the war. The meeting had been tentatively fixed for the following Monday, December 8th.

These discussions would involve a re-examination of the attitude of the United Kingdom, the United States and Canada to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. The subject presently under discussion by the Panel was therefore directly relevant and it would be useful for Canadian representatives at the forthcoming C.P.C. meeting to be apprised of the Panel's views in this respect.

15. The Panel, after considerable further discussion, agreed:

(a) that the conclusions stated in the memorandum submitted (as amplified by General McNaughton) be approved as representing the Panel's view as to the policy which should be followed by Canada in relation to the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission; and,

(b) that the Canadian Ambassador in Washington be informed of the Panel's views in this respect for his information and guidance in relation to the forthcoming meeting of the Combined Policy Committee.

CANADIAN RADIO-ACTIVE RESOURCES; ORDERS IN COUNCIL P.C. 7187 AND 7188 RESPECTING NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND THE YUKON

16. The Chairman, referring to the discussion of this subject at the meeting of October 26th, pointed out that if the continuance of the continuation of the Transitional Measures Act, 1947, were extended to March 31st, 1948, and it were desired to discontinue, before that date, the application of the Orders in Council reserving the ownership of radio-active substances, these Orders would have to be revoked.

It was now desired that the Panel consider the question of policy involved, namely, whether the restrictions should be removed or retained in the national interest.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Nov. 24, 1947 — APAE Document No. 8†).

17. General McNaughton stated that previous objections by the Atomic Energy Control Board to revocation of these Orders had been based upon possible international complications. In view of the U.N. Commission's decision regarding international ownership of ores in the ground (referred to above — paragraph 1), there was no objection on these grounds to removing these restrictions, the problem being now entirely domestic.

18. Mr. Bateman expressed the view that the present situation was unsatisfactory; claims were valid in some provinces and not in others and prospectors and others were in doubt as to their position. The Atomic Energy Control Board had all the powers amounting to complete control over production, distribution and disposition of radio-active ores. The reservation of ownership to the Crown was, therefore, unnecessary and no longer advisable. Further, present world production figures were such that we should not persist in a policy which would in any way prevent discoveries.

19. The Panel, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that, after appropriate advice to the Provinces which had imposed similar restrictions, the Orders in Council in question should be revoked and that a recommendation to the government to this effect should be made; and,

(b) that, under the auspices of the Atomic Energy Control Board and in consultation with departments, agencies and organizations concerned, a study should be undertaken of the policy which should govern in relation to exploration and development of radio-active resources in Canada with a view to the submission of recommendations to the government and an early public announcement on the subject.

POSITION OF ENGINEERS GOING ABROAD TO EXAMINE RADIO-ACTIVE DEPOSITS

20. The Chairman observed that the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy had raised with the Atomic Energy Control Board certain questions concerning the position of Canadian engineers undertaking examination of radio-active deposits in foreign countries.

These questions had been referred to the Departments of Justice and External Affairs.

The Deputy Minister of Justice had advised:

(a) that he knew of no law prohibiting a Canadian engineer from working for a foreign government or for a private firm or individual abroad, but that a Canadian engineer who left Canada having acquired information relating to proscribed substances and subsequently used that information abroad might well be embraced by the provisions of the Official Secrets Act;

(b) that information obtained would not be confidential, the only confidential information which is privileged being that of a solicitor vis-à-vis his clients;

(c) that the moral or ethical question involved was outside the field of law; and,

(d) that the issuance of a passport was a matter for the Department of External Affairs.

The Legal Adviser of the Department of External Affairs had expressed the opinion that legislation would seem to be necessary if it were desired to prevent an engineer from leaving Canada.

Recommendations of the Panel were requested on the following points:

(a) The extent to which the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in exercising his discretion as to the issue of a passport, should give consideration to the factors mentioned above.

(b) Whether steps should be taken toward requiring or arranging that engineers leaving Canada for the purpose in question undertake to notify the Board of the results of their examination.

(c) What advice or information should be given to the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy engineers.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's note, Nov. 26, 1947 — APAE Document No. 8†).

21. The Panel, after discussion, agreed:

(a) that the Board should base a brief reply to the Institute upon the views of the Department of Justice; and,

(b) that External Affairs could not be expected to refuse to issue passports in such circumstances.

EXPORT POLICY; URANIUM OXIDE; WORLD PRODUCTION

22. Mr. Bateman reported that there were indications that the world production figures for uranium were considerably below what had been anticipated. In these circumstances the Canadian development, production and sales policies should be reviewed carefully in the near future.

23. The Panel, after discussion, noted Mr. Bateman's report and agreed that the matter should be drawn to the attention of the Atomic Energy Control Board.

CONSTRUCTION OF STORAGE SPACE FOR RADIO-ACTIVE MATERIALS; DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

24. Mr. Keenleyside reported that the Department of Mines and Resources was proposing the construction of central storage space for the departmental research programme and requested that the Panel consider recommending to the government approval of this project.

25. The Panel, after discussion, agreed that it would be inappropriate for the Panel to make any recommendation on an administrative matter of this nature.

A.F.B. STANNARD
Secretary

286. DEA/201 (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-3793 Washington, December 5, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Heeney and Pearson from Wrong, Begins: With reference to my WA-3780 of December 4th† concerning the Atomic talks.

Kennan gave me last night a fuller and more coherent account of what they have in mind than we had received hitherto.

2. He said that he had been placed by Lovett in charge of the negotiations, and that Lovett may not be able himself to attend any of the C.P.C. meetings in view of the appalling demands on his time as Acting Secretary of State with Congress in session. He observed that those concerned with the framing of policy on their side were all fairly new to the game and had not been associated with the Manhattan Project[43] and the wartime arrangements. They came to the atomic problems of today with open minds, undisturbed by any "hangovers" from past difficulties and excessive security restrictions.

3. The first purpose of the talks would be to find a realistic basis of co-operation between the three countries in present conditions. They wished to continue the operations of the C.D.T. under a different name and to substitute for the Quebec Agreement a new working arrangement. This would not be a binding international instrument requiring Senate approval and registration with the United Nations. He cited as an example of the sort of arrangement they had in mind the identic statements of last February setting forth the principles of defence co-operation between the United States and Canada. The arrangement, however, would probably include provisions which could not be made public, and it would be necessary to consider separately what public statement might appropriately be made on behalf of the three Governments.

4. Kennan commented that since he had taken charge of the policy framing in the State Department he had been surprised by the few difficulties he had encountered in securing consent to a new approach. This observation appeared to apply to those concerned in the Department of Defence and the Atomic Energy Commission and also to the members of Congress whom they have consulted.

5. The question of the supply of raw materials would be the second major subject of discussion. In this connection the only point which he stressed was their desire that a large stockpile should not be accumulated in the United Kingdom. They would have no objection, he said, to the maintenance there of an adequate supply for current operations with a working reserve, but they wished on strategic grounds that everything above what was needed for these purposes should be stored at a safer distance from the Continent of Europe. I asked him whether they would raise the allocation as well as the location of the materials. He said that he expected that they would do so, but did not emphasize the point. I refrained from pressing him as this is primarily a matter for discussion between the United States and the United Kingdom.

6. The third major subject would be the exchange of information. He told me that they had succeeded in securing a liberal construction of the McMahon Act, under which they thought that they could exchange information deemed to be "in the national interest." He said that the United Kingdom and Canada would certainly not be the sole beneficiaries. While we did not discuss the matter in detail, it was clear that what he had in mind was the scheme outlined to Cockcroft[44] by Wilson, which is mentioned in my WA-3780.† I told him that I understood that at present we were givers rather than receivers of information, and that we would welcome closer co-operation in the areas of direct interest to our own operations.

---

[43]Le projet de recherches commandité par le gouvernement américain qui aboutit à la fabrication de la première bombe atomique.
A US government-sponsored research project that produced the first atomic bomb.

[44]John D. Cockcroft, directeur de l'Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell.
Dr. John D. Cockcroft, Director, Atomic Energy Research Establishment, Harwell.

7. At this point I raised the question of the position of other countries, notably France and Belgium. He said that the strong Communist elements among French scientists made it unlikely that they could expand their co-operative arrangements to include France. He believed, however, that an extension of collaboration to Belgium was both possible and desirable, and added that it was not contemplated that the tri-partite relationship would necessarily be exclusive.

8. I then raised the question of the United Nations Commission. He said that almost two years had passed since the question of the Assembly Resolution looking to full international control of atomic energy. In spite of the best efforts, the Commission had reached a state of deadlock. They wished it to continue its work, but believed that they could not allow its existence to block more limited international co-operation between friendly countries and that a public statement to this effect would probably be required before long.

9. On the procedure for the talks, he said that they had no definite plans, but he himself thought that the C.P.C. might find it necessary to appoint two groups, one on the operations of the C.D.T. and another on the exchange of information. He did not lay as much stress on the timetable as Lovett did in his talk with Inverchapel,[45] but Kennan said that he had not been able to see Lovett for two or three days because of Lovett's engagements before committees at the Capitol. He expected to get the final clearance to start the negotiations today. The Senators whom they had consulted (and he included Vandenberg)[46] had given a general blessing to their plans provided that they acted quickly. In Kennan's view the stalemate over tripartite co-operation which has existed since 1945 ought to have been ended some time ago and the accidental involvement of atomic questions in the Congressional discussions of the Marshall Plan provided a useful incentive for setting matters straight promptly.

10. There may be an initial meeting of the C.P.C. on Saturday or Sunday. I am glad that Mackenzie can get here by Monday. With regard to Ignatieff, it might be left that he will hold himself available to come immediately if required. Kennan said that on their side they would not be using members of their delegation to the U.N.A.E.C. I suppose that, in view of the opening of the session, it would not be possible for Heeney to join us for a few days. We may be rather hard pressed, with myself as alternate Canadian member and Stone as Canadian Secretary, since there is no lack of other urgent business at the Embassy. Ends.

---

[45]Lord Inverchapel, ambassadeur du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis.
Lord Inverchapel, Ambassador of United Kingdom in United States.

[46]Arthur H. Vandenberg, président de la Commission des relations étrangères du Sénat.
Arthur H. Vandenberg, Chairman, Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

287. DEA/201 (S)

Le président de la Commission de contrôle de l'énergie atomique au secrétaire du Cabinet

President, Atomic Energy Control Board to Secretary to the Cabinet

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], December 8, 1947

Dear Mr. Heeney:

I have your two Top Secret letters of 4 December, 1947 with which were enclosed —

A. (1) Top Secret Telegram WA-3747 dated 2 December 1947 addressed to Mr. Howe from Wrong;

(2) Top Secret Telegram EX-3074 dated 4 December 1947† addressed to Wrong from yourself;

(3) Top Secret Telegram WA-3754 dated 3 December 1947† addressed to yourself and Pearson from Wrong;

B. (1) Further copy of A(2&3) above;

(2) Top Secret Telegram WA-3768 dated 3 December 1947† addressed to yourself and Pearson from Wrong;

I also now have —

C. Top Secret Telegrams:

(1) WA-3780 dated 4 December 1947;†

(2) WA-3793 dated 5 December 1947

both from Wrong.

I note that Dr. C.J. Mackenzie and George Ignatieff will be in Washington to assist the Ambassador in the consideration of matters which will come up at the proposed meetings of the Combined Policy Committee.

As regards the policy which our representatives should advocate at these meetings, it seems to me that it is in our interest that "areas of collaboration" between Canada, the U.K. and the U.S.A. should be widened to the maximum extent to which the United States will consent.

We have already made public that there was close collaboration between these three countries during the war and it is generally understood that this collaboration continues. In consequence, sooner or later, it will become advisable to inform the United Nations about our relationships in some detail. There appears so far to have been no public reference to any document embodying the original arrangement. It seems to me that it would be advantageous to maintain this position in reference to any new agreement which may be arrived at and in consequence I would think that the best procedure to inform the public would be by way of the issue of identical joint statements in London, Washington and Ottawa. By this means as much information as is desired can be disclosed to the world and there is no obligation to furnish any particulars of consequential arrangements or statistics of operations, etc. as might be required if a specific document were submitted to the United Nations for registration.

I note in Wrong's telegram WA-3793 of 5 December, 1947 his report of the United States views in reference to France and Belgium and the possible exclusion of the former and the possible inclusion of the latter in new arrangements.

I feel that any such action would have a very detrimental effect on relations in the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Up to date France has worked very closely with us and with the United States and their representatives have shown the most sympathetic understanding of the difficulties in the way of extension of information. I believe any move to include Belgium in the inner circle and to continue the exclusion of France would have very serious repercussions. I would think it would be less objectionable to maintain the inner circle of the three nations rather than to make a partial extension which would be regarded by France as invidious.

As regards the Trust, at the present time Canadian supplies of uranium are outside its terms and we are able to dispose of our raw materials on the basis of a bilateral contract. I think that it would be well to continue on this basis so that we can settle questions of detail and particularly prices direct.

In order to give assurance of our full cooperation with the U.K. and the U.S. in the matter of raw materials we might, however, state that it is our intention to conserve our supplies of uranium for the use of ourselves and for sale only to the U.K. or U.S.A. and that if sales to any other country are contemplated we shall be glad to consult with them before action is taken.

Yours sincerely,
A.G.L. McNAUGHTON

288. DEA/201 (S)

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-3120 Ottawa, December 10, 1947

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Wrong from Heeney, Begins: Your WA-3814† and previous teletypes concerning atomic talks.

(1) It is obviously impossible to send you any useful detailed instructions until we know the nature of the United States proposals to be considered by the C.P.C. and also the attitude of the United Kingdom with respect thereto. However, on the basis of available information, Mr. Howe agrees that the following considerations should be kept in mind by Canadian representatives and Mr. St. Laurent and Pearson concur.

(2) While the role of Canada in the development of atomic energy projects has been of some substantial importance and Canadian representatives have participated in the discussions with the United States and the United Kingdom from the early days, our position has been, of necessity, and will continue to be, secondary to that of the two major partners, particularly the United States. This in our view, conditions Canadian participation in the current discussions.

(3) We are not convinced that we should be hurried into concluding an important agreement of the kind suggested merely for the security reasons mentioned in paragraph 4 of your 3747, nor solely to facilitate the relations of the Administration with Congress in relation to their Marshall Plan proposals, although we are sensible of the weight of these considerations. It is obvious that any proposals for redefining the relationship between the three countries with respect to atomic energy will require to be considered very carefully by the government. For this reason we do not feel that we should be called upon to reach agreement within the time table suggested by the State Department, unless it becomes quite evident that the connection of the immediate settlement of these atomic questions with Congressional consideration of the Marshall Plan provides a unique opportunity to induce the United States to cooperate fully with us and with the United Kingdom in atomic matters, particularly as regards exchange of information.

(4) It is unnecessary to emphasize the serious effects which any public statement of agreement between the three countries for close collaboration in this field would have on the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission. Such an announcement would have to be considered carefully in order not to injure the work of the Commission or at least to keep such injury to a minimum. In this respect, you should have in mind the paper on the continuation of the Commission which was approved at the last meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy (a copy of which was sent you by bag). You will observe that, it was the view of the Panel (paragraph 5 of my teletype No. 3074†), efforts should continue to be made to reach agreement upon an acceptable system of international control and that it was in the Canadian interest that the Commission be kept viable for this reason.

(5) As regards the terms of any new tripartite arrangements, you will recall the draft C.P.C. agreement prepared early last year which was approved by the Cabinet as a satisfactory basis for discussion.

(6) The Canadian attitude remains unchanged insofar as the C.D.T. is concerned. You will be aware that our position has always been that, while (at the request of the United States and the United Kingdom) a Canadian representative attends meetings of the Trust, Canada is not a member of this body in the sense that we assume obligations thereunder with the other partner nations. This has been clearly understood throughout.

(7) In this same connection, Dr. Mackenzie and Mr. Bateman will have in mind our relatively minor role as a source of supply and the fact that Mr. Howe has always insisted that Canadian production should remain under the sole control of the government of Canada. General McNaughton suggests that in order to give assurance of our full cooperation with the United Kingdom and the United States in the matter of raw materials, we might, however, be willing to state that it is our intention to use our supplies of uranium, in excess of Canada's own requirements, for sale only to the United Kingdom or to the U.S. and that we shall be glad to consult with them if sales to any other country are contemplated. This would, of course, have to be referred to the government.

(8) The U.S. authorities seem pre-occupied with the distribution of stockpiles and military facilities. It has been suggested that they may seek to bargain the exchange of information against an agreement by the United Kingdom to transfer stockpiles and facilities to less exposed territory. In this connection we understand that Canada has been mentioned. Unless this country is suggested for such a purpose, we consider that this matter of location is primarily one for discussion between the United Kingdom and the United States. It certainly cannot be assumed that we would be prepared to accede to any such proposal involving Canada. If a suggestion to this effect is made, our position should be reserved, since this is a matter which the government would wish to examine very carefully from several points of view.

(9) With regard to the U.S. proposal concerning France and Belgium (your telegram No. WA-3793 of December 5, 1947) General McNaughton feels that the inclusion of Belgium in the new arrangements coupled with the exclusion of France would have a detrimental effect on relations in the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission. Up to date, France has worked very closely with Canada and the United States and their representatives have shown the most sympathetic understanding to the difficulties in the way of extension of information. It would be less objectionable, McNaughton feels, to maintain the inner circle of the three nations rather than to make a partial extension, which would certainly be regarded as invidious by France.

(10) As you realize, the government would be seriously concerned about the form of any new agreement both from the point of view of our responsibilities as to registration under the Charter and of the binding character of the obligations which it would impose on these parties. In the latter respect we have in mind particularly the position of the United States Government in relation to the McMahon Act.

(11) In our view, the real Canadian interest in these discussions lies in the possibility that they may result in really useful information being made available to us and to the United Kingdom. We appreciate the difficult position of U.S. authorities under U.S. legislation and in relation to Congress but, as Dr. Mackenzie has reported, there is a good deal that the United States can make available to us through cooperation in specific fields. General McNaughton agrees that our chief interest is in widening to the maximum extent these "areas of collaboration" and every opportunity should be taken to secure U.S. consent to such arrangements. We are anxious to know whether the U.S. authorities are really prepared and able to approach this matter of cooperation in a new spirit. Dr. Mackenzie, especially, will recall that our relations with the United States in this respect during the recent years have not been satisfactory.

(12) In our view the present meetings can only result in the preparation of draft proposals to be submitted to the three governments in sufficient time to give them the careful consideration which they warrant before any further action is taken. You should make our position quite clear in this respect if the suggestion of an immediate new agreement is pressed.

(13) We shall look forward to receiving your reports as the discussions develop. Ends.

289. DEA/201 (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Prime Minister

TOP SECRET Ottawa, December 13, 1947

As you know, there are currently going on in Washington meetings of the Combined Policy Committee on atomic energy questions. It is expected that they will continue until at least the middle of next week and that they will result in proposals to be submitted to the three governments for consideration.

The U.S. delegation is composed of the Under-Secretary of State and Dr. Lilienthal and other experts from the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, the United Kingdom by Lord Inverchapel and a strong team of experts, several of whom have come from Britain for the purpose. Since Mr. Howe was unable to attend because of his Parliamentary duties, Wrong is representing him as the Canadian alternate member on the C.P.C. and he is being assisted by Dean Mackenzie and George Bateman as expert advisers (both of whom, as you know, have been intimately associated with collaboration with the United States and the United Kingdom in this field, from the early days). Stone from our Embassy and, with General McNaughton's approval, Ignatieff who has assisted the General at the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, are also participating in the meetings.

The questions which are being discussed at the Washington meetings have been before the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, of which I am Chairman. You will recall that the Panel was set up by the Cabinet in March 1946, to consider and advise upon problems arising out of the development and uses of atomic energy.

It is too early to say what may be the result of these discussions but already there is evidence that the attitude of the U.S. authorities has altered very considerably since the C.P.C. last met (in[47] 1946). In particular, our representatives are hopeful that in the matter of exchange of information agreement will be reached which will be valuable to Canada as well as the United Kingdom. The other principal problem under discussion is that of raw materials. A sub-committee, on which we are represented by Bateman and Stone, is presently examining the situation with a view to reporting to the main committee next week. It is quite clear, however, that U.S. authorities are very worried about the prospective supply position. The end of the known ore bodies in the Belgian Congo (by far the largest present source of supply) is in sight and known alternative sources cannot provide for the heavy requirements of U.S. undertakings.

---

[47]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
Jun[e] [A.D.P. Heeney]

Mr. Howe and General McNaughton are being sent regular reports of the discussions in Washington as they progress and, with Mr. St. Laurent's concurrence our representatives there are acting under general instructions which Mr. Howe approved before the meetings began. It is understood, of course, that any proposals which emerge will be submitted to the government before any commitments are made.

I thought you might wish to have this preliminary report now. As soon as anything specific in the way of a proposal emerges I shall, of course, let you know at once.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

290. DEA/201 (S)

Note du secrétaire du Cabinet pour le premier ministre

Memorandum from Secretary to the Cabinet to Prime Minister

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL Ottawa, December 20, 1947

RE WASHINGTON ATOMIC ENERGY DISCUSSIONS

With reference to my memorandum to you of December 13th, the meetings of the Combined Policy Committee have now been adjourned until some time early in January.

2. The discussions have proceeded most satisfactorily and in an atmosphere of complete co-operation among the representatives of all three countries. This has been due primarily to the changed attitude of the U.S. government who are obviously gravely concerned at the prospect of running short of sufficient materials to continue their present scale of atomic operations.

Despite the provisions of the McMahon Act (which had hitherto been regarded as a barrier to effective co-operation) U.S. authorities are now, apparently, satisfied that they can collaborate closely with the United Kingdom and Canada on the ground that they are acting for the "security" of the United States.

3. The meetings in Washington have resulted, so far, in draft proposals under two headings:

(a) exchange of information; and,

(b) technical co-operation, and Canadian representatives have participated in the preparation and discussion of these proposals.

Canada's direct interest is primarily in (a) and Dean Mackenzie feels that the suggestions which have emerged for exchange of information (including personnel) are most satisfactory from the Canadian point of view.

4. The most difficult problem discussed had to do with the allocating of supplies of essential materials. This is of direct concern to the United States and the United Kingdom; Canada is only indirectly interested. (It is in connection with a U.S. proposal to have supplies re-allocated to the United States from British stock piles that U.K. representatives are having to return to London to consult their government.)

5. Under the proposals discussed in Washington, the Combined Development Trust (which, as you know, was the organization dealing with supplies of uranium and thorium) is to be continued under another name — "The Combined Development Agency". As formerly, it is clearly understood that this body will have no authority with respect to Canadian production which will remain under the sole control of the government of Canada.

6. As I mentioned to you the other day, it is not proposed that any new formal agreements between the three countries should result from the Washington discussions. The suggestion presently being considered is that there be an agreed "Minute" of the Combined Policy Committee recording "identic" or "closely identic" declarations of intent by the members of the C.P.C. This procedure, it is felt, would provide an adequate basis for closer co-operation, without constituting an international agreement registerable under the U.N. Charter.

7. The three governments will, of course, have full opportunity for considering these proposals. If they are acceptable, it is intended that they should be adopted by the Combined Policy Committee and supersede the Quebec Agreement and other agreements subsequent thereto.

8. No public announcement of these arrangements is contemplated, at this time, though the U.S. State Department will probably have to give some information on the subject, in private, to the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, soon after Congress resumes in the New Year.

9. Mr. Howe is to meet with the members of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy at 2.30 p.m. on Tuesday next, December 23rd, in the Privy Council Office, to receive personal reports from Dean Mackenzie and probably one or two others who have participated in the Washington discussions. A complete written report will be prepared and submitted later. However, Mr. Howe agrees that you might also wish to be present when these preliminary oral reports are being made. I think that you would find them very interesting. Mr. Howe has also agreed that I should invite Mr. St. Laurent to be present.

10. The Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy which was set up by the Cabinet in March 1946 to advise on these matters consists of:

A.D.P. Heeney, Convener,
C.J. Mackenzie,
A.G.L. McNaughton,
L.B. Pearson,
G.C. Bateman,
O.M. Solandt,
H.L. Keenleyside.

A.D.P. H[EENEY]

291. DEA/201-F (S)

Procès-verbal de la réunion des ministres avec la Commission consultative sur l'énergie atomique, 23 décembre

Minutes of Meeting of Ministers with Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, December 23rd

TOP SECRET Ottawa, December 26, 1947

Present:

The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply (Mr. Howe), in the Chair,
The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. St. Laurent).

Members of the Advisory Panel

A.D.P. Heeney (Chairman),
A.G.L. McNaughton,
L.B. Pearson,
C.J. Mackenzie,
O.M. Solandt,
G.C. Bateman,
H.L. Keenleyside,
A.F.B. Stannard (Secretary).

Also present:

G.M. Jarvis, Secretary, Atomic Energy Control Board,
George Ignatieff, Department of External Affairs,
Marcel Cadieux, Department of External Affairs.

UNITED KINGDOM-UNITED STATES-CANADA COOPERATION; COMBINED POLICY COMMITTEE MEETINGS

1. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply observed that a general report on the recent meetings of the C.P.C. in Washington had been made by the Canadian Ambassador, the Canadian alternate member, in a letter to the Chairman of the Advisory Panel. Mr. Heeney might read this letter to the meeting as an introduction to supplementary verbal reports by others present who had participated in the Washington discussions.

2. Mr. Heeney said that the meetings of the C.P.C. and the subordinate groups designated on special subjects had occupied some ten days. Canada had been represented by Mr. Wrong (as alternate member to the Minister) and by Dr. Mackenzie and Mr. Bateman, Mr. Stone and Mr. Ignatieff. As the discussions progressed, the Ambassador had submitted by telegram current reports which had been communicated to Mr. Howe and Mr. St. Laurent. The Prime Minister had also been kept informed of developments from time to time.

3. Mr. Heeney then read Mr. Wrong's letter from which the more significant features are summarized below:

(i) The meetings resulted in making available information not hitherto known concerning U.S. requirements and forward plans.

(ii) The supply of raw materials was causing concern to U.S. authorities and the most difficult part of the discussions related to the substantial stock of raw materials in the United Kingdom. The figures for current consumption and forward estimates of requirements for the next five years had been tabled by all three countries, along with full information concerning available production over the same period. It was thus possible for the problem of allocation of supplies to be approached in full knowledge of the relative needs of each country. As a result, it was apparent that the United Kingdom was in a more favourable position than the United States respecting assured supply for their respective programmes. This was the situation that led to the conclusion that no solution of the materials problem was possible without new instructions to the U.K. representatives.

(iii) Discussions in the materials group had led to the drafting of a principle to ensure the execution of U.S. and U.K. minimum programmes. This proposed principle was mutual in terms but, in the circumstances, would clearly involve during the next three years a transfer of supplies from time to time to the United States. It called for the striking of quarterly balances for submission to the C.P.C. and, should any quarterly balance show the reserve of either below an agreed figure, the other would make available to the first the amount of the deficit. Emergency shipments would also be made if at any time reserves fell below the needs for an undecided number of weeks' consumption. In this connection it would be necessary to set a figure for reasonable reserves in the United Kingdom and the United States and to work out a procedure for earmarking and for shipping stocks from one country to the other if reserves fell below accepted figures.

(iv) The plan was designed to apply to the years 1948-49 but was to be subject to review if there were a serious interruption in production or if a national emergency arose. The arrangement contemplated an undertaking by the United States to furnish the modest Canadian requirements.

(v) Other discussions related to the future exchange of experience and information between the three countries. The scientists concerned had little difficulty in arriving at a recommendation on the areas in which collaboration could now usefully take place. It was agreed that a standing subcommittee of scientists would be set up to supervise the execution of exchanges and that topics listed would be open to extension by the C.P.C. at any time.

From the Canadian point of view the prospect thus offered of securing the desired cooperation in connection with our own project was the most valuable result of the meeting.

(vi) The U.S. authorities had secured and accepted an interpretation of the McMahon Act which gave them much more leeway in cooperation than they had felt safe in employing hitherto. This interpretation of the Act hinged on the proviso (in sections 1(a), 9(b) and 10(a)) — "subject at all times to the paramount objective of securing the common defence and security of the United States of America." The joint defence of North America was held to justify the extension of collaboration to Canada and also to the United Kingdom.

(vii) A form of new agreement between the three governments — "identic" (or nearly identic) statements of intention delivered in the C.P.C. — had been forwarded separately.

(viii) Before the meetings of the C.P.C. resumed, in early January, the Canadian delegation would require direction from the government with respect to the following three questions:

(1) was the draft statement of intention in general acceptable to the Canadian government?

(2) if an arrangement for the allocation of raw materials along the lines mentioned proved acceptable in London and in Washington, was it also agreeable to us?

(3) in this connection, had we any views on the questions of whether there should be a movement of materials in the near future, and of what should be regarded as a desirable working reserve in the United States?

(Letter, Canadian Ambassador, Washington, to A.D.P. Heeney, Dec. 19, 1947.)

4. The Meeting, after discussion, noted the Ambassador's report as supplemented by the Chairman of the Advisory Panel.

UNITED KINGDOM-UNITED STATES-CANADA; EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND TECHNICAL COOPERATION

5. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply requested Dr. Mackenzie to comment upon the arrangements for exchange of information and technical cooperation agreed at Washington; he had been a member of the C.P.C. sub-group on these subjects.

6. Dr. Mackenzie reported that the members of the sub-group on technical cooperation had encountered little difficulty in reaching agreement on a mutually satisfactory basis. A list of topics had been drawn up and presented to the C.P.C. as suitable subjects for cooperation and exchange of information at this time to the advantage of all.

This agreement would be of substantial importance to Canada. Particularly satisfying were the arrangements proposed for exchange of personnel in low-power plants — Chalk River, Argonne, Clinton and Harwell.

The sub-group's report had been accepted by the C.P.C. and discussions on the technical level would continue.

7. The Meeting, after discussion, noted with approval Dr. Mackenzie's report.

PROCESSED URANIUM; RIGHTS IN STOCKPILES

8. Dr. Mackenzie observed that, in connection with future deliveries, the government might wish to give consideration to the question of eventual use of materials in stockpiles of once-processed uranium. This matter had not been mentioned in Washington but it was one of very considerable importance in the long run.

The present extraction process for the fissionable isotopes was relatively inefficient. As a consequence, stockpiles of once-processed uranium, although unusable for a considerable length of time, possessed a considerable amount of potential material which might be extracted at some future date.

9. The Meeting, after discussion, agreed that this was a matter for consideration in relation to arrangements for future deliveries.

UNITED KINGDOM-UNITED STATES-CANADA; MATERIALS AND REQUIREMENTS

10. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply requested Mr. Bateman to supplement and comment upon the Ambassador's report upon the discussions in Washington of the supply situation.

11. Mr. Bateman stated that, with Mr. Stone of the Embassy, he had attended meetings of the sub-group on materials, when full and frank reports on supply and requirements had been tabled by all three countries.

According to the best estimates of world production, there would be a substantial shortage of raw materials to meet national requirements of C.P.C. countries during the next five years. While there was some ground for optimism as to increases in world supply in later years, present indications were that an arrangement would have to be made for the immediate future, between the United States and the United Kingdom, with respect to allocations between them of materials and with respect to minimum reserves.

12. The Meeting, after discussion, noted with approval Mr. Bateman's report.

UNITED KINGDOM-UNITED STATES; ARRANGEMENTS FOR ALLOCATIONS OF MATERIALS

13. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply requested Mr. Ignatieff and Mr. Bateman to explain the position with respect to proposals discussed in Washington for allocation of supplies as between the United Kingdom and the United States.

14. Mr. Ignatieff reported that, since Canada had no direct interest, the Canadian representatives had taken very little part in the discussions which had resulted in the tentative draft on allocation of materials.

The indications were that the United Kingdom would have to make some adjustment in their stockpile position if U.S. material deficits were to be met during 1948-49. The objective of the draft agreement was the implementation of the minimum programmes of the two countries with reasonable pipelines and reserves. The essence of the proposal was that each country undertake to guarantee the other's essential supplies.

The difficulty would be to achieve agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States on reasonable pipelines and reserves. As had been indicated already, the U.K. representatives were now consulting their government on the draft proposals.

15. Mr. Bateman agreed that there was no need for any intervention in this matter, at this stage, on the part of the Canadian government. Our own modest requirements were not in doubt.

On the other hand, we were interested in the United States and the United Kingdom achieving agreement between themselves in the general interest and, at a later stage, Canadian representatives might help in finding a mutually acceptable solution. At the moment, the United States were asking for a reserve position which might be thought unnecessarily high and rigid in the circumstances.

16. The Meeting, after discussion, noted the reports of Mr. Ignatieff and Mr. Bateman.

U.K.-U.S.-CANADA; CONTINUED COLLABORATION;
PROPOSED NEW C.P.C. AGREEMENT

17. Mr. Heeney referred to the proposed new agreement in the form of "identic" declarations of intention to be recorded in the Minutes of a meeting of the Combined Policy Committee.

Copies of the text of a tentative draft of a C.P.C. Minute, for this purpose, which had been prepared in Washington, were circulated for consideration.†

Mr. Wrong's comments on the draft text (which was to be considered when the C.P.C. discussions resumed) had been made available by telegram.

(Telegrams WA-3945 and 3946, Canadian Embassy, Washington, to External Affairs, Dec. 19, 1947.)†

18. Mr. Ignatieff explained that identic declarations of intention by members of the C.P.C. representing the three governments were felt to be less open to objection in relation to the provisions of the United Nations Charter than a more formal agreement; furthermore, such an instrument would not require Congressional approval.

It would be observed that it was contemplated that the new agreement would supersede the Quebec Agreement and all subsequent agreements between the three governments in the field of atomic energy, with certain stated exceptions, viz:

(a) The Patent Memorandum of 1st October, 1943, as modified by subsequent Agreement on 19th September, 1944, and 8th March, 1945;

(b) The Agreement and Declaration of Trust dated 13th June, 1944;

(c) The exchange of letters between the acting Secretary of State and the British Ambassador of 19th and 24th September, 1945, concerning Brazil;

(d) The agreed public Declaration by the President of the United States, the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, and the Prime Minister of Canada of November 15th, 1945.

19. Mr. Ignatieff pointed out that the new agreement would provide specifically for separate Canadian representation on the C.P.C., of the Trust (to be known hereafter as "The Combined Development Agency".)

Certain difficulties attached to provisions respecting control of supplies within areas with which the three countries had special associations, notably in relation to other countries of the Commonwealth. This was to be further examined as between the United Kingdom and the United States. The Canadian government's complete control over materials within Canada was clearly understood.

There was no present intention to make any public announcement of the new agreement if and when it was concluded. However, a brief reference might be included in the President's State of the Union message in January, to the existing deadlock in the U.N. Atomic Energy Commission. U.S. members had also indicated that they would have to report upon the current discussions to an executive session of the Joint Congressional Committee. If a leak occurred it was the intention that a brief public statement be made referring to the continuation of long standing co-operation between the three governments.

20. Mr. Ignatieff observed that the new agreement would not contain the provisions in the Quebec Agreement requiring any one of the partner nations to obtain the consent of the others before making use of atomic weapons against a third party.

21. The Minister of Reconstruction and Supply expressed approval of the proposed procedure for identic declarations of intent in the Combined Policy Committee.

The provisions of the draft were, in general, satisfactory from the Canadian point of view.

22. The Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed with Mr. Howe.

It might be that in order to supersede prior agreements, however, it would be necessary to have an exchange of notes. This, it was understood, was being looked into.

23. The Meeting, after further discussion, noted the reports submitted and agreed that, with respect to the questions set forth in the Ambassador's letter (para.3(viii) above), the Canadian representatives, at the resumed meetings of the Combined Policy Committee in January, should be instructed to take the following position:

(1) that draft statements of intention by the three governments along the lines of the draft text submitted would be acceptable to the government of Canada:

(2) that, if arrangements for the allocation of raw materials on the lines proposed proved acceptable to the U.K. and U.S. governments, it would also be agreeable to the government of Canada; and,

(3) with respect to working reserves, this was primarily a question to be settled by the U.K. and U.S. governments; nevertheless, if agreement between them were not reached, it might be stated as the Canadian view that, in the circumstances, mutual guarantee of reserves to the extent of minimum requirements of from three to six months appeared to be adequate and reasonable.

A.F.B. STANNARD
Secretary

292. DEA/201 (S)

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum by Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], January 13, 1948

ATOMIC ENERGY; COLLABORATION WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM AND THE UNITED STATES

At the meeting of the Cabinet on January 13, a report† was submitted on discussions recently concluded in Washington between representatives of the U.K., U.S. and Canadian Governments respecting the revision of the wartime arrangements between the three countries for collaboration in the field of atomic energy.

Full agreement had been reached for technical cooperation and the exchange of information, and for the allocation of supplies of essential materials to meet the requirements of the three national programmes. The Canadian representative (Mr. Wrong) had adhered to these new arrangements at the final meeting of the Combined Policy Committee on January 7th, upon authorization given by the Prime Minister to the Secretary to the Cabinet (Mr. Heeney).

The Cabinet noted with approval the report submitted.

CHAPITRE VII/CHAPTER VII
AVIATION CIVILE
CIVIL AVIATION

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
CONVENTION DE VARSOVIE
WARSAW CONVENTION

293. C.D.H./Vol. 97

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], April 9, 1947

My dear Colleague,

RE CIVIL AVIATION — WARSAW CONVENTION

The President of Trans-Canada Air Lines has called my attention to the fact that Canada has never acceded to the Warsaw Convention which governs international civil aviation. At the time, Canada was not interested in international aviation but at the moment, the matter is becoming important.

Article 38 of the Convention provides that after it has come into force it will remain open for accession by any State and that accession shall take effect on the 90th day after notice has been given to the Government of the Republic of Poland.

I therefore recommend that steps be taken as soon as possible to proclaim the Carriage by Air Act and have Canada file accession to the Convention.

Trans-Canada Air Lines has filed with me a formal request that this be done. I will appreciate your attention to the matter.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

294. C.D.H./Vol. 97

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Ottawa, April 25, 1947

My dear Colleague,

RE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON CARRIAGE BY AIR, 1929
(WARSAW CONVENTION)

With reference to your letter of April 9th, officials of the Department have had an opportunity of examining the Carriage by Air Act, 1939,† (3 George VI, Chapter 12) which contains a copy of the Convention on the Carriage by Air, 1929.† There is one point of policy which, it appears, should be cleared before Canada accedes to this Convention.

Paragraph 1 of Article 2 of the Convention provides that the Convention shall apply to carriage "performed by the State or by legally constituted public bodies . . . ." The Additional Protocol provides that the High Contracting Parties reserve to themselves the right to declare at the time of ratification or accession that "the first paragraph of Article 2 of this Convention shall not apply to international carriage by air performed directly by the state . . . ." Is it your desire that the Government should exclude from the application of the Convention any international air carriage performed directly by the Government of Canada? In this event, Canada should also accede to the Additional Protocol when it accedes to the Convention. If it is not your intention that Canada should adhere to the Additional Protocol, then the question of sovereign immunity of aircraft of the Government of Canada should be examined very closely before finally deciding not to exclude from the application of the Convention any international carriage performed directly by the Government of Canada.

As soon as this point has been cleared, the instrument of accession can be made ready and deposited so that the Carriage by Air Act, 1939, can come into effect 90 days after the deposit of the instrument of accession.

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT

295. C.D.H./Vol. 97

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], May 8, 1947

My dear Colleague:

RE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION ON CARRIAGE BY AIR, 1929
(WARSAW CONVENTION)

Thanks for your letter of 25th April calling my attention to the terms of the Convention.

I suggest that Canada should accede to the Convention and also to the Additional Protocol which excludes from the application of the Convention any international air carriage performed directly by the Government of Canada.

The above assumes that carriage performed by Trans-Canada Air Lines will not be regarded as being performed directly by the Government of Canada and that the reference in that case would be to carriage performed by military aircraft.

I would be glad if the instrument of accession could be made ready and deposited accordingly.

Yours sincerely,
[C.D. HOWE]

2e PARTIE/PART 2

ORGANISATION DE L'AVIATION CIVILE INTERNATIONALE
INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION ORGANIZATION

296. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Note du représentant auprès de l'OACI[1]

Memorandum by Representative to ICAO[1]

[Montreal], January 22, 1947

CANADA'S POSITION ON MULTILATERAL AGREEMENT ON COMMERCIAL AIR RIGHTS

I attach Air Transport Working Draft #34,† which contains the work of the Sub-Committee in PICAO on the preparation of a draft multilateral agreement for consideration by the May 1947 Assembly.

The matter now moves to the Air Transport Committee where it may receive some publicity and it is important that Canada's position be considered in the light of developments so that our present stand and that which we will take in the Assembly will be consistent.

The 1946 Assembly asked Air Transport Committee for a draft multilateral agreement, claiming it was the only solution compatible with the objects of the Organization. Two of the seven members of the Sub-Committee claimed that a possible interpretation would permit us to produce a draft, multilateral in every aspect except the interchange of routes which would be left to bilateral dealings by every pair of States. The other five members claimed this was contrary to the spirit of multilateralism and to the letter of our directive, although, of this five, one member, the U.K., claimed that the course of the minority would be more likely to meet general acceptance.

The only representative at the 1946 Assembly who actually defined multilateralism was Mr. Symington,[2] who said, (1), "When I say multilateralism, I mean that each and everyone should be able to fly internationally according to a set of rules and regulations which is a convention, that the convention should be agreed upon so that the rules are the same for all, and that those who desire to avail themselves of these universal rights should sign the convention and be under a treaty obligation to abide by those rules as administered by an international body." No one at the

---

[1]Une copie fut envoyée au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements, au président de Trans-Canada Airlines, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (à l'attention du chef de la Direction économique) et au secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet.
Copies were sent to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, President of Trans-Canada Airlines, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (attention Head, Economic Division) and Assistant Secretary to Cabinet.

[2]H.J. Symington, président de Trans-Canada Airlines.
H.J. Symington, President, Trans-Canada Airlines.

Assembly denied this definition so it seemed wrong for the minority in our Sub-Committee to claim that the application of "Bermuda principles"[3] with bilateral exchange of routes would comply with the Assembly's directive.

The rest of us have disagreed not only with the interpretation of our directive but with the minority claim that their solution would be likely to meet wide acceptance. The evils of bilateralism would remain in what would be a standard form of bilateral agreement and political pressures alien to aviation could influence the exchange of routes in a way that multilateralism is supposed to avoid.

Canada's position I believe to be also the position of many other States including a number that have closed bilateral agreements containing "Bermuda principles". I have stated, as have Canada's representatives before, that there would be no incentive for us in a standard bilateral. We have said a truly multilateral agreement would bring us the indirect benefits of world order in the air, and we would be prepared to make concessions to achieve it but we are not afraid of our position under bilateral agreements. We would insist, as would many others, (so long as we are to have bilaterals,) on the right to close whatever type suits the circumstances of each case.

In short, we are asked to give away the protection of a precisely worded capacity clause of the Sub-Committee draft, which the minority claim is too rigid, and to receive in return more general statements of intention with exchanges in a form fixed in advance. We would make little contribution toward order in the air and would be obligated to give five freedoms[4] to all comers. This offers us little incentive and I believe this view will be upheld by a majority of the Air Transport Committee and Council. The U.S.A., the U.K. and China will oppose it probably picking up support from Ireland and perhaps some who habitually follow them.

I think there is little chance of a multilateral agreement succeeding in the Assembly but I think it is an object worth striving for to increase its chance of success in some later year. I think we will gain credit for taking such a stand which

---

[3]Voir le volume 12, documents 325 et 334./See Volume 12, Documents 325 and 334.

[4]Les cinq libertés de l'air sont :

1) Le privilège de traverser un territoire sans atterrir;
2) Le privilège d'atterrir pour des raisons non-commerciales;
3) Le privilège de débarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises embarqués sur le territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;
4) Le privilège d'embarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises à destination du territoire de l'État dont l'aéronef possède la nationalité;
5) Le privilège d'embarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises à destination du territoire de tout autre État Contractant et le privilège de débarquer des passagers, du courrier et des marchandises en provenance du territoire de tout autre État Contractant.

The five freedoms of the air are:

1) The privilege to fly across a territory without landing;
2) The privilege to land for non-traffic purposes;
3) The privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo taken on in the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
4) The privilege to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses;
5) The privilege to take on passengers, mail and cargo destined for the territory of another State and the privilege to put down passengers, mail and cargo coming from any such territory.

is consistent with that taken by Canada in Chicago and in Montreal last year. I do not think we should support the standard form of bilateral if the multilateral fails and I do not think the U.K. are serving their own best interests if they continue to do so.

I would be glad of any criticism of the above which will help me to best represent our position.

A.C. McKIM

297. DEA/72-ADU-22-40

Note de la Direction économique
pour la Première direction politique et la Deuxième direction politique

Note from Economic Division to First Political Division and Second Political Division

[Ottawa], April 9, 1947

ITALIAN APPLICATION FOR ADMISSION TO ICAO

The attached letter from the Italian representative in Canada,† requests us to support the Italian application for admission to ICAO, which according to Count Cossato is coming up for consideration at the forthcoming Assembly of ICAO in Montreal next month. Under the present constitution of ICAO, Italy would be classified as a State other than a member of the United Nations, or a State associated with them which remained neutral during the war. Therefore, it could only be admitted to membership in ICAO under the following conditions:

(a) With the approval of the United Nations;

(b) By a four-fifths vote of the Assembly of ICAO and on such conditions as the Assembly might prescribe;

(c) The assent of any member State invaded or attacked by Italy during the war, would be necessary.

The conditions of admission, you will note, are fairly stringent.

Although the question of Italian admission to ICAO has not as yet been placed on the Agenda for the Assembly, I understand from Mr. McKim that it will be included as soon as the Italians make a formal application to ICAO. In view of this, it might be wise to determine our attitude to this question now. From a civil aviation point of view, it would seem highly desirable to have as many States as possible become members of ICAO, and therefore I would be inclined to support the Italian application. However, it would seem to me preferable to support the Italian application only when it comes up for consideration, and not to promise support in advance or sponsor the application in any way.[5] [5]Le 23 avril, le gouvernement accepta d'appuyer la demande d'admission de l'Italie.

---

On April 23 the government agreed to support the Italian application.

Your views on this question would be appreciated.

H.O. MORAN

298. C.D.H./Vol. 96

Le représentant auprès de l'OACI
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Representative to ICAO
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Montreal], April 16, 1947

Dear Mike [Pearson]:

A. Advantages to Canada of I.C.A.O. Location Here

In a recent conversation with you I mentioned some of the advantages to Canada of ICAO's location here, which are:

1. The foreign currency advantage to Canada as against the situation were the Headquarters of P.I.C.A.O. outside Canada, was worth about 2½ million dollars last year and may be worth 3½ million next year, made up as follows:

	1946-7	1947-8
P.I.C.A.O. Budget (approx.)	$ 2,000,000	$ 3,000,000
Less say 10% spent elsewhere	200,000	300,000
	1,800,000	2,700,000
Council Members Offices	375,000	375,000
Delegations to Division Meetings at HQ.	100,000	100,000
	2,275,000	3,175,000
Assembly (when in Canada)	250,000	250,000
	2,525,000	3,425,000

All the above will be derived approximately 1/3 from the sterling area and 2/3 from sources which convert to dollars.

2. I.A.T.A.'s[6] constitution requires it to locate near the Headquarters of I.C.A.O. and 2/3 of their budget of about $635,000 is probably spent in Canada or an additional advantage of $500,000 a year if one includes expenses of delegates to their many meetings.

3. In addition there is a great economy in man power and travelling expense for Canadian personnel meeting in Montreal instead of abroad, and a great convenience in having I.C.A.O. and I.A.T.A. close by for frequent consultation.

4. There is considerable prestige and advertising value to Canada from the publicity in nearly every other important State in the world.

---

[6]Association du transport aérien international.
International Air Transport Association.

5. There is an addition to our national life in having a few hundred families from other parts of the world settle here and contribute to our social and cultural institutions.

B. Action by Canada to Encourage I.C.A.O. to Stay

I think the above came up in connection with your expression of fear that there might be some feeling about the size of Canada's contribution to I.C.A.O. and that you would like to show something on the credit side. There is, however, the aspect in connection with encouraging those concerned in Ottawa to take prompt action on the question of immunities from personal taxation, diplomatic privileges for Council Members and senior officials, exemption from certain taxation of the Organization itself, such as the 15% tax on travel abroad, and to encourage prompt action on the new building to permanently house the Organization.

I think it unlikely that the site could be changed now from Montreal as it would involve an amendment to the Convention but even the remote possibility should be removed if Canada's action on these matters can help to do so. An authoritative statement at the Assembly would be valuable.

I am continuing to do what I can in entertainment and helping all these people to feel at home in Montreal and to help them find friends.

C. Action by Canada to Increase our Chance of Election to the New Council

Another reason for taking action to satisfy the desires of I.C.A.O. is to prevent any jeopardizing of our chances of reelection as one of the twenty-one Council Members and all the above measures plus good handling of our Assembly delegation will help.

I hope these notes are of some assistance in supplementing our conversation.

Yours sincerely,

A.C. McKIM

299. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Note du représentant auprès de l'OACI[7]

Memorandum by Representative to ICAO[7]

[Montreal], June 26, 1947

MULTILATERAL AGREEMENT ON COMMERCIAL AIR RIGHTS

The 1947 ICAO Assembly failed to reach agreement and decided to continue discussions in Rio de Janeiro with a view to completing a multilateral agreement.

---

[7]La note était adressée au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements, au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures (à l'attention de G.P. Kidd [Direction économique]), au secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet, au président de la Commission des transports aériens et au président de Trans-Canada Airlines.

The memorandum was addressed to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs (attention G.P. Kidd [Economic Division]), Assistant Secretary to Cabinet, Chairman of Air Transport Board, President of Trans-Canada Airlines.

This meeting will be held October 20th, 1947, and we should give early attention to the position Canada will then take.

No more original thinking will be done with a view to presenting a basis for discussion at Rio de Janeiro either by ICAO Secretariat or by Council. Unless, therefore, some national delegations make proposals, the discussion will continue on the basis of the previous ICAO draft (which the U.S.A., and the U.K. made it amply clear that they would not accept) and on the minority draft based on the "Bermuda" formula. The discussion furthermore, indicated that the U.S.A. will oppose any multilateral agreement which embraces general conditions covering rates, routes and capacity. Our case has been made, and received some support, that to leave any one of these three commercial rights to bilateral negotiations is to thereby deprive the other two of their effect, but unfortunately this case is not spectacular and leaves us open to the charge from our opponents and from uninformed opinion that we are unwilling to accept any bread unless we can have the whole loaf.

The U.S.A. and the U.K. will no doubt attempt again to sell their form of Bermuda partial multilateral with a vague capacity clause and a requirement for bilateral negotiation of routes. The result would not be in the best interest of States in a position comparable to that of Canada, (and this includes for example, France) as it requires the granting of all 5 Freedoms but leave us still subject to pressures of bilateral negotiation and give us no general right to enter the territory of the U.S.A. I am convinced that if this were clearly seen by the representatives of South American States that they would not support the U.S.A.-U.K. position. But in these days of ample traffic offering and inadequate capacity operated, the problems under the loosely worded Bermuda type agreements have not come to the surface. They say that there are many Bermuda type agreements that are working smoothly but in fact none of them has ever been tested.

We must discover a means of making the true situation known, or we may find ourselves in the small minority of States who will not accept the Bermuda type multilateral and thus appear to be the opponents of multilateralism, while heretofore we have been known as its proponents. There are several courses of action:

(1) Attempt to educate a number of States whose position we feel is similar to our own so that we will not be left in a small minority. This approach would only have the negative result of preventing the completion of an agreement we do not like. Positive success for a better type of agreement must have the support of either U.S.A. or the U.K. or both.

(2) Attempt to persuade the U.S.A. or U.K. or both of the unreasonableness of their position and this is difficult because the agreement appears to suit them and it is hard to budge either one since they seem committed to each other. The U.K.'s interests are closer to ours than the U.S.A. but the U.S.A. seems to call the tune. We might best approach them separately.

(3) Develop a new Canadian proposal to put before the Conference as the basis for discussion. The thought I have on this at the moment is to propose another type of partial multilateralism as it appears impossible to reach agreement on a complete one and thus we would place ourselves among those who are unwilling to attempt some progress even if we cannot achieve all.

My specific proposal is that we should develop a draft 4 Freedoms agreement leaving out all the old Chicago conditions for dividing the home traffic 50-50 since we no longer appear reluctant to see any State operate its home traffic into Canada with unlimited capacity and I believe others will feel the same. We should then work out a set of principles regarding the naming of airports and routes by each State within its territory and on this I would favour compulsory granting of any route that has adequate facilities that could be operated with a reasonable load factor of 3 and 4 Freedom traffic. I would add to this a set of general principles under which the 5th Freedom would be negotiated bilaterally between every pair of States. The usual provisions for rate conferences, for the prevention of unfair practices and the settlements of disputes should be included. We now have 2 freedoms, this would take us to 4. We do not rule out 5 we simply say that its problems are so complicated that no multilateral solution is apparent and we meanwhile propose with regret to leave it to bilateral dealings for separate negotiation between every pair of States.

This suggestion would take some working out. I suggest it for preliminary consideration and propose that those interested should meet within the next month to decide our course of action.

A.C. McKIM

300. C.D.H./Vol. 96

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au représentant auprès de l'OACI

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Representative to ICAO

Ottawa, June 27, 1947

Dear Anson [McKim]:

I have your memo of June 26th regarding the line which we should take in the special conference called by ICAO in Rio this fall to consider further the question of a multilateral agreement.

I believe quite strongly that to give in and accept the minority draft supported by the U.K. and U.S. would be not only a sacrifice of all our efforts on behalf of a real multilateral agreement, but would also injure our position as regards international services and certainly put us in a weak position in the bilateral negotiations which would have to follow.

As for the actual line which we should follow, I am in general agreement with the course you propose, but would like to suggest an additional point which we might add. As a supplement to suggesting that we seek a multilateral agreement covering the first four freedoms we might also make a case strongly that while we could not accept the U.K.-U.S. minority draft as a multilateral agreement we could accept a substantial portion of its provision as the basis for a strengthened and revised standard form of bilateral agreement.

Finally, I am inclined to think that late in August or early in September there would be something to be said for asking our Missions abroad to discuss this matter informally with the appropriate authorities in the countries in which they are located, — particularly the Commonwealth countries, France, the Netherlands, Belgium and possibly one or two others. This would mean that before that time we would have to determine definitely the line which we would like to follow.

I assume I will hear from you further on any arrangements for a meeting of officials to discuss this.

Sincerely yours,
J.R. BALDWIN

301. C.D.H./Vol. 96

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire du Cabinet

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Secretary to the Cabinet

[Ottawa], June 27, 1947

Dear Mr. Heeney:

RE ICAO MEETING AT RIO DE JANEIRO, OCTOBER 20TH, 1947

The 1947 ICAO Assembly failed to reach agreement in the matter of multilateral commercial air rates, and decided to continue discussions in Rio de Janeiro, with a view to completing a multilateral agreement. This meeting will be held October 20th, 1947.

Anson McKim, who has been representing us on ICAO, transfers to T.C.A. as Vice-President of Administration on July 1st, and it would be difficult for him to devote the required time to this conference. His successor has not been appointed, and probably will not be sufficiently familiar with the background of this negotiation to be a satisfactory representative.

Your Mr. John Baldwin has followed this matter from its inception, and would be an ideal man to head the Canadian delegation to Rio. I will greatly appreciate the favour if he can be assigned for this purpose.

Your early advice would be appreciated.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

302. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au représentant auprès de l'OACI

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Representative to ICAO

Ottawa, July 2, 1947

Dear Anson [McKim]:

I have been giving further thought to the general line which Canada might take in connection with the special meeting of ICAO in Rio de Janeiro in October.

Some detailed preparation in the revising and redrafting of documents will be required. Before this, however, I think we should seek agreement at the official level on the line we are to take, submit it to the Minister for approval and then undertake any drafting work necessary.

The general line I have in mind is as follows:

1. Canada would continue to support strongly the thesis that achievement of a satisfactory multilateral agreement should remain the objective of ICAO and that there should be no cessation of ICAO's efforts in this direction. Canada would continue to maintain that a satisfactory multilateral agreement must include both a multilateral granting of traffic rights and reasonable safeguards for all parties in the exercise of these rights. Accordingly, the minority draft presented in Montreal by the U.S., the U.K. and China could not be considered an effective solution and Canada could not be prepared to accept it as such.

2. As an effort at further compromise between the opposing points of view at this stage, and particularly since difficulties over the fifth freedom have been a major stumbling block, Canada would revert to its 1944 position and propose that we seek to achieve a multilateral agreement including only the first four freedoms and leaving the fifth freedom out for the present. We would prepare for use in this connection alternatives to Articles 6, 7, 8 and 10 in the draft agreement.

3. If this proposal is not received with favour, we would take the position that we could not accept the minority draft as a multilateral agreement in the true sense. Canada would, however, have no objection, if ICAO would continue to set a true multilateral agreement as its goal and continued to work towards that goal if, in the interim, an improved procedure and set of rules for bilateral negotiation were agreed upon. We would accordingly propose:

(a) that ICAO be asked to continue its efforts to achieve a multilateral agreement;

(b) that the minority draft be renamed (something like "agreement on principles and procedure in bilateral civil aviation negotiations"), and revised somewhat to make it a satisfactory document for this purpose. We need raise no objection to a document which would place a commitment on all parties to embark upon bilateral negotiations in good faith but in such an event a further redrafting of the difficult articles, i.e. 6, 7, 8 and 10 would be needed. The minority draft of these articles would not be satisfactory. In addition, an improved form of standard bilateral agreement might be appended to the document. (We have such a document virtually ready now.)

I would like to have your comments on the above proposals. If you think they are along the right line, should you arrange to bring them to the attention of the Air Transport Board and TCA, or should I? I think we ought to clear them as quickly as possible with the Minister in order to have some time for redrafting. We might aim at completing any redrafts necessary by the latter part of August, so that at that time we could consider what advance consultation with other countries was desirable.

Sincerely yours,
J.R. BALDWIN

303. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

La Direction économique
au représentant auprès de l'OACI

Economic Division
to Representative to ICAO

Ottawa, July 7, 1947

Dear Mr. McKim:

With regard to your memorandum of June 26 on the multilateral agreement on commercial air rights and the general line that we might adopt at the Rio Conference this Fall, I have a few suggestions to offer.

(1) In the first place, I think that some modification in our position is required, and in this respect your proposal of a draft four freedoms agreement seems a very useful basis on which to commence.

(2) In my opinion any multilateral draft must have United States and United Kingdom support if it is going to succeed, and I believe that there is considerable advantage to be gained by trying to get some agreement on general principles with these two countries, before we get ourselves into a position irrevocably opposed to them. Informal discussions with the United States and the United Kingdom on this four freedoms multilateral draft might be fruitful, and would seem to me a more preferable course to follow than that of lining up a number of small states on our side. While the support of small countries is undoubtedly useful, should the United States and the United Kingdom insist on trying to force the Bermuda formula on the world, I think that we should explore the possibility of finding common ground with the United States and the United Kingdom first.

I feel that we have fought a good fight for multilateralism on certain principles which we considered to be in the best interests of all nations. However, now that our position appears to be unacceptable to a considerable number of nations, which, if not a majority, includes the two largest operating nations of the world, we should be prepared to consider a compromise. This probably means that we will have to move at least a small distance towards the United States — United Kingdom position, and should of course be contingent upon their also making concessions to our view. We have done this sort of thing before internationally, and gained credit rather than lost face by doing it. If we are not prepared to do this, it seems to me we face two alternatives, either having a multilateral agreement put into effect which we find ourselves unable to adhere to, or else having no multilateral agreement at all. With regard to this latter alternative, it would seem worthwhile considering whether, in the event of there being no possibility of moving the United States and the United Kingdom from the position they took at Montreal, it might not be advisable to shelve the idea of a multilateral agreement for some time. This would not prevent ICAO from continuing to study the question.

(3) There is always the possibility of developing a further standard bilateral agreement. While this has the advantage of securing some uniformity in bilateral air agreements, it also has the disadvantage of losing a certain degree of flexibility in negotiations. On balance, we may have more to gain from keeping as much freedom as possible in regard to the form of our air agreements, and I think we should move with caution in this matter.

(4) If there appears to be no chance of concluding a multilateral agreement at Rio, I believe there would be some value in at least salvaging a clear arbitration procedure for disputes arising out of air agreements. The Council of ICAO has some disadvantages as an arbitral body in this regard, and if we could obtain general agreement on the setting up of some efficient mechanism for the handling of these disputes this would certainly be a step forward.

In conclusion, I feel that a meeting of the interested parties should be held on this subject within the next month.

Yours sincerely,
G.P. KIDD

304. DEA/72-ADU-22-40

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Ottawa, July 11, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe:

You will recall that, at the meeting of the First Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) held in Montreal during May of this year, an amendment to the ICAO Convention was passed relating to membership in the Organization. This amendment provided for the exclusion from membership in the Organization of states in the following categories:

(a) any state whose Government (like Franco-Spain) the General Assembly of the United Nations recommended for debarment from membership in the international agencies established by or brought into relationship with the United Nations;

(b) any state expelled from the United Nations, unless the latter attached to its act of expulsion a recommendation to the contrary.

With the concurrence of yourself and Mr. St. Laurent, the Canadian delegation voted for this amendment.

On the instruction of the First Assembly, the Secretary General of ICAO has drawn up a Protocol embodying this amendment which is being sent to all contracting states for their subsequent ratification. Accordingly, Canada, as a contracting state, is now being asked to ratify this Protocol. The original ratification of the ICAO Convention, which Canada deposited, was in the form of a governmental ratification after approval by Parliament. However, in the case of this amendment, it would be possible to ratify it merely by approval of the Governor-in-Council.[8] A submission to Council has been prepared for this purpose, as a copy of which is attached to this letter.† Mr. St. Laurent is prepared to sign this submission, if you concur. I should accordingly be grateful for your views.

Yours sincerely,
L.B. PEARSON

305. DEA/9770-A-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures aux chefs de mission à l'étranger

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Heads of Posts Abroad

CIRCULAR LETTER NO. A61 Ottawa, July 25, 1947

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose a copy of the Department's Report on the meeting of the First Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) held in Montreal from May 6 to May 27, 1947.

2. You will note that the general grading of this document is SECRET. However, Part E "Comments on Delegations" is the only SECRET material in this report, and the remainder of the material may be treated as CONFIDENTIAL.

I have etc.
H.O. MORAN
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

[8]L'approbation a été accordée sous la cote P.C., 23 juillet 1947.
Approved as P.C. 2905, 23 July 1947.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Extrait du rapport de la réunion de la première Assemblée de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale (OACI), Montréal, du 6 au 27 mai 1947

Extract from Report on Meeting of First Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO), Montreal, May 6 to May 27, 1947

[SECRET]

. . .

D. COMMENTS ON THE CONFERENCE

Achievements of the Conference

Judged on the basis of positive achievement, the First Assembly of ICAO was only moderately successful. Concrete results were few. No agreement was reached on the important problem of a multilateral convention on commercial rights in international air transport, or on a number of technical subjects in the field of international air navigation. Nevertheless, this Assembly has to its credit the important fact that it did set up, and lay the foundations for the operation of the permanent organization. ICAO, although theoretically in existence since April 4, 1947, was still largely a paper organization prior to this First Assembly, the actual operative organization being PICAO. The present meeting elected the governing body of the organization, the Council; established the working bodies of the organization, the five permanent Committees; made an initial start to determine the policy under which the organization would function; provided the organization with its sinews, by voting a budget for the next year; and assured for ICAO a firm place among the world's international organizations, by agreeing to make it a specialized agency of the United Nations. A solid framework for the permanent organization in the field of international civil aviation had been laid. This was really the outstanding achievement of the Conference.

The Nature of Future Assembly Meetings

This meeting of the First Assembly should give its members cause for thought on the conducting of future meetings. Admittedly, under the constitution of ICAO (Chicago Convention), an annual meeting to pass the budget and settle outstanding administrative problems is essential. But such annual meetings are costly for the member states of ICAO, and especially so for those states who are small or have to travel long distances. It would seem, therefore, that if large meetings in the order of the First Assembly are to be held annually in the future, it would be wise to consider ways and means of making them more fruitful. The solution may be to hold such large meetings at three or four years intervals only and convene small meetings in the off years, which would be confined to dealing with administrative matters and urgent items. It may be that a number of subjects, especially those of a strictly technical nature, could be more advantageously solved by meetings of the five permanent Committees of ICAO and their sub-committees. The reports of these bodies, after Council approval has been obtained, could be circulated to member states for study and comments. By this procedure, the Assembly would merely have to give its final sanction to decisions, rather than attempt to discuss the problems in detail itself. If any problem raised particular difficulty, a special conference could be convened to deal with it, or it could be referred to the large Assembly meeting every three or four years.

Since, however, the next Assembly of ICAO is not to be restricted in any way, no action can be taken in this regard for another year. However, it does seem to be a question worthy of some thought and study.

Special Problems of the First Assembly

A number of factors mitigated against the success of the First Assembly. In the first place, political issues seemed to play far too prominent a part in an organization whose main purpose is ostensibly to develop the principles and techniques of international air navigation, and to foster the development of international air transport. The issue of Franco-Spain occupied the attention of the Assembly for a whole week, which was one-third of the total duration of the Conference. This naturally retarded the work of the Conference, and, in the case of Commission No. 1, prevented a detailed examination of a number of items on its Agenda. The Franco-Spain question and the question of whether Norway and Belgium should be permitted to vote, together started the Assembly off on a sour note.

Secondly, the administrative handling of the Conference, while generally good, did fall down in certain aspects. The documentation was not received by some states in sufficient time to permit their delegations to come to the Conference thoroughly briefed. Moreover, the Agenda was overcrowded. The combination of these two factors forced Commissions, in some instances, to hurry through their consideration of items, or to recommend further study or postponement of a problem under discussion. The Conference seemed to be trying to cover more subjects than it could adequately deal with. The value of hundreds of representatives coming from all sections of the globe, under these conditions, is questionable. Moreover, the lack of speed in translating some documents considerably slowed down the work of a number of Commissions. While this was perhaps intensified by the demands of the French and Argentinians for receipt of translations of every document before they would agree to proceed with any discussion on a subject, it was still a very real problem.

Another problem, very evident at this meeting, was the tactics employed by the larger countries, like the United States, on certain issues. This was perhaps most noticeable in the case of a resolution passed by Commission No. 3 providing for the future study of the problem of international ownership and operation of major trunk lines. A resolution on this subject was passed by the Commission against strong United States opposition, since that delegation felt that the resolution implied approval of the plan. At the next meeting of the Commission, Bolivia asked for the re-opening of discussion on this resolution, on the grounds that its two-man delegation had been unable to be present at the meeting in which the resolution had been adopted, and accordingly, had been unable to make a statement on this subject. The suggestion that this move was prompted by the United States appeared likely when they seconded and actively championed the Bolivian request, but finally became rather obvious when the Bolivian request was accepted by the Commission, and the Bolivian statement proved to have little or nothing to do with the resolution in question. The result was that the original resolution was slightly modified to meet the United States objections. Although such tactics are to be disparaged, it does seem that, in an organization where every state has one vote regardless of its importance, cases of this nature are prone to occur. It would therefore seem that there is some justification for the adoption of a system of weighted voting, at least on major policy issues. The ridiculousness of a situation where two countries, possessing no air services of their own, can outvote a major international air nation, and compel that nation to adopt certain standards or policies which may be very costly to it and not affect the two small countries at all, is evident. This is a problem which will need some thought if the organization is to be freed from pressure operations of this character in the future.

Value to Canada of Membership in ICAO

In conclusion, it is perhaps worthwhile considering the value to Canada of membership in ICAO. The cost to Canada for the year 1947-48 is about $134,000, which does not seem particularly high in comparison with the cost of membership in other specialized agencies of the United Nations of this nature. Moreover, from a straight dollars and cents point of view, Canada gains distinct financial advantage by having the headquarters of the Organization located in Montreal. Added to this, there is, of course, considerable prestige and advertising value in the presence of ICAO in Canada.

To a country like Canada, with a young and ever expanding position in the field of international civil aviation, it is important to ensure orderly progress and regulation of air navigation and air transport. This can best be done through the medium of an international organization like ICAO. The successful record of PICAO, in this matter, would seem to demonstrate the probable worth of ICAO. Under these conditions the cost of Canadian participation in ICAO seems a good investment.

306. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet au représentant auprès de l'OACI

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet to Representative to ICAO

Ottawa, August 8, 1947

Dear Anson [McKim]:

I enclose for your consideration and comment copy of a note on the multilateral air agreement prepared in preparation for the special ICAO Conference in Brazil this October, and revised in accordance with the meeting held in this office last week. You will note that I have set it up in the form suggested, so that portions omitted from the drafts submitted at the last Assembly have been struck out by a pencil line,[9] while new additions have been underlined.

I would welcome your advice in particular on the procedure which we should now follow. What countries would you suggest we should approach and in what order? Which of those countries could be approached in the first instance through the ICAO representatives in Montreal and which should we approach through Ottawa. You will recall that it was suggested earlier that we should try the Commonwealth countries first and others later. I, myself, have no particular objection to this course so long as we act rapidly enough with the Commonwealth countries to leave us time towards the end of this month to discuss the matter also with France, the Netherlands, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Brazil, Mexico, (and possibly Czechoslovakia). At the same time, neither do I see any particular harm in taking the matter up with non-Commonwealth countries at the same time as we approach Commonwealth countries.

I would also welcome your comments on whether we should give any written document to other countries in the course of this consultation. With the thought in mind that it would be desirable to do this, I have tried to redraft the first part of the attached document in a form which would make it suitable for this use, although further changes may be necessary. I am not sure that we need to use the same form in speaking to every country, however. Primarily I think if we could reach agreement as to the approaches you will make in Montreal and the ones which should be made from Ottawa, then we can get ahead with the job.

I am sending a copy of this letter together with the attached document to all that attended the meeting in this office last week, with a view to obtaining further comments before making final revision.

Mr. Howe, before he left, gave his general blessing to the approach suggested in the first section of the document, i.e. a compromised proposal on the basis of four freedoms. The fuller detail involved in this proposal and the action which we might take if it fails (as covered in Part II), will have to be cleared with him but this can be done promptly after his return on August 18th, and I think we should plan to be in a position by that time to undertake immediately consultation with other countries.

I shall look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely yours,

J.R. BALDWIN

[9]Ces parties du texte sont imprimées en italique.
These portions are printed in italics.

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet

Memorandum by Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet

[Ottawa], August 2, 1947

NOTE ON MULTILATERAL AIR AGREEMENT

The following notes cover proposals for a modified approach to the question of a multilateral aviation agreement. The draft submitted at the last Assembly provided for a multilateral exchange of Five Freedoms; designation by all members of international airports as the only ones available for use by all other members in the exercise of the five freedoms; and provision that while supplementary arrangements might be made between members covering additional rights, these must also be open for adherence by other contracting states.

The revision below is based on the elimination of the fifth freedom and the granting of four freedoms on a multilateral basis; consequential modifications in articles, e.g. on capacity; modification of the article on designation of airports to provide that member states shall designate international airports where all other members may exercise the four freedoms but not that these need be the only international airports designated; and provision for supplementary arrangements so long as these are not exclusive or discriminatory.

There would be an obligation on all states to designate certain international airports where any other member state could exercise third and fourth freedom traffic rights. In addition, where special circumstances existed between two states which required something more than the international airports designated for use by all member states, those two states would be free to make supplementary arrangements, so long as the written agreement between the two did not contain provisions which were exclusive in nature and discriminatory against other member states.

Under the majority draft submitted to the Assembly in May, any state in return for a multilateral fifth freedom agreement, would accept the responsibility of agreeing to designate international airports as the only ones available for international services of member states. Similarly, any state would agree that any additional supplementary arrangements made could not be held to a bilateral basis but would be open to any other contracting state. The dropping of the fifth freedom makes it possible to modify this whole picture to allow more scope for the individual needs of different states. The objective of the draft articles below has been to provide that there would be an obligation on each state to name a basic minimum of international airports, (i.e. a reasonable number) open to the international services of all member states for third and fourth freedom operations, but at the same time make it clear that any state may go beyond this in the setting up additional routes by bilateral agreement with other states and including additional airports so long as these supplementary arrangements were not discriminatory against other states or on a specifically exclusive basis. Should this prove an acceptable approach it would be desirable to consider whether satisfactory principles could also be included which each state would be guided by in deciding what constitutes within its own boundaries "a reasonable number of airports."

As a result of these changes some of the more difficult clauses, such as a capacity formula become a much simpler matter since these were directly connected with the fifth freedom. Under the circumstances in some instances, it may not matter a great deal whether we follow the phraseology of the majority or the minority draft. Alternatives are given in such cases.

Below are given suggested rewordings of certain articles:

Article 3 —

No arrangement between Contracting States shall be deemed inconsistent with this Agreement by reason of the fact that it confers upon the parties thereto a greater degree of freedom to operate international air services than is conferred by this Agreement, if such arrangement is open for adherence by such other Contracting States as may desire to be added as parties thereto, so long as such arrangement does not grant exclusive rights to any other state or airline or exclude or discriminate against the airlines of any other state.

Article 6 —

Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, each Contracting State shall have the right that its duly authorized airlines shall be entitled to fly their aircraft across the territory of any other Contracting State without landing and to make, in such territory, stops for non-traffic purposes and for the purpose of putting down and taking on passengers, mail and cargo, originating in or destined to its own territory.

Article 7(a) —

Each Contracting State shall, from time to time, designate a reasonable number of its airports as the only ones available, under normal operating conditions, for commercial use by the airlines of all other Contracting States in international air services conducted pursuant to this Agreement. Such airports shall be so located as to serve, as conveniently as is practicable, the traffic moving between the State in which they are situated and other Contracting States. They shall be chosen from among those airports with characteristics meeting the requirements of the aircraft likely to make use of them in international air services, but no Contracting State is required by this article specially to build or equip any airport. So far as their physical accommodation and traffic capacity permit, and subject to compliance with Chapter III, all airports so designated shall be open for commercial use by all international air services.

In determining the number of airports it shall designate under this article each state shall take into consideration the following factors:

(1) geographical size;

(2) areas to which flow of traffic is directed; and

(3) the number of other countries from which traffic is moving to its territory; and

(4) volume of traffic.

(b) — In designating routes to be followed and airports to be used, pursuant to this Agreement and to Article 68 of the Convention, the following principles shall be observed:

(i) Each route shall constitute as nearly a direct course out from and back to the territory of the State whose nationality the aircraft possesses as may be consistent with the requirements of the traffic originating and terminating in such state;

(ii) There shall be a fair and equal opportunity for the carriers of the respective states to operate air services on the agreed routes between their respective territories;

(iii) No Contracting State shall decline an exchange of routes with any other Contracting State on any grounds other than an insufficiency of traffic to justify the proposed operations, or otherwise discriminate unfairly against any such state;

(iv) No Contracting State shall unfairly deny to any airline of another Contracting State the use for non-traffic purposes of airports open to use by its own international airlines, or require any airline of another Contracting State to follow, within its territory, an unnecessarily circuitous route.

Article 8(a) —

Any Contracting State desiring to exercise the rights conferred by Article 6 of this Agreement shall give four months' prior notice to each other Contracting State in whose territory it intends its international air service to land and one months' prior notice to each other Contracting State over whose territory it intends its air service to operate without landing, specifying the airline authorized to operate the service and the nature and extent of the route over which it is intended to operate.

(i) the airline authorized to operate the air service;

(ii) the entire extent of the routes over which it is intended to operate and;

(iii) all airports on such routes at which it is intended to make landings and the purpose for which the landings are to be made.

If the government of any state receiving such notice considers that the operation of the proposed air service is inconsistent with this Agreement or with the Convention, it shall, as soon as practicable, so advise the state which gave the notice. Should disagreement between the two States result, it shall be dealt with as provided in Article 17.

(a) — Any change in an international air service shall be deemed to constitute a new service and to require notice accordingly if it involves either:

(i) landing for traffic purposes at an additional point or points, or;

(ii) operation of the service by another airline.

(b) — Similar notice shall be given by any Contracting state proposing to change the airline designated for the operation of a route or to cease operation of a service.

(c) — Each Contracting State shall require its airlines to keep the interested aeronautical authorities of other states advised as to the frequency of its operations, the time-table to be followed, the types of aircraft to be used, and other relevant operating data.

(d) — The giving of the notices and other information called for by the foregoing provisions of this Article is the only formality which may be required of any Contracting State as a condition precedent to the exercise of the rights conferred by this Agreement.

Article 10(a) —

The amount of capacity which a Contracting state shall be entitled to permit any of its airlines to provide from time to time over various stages of each route shall be that required for the carriage, at a reasonable load factor of both:

(i) passengers, mail and cargo taken on or to be put down by such airline in the territory of such state; and

(ii) passengers, mail and cargo moving carried by such airline between points in the territory of other states which the route touches, insofar as capacity for such traffic is not being provided by airlines of the States in which such traffic is taken on or put down, in accordance with supplementary arrangements made in accordance with the provisions of Article 3 of this Agreement.

(b) — For the purpose of determining where any passenger has been taken on and where such passenger is to be put down, within the meaning of Paragraph (a) of this Article and of Article 7 of the Convention, stop-over or other break in the transportation will be disregarded if, according to the contract made between the passenger and the airline, there is to be but a single transportation.

— — — — — — —

It is also possible that the United States may suggest modification of the article on arbitration procedure and addition of material on facilities. Rather than attempt to include this in our draft at present it would seem desirable to leave these matters for the United States to raise at the Conference.

PART II

If efforts on behalf of a modified multilateral agreement covering the first four freedoms are not successful and if there is any substantial support for the approach indicated in the U.S.-U.K. minority draft, we will have to decide whether we can accept anything along the lines of this minority draft. In the absence of a truly multilateral agreement covering traffic rights is there advantage to be achieved through an agreement under which states commit themselves to exchanging traffic rights with other member states, this exchange to take place through bilateral negotiations.

If the multilateral agreement we want can not be achieved, there would probably be some advantage in this special type of agreement as an interim step, so long as it does not interfere with continued efforts to get a satisfactory multilateral agreement. The Canadian position could be that should this situation emerge that we would accept something along the lines of the minority draft, subject to the following conditions:

(1) It should not carry a title which would imply that it is the multilateral agreement which ICAO has for so long been trying to achieve; instead it should be called something such as "Convention (Agreement?) on Bilateral Civil Aviation Negotiations."

(2) The special assembly meeting of ICAO in Brazil should ask the Council and the Air Transport Committee to continue their efforts to achieve a multilateral agreement and for this purpose to arrange for adequate consideration and study of proposals which any member state may bring forward in this connection.

(3) Certain changes should be made in the minority draft to make it more precise and less open to cause difficulties of interpretation.

Unless we get reasonable satisfactory [sic] on these points Canada should not accept anything along the lines of the minority draft.

The changes necessary in the minority draft as it stands now are generally as follows:

1. Articles 6 and 7 may give rise to contradictory interpretations by different states. Article 6 states that each state is to have traffic rights in the territory of other member states and Article 7 says that these traffic rights are to be worked out through bilateral negotiations.

This could give rise to a great deal of difficulty. Which is the overriding article? What would the position be if a state, in bilateral negotiations, refused to grant any traffic rights whatsoever to another state on the grounds that the provisions of Article 7(b)(iii) gave it the right to refuse them?

Alternatively, in such an event, what would be the position if a state, having gained certain traffic rights from another state but having been refused others, claimed that this latter refusal was contrary to the principles of Article 6? Does not Article 6 force each state to give other members full fifth freedom rights.

To avoid this difficulty Article 6 might be reduced to a commitment on each state to enter in good faith into bilateral negotiations for the exchange of traffic rights with any other member state. Alternatively, if this was not enough, Articles 6 and 7 should be clarified so that there would be no misunderstanding as to whether Article 6 was overriding and whether any state has the right to refuse to grant traffic rights to another state. Moreover, it should then be limited to the four freedoms because the Canadian government could not accept any overriding article which compelled it to grant fifth freedom rights to another state even though leaving it to Canadian discretion through bilateral negotiations to indicate routes and airports for use of such rights. We could, however, take no objection to a commitment to grant third and fourth freedom rights to any other member state since that is in accord with our general policy at present.

2. Further, Article 7(b)(iii) could lead to difficulties. Who is to be the judge with regard to insufficiency of traffic? Is every state to be left free to make up its own mind on this point in regard to any service crossing its territory operated by another state. It is true that under grievance procedure a state might be compelled to demonstrate its reasons that an insufficiency of traffic exists but unless there is a clearer definition of what is meant by insufficiency of traffic this provision should be eliminated completely or, if retained, power to decide on insufficiency of traffic should be taken out of the hands of individual states and given to some international body, e.g. ICAO itself. In particular if it is retained, some modification of phraseology should be achieved to make it clear that insufficiency of traffic does not mean that a state has the right to protect its own airlines under all circumstances against the development of the air service of another country which has a right to share in the traffic involved; e.g. on a route between two countries where one country is operating a service already it should not be able to prevent the other country from operating as well under the insufficiency of traffic argument on grounds that the new service would seriously injure the position of the existing service.

3. Article 10 of the minority draft also offers all the difficulties we have already experienced in the matter of the interpretation of the "Bermuda formula". The phrase "reasonable anticipated requirements" in (a) is a rather loose one and would leave an extremely wide discretion. Moreover, as (a) is worded, it would leave each state free to put on enough capacity to take care of all the traffic moving between that state and another member state regardless of whether the other state was operating a service as well, or not. The addition of the phrase "by such airline" at the end of (a) would take care of this.

4. The opening clause of (b) in relation to (b)(i) merely repeats what has already been said in (a).

(b) (ii) and (iii) are contradictory since the requirements of through airlines for fill-up traffic and the traffic requirements of the area, taking account of other transport services, may be directly at variance. There is, however, no need to go into a long discourse on the vagueness of the Bermuda formula. It needs to be made more concise along the lines of Article 10 of the majority draft in order to avoid a situation where any state could take any meaning out of the draft that it wished.

(c) of Article 10 in the minority draft would appear unexceptionable.

— — — — — — —

In addition, a revised form of agreement for bilateral negotiation should be prepared and ready to make available at the Brazil Conference. The old Chicago standard form is out of date since the coming into force of the Convention. External Affairs is at present preparing such a form based upon the draft for our air agreement with Ireland.

J.R. BALDWIN

307. PCO/Vol. 55 (A-15-1)

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministère de l'Aviation civile du Royaume-Uni

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Ministry of Civil Aviation of United Kingdom

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, August 23, 1947

My dear Cribbett:[10]

It is some little time since I have had occasion to seek your advice and assistance, — probably because my own connection with international civil aviation policy, while constant in one sense, seems to fluctuate in degree according to the pressures of the moment. I have, however, been giving some thought to the ICAO meeting in Brazil in October and have been discussing matters of policy involved with Anson McKim and with officials here.

Nothing is to be gained by going over the familiar ground of the arguments pro and con on the subject of a multilateral agreement and on the "majority" and "minority" drafts submitted at the Assembly meeting in Montreal. The advantages of a multilateral agreement including a full exchange of traffic rights and the difficulties in getting such an agreement at this time have been fully adumbrated. Repetitious argument on the vagueness or otherwise of various formulae would merely act as an impediment to satisfactory progress.

At the same time we here remain committed to the principle of a full multilateral agreement including traffic rights and we are anxious to avoid any developments which would seriously delay achievement of such an agreement. Our fear that something along the lines of the "minority" draft might lead to a situation where progress towards a multilateral agreement covering traffic rights would virtually cease is quite sincere.

On the other hand, I think it is pretty apparent now that a multilateral agreement along the lines of the "majority" draft considered by the Assembly is not likely within the near future. We certainly have no desire to take the line that if we cannot at present get the whole loaf we should do nothing; that attitude would be of little assistance to the development of aviation.

We have been looking into the matter pretty carefully and have been considering the advisability of putting forward proposals similar to those which you originally had in mind when you went to Chicago, namely, a multilateral four freedoms agreement (although with much less detail in regard to such matters as capacity, etc., than was ever contemplated there).

The advantage of this approach at the present time would be substantial. I have been going over the debates of Commission 3 and it is quite obvious that almost all [10]W.G. Cribbett, secrétaire suppléant, ministère de l'Aviation civile du Royaume-Uni; délégué principal à la Conférence de l'OACI sur l'Accord multilatéral.

W.G. Cribbett, Deputy Secretary, Ministry of Civil Aviation of United Kingdom; Chief Delegate to ICAO Conference on Multilateral Agreement.

the difficulties which were encountered arose out of fill-up provisions and the difficulties that would arise through the requirement to designate international airports as the only ones available for international services of member states. Virtually all these difficulties would be eliminated in a four freedom agreement where the fifth freedom remained for bilateral negotiation. As far as we can see, no fear exists over the third and fourth freedoms and most countries would be willing to enter into third and fourth freedom agreements to an extent where it should be possible to have them agreed on a multilateral basis.

A four freedom agreement could also provide that there would be an obligation on each state to name a reasonable number of international airports which would be open to the international services of all member states for third and fourth freedom operations. Criteria could be included which each state would use in deciding on number and location of these airports; these criteria could cover geographical size, volume of traffic demand, location of large population centres and the number of other countries from which traffic is moving to the country in question.

In addition, it should be provided in the agreement that any state might go further in setting up additional routes and including additional airports in bilateral agreements. It would follow that all fifth freedom arrangements would be handled by bilateral negotiations which could also, if desired, include third and fourth freedom arrangements over routes and to airports not covered by the multilateral agreement. It would also be provided that any supplementary bilateral arrangements should not be discriminatory against other states or on a specifically exclusive basis.

Principles to govern capacity would then become much simpler since most of the trouble in the past has related to fill-up traffic. Similarly, the provision for notification to other states could be greatly simplified since third and fourth freedom operations would involve much less detail.

We have made a start in trying to draft some articles (3, 6, 7, 8 and 10) which would accept the common ground in the "majority" and "minority" drafts and yet satisfy this new approach; if you think there is anything to be said for this approach we would gladly seek an opportunity to discuss them with you prior to the conference in Brazil.

At the same time, being quite aware that this new approach might not be satisfactory, we have been giving very careful and sympathetic consideration to the approach indicated in the "minority" draft but we find ourselves up against a very serious difficulty. Quite apart from the danger of stopping progress towards a broader type of multilateral agreement which I mentioned above, I think very substantial changes would have to be made before the Canadian government would even consider it. Without going into detail, these relate to principles to govern capacity, the criterion of "insufficiency of traffic" which has on at least one occasion already worked out very unsatisfactorily in bilateral discussions in which we have taken part and other minor matters. Even more serious, we could not, I fear, accept the commitment contained in Article 6 of the "minority" draft to exchange full traffic rights including the fifth freedom with any other country which entered into bilateral negotiations with us. Our position in bilateral negotiations would be too seriously restricted. Only in a multilateral agreement covering traffic rights would we be likely to go this far. It is because of this situation that the return to your earlier idea of a four freedoms agreement might be a useful step at this time.

These are preliminary thoughts on a difficult matter. I believed it would be useful to drop you a personal note at this stage before attempting to develop them further. We have not as yet taken them up with any other country, even on an informal basis, although I had in mind writing a letter to Johnson of Australia and McKim is contemplating discussions with some of the Council representatives in Montreal. As a first step I am anxious to obtain your reactions. Is there any possibility that you or whoever goes to Brazil from the United Kingdom could spend a couple of days in North America en route for a preliminary discussion.

I shall look forward to hearing from you at your early opportunity.

Sincerely yours,
J.R. BALDWIN

308. PCO/Vol. 55 (A-15-1)

Note du ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements pour le Cabinet[11]

Memorandum from Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Cabinet[11]

SECRET [Ottawa], September 6, 1947

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL AVIATION; CONFERENCE ON MULTILATERAL AGREEMENT

A special conference of the International Civil Aviation Organization will be held in Brazil starting October 20th[12] to consider a multilateral agreement on civil aviation rights.

The Canadian government has over the last four years actively participated in the efforts to achieve an agreement of this sort. Significant features would include a multilateral exchange of rights to pick up and set down traffic and a set of principles to govern the operation of international air services which would provide a reasonable opportunity for the services of all nations on a non-discriminatory basis and would avoid the difficulties of rate-cutting, unfair subsidization and discriminatory treatment. These issues were debated at the Chicago Aviation Conference in 1944 and again at the meetings of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal. At the last assembly a draft agreement was put forward by a majority of the committee working on this subject. At the same time a minority report was put forward, sponsored primarily by the United States and United Kingdom, which rejected the idea of a multilateral agreement along the lines described and sug-

[11]Approuvé par le Cabinet le 11 octobre.
Approved by Cabinet on October 11.

[12]Par la suite la Conférence a été déplacée à Genève et commença le 3 novembre.
The conference was subsequently moved to Geneva and began on November 3.

gested instead an agreement in which each nation would commit itself to exchange full traffic rights with all other member nations, leaving the details of routes, terminals, and services, for bilateral negotiations in accordance with agreed principles.

The most effective type of multilateral agreement is one in which bilateral negotiations become unnecessary through a multilateral exchange of traffic rights under agreed principles for operation of services. The proposals of the minority draft, which place a commitment on each nation to grant traffic rights in bilateral negotiations, are dangerous because in a world of bilateral negotiations they would tie the hands of member states in advance. All the advantages would be on the side of powerful nations with well-developed, extensive and wealthy air services. Moreover, the principles contained in the minority draft were exceedingly vague and subject to almost any interpretation which any member state wished to place upon them.

However, the majority draft submitted at the last Assembly of ICAO in Montreal is not acceptable to the United States and United Kingdom. Most of the difficulties in connection with it arise over the position of so-called "fifth freedom rights", that is, fill-up traffic moving between intermediate points on a route as distinct from traffic moving to and from the country of origin of the service. Fifth freedom rights unprotected by any operating rules would put the extensive air services of major states in a position where they could seriously injure the local services of smaller states.

It is proposed that the Canadian delegation to the conference in Brazil be instructed that Canada should continue to support the idea of a multilateral agreement covering an exchange of traffic rights within an agreed framework of principles. The Canadian delegation as a compromise proposal could suggest that the multilateral agreement should provide for a multilateral exchange of rights limited to carriage of traffic to and from the country of origin of a service (3rd and 4th freedoms only). Fifth freedom fill-up traffic rights would then be left to bilateral negotiations. This approach would simplify the preparation of a multilateral agreement and make much easier the establishment of agreed principles for the operation of services under it.

The United States may find it impossible to accept a multilateral agreement which provides for any multilateral granting of traffic rights and the compromise approach may not prove successful. If the discussion reverts to the minority draft, the Canadian delegation might agree to accept a document containing principles to guide member states in their conduct of bilateral aviation negotiations and might agree that this document contain a commitment that each nation would grant to other member nations third and fourth freedom traffic rights. This is already accepted Canadian government policy in all our bilateral treaties.

However, the Canadian delegation should refuse to accept any commitment to grant fifth freedom or fill-up traffic rights in such a document. Adequate operation of our air services requires that if aviation is to be handled through bilateral deals Canada must keep a free hand in regard to fifth freedom rights, granting these rights to other countries only where Canada wishes to exercise them in return. Otherwise Canada, as an intermediary country on the main routes from the United States to Europe and Asia lose a great proportion of the traffic originating in Canada to foreign airlines, without getting anything in return since Canadian airlines would not be operating to or across the majority of the countries whose lines cross Canada.

C.D. HOWE

309. C.D.H./Vol. 95

Le représentant auprès de l'OACI
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Representative to ICAO
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Montreal, October 14, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe:

Below are a few headings which might be useful in connection with Mr. Garrison Norton's[13] call on you at 10 A.M., Thursday, October 16th:

1. At Chicago in 1944 even the exchange of Four Freedoms was the subject of controversy ranging around complicated formula governing capacity. Fifth Freedom was even more controversial with disputes about "the homeland" and "the most reasonably direct route" to limit the use of colonies and manoeuvring to gobble up the most lucrative traffic by the powerful operators.

2. The first year's discussions in P.I.C.A.O. would have allowed a large measure of Third and Fourth Freedom but proposed restricting Fifth Freedom by permitting the imposition of rate differentials. This, I think, is the best suggestion yet made but it will never be accepted, though Symington himself said that had it been thought of at Chicago, it would have been agreed.

3. The U.S. and U.K., just prior to the first P.I.C.A.O. Assembly, had met at Bermuda and evolved an agreement which has formed the pattern of many other bilaterals, but

(a) The principles are intentionally vague.

(b) The routes are exchanged in a hard-driven bargain.

(c) Cancellation can be effected with one year's notice.

4. At the first I.C.A.O. Assembly we proposed virtually complete freedom from any formula, provided capacity was established by a genuine Third and Fourth Freedom traffic demand or the demand in backward countries for other people's assistance, plus Fifth Freedom as an incidental pick-up, but only incidental.

5. The U.S. and the U.K. resisted this as too restrictive of Fifth Freedom and claimed that Third and Fourth Freedoms should only be exchanged with routes arrived at bilaterally, nor would they give any assurance as to the type of international authority for appeals. Our contention is that the exchange of routes on a bilateral basis can make completely ineffective all the other provisions said to be exchanged multilaterally, for how can anyone operate without a route and how can he be assured of satisfactory routes if he has to bargain for them? Also, how can we be sure the purely through routes will not abuse the privilege of Fifth Freedom if it is governed by such vague principles and if there is no power in the international body to settle disputes? It is futile to say that a complete set of Bermuda bilaterals are in effect a complete multilateral. It has this important difference:

[13]Département d'État des États-Unis.
Department of State of United States.

(a) Principles can be vague with a single partner whose reactions one can predict but one cannot foresee how any one of some 40 adherents might behave.

(b) The routes being the result of individual bargains might be favorable to some and restrictive to others.

(c) Cancellation on a year's notice would be unsatisfactory since to break with one misbehaving partner would mean breaking with all 40.

I was accused by Landis and Cribbett[14] of being unwilling to agree to a partial multilateral merely because we could not include a general right to routes. Therefore we propose now to suggest another type of partial multilateral, which is a complete right to Four Freedoms over any route to which there is a reasonable presumption that traffic will flow and that only failure to attract the traffic would be grounds for refusing the continuation of a Third and Fourth Freedom route. We would agree to exchange Fifth Freedom on any basis which could be multilaterally worked out, provided:

(1.) The principles were clearly stated, which Bermuda is not.

(2.) That an international body is given power to apply them.

6. The United States would object to this because they want freedom to hop around all the capitals of the world and to preserve the interior of their large territory and in this they will find support from China and India. The United Kingdom will also agree with them, but I was never able to understand why, unless it is that other pressures are brought to bear on them. The actual test, and I think it would be a fair question to ask Mr. Norton, is if we give them their kind of multilateral agreement, how can we be sure that we will have the right to operate routes where the traffic obviously can be attracted? How can anyone be sure that we will not continue to be in bilateral negotiations for routes as we are now, with the same pressures exerted on us?

Yours sincerely,
A.C. McKim

[14]J.M. Landis, président du Civil Aeronautics Board des États-Unis. Pour Cribbett, voir document 307, note 10.
J.M. Landis, Chairman, Civil Aeronautics Board of United States. For Cribbett, see Document 307*n*.10.

310. C.D.H./Vol. 95

Note du ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements pour le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet

Memorandum from Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet

[Ottawa], October 18, 1947

Thanks for your memorandum of October 4th.† We have since been able to discuss the whole situation with Mr. G. Norton.

I think your principal task at Geneva will be to make any multilateral agreement that may be reached as definite as possible. We live alongside the United States and should not lose sight of the fact that we must obtain concessions from the U.S. in the way of Fifth Freedom traffic equally as valuable as those that we may concede to the United States.

I doubt if this will be a long drawn out discussion. Delegates will go there either to agree or to disagree, and the first week should pretty well indicate the position.

Please keep us advised of the progress of the discussions.

311. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

CONFIDENTIAL Geneva, November 5, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe,

The sessions of the conference continued today with a general discussion of the question of authorization of routes, i.e. whether any multilateral traffic rights were to be in the agreement or whether everything was to be left to bilateral negotiations. We opened with a statement based on the Canadian proposals, to which both the United States and United Kingdom replied expressing their preference for bilateral negotiation of all routes. After a brief reply on our part to some of the points made by the United States and the United Kingdom the morning discussion adjourned. It was continued this afternoon and will go on tomorrow morning. Ireland, Portugal and New Zealand supported our proposals wholeheartedly while France and Czechoslovakia offered some lukewarm sympathy but no forceful assistance. The Netherlands and Sweden came out in favour of unrestricted multilateralism with a second preference for bilateral negotiations if they could get the fifth freedom in that way. Mexico and China supported the United States. The measure of support which we have received so far has been quite encouraging.

We understand, however, that both the United States and the United Kingdom will flatly refuse to accept any multilateral agreement which would automatically commit them to any exchange of routes or traffic rights in advance. This, of course, means that they cannot accept the Canadian proposals even in modified form. Actually, as a result of further discussions with both the United Kingdom and United States privately, we have obtained a pretty clear idea of the proposals which they are going to support. Briefly summarized, they are as follows: In the first instance there would be no commitment on any state to enter into a bilateral agreement with any other state. (This relates to the secret message which I sent you by telegram† earlier in the week.) In the event, however, that two nations do enter into a bilateral agreement such agreement must include all five freedoms. They would provide also a number of general principles in this connection, none of them particularly new but two of which might be of some importance to us. The first of these states the principle of the direct route. The second states that on agreed routes in any bilateral agreement both parties shall have a fair and equal opportunity to operate, e.g. reciprocity. For the rest, their proposals are not substantially changed from the type of multilateral that has been discussed before. The Bermuda formula would be included to govern capacity in relation to fifth freedom, although the United Kingdom would be willing to tighten the formula up considerably by making third and fourth freedom traffic the basic consideration instead of allowing equal scope to the three factors (1) third and fourth freedom traffic, (2) requirements of local areas, and (3) requirements of through airline operations. This tightening up would be an improvement but, even so, is pretty wide open.

Finally, grievances would be dealt with by binding arbitration in the United Kingdom proposal, i.e. states would have to accept decisions given. This, the United Kingdom firmly believes the United States will concede and, if so, it, too, represents a substantial step forward.

These proposals have the apparent difficulty, that if we enter into any agreements bilaterally we would have to admit the fifth freedom. On the other hand, on careful examination, the proposals themselves are so full of gaps that it would seem easy to drive a coach and four through them and get around this fifth freedom difficulty if we want to.

In effect, the methods by which we could avoid granting fifth freedom rights to any other country would seem to be as follows: First and foremost a complete refusal to enter into any bilateral agreement. This we might have to rely on in some cases where we ourselves did not wish to operate to the country asking us for an agreement. In other words, if Czechoslovakia asked us for a trans-Atlantic route through to Chicago, rather than give it to them we could completely refuse to enter into any agreement whatsoever, whereas in the past we would at least have given them fourth freedom rights.

2. As far as I can see at present there is no provision which would make it impossible for two parties to a bilateral agreement, in negotiating that agreement, to have a supplementary exchange of notes in which they would agree not to exercise fifth freedom rights. This is a point which will require some clarification in discussion but it does offer a very large loophole. In the case of Sweden, for example, since we have already signed an agreement we would either have to give fifth freedom at Moncton or cancel the agreement and negotiate a new one in which we both agreed to limit it to four freedoms.

3. The provision that all routes must be reasonably direct offers a local protection for us in one respect. We could refuse Montreal as the stopping place on the North Atlantic on any route going down to New England since New York-Montreal-North Atlantic is obviously not a direct route. Montreal-Chicago, on the other hand, would be the one direct North Atlantic route that would hit us.

4. No provision is made for principles to govern the granting of routes in bilateral negotiations, i.e. any state is left complete freedom to designate any route it wishes. This is an additional loophole by which we could protect our own interests. It offers the difficulty, however, that if we see any other party to a bilateral negotiation take an unreasonable stand in this matter the whole negotiation would undoubtedly fail and, in effect, we would have to fall back on the first sanction, i.e. no bilateral agreement at all.

5. The partial tightening up of the Bermuda formula to place basic emphasis on third and fourth freedom traffic, with fifth freedom limited accordingly, is a limited improvement. The United Kingdom in their discussions with us placed great stress on this, emphasizing that it should be the duty of states to carry things to an arbitrarial tribunal in any case where an airline was making excessive use of fifth freedom traffic — in fact they suggested that it would be advantageous to have a number of such references to establish the practice of using it as an international court of judgment.

6. Were arbitration binding, in case of difficulty where we felt our interpretation of the principles of an agreement was correct and that we were being unfairly treated it would help our position since we would have some sanction behind us.

On the other hand, the difficulties in this whole approach are substantial. From the general point of view the lack of principles to govern selection of routes and designation of airports, the complete freedom left to any nation to refuse to enter into a route agreement, the fact that there is no provision for arbitration or other adjustment at the negotiation state (arbitration would only apply if an agreement actually existed), all make this a pretty ineffectual multilateral agreement, even if it does have the somewhat dubious advantage of an improved Bermuda formula to govern fifth freedom capacity and provisions for compulsory and binding arbitration. On top of that there is an apparent inflexibility in that all five freedoms have to be granted although, as I have pointed out, I think it would be very easy for us to get around that difficulty if we wished since the agreement is full of loopholes.

In most other cases we could either refuse a route agreement without any harm to ourselves since we would not be seeking any traffic rights in other countries, (e.g. Norway or Denmark) or, alternatively, we might use one of the other loopholes that I have referred to to avoid a fifth freedom exchange by separate mutual agreement between ourselves. In cases where we actually wanted traffic rights in foreign countries we should not suffer much either since in most of the cases that McKim and I can think of we would want fifth freedom rights and would presumably have to give them in exchange in any case, e.g. Brazil and Cuba.

In the case of the United States and United Kingdom, however, we would undoubtedly have to grant fifth freedom rights and that would mean that we would have to accept competition from both the United States and United Kingdom on the Chicago-Montreal-London route and, equally, from the United States at Edmonton on a route to the Pacific. In point of fact, however, I am not myself sure that our loss in this connection would be any greater than our gain if we were able to get adequate traffic rights out of the United States. It might also be an added inducement for us to extend our North-Atlantic service on through the United Kingdom to Europe if immigration traffic potentialities continue, since we would get fifth freedom rights in the United Kingdom.

To sum up, we consider these proposals to be too inflexible on the surface in their lack of distinction between third, fourth and fifth freedom rights. In other respects we consider them so full of loopholes that we think we can easily get around any difficulty created in this connection. On the other hand, the agreement offers very limited advantages and retains an extremely high degree of complete national control in relation to bilateral negotiations. In those circumstances even if we achieve a binding arbitration clause it is difficult to know how effective this would be.

It is rather difficult at this stage to foresee how the discussion will develop. It may be that an extremely wide divergence of opinion will result in a situation where agreement by any substantial number of countries on this basis appears unlikely. On the other hand, subject to such modifications as might result from the discussion (and almost any modification made at this state would, I think, be an improvement from our point of view), the United States and the United Kingdom may put a document along these lines up for signature at the end of the discussion, and may gain a reasonable number of signatures. We would have to consider our own position very carefully in that connection and, in part, be guided, I imagine, by the extent to which nations such as The Netherlands, Belgium, Sweden and France, as well as Australia and New Zealand, felt that they could sign (incidentally Australia has not yet arrived but we have had word that had they been here they would have supported our proposals). Should such a situation develop there is every likelihood that the United States and United Kingdom would exert great pressure upon Canada to sign this document and that in the case of the United States we would really have the threat, or the bait (whichever you want to consider it) of a new bilateral held out to us in order to get us to sign. The United States would, in effect, say "if you want us to give you what you asked for last January you had better sign this multilateral." That would be an exceedingly difficult situation and my only reaction so far has been to feel that in such an event I would want pretty specific assurances from the United States for the simple reason that the multilateral which they are proposing would not offer us, in itself, any complete assurance of success in subsequent bilateral negotiations with the United States. It would help us in part, however — for example, they would have to allow us to operate on all agreed routes, e.g. Montreal-New York.

I apologize if this letter has been discursive but the problem is a difficult one and it may be that we shall have to ask you by telegram for instructions on fairly short notice at a later date. That being the case I thought it best to lay this whole problem before you and Mr. St. Laurent so that you will be aware of the background and can meanwhile send any provisional advice or direction that you consider appropriate. For the moment we will pursue a "wait and see" attitude, doing our best to get a clarification of the vague points that remain. If you propose sending any provisional reply I would be glad if it could be sent by wire (code through External Affairs).

Yours sincerely,
J.R. BALDWIN

312. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Geneva, November 10, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe,

I believe my last letter brought you up to date to Thursday evening, November 6th. On Friday morning the discussion on fundamental issues of traffic rights and authorization of routes continued and we received additional support for our proposals from Egypt and Belgium — with partial support from Czechoslovakia. The Australian delegation has now arrived and also intends to give us considerable support.

In the course of the discussion both the United States and United Kingdom were compelled to make flat statements that they could not accept any automatic commitment in regard to authorization of routes and that this meant that not only could they not accept any multilateral exchange of traffic rights with automatic establishment of routes thereunder, but that they could not accept as an alternative any commitment to enter into bilateral agreement with any other state. They also made it clear in this connection that in addition in bilateral negotiations they would insist on retaining virtually complete discretion in regard to designation of routes and traffic points. This resulted in the Scandinavian group and The Netherlands coming out, not in support of our proposals, but against the United Kingdom-United States attitude, since they had, up to that point, assumed that there would be an automatic commitment on the part of each state to enter into bilateral agreements with all other contracting states. This matter was left in abeyance since it was impossible at that point to reach agreement, and we passed on to the capacity clauses. Since I have dealt with these in the telegram which has gone forward to you today† I will not elaborate on the developments in this connection other than to say that Canada and France between them have really achieved a great improvement in these clauses and obtained substantial concessions.

The fact that the United States has provisionally agreed also to compulsory and binding arbitration informally would probably mean that we will be able to deal with this matter fairly rapidly when it comes up in plenary session. They still insist, however, (with United Kingdom support) that arbitration shall not apply to the question of granting of a bilateral agreement or the authorization of routes thereunder. In effect, their position is logical in that if there is no commitment to enter into a bilateral agreement there is really no way in which arbitration could apply at that stage.

We expect, however, that when we return to this issue around the middle of the week the debate will be quite bitter. Personally, I have no great optimism that we can obtain any real change in the United Kingdom-United States attitude on this point although we intend to make a very strong effort in the hope that if a substantial number of other states agree with us it may be possible to get some modification.

We have been considering to what extent it would be useful to have principles inserted to govern bilateral negotiations generally, our main difficulty being that if there is no commitment to enter into a route agreement the value of any principles governing such negotiations becomes somewhat nebulous. In particular, my own personal fear at this point is that if we should make too strong a case for such principles and should then fail to get over the fundamental difficulty regarding a commitment to enter into bilateral agreements with other states, we might find that we had prejudiced the one point which I consider fundamental under any system of complete bilateral negotiations (such as the United Kingdom and United States are proposing), namely, complete control of our own fifth freedom traffic. Even though we are successful in getting inserted in the document an article recognizing the right of any two states, by mutual agreement, to contract out of the fifth freedom in whole or in part it might be that a general principle such as the statement that in a bilateral agreement a route should be granted where it can be economically justified might result in our not being able to refuse incidental fifth freedom traffic where a third and fourth freedom service could be justified to and across Canada. Anson is inclined to go all out for this and other related principles but I, myself, wish to be extremely careful to leave no loophole which would restrict our right to control fifth freedom traffic in the event that we have to adopt a weak multilateral agreement with subsidiary bilateral negotiations (which the United Kingdom and United States want). I propose, therefore, to make a strong case for the recognition of the right of contracting states to have bilateral agreements with other contracting states, but not to press for any principles (useful though they might be in a complete and satisfactory multilateral) which would put a limitation upon us in the event that we fail to achieve any recognition of the right of each state to bilateral agreements with all other states. I hope to persuade Anson that this is the wisest course, though I fear that he may be a little unhappy about this.

If, however, we end up with a document which leaves each state with complete discretion as to whether or not it will make a bilateral agreement with another state and with almost complete discretion with regard to the designation of routes; and with a statement that bilateral agreements should include all five freedoms together with a recognition of the right of any two parties to a bilateral to contract out of the fifth freedom; and with an improved capacity clause and compulsory arbitration applying to that clause and other principles in the agreement (and this, I think, may well be the nature of the document that appears unless we make some dent on the United Kingdom-United States position), we will then have to decide whether or not to sign the general agreement. It will, admittedly, be a very poor step towards multilateralism and, in effect, really a facade for complete bilateralism. On the other hand, we may expect extremely strong pressure from both the United Kingdom and United States to sign and, in the case of the United States, I imagine that our ability to get a satisfactory new bilateral agreement with the United States will depend upon signature. In these circumstances if it appears that a substantial number of other states present are prepared to go along on the basis of such a document it might be wise for us to consider signing but delaying any parliamentary ratification (which, in any case, would be necessary) until we have made a new deal with the United States which satisfies our wishes.

I have attempted to analyze our position in regard to specific route agreements should a multilateral document of this sort come into force. In the first case it seems to me that if any state came to us wishing a bilateral agreement and we ourselves wished to operate an air service through that state exercising all five freedoms, we would have to give five freedoms in return and would, therefore, be no worse off than at present. In fact, we would probably be somewhat better off since the principles in the agreement — and particularly the capacity clause and the binding arbitration — might be useful in this connection. If, on the other hand, we did not wish to operate to the state which approached us we would be completely free to say to that state that we would not be prepared to enter into an agreement with them unless they were prepared to be satisfied with third and fourth freedom traffic only under the contracting out clause. In the case of the United States we would undoubtedly have to grant fifth freedom rights, but since we have always contemplated this the situation would also be unchanged. In the case of the United Kingdom it would probably be extremely difficult to refuse fifth freedom rights in Canada. In any event I feel that if we granted fifth freedom rights to the United States we would probably have to grant them to the United Kingdom in due course, and could, in return, exact the right to carry traffic from Newfoundland and Ireland to the United Kingdom and, of course, from the United Kingdom to continental Europe if we extend our service there.

The only embarrassing feature that I can see would relate to our existing agreements with Sweden and Ireland. There I think the position would be that if either of those countries approached us and suggested that the agreements should be renegotiated to include the fifth freedom unless we were prepared to grant fifth rights in, for example, Moncton (which I would certainly not recommend at this stage) we would have to say frankly to them that unless they were prepared to proceed on the basis of the present agreements we would be compelled either to cancel those agreements or allow them to lapse.

I do not expect that there will be anything further substantial to report until we have thrashed out the question of traffic rights and authorization of routes. Once that has been dealt with, however, the main work of the conference will have been completed and we will either break up or, if there is a willingness to go along with the United States and the United Kingdom, we will be able to complete the drafting of a document in fairly short order.

Sincerely yours,
J.R. BALDWIN

313. C.D.H./Vol. 95

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Geneva, November 13, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe,

I believe my last letter brought you up to date to Sunday evening, November 9th.

On Monday the capacity clause, which had been agreed to by the working committee over the weekend, was presented to the plenary session and debated for a day and a half. On the whole it was received well; certainly everyone lauded it as a great improvement over the old Bermuda Formula. A few minor changes to clarify intent were suggested and it will be considered again probably next week in the context of the full document that may be produced.

After the conclusion of the discussion on capacity, instead of proceeding to arbitration as intended (I suspect the reason for the change was that the United States delegation, which has informally agreed to accept compulsory and binding arbitration in respect to principles in the agreement, had consulted Washington and not yet received an answer), we returned to the basic question of authorization of routes. We again took our stand on Tuesday afternoon on behalf of real multilateralism, indicating clearly that either an automatic exchange of traffic rights as in our proposals at the beginning of the conference or, alternatively, in the event that everything was to be done through bilateral agreements, an automatic acceptance of an obligation to enter into bilateral agreements with all other contracting parties, was essential to a truly multilateral agreement. Both the United Kingdom and United States opposed us flatly, again restating their position that they could accept nothing automatic, and received a measure of support from some of the Latin American nations. Unfortunately, none of the countries which we knew to be strongly in sympathy with us gave us any real support and we had to carry the battle alone for the whole afternoon. It was a pretty discouraging performance and I must admit my own morale got rather weak when we saw how little disposed were countries which we knew agreed with us to express their views when confronted with direct United Kingdom-United States opposition.

In consequence, on Tuesday morning it was agreed to proceed with the discussion of principles to govern bilateral negotiations on the provisional hypothesis that all arrangements would be made through bilateral negotiations, subject only to be principles of the agreement. While nominally a hypothesis, this, in effect, means that the conference has pretty well committed itself to the United Kingdom-United States position.

We then proceeded to a discussion of the principles which should govern bilateral negotiations and we immediately made our own position quite clear, viz. that we considered such principles virtually meaningless so long as each State retained absolute freedom as to whether it should or should not enter into a bilateral agreement with another State; and that, in fact, principles which were in any degree restrictive and which established an obligatory pattern for bilateral agreements would prove to be more of a handicap than an advantage since States in certain cases, feeling unable to accept the principles, would merely refuse to negotiate a bilateral agreement which might otherwise have been completed. Our interjections along this line have, I think, proved reasonably effective in that at least a substantial number of States realize how little the present type of multilateral document that is being prepared will actually mean.

As a natural consequence, our stand has been, on the whole, opposed to putting in too many general principles — a fact which has not endeared us to the United Kingdom delegation, which was all for padding the document with numerous principles, some restrictive and some, in effect, meaningless.

The discussion on the actual principles which should govern bilateral negotiations became very confused and has proceeded with exasperating slowness, so much so that after a day of useless arguing my feelings got the better of me and I made a much too fervid speech on the subject — although I must admit it was the only speech so far which has been greeted with actual applause in the conference, so I gather there were a number of other delegations feeling frustrated over the complete confusion in the discussion. Unfortunately, much of this difficulty arises out of an extremely nice but extremely inefficient chairman.

The discussion on principles will probably continue tomorrow and part of Saturday and when it is concluded I shall summarize the results by telegram. Meanwhile there is a growing sense of frustration and the feeling that we might not be able to complete our work by the end of next week, which was the deadline set. A drafting committee has been established today consisting of nine members, of which we are one, which is to prepare the general form of a multilateral document including all the non-contentious articles. The committee will work steadily over the weekend with a view to completing its work by Tuesday morning, and the full conference has agreed to sit all day Saturday in order to speed up business.

As far as the actual principles dealt with to date are concerned, we have thrown out two and accepted one. The first one discarded represented an obligation that all routes authorized in bilateral agreements must be on the "direct route" principle. This was sponsored by the United Kingdom but met with considerable opposition and was voted down. We also omitted the United Kingdom proposal to restate the right of every nation to designate airports, on the grounds that this was already completely covered by the Convention. On the third point (which asserted that when a bilateral agreement had been completed and routes authorized each State possessed the right to designate the airline to operate the route granted to it — subject only to the national ownership clause) an interesting difference of opinion developed with Mexico trying to get this principle thrown out — and getting some support. In effect, what Mexico wanted was the right to refuse to accept the designated airline of another party, even though it had granted a route to the other party (a situation arising out of present Mexican-United States difficulties). On this point we voted against Mexico and the principle was accepted for insertion in the multilateral agreement.

Anson McKim has been of immeasurable assistance — in fact I doubt if I could have carried on without him.

Should, by any chance, the conference fail to wind up by the end of next week we may be in a difficult position along with a number of other delegations which have made definite plans to leave at that time. In fact, however, the situation might not be too bad since most of the main points will be covered by that time even though final drafting has not been completed and there is some evidence that a number of nations may take the line that they wish to go home and consider the agreement before signing. We have return reservations on the Nieuw Amsterdam sailing on the 26th, although it may be that Arnold Heeney will want me to return sooner by air if possible.

Best wishes,

Sincerely yours,
JOHN [BALDWIN]

314. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à la délégation à la Conférence de l'OACI

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Delegation to ICAO Conference

Ottawa, November 14, 1947

Following for Baldwin from Howe, Begins: I have read with interest your letters and cables. It seems obvious that the United States and United Kingdom will insist on deciding principles of multilateral agreement as price of their signature to same. So think you are doing well to obtain clarification on points you mentioned.

For your information, Senator Brewster[15] gave press interview before his departure saying that dispute was between United States and Canada, that United States is furnishing 75 percent of traffic and that Canada was trying to monopolize it. You can look for repercussions when he intervenes.

---

[15]Owen Brewster, sénateur du Maine, États-Unis; membre de la délégation à la Conférence de l'OACI sur l'Accord multilatéral.
Owen Brewster, US Senator from Maine; Member, Delegation to ICAO Conference on Multilateral Agreement.

In final analysis, we must measure the effect of the agreement on Canadian traffic and decide whether we will gain or lose by signing. I assume that you will not sign for Canada at Geneva, but will permit us to examine document and then decide whether or not Canada will sign.

Meanwhile, please continue your efforts to bring the document as nearly into conformity with Canadian thinking as is possible. If both United States and England continue to insist on Fifth Freedom rights in all bilateral agreements, think useless for us to continue to press our Fourth Freedom multilateral plan. We will probably require another Canada-United States conference before we can sign agreement. Ends.

315. C.D.H./Vol. 95

La délégation à la Conférence de l'OACI
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Delegation to ICAO Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 11 Geneva, November 22, 1947

Following for Howe and St. Laurent from Baldwin, Begins: Your telegram No. 3 of November 17th† received following the despatch of my telegram No. 10 of November 19th.†

In the present circumstances we are glad to be able to take firm line now that we do not intend to sign any documents here. Increasing number of delegations taking this line is apparently causing the United Kingdom and the United States serious worry, particularly since apparently no Commonwealth States other than United Kingdom, and perhaps Ireland, propose to sign here. In fact, in the view of some delegations, Conference may easily break up without reaching any agreement taking into consideration extremely slow progress and the fact that meetings must end next week.

We have, with support of Australia, France, Argentina and Mexico, obtained substantial modification of United Kingdom-United States Article on rates, after rather difficult debate. In particular, clause has been eliminated which would have given air lines the right to introduce new international rates after a given period of time regardless of objections of other countries. We have, also with support from the same group, plus the United Kingdom, persuaded the United States to withdraw the proposal for the Chapter on facilitation on the grounds that this subject, covering insurance, customs, etc., while desirable, could be more suitably dealt with as a technical matter in I.C.A.O. and that delegations here in Geneva are not equipped to deal with it.

My telegram No. 12 gives first draft of Chapter 2 of proposed Multilateral Agreement. You will see that Article No. 21, which is the only one covering traffic rights, places no obligation on us to grant Fifth Freedom. Phrase "international air traffic" is intended to cover Freedoms 3, 4 and 5, but since there is no obligation to granting all these Freedoms, and since complete control of designation of route and traffic points is retained by each State, a bilateral can cover Freedoms 3, 4 and omit Freedom 5 if no intermediate traffic points are named on a route. For example, in the case of Canada-Mexico bilateral, so long as route was defined as merely Mexico City-Toronto, the Agreement would, in effect, be a Third and Fourth Freedom Agreement. It would only become a Fifth Freedom Agreement if in the bilateral we specifically defined an intermediate United States traffic point on the route.

In order to make quite sure this interpretation was correct, we put question in plenary session and both Chairman and Vice Chairman of Drafting Committee gave full explanation confirming our interpretation and stated Article was deliberately designed to provide for this sort of flexibility in bilateral. Opinion was further confirmed when United States, which was not completely happy about this interpretation, held hurried consultation and introduced an amendment which would have stated every bilateral must specifically grant Fifth Freedom rights. When we pointed out that in effect any such amendment would be a limitation of the right to designate airports and routes (a right which they had insisted on two days before) they withdrew their amendment and it is likely that Article will stand in something close to its present form.

We have, I hope, achieved, in this way, reasonable control of our own Fifth traffic. If, however, we designate any intermediate stops on a route, I think that under the Agreement we would have to allow Fifth Freedom rights, since it is intended that all rights would be granted at any traffic stop en route. So long as designation of stops is limited to country of origin and of destination of route and not to intermediate points we, in effect, can restrict Route Agreements to Third and Fourth Freedoms.

McKim and Stoner[16] leave here November 24th, sailing from United Kingdom November 26th. I plan to leave November 25th for London where Robertson[17] is making arrangements for an informal chat with Commonwealth Relations Officials regarding Newfoundland procedure, and will hope to leave for Montreal by Trans-Canada Air Lines November 27th, or as soon afterwards as I can get space. Kidd[18] will stay here for any final cleaning up necessary on November 26th.

I am sending fuller details in letter. Ends.

---

[16]O.G. Stoner, Direction économique.
O.G. Stoner, Economic Division.
[17]N.A. Robertson.
[18]G.P. Kidd, Direction économique.
G.P. Kidd, Economic Division.

316. C.D.H./Vol. 95

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

CONFIDENTIAL Geneva, November 22, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe,

While my wire of today gives details on traffic rights and the five freedoms, there are certain other developments in which you may be interested.

Once the conference had accepted the United Kingdom-United States position that everything must be done through bilateral agreements, and our own efforts were diverted to ensuring that the principles to govern bilateral agreements should not take an unduly restrictive form which would injure our position, we found signs of a position similar to our own growing among a large number of the delegations. In effect, the general tendency has been to water down all the United Kingdom-United States proposals, which would have provided a rather rigid framework for bilateralism, replacing them with a substantial degree of individual freedom. This, obviously, was not to the United Kingdom-United States liking since they would have preferred rather restrictive principles which, on the whole, would have favoured the position of the large countries and through airline operators. Canada, France, Australia, Mexico, the Argentine, Portugal and Egypt probably have been the most vocal countries. We have justified our attitude to the United Kingdom-United States principles on the grounds that only in a truly multilateral document which provided for an automatic exchange of traffic rights or at least contained some guarantee that States would enter into bilateral agreements could we usefully achieve any complete and comprehensive set of rules to govern the operation of international air services; since the United States and United Kingdom would accept nothing automatic we were compelled to strive for flexible bilateralism as opposed to inflexible.

There have been one or two rather difficult debates over the question of signature at Geneva. The matter is far from settled. The United States and United Kingdom are trying to persuade a substantial number of countries to sign before we leave Geneva on the grounds that we must freeze some sort of a document and avoid further discussion of this subject. On the other hand, it is becoming increasingly apparent that a substantial majority of the countries here do not wish to sign and may, in fact, insist that they must take the document home for consideration. All the members of the Commonwealth are represented here but as far as we can see at present, apart from the United Kingdom, none intend to sign here — with the possible exception of Ireland which is still in the process of making up its mind. We have pointed out the dangers if only half a dozen countries sign at Geneva and have suggested that it might be desirable to refer the document directly for consideration by governments without any attempt at signature here, arranging that it be opened for signature for example at the next Assembly. This would mean that if the document should not prove satisfactory to enough nations to make it worthwhile it would then be possible to reconsider it. This course is now favoured by Dr. Warner[19] who earlier had supported signature at Geneva. The United States, however, continues to press for signature and the matter will not be decided until almost the last minute. My own guess is that at the most eight or ten signatures may be obtained here out of the thirty odd States represented. Progress has been so slow that some delegations even believe that we may break up without reaching any substantial measure of agreement and may merely refer a draft for further consideration at the Assembly.

Apart from the active role played by the United States, United Kingdom, France and Canada in the discussions, carrying on the tradition that has existed ever since Chicago, I have been interested to note the aggressive participation in the present discussions of Mexico and Portugal and, to a lesser extent, of the Argentine and Egypt as well. I have also been interested to see how frequently our own interests, our own wishes and even our own fears coincide with those of Mexico — which is represented by a very able lawyer who has played a major role here.

Since this is my last letter it may be worth while setting down a few general reflections on the conference. Our discussions have been seriously hampered by poor translation arrangements, — a situation for which I put the full blame on the ICAO Council which, in an unwise attempt to save money, first of all decided not to provide simultaneous translation facilities and, secondly, provided only a limited staff of translators. Lack of simultaneous translation facilities meant that after every statement there had to be a delay for two translations since we have been working in English, French and Spanish. This, to begin with, has tripled the length of the conference. In addition, when the conference itself wished to speed up its work by holding more frequent and longer sessions it was impossible to do this because of a shortage of translators. False economy surely!

The selection of a Swiss as chairman of the conference, in honour to the country in which we were meeting, while a nice gesture, has also impeded our work since the chairman is not very fluent in English (which is our main working language), is not particularly familiar with the subject, and has only recently shown any desire to handle the discussion in a workmanlike fashion.

In addition, the initial decision of the conference to proceed by a broad discussion of issues without concentrating on any specific document caused the discussion to wander quite frequently. If a basic document had been chosen for study to begin with and had been approached article by article we would have been able to proceed more rapidly.

Further, the subject of international air transport is a complicated one involving a combination of political and semi-technical considerations and knowledge. Some of the delegations here are led by people who are completely new to the field, with the result that much time is wasted in plenary session in explaining at great length, [19]Edward Warner, président de l'Organisation de l'aviation civile internationale.

Edward Warner, President, International Civil Aviation Organization.

time and time again, certain of the basic concepts of air transport operations which are unfamiliar to them.

There have been no signs of the Commonwealth operating in co-operation under United Kingdom direction; in fact, on a majority of occasions most of the members of the Commonwealth have taken views diametrically opposed to the United Kingdom for the simple reason that they are more sympathetic to the idea of real multilateralism than the United Kingdom appears to be in this particular field. The Latin Americans, while not favourable to our ideas of multilateralism, have shown themselves suspicious of the United States' ideas for a pattern for bilateralism. The Netherlands and Scandinavia have taken a common line in favour of a complete freedom of the air with little concern for any rules.

Senator Brewster arrived here a week ago but after spending half a day at the conference went on to Germany and has not yet returned. I am told, however, that he is expected back this weekend although he has not as yet shown any disposition to interfere with the work of the United States delegation.

While I have not seen any clippings from the conference, I am not very happy about coverage on behalf of Canadian newspapers. In effect, Canadian papers have to rely for coverage on the material sent out from here by the A.P. correspondent and by the New York Times representative (whose material, of course, is carried in the Gazette and the Globe and Mail). As Americans, it is natural that both the A.P. and the New York Times men show a disposition to get most of their material through the United States delegation, so that the Canadian papers get only stories which have primarily a United States slant. I am told that this has applied to other meetings here and I think it is a matter which should be brought to the attention of the Canadian Press at an appropriate time. Judging by a few stories I have seen in French and Italian newspapers and one or two clippings from United States sources as well, I would say that our position in the conference has been better represented in the European continental press than in material going to either the United Kingdom or to the United States (and Canada).

Sincerely yours,

JOHN [BALDWIN]

317. C.D.H./Vol. 95

La délégation à la Conférence de l'OACI
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Delegation to ICAO Conference
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 13 Geneva, November 24, 1947

Following for Howe and St. Laurent from Baldwin, Begins: Draft Agreement now contains specific clause permitting States to make bilateral agreements on basis of Third and Fourth Freedoms only. This has resulted from situation arising Saturday afternoon when, as a result of confusion in discussion, we emphasized necessity of clear understanding of interpretation of Article 21 which had been previously given, namely, obligation existing with regard to Fifth Freedom. Substantial support for this position emerged when, on Sunday morning, United States introduced an amendment which they claimed made it clear that route and air port control permitted States to avoid Fifth Freedom. In fact, amendment was lacking in precision and vague and when we questioned its meaning in open session, we received contradictory answers, although United States and United Kingdom both made it clear they were strongly opposed to a specific recognition of principle that States need not exchange Fifth Freedom rights.

A Mexican motion was then introduced stating directly that States need not, repeat not, grant Fifth Freedom. To everyone's complete surprise, United States permitted this to be voted on before their own amendment which was already before the Commission. Mexican motion carried by good majority. United Kingdom and United States voted against, along with 7 others; Canada, Australia, New Zealand and India were those voting for with South Africa abstaining.

United States and United Kingdom have been hinting that they cannot accept document with Mexican provision in it, nevertheless we expect full document will be completed here, including Mexican amendment, and referred for consideration but not opened for signature or even recommended for signature. In short, the Conference has not achieved its objective. Ends.

318. C.D.H./Vol. 95

Le représentant auprès de l'OACI
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Representative to ICAO
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Ottawa, December 6, 1947

Dear Sir,

INTERNATIONAL AIR RIGHTS — CONSEQUENCES FOR TCA
OF THE GENEVA CONFERENCE

Without going into detailed history of this fourth attempt to secure a multilateral agreement on civil air rights, certain aspects should be noted as bearing on our future action on bilateral negotiations. The following is for discussion with Mr. Henry, Mr. Baldwin and others concerned.

Geneva failed because of the inability to close a gap as wide as it was at Chicago. The U.S.A., U.K., Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands wanted automatic "pick-up" in other countries and would not admit even the possibility of its being subject to bilateral negotiation under arbitration (the Canadian plan). Furthermore, they insisted that bilateral negotiation of routes should not be subject to arbitration (the U.S. and U.K. claimed privately that they wanted this in order to retain freedom to refuse routes to Russian satellites). Refusal to arbitrate on routes would not have been insisted on by the Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands and I think the U.K. were mainly following a U.S.A. lead. The result if the U.S.A. and U.K. had succeeded would have been to take from the small countries the right to withhold Fifth Freedom and leave to the U.S.A. its advantage in superior bargaining power on exchanges of routes. The majority (including Canada) said however that if these States insisted that routes could be withheld with no reason given and no recourse to arbitration for an injured State, that the right to close Third and Fourth Freedom agreements must be reserved. When this vote carried by thirteen to nine with five abstentions, the U.S.A. said in effect that they could not go on and the conference flickered out.

From all this it is clear that the U.S.A. want to sell air transport all over the world and do not, to the same extent, want to buy it. Small countries are genuinely afraid of overpowering competition from these big air states. Canada, as a middle air power depending so far entirely on the Third and Fourth Freedoms, has not aroused any fear and our stand, having been consistent for four years, commands respect. We were not ring leaders in our opposition to the U.S.A. and I don't think they hold a grudge against us.

In spite of four years of explanation of our policy, we may be regarded as too much prejudiced against Fifth Freedom for our own good in the international field we are now getting into and it might be wise to close some Fifth Freedom agreements at an early date. In a world of bilateral agreements we must always consider what we will get back for every concession we give and for this reason I see no good in giving Fifth Freedom to countries from which we do not wish to receive it. If this policy is agreed we should adhere to it closely as one departure would prejudice our position.

This policy would direct our attitude against applications for pick-up between England and Canada by France, Scandinavian countries, the Netherlands, etc., and also between the U.S.A. and Canada by many South American countries to which we do not intend to fly.

With Cuba we might exchange Fifth Freedom, hoping for pick-up in the U.S.A. and we might also consider Central and South American countries like Brazil to which we may fly.

To Ireland also we might exchange pick-up rights, depending on whether we wish to ask them for rights to England or the Continent. For Ireland, however, we should not name Montreal unless they are willing to name Dublin, and give them Sydney or Moncton if they restrict us to Shannon.

To Belgium, if we decide to run there, we should give pick-up rights in return either in England or Ireland, according to which we want from them.

This brings us to the special situations with the U.K. and the U.S.A. with whom we cannot continue indefinitely on a Third and Fourth Freedom basis and should make up our mind in advance what we want and are prepared to give.

With the U.K. an exchange of pick-up in both directions at Gander and Shannon should be acceptable. Another step might be Canada-U.S.A. in exchange for England-Belgium but here I would not give Montreal-Chicago. In any exchanges with the U.K. we would be reluctant to see them get pick-up directly competing with our transcontinentals. In other words, while we might concede them Sydney-New York or Montreal-Detroit, there seems to be no reason why they should get Montreal, Toronto-Chicago or New York-Toronto or still less New York-Vancouver and Chicago-Vancouver which Cribbett has asked for in connection with the combined route to Japan. The combined Pacific run might have the advantage of cutting a potential deficit in the early years but we hesitate to combine an operation with B.O.A.C. who seem extravagant operators and particularly I would not think us justified in throwing to them a New York-Chicago-Vancouver run.

With the U.S.A. we should have an expanding exchange or rights so we can pick up on the way to the Caribbean and in return we must recognize their desire for a stop at Edmonton and some pick-up in Canada over the Atlantic. I have written a separate paper for use in our next bilateral talks with the U.S.A.

In short, we are in bilaterals for some years to come. This means straight horse-trading but is much easier if we establish a policy in advance. This policy should be based on reciprocity.

Yours truly,

A.C. McKim

319. DEA/72-ADU-21-40

Rapport au sujet de la Conférence de l'OACI relative à l'Accord multilatéral sur les droits aériens commerciaux

Report on ICAO Conference on Multilateral Agreement on Commercial Rights in the Air

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], December 31, 1947

1. The Background to the Conference
2. The Canadian Proposals
3. Aims and Views of Other Delegations
4. Progress of the Conference
5. General Comments
Appendix "A"—List of Delegations†
Appendix "B"—Final Act—Draft Agreement†

1. The Background of the Conference

The question of the development of a Multilateral Agreement on Commercial Rights in International Civil Air Transport was raised at the Interim Assembly of PICAO in 1946, in accordance with the directions of the Chicago Conference on Civil Aviation, 1944. The net purpose of such a document would be to replace the existing method of exchanging commercial air rights with one broad agreement which would render a uniform pattern to all future air agreements between Contracting States. During these discussions, the Interim Assembly reaffirmed its adherence to the principles and objects of multilateralism in the field of international civil aviation; the problem was then referred to the Interim Council with the aim of producing a draft agreement for submission to the next Assembly. Such a draft was prepared by the Air Transport Committee. This draft was a multilateral agreement embracing the grant of the Five Freedoms,[20] and containing clauses on capacity, rates and arbitration of disputes. It became known as "The Majority Draft" since a minority of the Air Transport Committee produced a modified draft under which route exchanges would still be required by signatories to such a Convention.

This majority draft was discussed during the First Assembly of ICAO at Montreal in 1947 in Commission No. 3. In the course of this discussion, it became obvious that there was a considerable divergence of opinion as to whether a complete multilateral or a partial multilateral was the answer to the problem. This cleavage of view on a major matter of principle prevented any detailed discussion on the actual drafting of a Multilateral Convention. The United States and the United Kingdom were the leading proposers of a partial multilateral and were supported by China, India and most of the Latin American countries (the latter group, it was felt, tendered their support more on a basis of general policy than on a clear understanding of the problem). As against this, Canada, Australia, and France led the fight for a complete multilateral. The Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries, while opposing the partial multilateral, still considered the Majority Draft too restrictive. Time did not permit these opposing views to be reconciled, and accordingly the Commission decided the only possibility of achieving agreement was to convene a further meeting on this subject. It was proposed that such a meeting, open to all member States of ICAO, should be held in Rio de Janeiro not later than October, 1947, to develop and submit for the consideration of member States, an agreement respecting the exchange of commercial rights in international civil air transport. Later developments necessitated the transfer of the Conference to Geneva, and the opening date was advanced to November 3.

[20]Voir le document 296 note 4./See Document 296*n*.4.

During the intervening period prior to the Conference, the problem of multilateralism was thoroughly reviewed by Canadian aviation authorities and the United States, France, Sweden, the United Kingdom and some of the other Commonwealth countries were informally consulted with a view to the preparation of a document which might reconcile the presently existing divergent viewpoints.

2. The Canadian Proposals

The desire to achieve some measure of compromise which might produce a successful agreement led to the submission by Canada to the Conference of a series of draft articles based on a somewhat different approach to the problem of multilateralism. It was held that an agreement based on the approach of the minority draft of the Air Transport Committee would offer very little improvement over existing arrangements and might, at the same time, act as a serious obstacle to the ultimate achievement of an agreement involving a complete multilateral exchange of traffic rights. It had further been evident in prior discussions that virtually every member State of ICAO had shown a readiness to exchange Third and Fourth Freedom rights with other member States, and that the greatest difficulty centred around fill-up traffic (Fifth Freedom) and the establishment of principles related thereto. The Canadian proposals, therefore, were based upon a general granting of the Third and Fourth Freedoms on a multilateral basis with consequential modifications in the drafts considered by ICAO, and, at the same time, on the establishment of a set of principles somewhat along the lines indicated in the Minority Draft. These principles would apply to such matters as rates, capacity on routes, etc. both for services operated under the multilateral agreement and operated under supplementary bilateral arrangements.

Each State would grant the right to carry Third and Fourth Freedom traffic to other member States, and would agree to designate a basic number of airports, in accordance with principles contained in the agreement, at which these Third and Fourth Freedom rights could be exercised by other member States. Routes could be established automatically for the exercise of these rights in accordance with the principles contained in the Agreement, but would have to be between the designated airports in various countries and could only be established if traffic to justify the operation existed.

Supplementary bilateral arrangements which would include the granting of Fifth Freedom rights, the designation of additional airports for bilateral purposes, and the granting of additional routes were to be provided for, as long as they did not contain provisions of an exclusive nature. Any services operated on routes under the multilateral, or under supplementary bilaterals, would be operated in accordance with the principles contained in the agreement covering the Fifth Freedom, as well as Freedoms Three and Four, and which were based on the Bermuda "principles". The Canadian proposal made no reference to Freedoms One or Two, since it was generally considered that these had already been acceptably dealt with in the International Air Transit Agreement, and that there was little to be gained by adding them to the proposed new multilateral.

The draft articles submitted by the Canadian Delegation were proposed as a basis for discussion, not in any hard and fast sense, but in the hope that they might offer a starting point from which might emerge ultimate agreement among the Conference members.

3. The Aims and Views of Other Delegations

The United States Delegation, though at all times paying glowing tribute to the philosophy of multilateralism, made it clear at the beginning of the Conference that they had not materially altered their views since the discussions at the 1947 Assembly, and that any multilateral agreement including any specific automatic exchange of routes could not be acceptable to their Government. They could, however, accept a type of agreement which, while leaving routes to bilateral negotiation, established a code of principles to be of universal application. This code would not include any obligation to grant routes in an agreement. In such negotiations they could also accept a set of rules covering rates, capacity, competition, facilitation, and arbitration procedure. This arbitration procedure was not admitted, however, to be capable of covering route agreements, but only disputes that might arise in respect of interpretation of the Convention.

The United Kingdom position was along similar lines. At the beginning of the Conference, Cribbett, the United Kingdom Chief Delegate, indicated in confidence that he was under Foreign Office direction not to accept any agreement involving a general multilateral exchange of Freedoms which would compel the United Kingdom to allow airlines of satellite countries to fly into the United Kingdom or into British Territories, or which might restrict United Kingdom power to refuse to admit such services. These considerations arose not only as a matter of general foreign policy, but because the U.S.S.R. has refused to allow foreign airlines to operate into her territory, and has remained out of ICAO while developing airlines or satellite countries who are members of ICAO, as a means of penetration of other countries.

This position, in substance, factually agreed upon by the United States and the United Kingdom, offered little more than a form of bilateralism thinly disguised by a veneer of vague multilateral principles. It appeared at first as though history would repeat itself, and the delegations from India, China, and the Latin American countries would continue as they had done in previous conferences to back up the proposals of the two major air powers. However, by the later days of the Conference, there was a marked change of attitude in nearly all these delegations. This, in part may be attributed to the useful work of education brought about during the course of discussions, which served to clarify the important issues to a number of delegates who had come to the Conference not overly familiar with the problem in hand, and under blanket instructions to support the United States' proposals. This was fairly true of the Latin American countries, and by the end of the Conference, Mexico (who played a very vocal role in all proceedings), Colombia, Venezuela and Brazil had joined with Canada, Australia, India, New Zealand, Portugal and Egypt in a vigorous fight to prevent the exposure of the embryonic international air services of smaller nations to the dangers implicit in bilateral bargaining, with the larger nations, based on loose and dangerous principles. The obvious presence of the bulk of the Commonwealth countries in this latter group made it quite apparent that there could be no attempt by the United Kingdom to organize a Commonwealth bloc in support of her position.

A third group emerged, consisting of the Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands, who believed along lines that are now becoming traditional for them, in the utmost freedom of the air, because of their ability to supply efficient air services and their inability to produce large amounts of traffic.

France at no time clearly espoused any of these three causes, but at all times appeared very anxious to agree with the United States and the United Kingdom. It was apparent that France desires a true multilateral but felt that such an agreement could be developed from the basis suggested by these latter two countries. As the Conference progressed, it became apparent that this was a false assumption. This attitude, coupled with a propensity to split some irrelevant hairs during Conference debates, rendered the French delegation rather unpredictable.

4. Progress of the Conference

After a lengthy series of opening addresses, in which Delegations in all cases paid at least lip service to the principle of multilateralism, the Conference proceeded to discuss factual documents prepared by the Secretariat. On the completion of this, the Session then opened discussions on the question of the authorization of routes. A Canadian statement based on the proposals submitted in their draft articles (which was circulated in the form of a paper to the Conference) was accorded support by the Delegations of New Zealand, Australia, Ireland, Egypt, Belgium, and Portugal. However, the United States and the United Kingdom made it clear that they could not accept the Canadian proposals even in a modified form. This issue was then placed in abeyance for the time being and the discussions turned to capacity clauses. A Working Committee, consisting of Canada, France, the United Kingdom and the United States, provisionally worked out an article for submission to the Commission. This article involved no commitment on the part of any of these four countries since its adoption was clearly to be contingent upon agreement being reached on the other outstanding questions of traffic rights, routes, and arbitration. This article represented a substantial improvement over the original Bermuda formula in that the language was clearer and shorter and placed primary emphasis upon Third and Fourth Freedom traffic and the protection of regional services. Although no interpretation was agreed upon, it was also felt that this present wording would allow contracting States by mutual consent to contract out of the Fifth Freedom.

The conference then returned to the basic question of authorization of routes. A resolution was proposed by the Delegate of Mexico stipulating that the granting of air routes should be accomplished through supplementary bilateral agreements between interested parties, and that the current multilateral agreement should not impose any mandatory obligation to conclude route agreements. Such agreements were to remain "entirely discretionary with the parties concerned." The Commission adopted this resolution with the Netherlands voting against it, and Canada, Colombia, Denmark, Ireland and Norway abstaining.

The Conference then agreed to proceed with a discussion of principles to govern bilateral negotiations on the hypothesis implicit in this resolution. Whilst nominally it was proceeding on a hypothesis (which was to prove a difficult assumption), the Conference in effect had virtually committed itself to the United States-United Kingdom position. The discussion of these route principles became very confused and often proceeded with exasperating slowness. The debates varied between two extremes: on one hand a great deal of time was spent thrashing out questions of judicial or linguistic interpretation which might better have been dealt with at the drafting stage; on the other hand, the United States and the United Kingdom often sought to pad the document with many general and often meaningless principles.

With the real issues still being avoided, a drafting committee was established at the end of the second week to prepare a general form of document based on those articles that had already been generally agreed upon in Plenary Session, and on those articles which could be considered non-contentious.

With the opening of the third week, the Conference made valiant attempts to establish a rigid timetable which might telescope the discussions into the remaining period of time. A general feeling of restlessness and, regrettably, on occasion a feeling of cynicism began to spread throughout many delegations. The United States was striving diligently for the completion of a document which could be ready for signature at the end of the Conference. In this they received a dwindling amount of support. The trend was now towards a from of flexible bilateralism — a negative approach forced by the failure to adopt a true multilateral with automatic exchange of traffic right, or with at least some guarantee that States would enter into bilateral negotiations and the unwillingness of many nations to accept a rigid and restricted set of principles geared to the tempo of through airline services.

The irreconcilable differences of opinion were brought into clear focus when, following the query by Canada as to the interpretation of traffic rights, i.e. whether nations would be allowed to contract for less than Five Freedoms, the Mexican Delegation, in conjunction with the Delegations of Egypt, Greece, India and Italy, proposed an article which would give any country the right to withhold the granting of the privilege of carrying international air traffic, both originating in and destined for points on the agreed routes in the territories of States other than parties to the route agreement (Fifth Freedom). The United States had previously introduced a draft article on this question and its unprecise nature had evoked the question of interpretation referred to above. In the surprising turn of events which followed, the small nations executed a reluctant coup and the Mexican proposal was adopted with Australia, Canada, Colombia, Egypt, Portugal, New Zealand, Mexico, Italy, Greece, Brazil, India and Venezuela voting in favour. The United States, the United Kingdom, Denmark, Norway, France, Ireland, the Netherlands, Sweden, and Switzerland voted against the motion. The Argentine, Belgium, South Africa, Czechoslovakia and China abstained from voting, and the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua were absent from the meeting. It was generally considered by those who supported the new article, as well as those who opposed it, that this constituted a deviation from the principle of multilateralism which the Commission was established to extend. Canada was forced to support the Mexican proposal despite her willingness to continue discussion on the United States article, since the vote involved a principle affirmed by Canada in previous discussions; i.e. that such a guarantee as proposed by Mexico must be included in any form of document which did not offer automatic route exchanges. In view of the varying interests of nations, such a grave step was unavoidable in the light of the hypothesis being projected from the United States-United Kingdom position. Delegates were, on the whole, however, unanimous in their desire not to abandon the numerous points on which wide agreement and useful discussion had taken place. Such recordings would be referred to Governments for study and might serve as a basis for future discussions of a multilateral.

5. General Comments

With one exception, the facilities provided by the Palais de Nations and the United Nations personnel and the administrative arrangements carried out by the ICAO Secretariat were highly satisfactory. This exception was the poor translation methods. The ICAO Council sought a false economy in not providing simultaneous translations and in endeavouring to operate with a very limited staff of translators. There was, of necessity, after each speech, a delay for two translations, since the Conference worked in French, Spanish and English. This, as a result, robbed many of the debates of their effectiveness and added at least an extra week to the Conference proceedings.

The control of discussions was not too satisfactory. The selection of Dr. Amstutz, the Swiss delegate, as Chairman, while a commendable tribute to the host country, somewhat impeded the work of the Conference, since the Chairman was not fluent in English which was adopted as the main working language. Further, he did not always sense the feeling of the meeting, and these disadvantages, combined with the strain of the constant pressure from the President of the Council, Dr. Warner, to maintain an aggressive pace in the Conference proceedings often rendered the Chairman a somewhat unsteady leader for the discussions. Several of the delegates were prone to occasional forensic tours de force, and had the gavel rested in a stronger hand, many irrelevant issues could have been avoided.

The initial decision of the Conference to proceed by broad discussion of issues without concentrating on any specific document caused the debates to wander quite frequently. It also forced the Conference to accept a working hypothesis that was fundamentally distrusted by many delegations. The directives of the Plenary Session to the Drafting Committee were of consequence often quite nebulous and the latter group was impeded in its mechanical duties by the rise in its sessions of further debates as to broad interpretation. If a basic document had been chosen for study to begin with, and had been approached article by article, the Conference could have proceeded in a more rapid and orderly fashion.

The subject of international air transport is a complicated one, involving a combination of political and technical considerations and knowledge. Many delegations were led by people new to the field, and a great deal of time was lost in explaining the basic concepts of air transport. There was a noticeable improvement in this respect by the end of the Conference, and this may well have an important bearing on the future success of multilateralism in civil aviation. If multilateralism had expired at this Conference, the fragrant aroma of the wreaths, which many delegations would have littered on its grave, could not have brought it back to life. Fortunately multilateralism did not die. Many useful discussions on rates, capacity, arbitration, and route principles have been recorded, and the crux of the problem is now readily apparent to most nations. At least the cleavage that separated nations had been clearly outlined. Some degree of retraction may be required of both groups; certainly it is evident that those nations with young developing airlines will demand strong guarantees from those nations with established through airlines should any agreement be proposed that did not involve true multilateralism, i.e. reciprocal automatic exchanges of traffic rights that would guarantee at least some measure of equality of opportunity to all airlines.

3e PARTIE/PART 3

NÉGOCIATIONS BILATÉRALES
BILATERAL NEGOTIATIONS

320. PCO/A-15-1-J

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Ottawa, January 31, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe:

RE CIVIL AVIATION AGREEMENTS WITH NEW ZEALAND AND AUSTRALIA

As you know, we have been in process of negotiating an agreement with New Zealand and on the assumption that we would be able to work out satisfactory arrangements with the United States, we had intended to provide for exchange of fifth freedom rights in the agreement with New Zealand. We had also told Australia that we would, at an early date, be prepared to open our agreement with Australia on fifth freedom rights.

In view of the recent developments with the U.S., I would be inclined to let the Australian situation stand as it is. We have already told them that we would have no objection to them carrying fifth freedom traffic into Vancouver for the present, but we might perhaps best let revision of the formal agreement with Australia stand over for a while.

I would now be inclined to pursue a similar course with New Zealand, i.e. tell them that in view of recent developments we would prefer not to conclude a fifth freedom agreement with them, but would be quite happy to conclude a fourth freedom agreement with them similar to that which we have with Australia. We could also tell them that pending development of a situation where we could conclude a fifth freedom agreement with them, we would have no objection to them carrying fifth freedom traffic into Vancouver on a temporary basis.

If you agree with this course, we will see that this information is transmitted to New Zealand and Australia. I believe that Mr. Henry is in agreement with the proposal.

Sincerely yours,
J.R. BALDWIN

321. PCO/A-15-1-J

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

London, January 31, 1947

My dear High Commissioner,

His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom have had under consideration the question of the grant of traffic rights in Fiji and Canton Island to British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines (in which the Governments of Australia, New Zealand and the United Kingdom will participate) and to Trans-Canada Airlines, the airline designated by the Government of Canada to operate in parallel with British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines on the Trans-Pacific air route.

As regards the grant of rights at Canton, the United Kingdom Government consider that paragraph IV of the Exchange of Notes of April 6th 1939 between the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States of America regarding the administration of the islands of Canton and Enderbury, by placing no limitations of the rights which may be exercised by British Commonwealth or United States air services at Canton Island, is sufficient warrant for their exercising all five Freedoms when using the Island, and that no further provision for ensuring this right is required.

The United Kingdom Government propose shortly to transmit for the consideration of the Governments of Canada, Australia and New Zealand, draft agreements covering the grant of traffic rights in Fiji. Since, however, the conclusion of these agreements may take some little time, the United Kingdom Government would be pleased, as an interim measure until a bilateral agreement is concluded, to accord to an airline designated by the Government of Canada on a route Vancouver via San Francisco, Honolulu, Canton, Fiji and a point in Australia or a point in New Zealand, third, fourth and fifth freedom rights in Fiji in accordance with, and subject to the observance of the Agreement recently concluded between the Governments of Canada and Australia. This arrangement would be on the understanding that, in return, the Canadian Government would be prepared to grant to British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines the same rights in Vancouver and on the same conditions.

If these proposals are acceptable to the Government of Canada, I suggest that this letter and your reply should be regarded as constituting a temporary agreement pending the conclusion of the long term agreement referred to above.

Sincerely yours,
ADDISON

322. PCO/A-15-1-J

Le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements au secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet

Minister of Reconstruction and Supply to Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet

Ottawa, February 1, 1947

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

RE CIVIL AVIATION AGREEMENTS WITH NEW ZEALAND AND AUSTRALIA

Thanks for your letter of January 31st regarding fifth freedom agreements with New Zealand and Australia.

It seems to me that these governments should be advised that we have not as yet been able to work out arrangements with the United States covering our operations in the Pacific, and that, in the meantime, our agreements with these two countries should be fourth freedom agreements, following the form already signed with Australia.

It can be made clear to the two countries that, pending further developments, we will not object to the carrying of fifth freedom traffic into Vancouver.

In other words, I agree with the recommendation contained in your letter.

Yours sincerely,
C.D. HOWE

323. PCO/A-15-1-J

Le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires des Dominions

High Commissioner in United Kingdom to Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs

[London], February 1, 1947

My dear Secretary of State,

In reply to your letter of 31st January concerning the grant of traffic rights in Fiji and Canton Island to British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines and Trans-Canada Airlines, I am happy to inform you that the Government of Canada are ready to make (with the Government of the United Kingdom) an interim agreement along the lines proposed in your third paragraph. This agreement will last until a long-term bilateral agreement is concluded and will effect an immediate exchange of full traffic rights with regard to the two islands of Canton and Fiji, as intimated in my letter of 30th November, 1946. At that time, it was proposed that the five Freedoms at Canton Island and Fiji should be granted to Trans-Canada Airlines as the designated airline of Canada for the Pacific Service, and that the five Freedoms at Vancouver should be granted to British Commonwealth Pacific Airlines as the designated airline of the United Kingdom in respect of Canton Island and Fiji.

This letter and your letter of 31st January shall therefore be regarded as constituting such a temporary agreement pending the conclusion of the long-term agreement.

Yours sincerely,
N.A. ROBERTSON

324. PCO/A-15-1-J

Le secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
au ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

Ottawa, February 6, 1947

Dear Mr. Howe:

Since the conclusion of the recent aviation discussions with U.S. representatives I have been attempting to review again some of the policy problems related to fifth freedom rights under bilateralism. The attached note represents an attempt to clarify my own thinking. Before we proceed with bilateral arrangements involving fifth freedom rights, it would seem desirable to have a clearer idea of our position (as summarized in Para. 10 of attached).

As well, on reviewing the situation in retrospect, I am inclined to think that the greatest weakness in our own case, as far as the United States is concerned, is our insistence that Whitehorse be the traffic stop for the U.S. on the Northwest Staging Route. Whitehorse is obviously not a normal traffic centre; so long as we insist on it rather than more obvious places such as Winnipeg or Edmonton we can scarcely expect that the United States will grant us access to, for example, New York or Boston on our international through services, and will insist on designating some less satisfactory traffic centre.

I realize that there are extremely strong domestic difficulties in the way of designation of Edmonton rather than Whitehorse but here again the difficulty is that we can scarcely take exception to a U.S. refusal to allow us to operate directly from Vancouver to Honolulu which they base on U.S. domestic difficulties vis-à-vis Seattle, if in return we base our case vis-à-vis Edmonton and Whitehorse on our domestic difficulties.

In short, in addition to the principles raised in my attached memorandum, we are pretty well up against a case of balancing advantage against disadvantage; the advantage of getting fifth freedom rights that we need in major U.S. centres as against the disadvantages of allowing the U.S. access to a major traffic centre on the Northwest Staging Route (in this connection I wonder if the possibilities of Winnipeg rather than Edmonton have been canvassed thoroughly from our point of view). It is obvious that while the United States would not be adverse to traffic rights in Montreal on the through run from Chicago across the Atlantic, they place much more importance on obtaining adequate traffic rights on the Northwest Staging Route; this is the problem that we have to face before making further progress.

Sincerely yours,

J.R. BALDWIN

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet

Memorandum by Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet

[Ottawa], February 4, 1947

1. Considering in retrospect our recent aviation discussions with the United States, I have been a little concerned over the possible consequences of some of our arguments. As a result I have been reviewing my own understanding of the position as regards fifth freedom traffic and international airports under bilateralism; some of the arguments we put forward in this connection were new to me in the sense that I had not considered them applicable and still have some doubts as to their validity and as to their value for Canada.

International Airports under the Two Freedoms

2. There can be no difficulty about the position of international airports under the Two Freedoms Agreement. That agreement gives any signatory country the right to fly across Canada and to use for non-traffic purposes certain international airports designated by Canada. These airports are specially designated for the purpose of this agreement and are limited in number. They do not, of course, include the Canadian terminals of trans-border operations. They are open to the airlines of all nations which have accepted the Two Freedoms Agreement without discrimination. In this connection we have designated Montreal, Moncton and, temporarily, Sydney. We have not yet designated any airport or airports in Western Canada for this purpose although we may have to give consideration to this at an early date.

International Airports under a Multilateral Five Freedom Agreement

3. Similarly there can be little misunderstanding over the designation of international airports if a satisfactory multilateral air transport agreement covering traffic rights is achieved. The position would be the same as under the Two Freedoms; i.e. Canada would designate certain international airports for the purposes of the multilateral agreement and the airlines of any other member country could pick up and set down traffic at these designated airports.

International Airports under Bilateralism

4. The difficulty that has arisen relates to the position of international airports under a system of bilateral agreements such as we have at present. It is essential to clarify this point since it now looks as though all exchanges of traffic rights in future will be on a bilateral basis.

5. I had understood our attitude to be that an international airport designated for traffic purposes under a bilateral agreement was completely different from an international airport designated under the Two Freedoms Agreement or under any broader multilateral agreement. Where we rely on a multilateral agreement we designate a limited number of airports to be equally available to all comers. Where we rely on a bilateral agreement we designate the airports required solely for the purposes of that agreement and there is no need to designate the same airports for the air services of other countries. We could designate one airport for one nation and another airport for another nation, depending upon the merits of the case.

6. Some of our points during the recent talks, however, seemed to suggest that even under a bilateral agreement, designation of an international airport would require that airport to be opened up to other countries as well; in fact part of the case we made during the discussions seemed based on this argument, and there was a tendency to assume that international airports under a bilateral agreement should be in a similar position to international airports under a multilateral agreement. We implied that the United States, if it really believes in the fifth freedom, should allow any nation to fly freely across the United States territory and should grant traffic rights to all equally.

7. It is desirable to be clear on the respective merits of the different interpretation described above; there are obvious merits and disadvantages for Canada on both sides. On the one hand the claim which we put forward vis-à-vis the U.S., that the position as regards fifth freedom routes and international airports under the present system of bilateralism should be roughly the same as under multilateralism, would obviously be to Canada's advantage as far as rights in the United States are concerned, since it would mean that we should be given access to the traffic centres we wanted most, on the grounds that these had already been designated for the airlines of other nations.

8. On the other hand this argument applied to Canada might prove difficult for it would mean that once we granted the fifth freedom, whatever airport or airports we made available for this purpose, would have to be made available generally. This could be rather embarrassing as far as letting other airlines into Montreal is concerned and could work a considerable handicap on our own trans-Atlantic operations. A similar difficulty would exist in western Canada where in the long run, we may have to allow some limited access for international through services to one or more of our western traffic centres.

9. As far as rights in Canada are concerned, the policy of granting fifth freedom rights only on a limited basis to certain countries, not to all comers, and of assuming that where fifth freedom rights were granted, there was no necessity of allowing each foreign country obtaining such rights access to the same Canadian airport would be more advantageous.

10. These points can be summed up as follows:

I have assumed that we have generally agreed that if we open up Canada to fifth freedom rights under a system of bilateral agreements we would only grant fifth freedom rights in Canada to other nations where we wished to exercise fifth freedom rights ourselves or were getting some other equivalent concession, (i.e. we would not grant it to all comers). If this is the case, then assuming that we grant fifth freedom rights in a series of bilateral agreements to a few countries, (for example, the United States, the United Kingdom, Brazil or France) are we then under an obligation to allow the airlines of all those countries to fly the same routes across Canada and to use the same airport or airports or can we, in the process of bargaining with each, if we so desire, make a distinction between routes and airports which they may use in Canada?

— — — — — — — —

These are fundamental questions in relation to the stand which we are to take in the future; and we must remember that the United States has apparently already committed itself to the second position, i.e. in each bilateral agreement it makes such arrangements as it thinks are appropriate to that agreement and clearly does not assume that because an airport is made available to the airline of one country that the same airport must also be made available to the airline of another country in the exchange of traffic rights. To a lesser extent I believe a check on U.K. bilateral agreements would demonstrate that the United Kingdom is taking the same line as the United States in this matter. If we are to assume the other position, then we will have to do it in the face of an established policy on the part of some other countries at least, and perhaps the stand should be not in our bilateral discussions but in PICAO where it might be raised if, as would seem likely, the multilateral agreement is not achieved in the next Assembly.

J.R. BALDWIN

325. DEA/72-AHT-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire en Nouvelle-Zélande

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in New Zealand

DESPATCH 80 Ottawa, February 15, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to forward the following information regarding civil aviation relations between Canada and New Zealand.

2. During the past two months we have been negotiating with New Zealand with a view to the conclusion of a bilateral civil aviation agreement, providing for the exchange of fifth freedom rights between Canada and New Zealand for our respective services across the Pacific. A draft agreement had been tentatively agreed upon except for the question of the capacity formula to be used, and it had been hoped to arrange for the signature of this agreement in the near future.

3. However, we have not been able as yet, to work out a satisfactory arrangement with the United States on fifth freedom covering our operations across the Pacific, and since we would not wish in any way to prejudice subsequent negotiations we will probably have with the United States on this fifth freedom problem, we have now offered New Zealand two alternative courses.

a) We would be prepared to conclude with them immediately, a reciprocal four freedoms agreement on the Australian model, letting New Zealand however, carry fifth freedom traffic into Vancouver for the present;

b) or preferably, from our point of view, we could sign no agreement for the present, but let New Zealand exercise full traffic rights at Vancouver on their Pacific service. This would obviate the necessity of modifying a four freedoms agreement at a later date. Furthermore, there would be no objections raised on our part to the grant of a license to New Zealand in the absence of a formal bilateral agreement.

4. These two courses are now under consideration by the New Zealand Government and we will advise you further when we receive their reply.

I have etc.

SYDNEY D. PIERCE
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

326. DEA/9330-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-1016 Ottawa, April 19, 1947

Your WA-1197 of April 18.† Exchange of notes re Canada — United States bilateral Air Transport Agreement.

This exchange of notes, which put into effect the modifications to the Canada-United States Air Transport Agreement of 1945, agreed upon in Ottawa in January, was completed by notes between the Department and the United States Embassy in Ottawa on April 10 and 12. Copies have been forwarded to you.

2. The United States wished to issue a press release on this exchange of notes and we were going to table the notes in the House the same day.[21] In order to synchronize these two matters, we had asked the United States Embassy here for the date of the United States release. This, they had just advised us, was to be Monday April 21. However, as you mention, through inadvertence, the release was issued prematurely, yesterday.

327. DEA/9330-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in United States

TELEGRAM EX-1018 Ottawa, April 19, 1947

CONFIDENTIAL

Your WA-1173 of April 17.† Canada — United States Civil Aviation Talks. Following for Stone from Pearson, Begins: A meeting between Mr. Howe, Mr. St. Laurent, myself and the United States Ambassador here, was held in Ottawa on February 14 as reported in my teletype EX-442 of February 15.† The discussion at the meeting was restricted almost wholly to the problem of Kindley Field, Bermuda, and not problems arising out of the civil aviation talks held in Ottawa in January.

2. With regard to the question of re-opening the Canada-United States air talks, our air authorities consider that the first move should come from the United States. While they would be interested to learn of any concrete proposals the United States may have in mind, or indications of United States thinking on this question, I would emphasize that our air people are most anxious that we should not take the initiative. Ends.

[21]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume III, p. 2160.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume III, p. 2170.

328. DEA/72-AHK-40

Note de la Direction économique
pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Economic Division
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], April 25, 1947

CANADA — PORTUGAL AIR AGREEMENT

I have just received word from our Acting Consul General in Lisbon that all negotiations for this Agreement have now been completed and that it will be signed on Friday, April 25 at 5 p.m. (which is 12 noon Ottawa time). Since you may consider it desirable to have an announcement made in the House concerning this Agreement, I am attaching a statement for this purpose. This announcement could be made by Mr. St. Laurent or Mr. Howe (who has been announcing most civil aviation matters in the House), as you consider preferable.[22]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Déclaration sur l'Accord entre le Canada et le Portugal au sujet des services aériens

Announcement of Agreement on Air Services Between Canada and Portugal

I wish to announce that the Government of Canada and the Government of Portugal have concluded an agreement for air services between their respective territories. This Agreement, in the main, follows the form of previous bilateral civil aviation agreements which Canada has already concluded. It makes provision for an airline designated by each Government to operate a return service originating in its own territory and terminating in, or passing through, the territory of the other country, and includes an exchange of the first four freedoms.

The route to be operated by the designated airline of Canada is specified as Montreal via such intermediate stopping places as may be mutually agreed to the Azores and/or Lisbon, and thence to the United Kingdom and countries beyond in both directions. The route laid down for the designated Portuguese airline is from the Azores and/or Lisbon via such intermediate stopping places as may be mutually agreed to Montreal and countries beyond in both directions.

---

[22]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume III, p. 2501.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume III, p. 2517.

329. DEA/72-ADU-22-40

Note du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet pour la Direction économique

Memorandum from Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet to Economic Division

Ottawa, May 20, 1947

I had a brief word with Mr. Howe this morning about the various approaches we have had for bilateral air agreements. He has tentatively agreed with the suggestion that for the time being at least we should take the stand which we have been taking over recent months, i.e. that as regards any country (other than the U.S.) which wishes to negotiate a Five Freedoms Agreement with us or modify an existing agreement to include the fifth freedom, we should say that, without rejecting the idea, it is impossible for us to consider seriously any fifth freedom bilateral agreements for the present until we have carried a step further negotiations with the United States. We would apply this to Australia, New Zealand, Netherlands, Sweden, France and any other country which will not be satisfied with a Four Freedoms Agreement.

He also said that he had reached a tentative accord with Irish representatives in Montreal for a Four Freedoms Agreement in which we would agree in principle that any TCA plane flying over Ireland would stop in Irish territory and would make this principle effective through working out a detailed arrangement for certain service to Ireland (twice a week or something like that).

I am going to try my hand at a draft agreement which I will send to you for consideration in this connection before I go away at the end of this week.

J.R. BALDWIN

330.

Transport aérien : Accord entre le Canada et la Suède[23]

Air Transport: Agreement Between Canada and Sweden[23]

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C.D. Howe (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the government of Canada and the government of Sweden have concluded an agreement for air services between the two countries. This agreement is similar in form to previous bilateral air transport agreements already concluded by Canada.

The agreement provides for an air line of each country to operate a return service originating in its own territory and terminating in or passing through the territory of the other country, and includes an exchange of third and fourth freedom traffic rights. The route to be operated by the designated air line of Sweden is from Stockholm via intermediate points to Montreal, and the route laid down for the designated air line of Canada is from Montreal via intermediate points to Stockholm. Since, however, Canada does not propose to operate an air service to Sweden in the near future, the agreement makes provision for subsequent review of the services to be performed by the air lines of the two countries at such time as Canada designates an air line to operate scheduled services between the two countries.

[23]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume VI, pp. 5073-5074.
See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume VI, p. 5073.

331. DEA/72-AHT-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire en Nouvelle-Zélande

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in New Zealand

DESPATCH 312 Ottawa, July 10, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to my despatch No. 80 of February 15 and your despatch No. 219 of May 16,† concerning civil aviation relations between Canada and New Zealand. No further word has been received from New Zealand in regard to the conclusion of an air agreement, and, since the inauguration of their service between Auckland and Vancouver this April, we have been permitting the designated airline of New Zealand to exercise third, fourth, and fifth freedom traffic rights at Vancouver. We have not yet completed satisfactory arrangements with the United States regarding fifth freedom rights for our Trans-Pacific services. Moreover, we have no immediate plans for commencing our own operations across the Pacific. In view of these considerations, we are satisfied to leave the exercise of these traffic rights at Vancouver by the designated airline of New Zealand on an informal basis for the present. At such time as we have clarified our fifth freedom relations with the United States, we will be in a position to conclude a formal five freedoms agreement with New Zealand.

2. Under the Convention on International Civil Aviation, to which Canada is a party, we have an obligation to register with the Council of the International Civil Aviation Organization (ICAO) any arrangement into which we have entered. Up to the present however, no notification has ever been sent to ICAO regarding the informal understanding whereby the designated airline of New Zealand exercises these traffic rights at Vancouver. It would therefore appear to us that ICAO should be advised of this fact. For this purpose, a draft communication has been prepared, a copy of which is attached to this despatch.†

3. I should accordingly appreciate your taking this matter up with the New Zealand authorities and ascertaining whether they are agreeable to a communication, along the lines of the attached draft, being sent to ICAO. If they are, it is assumed that the New Zealand authorities would wish to transmit a similar notification to the Organization.

4. It is also proposed to notify ICAO of the somewhat parallel situation which exists with regard to the air service between Australia and Canada, regarding the exercise of fifth freedom rights at Vancouver by the designated airline of Australia, and this matter is being followed up with our High Commissioner in Canberra.

I have etc.

H.O. MORAN
for Secretary of State
for External Affairs

332. CH/Vol. 2113

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1178 Ottawa, July 19, 1947

A Civil Aviation Agreement covering Air Service between Canada and certain United Kingdom territories in the West Indies Caribbean area was signed between Canada and the United Kingdom in Ottawa on 17th July. This Agreement, which is similar in form to other bi-lateral Air Agreements which the Canadian Government has already concluded makes provision for:

(a) an exchange of traffic rights between Canada and certain United Kingdom territories in the West Indies and Caribbean area, i.e., Bermuda, Jamaica Trinidad;

(b) the grant to Canada of cabotage rights to carry traffic between Bermuda on the one hand and Jamaica and Trinidad on the other. By an exchange of Notes completed in connection with the signature of this Agreement the United Kingdom has undertaken, in respect of Bermuda, Jamaica Trinidad, not to exercise its reciprocal rights under the Agreement for a period of four years from 1st January 1947. The Agreement came into force the date of signature.

2. The Bermuda Government has not yet approved this Agreement formally and accordingly the United Kingdom signature is in case Bermuda [is] subject to the approval of the Colony's Legislature at a later date. However, the United Kingdom Act critics have discussed this matter with Bermuda and the Colony is agreeable to our inaugurating our Air Service to Bermuda pending formal agreement by the Bermuda Legislature, which is not expected to convene until late Fall.

3. Our service to Bermuda will use Kindley Field, which being a United States leased air base, will not be available to us until the conclusion of two parallel agreements between the United States and United Kingdom, and United States and Newfoundland, concerning Civil use of United States leased air bases in the West Indies and Newfoundland, respectively. It is hoped, therefore, two agreements will be completed this summer, in order that T.C.A. may inaugurate the service by early Fall.

4. No public announcement concerning this Agreement has yet been made. If a Press Release is issued, I will advise.

333. DEA/72-ZU-40

Décret

Order in Council

P.C. 3246 Ottawa, August 12, 1947

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated 11th August, 1947, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating as follows:

A Civil Aviation Agreement is being negotiated with the Government of Ireland. This Agreement, which is similar in form to other bilateral air agreements already concluded by the Canadian Government, provides for an exchange of third and fourth freedom rights. The Agreement further provides that it will come into force on signature.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, advise that the signature of the Right Honourable C.D. Howe to a bilateral Civil Aviation Agreement with the Government of Ireland be approved.

A.D.P. HEENEY

334. DEA/72-AGM-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur au Pérou

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador in Peru

DESPATCH 163 Ottawa, October 28, 1947

Sir,

I refer to our despatch No. 149 of October 7,† concerning the proposed air services between Peru and Canada.[24] The draft Agreement prepared by the Peruvian Government has now been studied by Canadian aviation authorities and it is suggested that a reply along the following lines be communicated to the Peruvian Government:

"The draft Agreement concerning the proposed air services between Peru and Canada has now been reviewed by civil aviation authorities in Canada.

The following suggestions in respect to the draft Agreement are submitted for your consideration:

(1) The main body of the Agreement covers certain points which are both explicitly and implicitly covered in the Convention on International Civil Aviation to which both our Governments are parties, and, in consequence, it is suggested that a [24]Voir Canada, Chambre des communes, Débats de la Chambre des communes, session 1947, volume III, pp. 2732-2733.

See Canada, House of Commons, Debates, Session 1947, Volume III, p. 2746.

shorter and more simplified form of bilateral Agreement could be substituted. For this purpose, we have prepared a draft which is attached hereto.

(2) It will be noted that the national ownership and effective control clause in Article 5 of the attached Agreement is a standard type as agreed on at Chicago Conference in December, 1944. We would prefer to retain the standard wording rather than the wording suggested by Peru. The special provisions, which relate to Peru, might best be covered by a separate exchange of notes as was the case with the United States and Peru, and which would include the following provisions:

(a) At all times a minimum of 30% of the capital would be held by Peruvian nationals or by the Government of Peru;

(b) Within ten years 51% of the capital, as well as the actual control of the company, should be held by Peruvian nationals or by the Government of Peru;

(c) Until the expiration of the ten year period, the remainder of the capital should be subscribed to by nationals of the Dominion of Canada and the United States of America, with neither group of nationals holding more than 20% in excess of the other group of nationals.

(3) It is felt that the four and one-half freedoms suggested in the memorandum attached to your draft Agreement, in reality, cover what Canada has always considered to be fifth freedom rights. We could accept these proposals as far as the fifth freedom is concerned only for points on the route not served by Trans-Canada Airlines; in the event that Trans-Canada Airlines should initiate a service to Peru, or should initiate a service to any of the aforementioned points, the Agreement would be subject to revision at the request of either party. Traffic rights given to Peru could not, in any case, involve the carriage of traffic between Canada and the United States.

(4) Although your Government seeks traffic rights at three airports in Canada, Montreal, Ottawa and Vancouver, the Canadian authorities feel that the Canadian Government could only grant such rights at Montreal, or, if preferred by your Government, at Ottawa. In respect to this latter airport, it would be necessary for your Government to accept it in its present condition, and in this connection we would point out that it is not suited for use by large four-engine aircraft.

The Canadian Government is prepared to continue negotiations on the draft Agreement. However, as certain fundamental principles which relate to this Agreement may be formulated at the ICAO Conference to be held shortly in Geneva, such negotiations might best be carried on after the Conference."

2. For your information, I shall be forwarding further interpretations and comments in an additional Despatch.

I have etc.

H.O. MORAN
for the Secretary of State
for External Affairs

335. DEA/72-LS-40

Le ministre du Danemark
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister of Denmark
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, November 28, 1947

Sir,

I have the honour to submit enclosed a proposal to an agreement relating to Air Transport between Danish and Canadian Territories.

As it appears from the Annex to this Agreement,† Section 1 and Section 3, paragraph 2, the Government of Denmark grants to the air lines designated by the Canadian Government the right to fly across Greenland and to land on Greenland for non-traffic purposes, and also on routes between Canada and Europe not serving Denmark.

The right of landing for non-traffic purposes on Greenland shall however only be applicable with respect to the existing airports on that territory and as far as flying-boats are concerned only on the water areas adjacent to these airports. Passengers and crews of such aircraft shall be required during their stay within the territory of Greenland to comply with the special regulations governing the entry into Greenland, — a closed territory on which any intercourse with the native population is forbidden.

According to these special regulations all persons on board an aircraft must only remain in Greenland so long as is absolutely necessary and they shall obey all orders given by the Danish authorities.

As long as the airport B.W.1. is under the control of United States authorities the designated Canadian air lines must obtain permission from the said United States authorities to take advantage of the servicing facilities of this airport.

The proposed agreement is based on reciprocity with respect to the "Fifth Freedom" rights as modified by the provisions of section 4 d of the annex to the agreement — the so called Bermuda principles, which have gained general recognition after the joint statement of the British and the United States' Governments that the Bermuda principles may be considered a good basis for the conclusion of bi-lateral agreements. In fact most of the agreements concluded since the Bermuda Agreement of February 11, 1946, by Denmark and other countries stipulate that the right to embark or disembark international traffic destined for and coming from third countries shall be subject to the provisos of the Bermuda Agreement. This standpoint was thus taken by Denmark and the other Scandinavian countries at the first Assembly of the International Civil Aviation Organization at Montreal in May 1947, when a draft multi-lateral agreement on commercial rights in international air transport was discussed, and the Scandinavian countries have also maintained this standpoint at the conference of this organisation in Geneva during this month.

May I suggest that the Canadian Government when considering the proposed agreement have in view that Denmark is granting Canada an important concession with regard to Greenland, and that the privileges of the Fifth Freedom offered to Canada are of great import as the airport of Copenhagen is the most important traffic centre in Northern Europe.

I shall be much obliged if you will advise me at your earliest convenience whether the Canadian Government is prepared to conclude this agreement.

I avail myself of this opportunity of renewing to you, Sir, the assurance of my highest consideration.

G.B. HOLLER

336. DEA/72-LS-40

Le président de la Commission des transports aériens au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chairman, Air Transport Board to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

Ottawa, December 3, 1947

ATTENTION — MR. H.O. MORAN

Your letter of December 2nd† has been duly received together with copy of the note, dated November 28, 1947, from the Royal Danish Legation in Ottawa and copy of the draft bilateral Air Transport Agreement submitted with that note.

I have reviewed the draft and have compared same with the bilateral agreement between Canada and Sweden, dated June 27, 1947, and your attention is drawn to the fact that the draft proposed by the Danish Legation is worded considerably differently than the Swedish agreement already in effect, particularly in reference to the Fifth Freedom.

As it is the intention of the Danish, Swedish and Norwegian Governments to pool their interests in the operation of a trans-Atlantic service which will serve the three countries, it would seem necessary that all three agreements be in similar terms, otherwise confusion would arise.

Canada already has agreed in principle to the pooling of aircraft for the purpose of trans-Atlantic services from the three countries, and it would seem that the matter should be carefully considered before any reply is made to the Danish Legation.

It may be, as you suggest, that when the Geneva Delegation arrives at Ottawa that the entire picture may be changed, and, consequently, I will defer any further comments on this particular submission until I have had an opportunity of ascertaining what the position is as a result of the Geneva Conference.

R.A.C. HENRY

337. PCO/A-15-1-J

Note du secrétaire adjoint du Cabinet
pour le ministre de la Reconstruction et des Approvisionnements

Memorandum from Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet
to Minister of Reconstruction and Supply

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, December 4, 1947

U.K. PROPOSALS FOR JOINT TRANS-PACIFIC AIR SERVICE

Following your discussions with Sir Harold Hartley,[25] Cribbett[26] took this matter up with McKim and myself in Geneva. I enclose copy of a memorandum which he has given to me in this connection.†

While I have not normally been predisposed to joint or pooled operations, there may be just enough in this to make it worthwhile reviewing it carefully on our part before giving a definite answer.

The proposal, in effect, is for a joint or pooled trans-Pacific route from Vancouver through the Aleutians and Japan to China and Hong Kong, connecting there with other British services. The argument that most Europe traffic will probably go to the Far East via North America rather than by the Middle East and Asia appears sound. Further, on the basis of Canadian prewar traffic with the Orient more justification may exist for service to that area than for a service to Australia and New Zealand. The financial burden of a Canadian service to Australia and a Canadian service to the Far East (even on a pooled basis) would be considerable, possibly more than we would be justified in undertaking. On the other hand, if Canadians share of the service to Australia was limited chiefly to a Vancouver-Honolulu segment as we originally contemplated, we might also be able to handle or share in an Asiatic run as well.

The arguments against the U.K. proposal are:

(1) That there is nothing to prevent TCA operating its own independent service from Vancouver to the Far East if it wants to.

(2) That the operation the U.K. proposes would involve two services from Europe funneling at Vancouver into the joint Pacific operation. The first would be the TCA Atlantic and trans-continental operation, the second would be a British service to and across the United States from New York and Chicago to Vancouver. The United Kingdom would on its route, expect to be able to carry traffic between the United States and Vancouver and might therefore be in partial competition with TCA domestic operations.

The arguments for the service, on the other hand, as I understood them from discussion with Cribbett are:

---

[25]Le brigadier-général sir Harold Hartley, président de la British Overseas Airways Corporation.
Brig.-Gen. Sir Harold Hartley, Chairman, British Overseas Airways Corporation.

[26]Voir le document 307 note 10./See Document 307*n*.10.

(i) That BOAC is likely to develop some scheme for a trans-Pacific operation of this sort whether TCA operates or not and that this being the case there is something to be said for a pooled operation.

(ii) That the British Service through the United States to Vancouver would funnel a substantial amount of traffic both from Europe and from the U.S.A. into the trans-Pacific service, which TCA, if operating on its own, would not obtain.

(iii) That, as for competition from the U.K. in carriage of traffic between the U.S. and Vancouver, we could rely on the application of the capacity article worked out in Geneva which places a limitation upon the amount of capacity available for fifth freedom traffic.

In final judgment we would have to balance any competition with TCA in this connection against any gain that would result from having BOAC traffic on this route handed over to the trans-Pacific operation.

I understood from Cribbett that the United Kingdom had no strong feelings about the type of pooled operation involved and would be willing to consider any of the joint or pooled schemes that have been worked out from time to time in the past, — either a joint service under a joint ownership or parallel services worked out in cooperation with pooling of revenues and/or deficits. No matter what the pattern, I gather they would be satisfied to have the Pacific service use North Star aircraft.

With regard to the general principle of pooling, while I have had a predisposition against it, I think we should not overlook the fact that indications of a movement in this direction are growing. It is not a new idea within the Commonwealth. It is now being developed by Denmark, Norway and Sweden and I understand that European countries operating across the South Atlantic are considering some form of a pooled operation as well. It is probably undesirable where there is an unequal degree of efficiency or ability. On the other hand, between BOAC and TCA on the basis of recent operations, while TCA is a more economical operator, BOAC has gained a high reputation, perhaps arising primarily out of its North Atlantic operations, for general efficiency safety and regularity.

I would like to see both TCA and the Air Transport Board do some economic studies of the traffic potential of the route and of costs of operation. There is no extreme hurry about replying to the United Kingdom. While I have some doubts about the proposal, I also can see that, properly arranged, it might have some merit.

J.R. BALDWIN

CHAPITRE VIII/CHAPTER VIII
LES NATIONS UNIES
UNITED NATIONS

PREMIÈRE PARTIE/PART 1
SECRÉTARIAT
SECRETARIAT

338. DEA/5475-H-4-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum by Head, Second Political Division

[Ottawa], April 9, 1947

APPOINTMENTS TO THE INTERNATIONAL CIVIL SERVICE OF THE U.N. AND SPECIALIZED AGENCIES

Some references have been made in the press recently to criticisms of a Canadian citizen, Mr. Stanley Ryan, who is a member of the United Nations Secretariat and who has been serving on the United Nations Committee of Inquiry in Greece. One of the officers of the United Nations Secretariat has been reported as having said that Mr. Ryan was hired by the United Nations "on the recommendation of a high official in the Canadian Department of External Affairs."

2. We have been in touch with this officer of the United Nations who denies that he made any such statement.

3. The reason I mention this is because it gives me an opportunity to explain the attitude of the Canadian Government on this whole question of the hiring by the United Nations and by specialized agencies of Canadians.

4. The general line which Canada has adopted on this whole question is mentioned on page 30 of our report on the London meeting of the General Assembly of the U.N.[1] In London we took a leading part in defeating a proposal by Yugoslavia that the governments of the members of the U.N. should be consulted over the appointment of their nationals to the United Nations Secretariat. The report states that "the Canadian delegation took the position that it would not be desirable that a government should intervene directly in putting forward national candidates for the Secretariat, since this might lead to competition among governments to secure the greatest number of posts for their nationals."

5. The provisions of the Charter on this subject are clear. The staff of the United Nations is appointed by the Secretary-General. In performing this important duty,

[1]Voir le volume 12, les documents 419-427.
See Volume 12, Documents 419-27.

as in performing all his other duties, the Secretary-General is forbidden to "seek or receive instructions from any government." Moreover, each member of the U.N. has pledged itself under the Charter "to respect the exclusively international character of the responsibilities of the Secretary-General" and not to seek to influence him in the discharge of his responsibilities.

6. It would therefore be a violation of the Charter for the Canadian Government or for any other government to try to influence the Secretary-General in discharging his responsibility to appoint international civil servants. It would also be a violation of the Charter for the Secretary-General to seek instructions from any government on appointments of international civil servants.

7. The Secretary-General of the U.N. must accept under the Charter full responsibility for all appointments to the United Nations Secretariat and under the Charter the paramount consideration which must guide him in employing his staff must be "the necessity of securing the highest standards of efficiency, competence, and integrity."

8. He is under no obligation to insure that a Yugoslav appointed to the United Nations Secretariat is someone whom the Yugoslav Government likes and who likes the Yugoslav Government, or that a Canadian appointed to the international Secretariat is someone whom the Canadian Government likes or who likes the Canadian Government. He is under an obligation to insure that the Yugoslav or the Canadian possesses the highest possible standards of efficiency, competence and integrity.

9. The responsibility is the Secretary-General's alone and he cannot divest himself of this responsibility.

10. While the Canadian Government is glad to help the Secretary-General in any way it properly can to find Canadians for work in the international Secretariat, it has consistently refused to nominate Canadians for the international Secretariat either of the United Nations or of any of the specialized agencies.

11. The international civil service must be independent of national control and owe its allegiance to the United Nations alone. It cannot have this independence if its members owe their jobs in it to their national governments.

[E. REID]

339. DEA/5475-H-4-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour le chef de la Première direction politique

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division, to Head, First Political Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], June 19, 1947

I have been very interested to read the memorandum on the Secretariat of the United Nations prepared in the U.K. and enclosed with Despatch A503 of June 6th† from Canada House. I return this memorandum to you.

I note from the last sentence of the memorandum that the authors of the memorandum suggest that the United Kingdom should now sound a number of delegations informally as regards possible means of improving the organization of the Secretariat. I think we ought to take advantage of this opportunity to pass our ideas on to the United Kingdom.

I would suggest that we inform the United Kingdom that we are contemplating proposing at the Assembly in September that the Administrative and Budgetary Committee be divided at the very outset of its meetings into two sub-committees, one on the Secretariat and one on Finance with each of the sub-committees composed of one representative of each of the fifty-five members. The reason we propose this is that we feel that this Assembly should make a thorough examination of the Secretariat with a view to making criticisms of its working and constructive suggestions for its improvement. This is a heavy task and cannot be accomplished by a Committee which is concerned not only with Secretariat problems but with strictly financial problems. Moreover since the financial problems are of such importance it is probable that most of the representatives of the combined Administrative and Budgetary Committee will have budgetary experience rather than special knowledge and interest in the improvement of the International Secretariat. One thing which the sub-committee on the Secretariat could usefully do would be to re-examine in the light of experience the recommendations and suggestions made by the Preparatory Commission. It might prepare a report which would be in large part a revision and amplification of the relevant passages of the report of the Preparatory Commission. This report if adopted by the Assembly would indicate clearly to the Secretary-General the reforms which the Assembly considered should be made in the International Secretariat. If by the next Assembly the Secretary-General could not demonstrate that he had done his best to make these reforms the time would then come for open and forthright criticism of him.

Even if the Assembly did little more than again put its stamp of approval on the provisions contained in the report of the Preparatory Commission the effort would not be wasted. That report sets forth clearly the principles of an impartial, independent and efficient international civil service. Apparently, however, very few of the member States understand the implications of those principles. There would therefore be an advantage once more in putting them on record as favouring them.

ESCOTT REID

340. DEA/2446-A-40

Procès-verbal de la réunion du Comité interministériel sur l'administration des Nations Unies et les questions budgétaires

Minutes of Meeting of Interdepartmental Committee on United Nations Administrative and Budgetary Questions

[Ottawa, n.d.]

The first meeting of the Committee was held at 2.30 p.m. on August 20th in Room 123 of the East Block, at which the following were present:

Mr. Escott Reid (Chairman), Dept. of External Affairs
Mr. R.G. Riddell, Dept. of External Affairs
Mr. Paul Goulet, Dept. of Labour
Mr. C.M. McCord, Dept. of Labour
Dr. G.F. Davidson, Dept. of National Health & Welfare
Mr. J.A. Blais, Dept. of National Health & Welfare
Mr. S. Pollock, Dept. of Finance
Mr. D.S. Robertson, Dept. of Transport
Mr. W.B. Smith, Dept. of Transport
Mr. S. Sim, Dept. of Trade and Commerce
Mr. Paul Pelletier, Privy Council Office
Mr. C.M. Drury (Secretary), Dept. of External Affairs.

2. Mr. Reid, in opening the meeting, emphasized the importance of the Committee as a means of ensuring that Government policy should be represented in a consistent manner in the various organs of the United Nations Organization. In the past, there had been occasions, particularly in relation to the Specialized Agencies, where representatives from different Departments had taken different lines on the same questions. The work of this Committee would be largely devoted to administrative and budgetary questions arising in connection with the United Nations to which Canada had attached great importance from the very founding of the Organization.

3. Dr. Davidson, in commenting on the general work of the Secretariat, said that, in his opinion, it was not as yet functioning satisfactorily. There had been an improvement in efficiency but the volume of work had increased to such a degree that the overall gain in efficiency was nil. In his experience, the Social Affairs Department was particularly weak. He felt that the Specialized Agencies should have wider powers vis-à-vis the Economic and Social Council, as the Secretariat was not sufficiently strong to command the respect of these Agencies. To improve this situation, a five nation committee has been set up to receive suggestions from governments as to ways and means of speeding up the work of the Council.

4. The Committee decided to appoint four sub-committees to examine the questions set forth on the agenda circulated with External Affairs letter of August 18th.[2] These sub-committees are to make interim reports to the main Committee by August 30th. It was recognized that their work could not be completed very rapidly owing to the failure of the United Nations Secretariat to issue certain of the reports of committees on the work to be examined.

[2]Cette lettre ne se trouve pas dans le dossier.
Not located in this file.

5. It was agreed that serious consideration should be given to recommending that the work of the Fifth Committee should be carried out by two sub-committees:

(a) Administrative

(b) Financial and Budgetary

With this in view, the work of the Interdepartmental Committee is being split up accordingly. It was agreed that sub-committees be set up with suggested nominees as follows.

(i) Sub-Committee on Administrative Questions

Chairman:
Mr. E.A. Coté—External Affairs
Members:
A representative of the Civil Service Commission
Mr. T.L. McDermot—External Affairs
A representative from the Treasury Board.

Some matters to be considered:

(a) Examination of the U.K. Working Paper on the United Nations Secretariat.

(b) Are the recommendations of the United Nations Preparatory Commission being effectively implemented?

(c) The introduction of permanent United Nations staff regulations.

(ii) Sub-Committee on the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Scheme

Chairman:
Mr. E.B. Armstrong—Treasury Board
Members:
Mr. A.D. Watson—Dept. of Insurance
Mr. G.L. Gullock—Dept. of Finance
Mr. Hart Clark—Dept. of Finance
Mr. C.R. McCord—Dept. of Labour
Secretary:
A representative from the Dept. of External Affairs.

(iii) Sub-Committee on Budgetary and Financial Relationships with Specialized Agencies

Chairman:
Mr. R.G. Riddell—Dept. of External Affairs
Members:
Mr. B. Blais—Dept. of National Health & Welfare
Mr. L. Rasminsky—Bank of Canada
Mr. H.J. Armstrong—Treasury Board
Mr. C.R. McCord—Dept. of Labour
A representative from the Dept. of Transport
A representative from the Dept. of Finance.
Secretary:
Mr. H.H. Carter—Dept. of External Affairs.

(iv) Sub-Committee on Financial Questions

Chairman:
Mr. Mitchell Sharp—Dept. of Finance

Members:
Mr. S. Pollock—Dept. of Finance
Mr. C.R. McCord—Dept. of Labour
Mr. H.H. Carter—Dept. of External Affairs
Dr. C.M. Isbister—Dominion Bureau of Statistics
A representative from the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury
A representative from the Department of Transport.
Adviser:
The Auditor General.

Matters to be considered:

(a) Budget for the financial year 1947.

(b) Budget estimates for the financial year 1948.

(c) Report of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

(d) Report of the Board of Auditors.

(e) Report of the Committee on Contributions.

(f) Examination of Projected Expenditures for Construction of United Nations Headquarters.

(g) United Nations Permanent Financial Regulations.

(h) Examination of the Method of Appropriating Monies by United Nations and their Budgeting.

6. The Department of Finance will prepare for consideration of the Committee a memorandum on the United Nations tax on income of its personnel and will also report on the proposed means of raising the money required for the construction of United Nations Headquarters.

7. The Secretary of the Committee, Mr. C.M. Drury, Department of External Affairs will assist the chairmen of sub-committees in arranging their meetings.

C.M. DRURY
Secretary

2e PARTIE/PART 2

ÉLECTIONS AU CONSEIL DE SÉCURITÉ
ELECTIONS TO SECURITY COUNCIL

341. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum for Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], April 3, 1947

ELECTIONS TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL AT THE SECOND SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY — SEPTEMBER 20, 1947

When the second session of the General Assembly meets in New York on September 20th, three non-permanent members will be elected to the Security Council to replace the non-permanent members whose terms of two years expire December 31, 1947, (Australia, Brazil and Poland). These countries will not be re-eligible for election. The terms of office of the other three non-permanent members — Belgium, Colombia and Syria — will continue until December 31, 1948.

2. The question arises whether or not Canada desires to seek election as a non-permanent member of the Security Council at the next session of the General Assembly. Although it is, of course, recognized that the Commonwealth does not constitute a "region", Canada or India will be generally regarded as the most appropriate successors to the Australian seat on the basis of "equitable geographical distribution". India, it will be recalled, pressed its candidacy at the last meeting of the Assembly and although it obtained substantial support, it failed of election. It is probable that India will press its candidacy again. (The possibility of New Zealand as a competitor cannot be excluded.)

3. From the experience of the Canadian Delegation at the First Session of the General Assembly, it is apparent that in view of the lobbying of regional groups, it is necessary to make preparation in advance to ensure the fullest support of our candidacy.

4. In deciding whether or not we should take action in advance to prepare the ground for Canada's election to the Security Council certain facts should be borne in mind as regards the advantages and disadvantages of being a member of the Council. The considerations of prestige are obvious. It is also an advantage that Canada should be in a position to participate in some of the most important decisions affecting the maintenance of world peace. It might also be argued that Canada would have a useful contribution to make in remedying the shortcoming of the Council and improving its practises and procedures while the Council is still in a comparatively formative stage of its development. It should also be remembered that the treatment of the problems of disarmament and collective security (implementation of Article 43) is in its planning stage. Canada's interest in general peace and well being might best be served by participation in the work of the Security Council and its subordinate bodies on these questions.

5. On the other hand, membership would carry with it heavy obligations, responsibilities, and certain disadvantages. The Security Council is organized so as to be able to function continuously and representatives on the Council are usually of ministers rank. One obvious consideration then would be that a senior Canadian representative would have to be more or less continuously absent from Canada in order to participate in the work of the Security Council. Representation which in some cases may overlap will also be required on the subsidiary bodies of the Council which include: the Commission on Conventional Armaments, Committee of Experts on the Rules of Procedure, and ad hoc bodies such as the Commission of Investigation in Greece. Canada's membership on the Atomic Energy Commission would not be affected.

6. The role of the non-permanent member of the Security Council, especially at the present time, is not an easy one. Although the Charter imposes the obligation on all members to exercise their responsibilities as members of the Council not in the defence of their own national interests, but in the interests of the United Nations as a whole, this is a position which in practice generally falls to the lot of non-permanent members especially to uphold. Non-permanent members are also expected to help resolve differences which continually arise between the Great Powers. Because of Canada's geographical situation, Canada may be placed in a difficult position in relation to decisions affecting the special interests of the United States or the Soviet Union. It should also be remembered that questions will inevitably arise in the Council which do not involve any direct Canadian interest, but on which Canada will have to take a position for purposes of voting, which may imply or involve a commitment to support a policy the consequences of which may present difficulties to the Canadian Government.

7. It would seem desirable that early consideration be given as to whether we wish to seek election. If it is decided that we should advance our candidacy next September, consideration should be given to the possible action that might be taken.

8. In this connection, I would suggest that possible action might include the following:

1) that it be made generally known through the Missions abroad, and in particular in Washington, London, Paris, Moscow and Chungking that Canada intends to seek election to the Security Council;

2) that steps be taken to inform all Delegations to the United Nations and the United Nations Secretariat;

3) that steps be taken to plan for the strongest possible Canadian Delegation to the General Assembly;

4) that action be taken to set up a Canadian Permanent Mission to the United Nations;

5) that enquiries be made regarding India's and New Zealand's intentions concerning their candidacies in September.

342. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, April 25, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson:

In a recent telephone conversation you suggested to me that I might let you know what my own views were on the question whether we should stand for election to the Security Council next September.

The chief arguments against our standing seem to me to be as follows: (a) The record of achievement of the Security Council is poor, and membership in it for other than the permanent members is not nearly as important from the point of view of influence or prestige as we once thought it would be. (b) It would, nevertheless, be necessary to take our membership seriously and to appoint from our scanty supply a senior and experienced person who would have to spend most of his time on this duty. (c) If we were elected to the Security Council, we would probably have great difficulty in securing re-election to the Economic and Social Council at the following Assembly. Our re-election to that Council is, of course, by no means assured in any case. (d) It is not at all certain that if we stand we shall be successful, and a second defeat following our experience in London in January, 1946, would be distasteful. On the other hand, as the time of the election approaches we ought to be able, if we actively canvass the position, to gage the result so that we could withdraw if defeat seemed probable.

The chief reasons for our standing include: (a) Of the countries which have not hitherto served on the Council, Canada most fully fulfills the condition of contribution to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the organization. (b) To refuse to stand on the ground that the Council is an ineffective body would somewhat impair its prestige and thus weaken the United Nations. (c) There is a possibility that, if we fail to stand, Soviet influence in the Council would be increased as a result of the election of a new member more susceptible to direction from the U.S.S.R. (d) It would be difficult to explain to the Canadian people why Canada is not a candidate without taking the line that we consider it not worth our while to sit in the Council in view of its ineffectiveness. (e) We may not get as good a chance of election in 1948 or in 1949 as in 1947. (f) Both the United Kingdom and United States would probably like to see us on the Council next year and would regret that the British Commonwealth should be represented on it only by the United Kingdom, which might well be the outcome if we do not run. (g) If the Council does begin to make progress, it should have before it next year questions of very substantial importance to us relating to disarmament and the control of atomic energy among others.

On balance I reach the reluctant conclusion that we ought to announce our candidature and seek election. I think, however, that it would not take a great deal of pressure to argue me out of this position.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

343. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Head, Second Political Division

[Ottawa], April 26, 1947

With reference to the attached memorandum from Ignatieff[3] on our candidature for the Security Council, I think that the time has come now when we should prepare a fairly complete memorandum for the Minister on this subject putting the pros and cons, so that the Government can take a decision. My own feeling is that, though there is a good deal to be said for staying off the Security Council for another year, nevertheless, abstention at this time might be misinterpreted in the country and also might mean far more than abstention for a year. It might prejudice our chances for election for several years. On the whole, therefore, I feel that we should stand, if it is our considered judgment that our candidature would be successful.

[3]Document 341.

L.B. P[EARSON]

344. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Ambassador in United States
to Head, Second Political Division

SECRET AND PERSONAL Washington, May 8, 1947

Dear Escott [Reid]:

I am returning herewith the draft memorandum on our candidacy to the Security Council which you enclosed with your letter of May 5th.[4] I have made some suggested changes largely of a verbal character in your draft. The principal change of substance is that I am dubious about our putting forward the suggestions for discussion at the 1947 Assembly which you list in your paragraph 19(6).

I think, however, that it would be wise for you to include in the memorandum some considerations which you have omitted. If I judge correctly the attitude of Mr. King and Mr. St. Laurent, the principal reason why they are both reluctant to agree that we should seek election to the Security Council is because they think that the Security Council has become a pretty futile body. One can make out a strong supporting case for this view and your memorandum would be more persuasive if it listed among the reasons against our standing, and at the head of the list, doubts about the influence we could exercise or the prestige we could gain from our election. If I am right in thinking that this is much in the minds of the responsible Ministers, the omission of any reference to it in putting up what purports to be a balanced argument would make them regard the memorandum as a piece of special pleading.

An addition of this type would make desirable modification of the position taken in your paragraph 9. I doubt myself that in fact "the paramount necessity of strengthening the United Nations" is any longer in the minds of Ministers a basic principle of Canadian policy. They may do lip service to this view in public and they may hope that it will eventually be realized, but they are not likely to allow it to influence their judgment in deciding whether to stand for election this year.

---

[4]Pour la version finale, voir la pièce jointe au document suivant.
For the final version see enclosure, immediately following document.

As I said in my letter to Mike [Pearson] of April 25th, my reluctant conclusion is that we ought to stand. I did not add that I should be relieved if we failed to stand for election or even if we stood and were defeated. That is, nevertheless, my feeling at present. My main reason is that we have more constructive things to do during the next two years with our limited resources of skill and manpower than to devote a considerable portion of them to representation on the Security Council.

Yours sincerely,

H. W[RONG]

345. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], May 31, 1947

Since it would seem desirable that a decision be reached fairly soon on whether Canada is going to stand for election to the Security Council in September, I have had the enclosed memorandum prepared in the Department on the pros and cons.

I have had the memorandum prepared in the form of a memorandum for Cabinet in case you wish to bring the matter before Cabinet. If you do wish to do this, could you let me know what changes you would like to have made in the memorandum and I will then have copies of the revised memorandum made for distribution to Cabinet.

The memorandum does not contain any recommendation. My own feeling is that the arguments for standing outweigh the arguments against standing. On balance, therefore, I reach the conclusion that we ought to announce our candidacy and seek election.[5]

L.B. P[EARSON]

[5]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
I think a memorandum should go to the P[rime] M[inister] for his comment before distribution to the members of Cabinet. It seems to me that the decision is one of major importance and we should have the P.M.'s considered views before distribution to Cabinet. St. L[aurent]

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Note pour le Cabinet

Memorandum for Cabinet

SECRET Ottawa, May 30, 1947

POSSIBLE CANDIDACY BY CANADA FOR THE SECURITY COUNCIL

It is desirable that a decision be reached fairly soon on whether Canada is going to stand for election to the Security Council in September of this year. If we are going to stand, the sooner we announce our candidacy and take appropriate steps to rally support, the better will be our chances of election. It would be unfortunate if a decision to stand were not made until just before the September Assembly and we were to stand without having taken adequate precautions to minimize the chances of being unsuccessful.

Arguments against standing

2. The record of achievement of the Security Council is poor, and membership in it for other than the permanent members is not as important from the point of view of influence or prestige as we once thought it would be.

3. Members of the Council are required by the Charter "to be represented at all times at the seat of the Organization" so that the Council may "be able to function continuously". We would therefore have to appoint a representative to the Council who would reside in New York and spend most of his time on that duty. (From time to time, on very important occasions, his place on the Council might have to be occupied temporarily by a specially designated representative, usually the Secretary of State for External Affairs.) We would want our permanent representative to be someone who would be a credit to Canada. He would have to possess the qualities which would fit him for appointment to the headship of one of our most important missions. Dr. van Kleffens of the Netherlands and Mr. Hasluck of Australia have set a high standard as representatives of temporary members of the Security Council.

4. Our representative on the Council (who would also presumably be head of our permanent mission to the United Nations) would require an adequate staff. Membership on the Security Council carries with it membership on the Commission on Conventional Disarmament, the Committee of Experts on Rules of Procedure, and numerous ad hoc committees which are formed from time to time. Some idea of the size of the permanent Canadian mission which might be required is indicated by the size of the missions of two comparable countries which are now members of the Security Council — Australia and Belgium. Each mission is composed of an ambassador and six officers, together with subordinate staff. The subordinate staff at the Australian mission numbers twelve, at the Belgian mission, fourteen. Australia and Belgium are members of the Trusteeship Council as well as the Security Council. We would, for at least one year, be members of the Economic and Social Council as well as the Security Council. The advantage which we have over Australia and Belgium of proximity to New York would be, in part at least, offset by the fact that the burden of membership in the Economic and Social Council is heavier than the burden of membership on the Trusteeship Council. It seems probable, therefore, that we would have to appoint a mission about the size of the Australian or Belgian missions.

5. If we were elected to the Security Council, the work in the Department would be considerably increased. Our representative on the Council would constantly require informed advice and carefully thought-out instructions not only on matters which involve direct Canadian interests but on other matters which arise in the Council and on which Canada would have to take a position at least for purposes of voting. Decisions (sometimes on short notice) will have to be made by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and a number of questions will be of sufficient importance to warrant consideration by Cabinet.

6. We placed ourselves formally on record at the Assembly last autumn as holding the view that the Charter has "imposed on each individual member of the Security Council the obligation to exercise its rights and responsibilities as a member of the Council, not in defence of its own special national interests but in defence of the interests of the United Nations as a whole" and that "this applies to the votes which a member casts in the Security Council as well as to its other actions in the Council." For this and for other obvious reasons it would be difficult for us to defend frequent abstentions from speaking or voting on delicate political issues or following a line too dependent upon that followed by the United Kingdom or the United States. During a two-year period of membership on the Security Council it is likely that occasions will arise when, if we cast our votes in defence of what we consider to be the interests of the United Nations as a whole, we shall have to vote against both the United Kingdom and the United States perhaps on matters which they consider to affect their special interests. When the United Kingdom and the United States find themselves on opposite sides, we shall have to vote against one or the other. So long as relations between the United States and the Soviet Union remain as bad as they are today, we shall likewise be involved in the struggle in the Security Council between the United States and its supporters on the one side and the Soviet Union and its satellites on the other.

7. Our term of office in the Economic and Social Council expires at the end of 1948. If we are elected to the Security Council, our chances of being re-elected to the Economic and Social Council will be less than they otherwise would be in view of the widely-held belief in the doctrine of sharing the honours. Our re-election to the Economic and Social Council is, of course, by no means assured in any case.

8. It is not at all certain that, if we stand for the Security Council, we shall be successful. The other principal contenders for the place vacated by Australia may be India and New Zealand. If they stand, their argument will be that failure to elect one of them will mean that the whole vast area composed of Australasia, Africa and that part of Asia lying south of China and the Arab states will be unrepresented on the Council. A second defeat, following our experience in London in January 1946, would be distasteful.

Arguments for standing

9. One of the basic principles of Canadian foreign policy as stated by the government is the paramount necessity of strengthening the United Nations as an instrument for maintaining international peace and security. The Security Council is the organ of the U.N. which has the primary responsibility for carrying out this task. It has not so far given much evidence of ability to discharge its responsibility effectively but the chances of its being more effective in future will be diminished if responsible states are unwilling to accept membership on it.

10. Canada has consistently fought for the functional principle of representation on bodies like the Security Council and was successful in having written into the Charter the provision that, in the elections of non-permanent members of the Security Council, special regard should be paid to "the contribution of Members of the United Nations to the maintenance of international peace and security and to the other purposes of the Organization." Of the states which have not hitherto served on the Council, Canada most fully meets this criterion of election. It would be inconsistent for us to fight for the functional principle and then refuse to accept the consequences of its application. "Willingness to accept international responsibilities" has been stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs as one of the basic principles of Canadian foreign policy. It would be difficult to reconcile this principle with an unwillingness to accept the responsibilities of membership on the Security Council.

11. At the Assembly in 1946, Canada played a leading role in urging reforms in the practices and procedures of the Security Council. Membership on the Council would give us an opportunity to press for the adoption of these reforms while the Council is still in the formative stage of its development.

12. At the Assembly in 1946, Canada played a leading role in the disarmament discussions and constantly stressed the importance of disarmament and of the related question of the special military agreements. Membership on the Council would carry with it membership on the Commission on Conventional Disarmament. Membership on the Council would also give us complete equality with the other members of the Atomic Energy Commission when questions of the control of atomic energy are discussed by the Security Council. Canada's interest in general peace and well-being might best be served by membership on the Council during the years 1948 and 1949 when the study of the problems of disarmament and collective security will be in their planning stage.

13. It would be difficult to explain to the Canadian people why Canada is not a candidate for the Security Council without taking the line that we consider it not worth our while to sit on the Council in view of its ineffectiveness. Moreover, to refuse to stand on this ground would serve further to impair the prestige of the Council and thus weaken the United Nations.

14. The Security Council has begun to make progress since the low ebb it reached in the summer of 1946. For example, the veto has only been used once since September and the permanent members have agreed that they can abstain from voting without by so doing vetoing a proposal. If the Council continues to make progress, membership on the Council during the years 1948 and 1949 would enable us to participate in some of the most important decisions affecting the maintenance of world peace.

15. If we fail to stand for the Council, the choice might not fall on New Zealand but on India or on some other state which would be more susceptible to the influence of the U.S.S.R. than Canada. Soviet strength on the Council in 1948 may in any event be considerable: Poland's place will no doubt be filled by another Soviet satellite; Syria tends to follow a pro-Soviet line; Chile, which has a strong communist party, may succeed Brazil; French policy on the Council is at times affected by the strength of the French communist party. If India were elected and severed its connection with the Commonwealth in June 1948, the only Commonwealth member of the Council during India's tenure of office would be the United Kingdom. This would clearly be regretted by both the United Kingdom and the United States.

16. Though our election in 1947 is not certain, our chances in 1948 or in 1949 might be worse. Certainly if New Zealand were elected this year, we would have little chance in 1948 since our election that year would mean three Commonwealth seats on the Council during 1949. By September 1949 our chances would be lessened by increases in the number of other middle powers in the United Nations (e.g., Italy) and by the possible admission of newly independent states from South-Eastern Asia (e.g., Indonesia and Burma) which might put up a strong claim for membership as representatives of South-East Asia.

346. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le premier secrétaire du haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni au chef de la Première direction politique

First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom, to Head, First Political Division

SECRET London, July 22, 1947

Dear Mr. Riddell,

I should like to refer to my letter of July 3rd,† addressed to Mr. Reid, concerning the views of the United Kingdom on elections to the Security Council. I regret that this letter was addressed to Mr. Reid rather than to you, in a fit of absent-mindedness.

Both the Foreign Office and the Commonwealth Relations Office are continuing to express an interest in our views on candidates. The subject was also raised with me by Mr. Haydon,[6] the Australian External Affairs Officer in London. Mr. Haydon, incidentally, indicated that Dr. Evatt did not look at all favourably upon informal efforts on the part of the Foreign Office to discuss candidates. His reply was that Australia did not approve of "tickets". In view of Dr. Evatt's well-known political skill, his attitude on this matter is viewed somewhat sardonically in Whitehall. Dr. Evatt, I gather, makes no bones about the historical origins of his attitude. His strong feelings on the subject go back to the first Assembly. According to the Australians, Dr. Evatt at that time made some suggestions to the United Kingdom about candidates, and received a reprobation couched in a lofty moral tone. However, when Dr. Evatt came to the Assembly he found that the United Kingdom had drawn up a ticket which, of course, did not include Australia, and were canvassing hard.

[6]Peter Haydon.

Shannon,[7] of the Commonwealth Relations Office, again asked me to have a talk with him about candidates. You may be interested in his summary of the present state of United Kingdom thinking on the matter, although there is little to add to what I have already reported.

For the Security Council the United Kingdom hope that Canada will succeed Australia. They have apparently given up their idea of supporting the Argentine to succeed Brazil, in view of the controversy which exists about the qualifications of that country. Uruguay is now their favourite, but they will have to wait to see whether the Latin-Americans themselves agree on another candidate. To succeed Poland they think that Czechoslovakia is the least of the Slav evils. What is worrying them, however, is what they should do if both Canada and India are candidates. They will certainly support Canada ahead of India, but they are naturally anxious not to oppose the Indians if this can be avoided. It is not impossible that they would support both Canada and India and no Slav country at all. The difficulty here, of course, is that the Slav bloc might vote for India instead of Canada, and the additional support for India of the United Kingdom and its friends could possibly result in the elimination of Canada. These are the dilemmas which are recognized but as yet unsolved.

As for the Economic and Social Council, the United Kingdom take it for granted that both the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. should be re-elected. There will presumably be another Latin-American state to succeed Cuba. If it is politically practicable they would like to support Argentina, and I understand that this move is strongly favoured by the Board of Trade. The alternative would be Brazil. To succeed Norway they tend to prefer Denmark to Sweden or Iceland, in view of the fact that Denmark was an original member of the United Nations. (The fact that trade relations between the United Kingdom and Denmark are in some ways as delicate as those between the United Kingdom and the Argentine might be an additional reason, although Shannon did not mention this factor.) To succeed Czechoslovakia they consider that Poland would be in this situation the least of the Slav evils. (It is obvious that the disposition here is to give Tito no support at all, an attitude which is no doubt shared even more strongly in Washington.)

If India does not go on the Security Council the United Kingdom would like to see India re-elected to the Economic and Social Council. In fact, if it could be done tactfully, they would like, I think, to persuade the Indians to devote their attention to the Economic and Social Council rather than to the Security Council. Shannon mentioned to me the fact that when Belgium was elected to the Security Council

[7]G.E.B. Shannon.

Belgium had given up its seat on the Economic and Social Council to the Netherlands. This, he pointed out, was done in special circumstances in order to conclude a duel between Turkey and the Netherlands. If, as is not unlikely, Canada is elected to the Security Council, we should find ourselves in the position of being the first non-permanent member to be represented simultaneously on the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council. Shannon was careful not to imply in any way what the United Kingdom thought we should do in a circumstance of this kind, but they are curious, I think, to know the trend of our thinking.

Consideration is also being given here to membership of the Trusteeship Council. In view of the fact that the United States has now accepted trusteeship in former Japanese islands, the United States will become an administrative rather than a non-administrative member of the Trusteeship Council. There will therefore be six administrative members and only four non-administrative members. Accordingly, two more non-administrative members must be chosen. As the U.S.S.R. and the Slav States have all boycotted the Trusteeship Council, there is no intention here of supporting a Slav member on the Council. The United Kingdom has not got very far with its plans, but is thinking in terms of a Western European and Scandinavian, or possibly a Latin-American, State. They are also thinking that India might be a member.

I shall continue to keep in touch with the United Kingdom authorities on this subject. They are obviously very anxious to keep in touch with us. The views expressed by Mr. Shannon, I should add, are similar to those which have been expressed by Mr. Gore Booth,[8] of the Foreign Office. However, they are still only "official" views and not the determined policy of the Government.

Yours sincerely,

J.W. HOLMES

347. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Extrait d'une lettre du haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni au chef de la Première direction politique[9]

Extract from Letter from High Commission in United Kingdom to Head, First Political Division[9]

SECRET AND PERSONAL London, July 24, 1947

Dear Gerry [Riddell],

In your letter of 15th July† you referred to my letter of 3rd July to Escott Reid,† concerning elections to the Security Council. I am very sorry to have addressed

---

[8]Paul Henry Gore-Booth, membre, délégation du Royaume-Uni à la deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
Paul Henry Gore-Booth, member, Delegation of United Kingdom to Second Session of General Assembly of United Nations.

[9]La page 4 du document manque.
Page 4 of the document is missing.

several letters on United Nations affairs to Escott. Although I am perfectly aware of your responsibilities in this matter, it is difficult for me to cease connecting Escott with the United Nations, and I shall probably make continuing slips of this kind.

Thank you for the confidential information about the progress of the memorandum concerning Canadian membership on the Security Council. The more I consider the matter the more deplorable I think would be a decision on our part not to be a candidate. We need have no illusions about the attitude which would be taken by the United Kingdom and, I think, by all the other countries which we respect. This attitude would be, to put the matter quite bluntly, one of contempt. The officials to whom I talk here find it incredible that there should be any question about our being a candidate. They are, as usual, very polite and imply no criticism. If we decided not to run, I am sure they would express sympathetic understanding and leave the matter at that. However, our by no means inconsiderable prestige would slump almost irretrievably. The most unfortunate aspect is that it would be our best friends who would be disappointed in us. They have not forgotten our staunch fight for functional principles when the United Nations was established, and they supported our candidature for the Security Council on our own grounds.

It seems to me that a refusal on our part to accept the responsibilities of membership on the Security Council would cut the ground from under our feet. For people like us, who must spend a good deal of their time defending Canadian foreign policy, it would be a cause of the greatest embarrassment because it would give the lie to our arguments. For example, one of the arguments frequently used here by "The Sunday Times" school of Imperialist thought is that Canada's protestations of devotion to the United Nations and to internationalist principles as the bases of our foreign policy are a form of escapism and an excuse to avoid practical commitments within the Commonwealth. Whereas I should not agree that even if we refused to stand for the Security Council "The Sunday Times" would necessarily be right in the deductions it would make, nevertheless our argument that devotion to the United Nations was sincere on our part would be proved hypocrisy. Our entire defence of Canadian policy has been that we have sought to support the United Nations by solid constructive contributions, that our role was less spectacular than that of Australia, but in the end, perhaps, more useful. How could we dare to use such an argument if we stayed off the Security Council? What, for instance, would we say if we refused to run because of the strain on our manpower and other practical difficulties, and the ball was passed to New Zealand to carry?

I don't mean to suggest that I do not understand the practical problems involved. A crushing load would be added to the Department, but I for one am prepared to face the prospect of still more overtime without pay which will be the consequence for all of us. There is another aspect to this question which Douglas[10] and I were developing in discussion recently. Our having a representative on the Security Council would make a great difference to the morale of our officers abroad who spend a good deal of their time reporting international politics which impinge only very indirectly on Canadian policy. If we were members of the Security Council [10]Probablement D.V. LePan, premier secrétaire, haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni.

Probably D.V. LePan, First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom.

the reports from Athens, or Prague, or even London, would be much less academic. We should have an increased sense of responsibility for what we say. I do not mean to suggest that such reporting is at the moment irresponsible, but it would be good for all of us to realize that serious action may result from our interpretations. I think that in the same way the attitude of the Canadian people to international politics would be affected.

You will pardon me, I trust, for this sermon. I am sure that I preach to the converted. However, I have been very much worried and not a little embarrassed by the indecision in Ottawa on this subject, and it is somewhat of a relief to get these thoughts on paper.

The second paragraph of your letter referred to my enquiry about the possible candidature of Paul Martin for the Chairmanship of the Economic and Social Council.[11] This matter has now been settled, and I did not think it worth while going very deep into the origins of the enquiry. Cockram[12] had raised the matter with me, but I gather from subsequent comments that he was insufficiently informed at the time. We can therefore, I think, forget this minor incident. It does illustrate, however, the respect which the United Kingdom officials have for Paul Martin, which is frequently expressed.

. . .

348. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note du chef de la Première direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, First Political Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], August 1, 1947

RE SECURITY COUNCIL

On Thursday, July 31st, I gave Mr. St. Laurent the attached memorandum† in regard to the candidacy for the Security Council. He handed it back to me to-day saying that he had not had time to discuss it with the Prime Minister. He suggested, therefore, that you might take the matter up with Mr. King in his absence.[13]

We have been meanwhile receiving renewed indications of the pressure which we shall be under from abroad to stand for membership. Both the United States and French delegates to the Economic and Social Council have informed Mr. Martin

[11]Voir le document 389./See Document 389.

[12]Ben Cockram, conseiller, ambassade du Royaume-Uni aux États-Unis; conseiller, délégations à l'Assemblée générale, au Conseil de sécurité et au Conseil économique et social des Nations Unies. Ben Cockram, Counsellor, Embassy of United Kingdom in United States; Adviser, Delegations to General Assembly, Security Council and Economic and Social Council of United Nations.

[13]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
done. L.B. P[earson]

that we are expected to stand. There are indications from both Washington and Canada House that the subject is being raised continually in both those places.

R.G. RIDDELL

349. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1263 Ottawa, August 7, 1947

Repeat to Chargé d'Affaires, Paris, No. 347; Chargé d'Affaires, Washington, No. EX-2040.

Following for Acting High Commissioner from Pearson, Begins: For your information, Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs have agreed that Canada should be a candidate to take Australia's place on the Security Council at the forthcoming elections. Ends.

350. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le premier secrétaire du haut-commissariat au Royaume-Uni
au chef de la Première direction politique

First Secretary, High Commission in United Kingdom, to Head, First Political Division

CONFIDENTIAL London, August 9, 1947

Dear Mr. Riddell,

The subject of candidates for the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council is one which consistently comes up in my conversations with United Kingdom and other Commonwealth officers in London.

Now that we are almost certain to be candidates for the Security Council, and India is unlikely to be, there has arisen in the minds of some people here concern over the number of Commonwealth members of, and candidates for, the Economic and Social Council. The view here is that if India does not run for the Security Council she is almost certain to be an eager candidate for the Economic and Social Council. Australia is definitely a vigorous candidate for the Council. New Zealand is already a member, and so is Canada. The Australians, I believe, are very anxious to know our intentions with regard to the Economic and Social Council if we are elected to the Security Council.

The United Kingdom, remembering that we have in the past strongly advocated the right of a non-Great Power to be a member of both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council, take for granted that we will not resign from the Economic and Social Council if we are elected to the Security Council. There is, of course, the embarrassing precedent set last year by Belgium, and we might find ourselves under some pressure to give up our seat to Australia or India. There has been no suggestion to me by any of the United Kingdom officials that they think we ought to do so, although perhaps their relations with Australia and India might be eased by a gesture of this kind on our part. Peter Haydon, the Australian External Affairs officer in London, has asked me about our intentions, but has not made any suggestions as to what we ought to do.

I had a talk with Mr. Robertson yesterday about this matter. He was strongly of the opinion that we should not resign from the Economic and Social Council if we are elected to the Security Council. If a situation should arise in which we might be requested to make a beau geste in favour of Australia it could always be recalled that we had performed one gesture already in favour of Australia at the first Assembly. In the absence of any evidence, however, it would be unfair for me to assume that the Australians are expecting anything of the kind.

Yours sincerely,

J.W. HOLMES

351. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire par intérim au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Acting High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1314 Ottawa, August 15, 1947

Repeat to Canberra No. 133; New Delhi No. 139; Wellington No. 181; Pretoria No. 75; Buenos Aires No. 121; Brussels No. 158; Rio de Janeiro No. 90; Santiago No. 49; Nanking No. 192; Paris No. 361; Athens No. 91; Mexico City No. 119; The Hague No. 87; Lima No. 43; Washington No. EX-2142; Prague No. 37; Warsaw No. 30; Stockholm No. 28; Moscow No. 169; Oslo No. 94; Havana No. 61.

Please inform the government to which you are accredited that Canada will be a candidate for election to the Security Council at the meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations next month and that we would welcome their sympathetic consideration of our candidature. You should not repeat not ask for a pledge of support since in similar circumstances our policy is not, repeat not, to give any pledge in advance of an election.

352. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM WA-2628 Washington, August 18, 1947

Reference your EX-2142.[14]

I have informed the State Department that Canada will be a candidate for election to the Security Council at the meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations in September.

2. As I told the Under-Secretary by telephone two or three days ago, I was asked by Mr. Hickerson last week whether or not we would be a candidate. When I said that I thought that in all likelihood we would be, Mr. Hickerson expressed great satisfaction and said that in so far as the United States is concerned they were very anxious indeed to see us elected. In the circumstances he added United States support of our candidature could be purchased very cheap.

353. DEA/5475-CX-1-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures
pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], August 22, 1947

We have been making some informal enquiries in Washington and London concerning our candidacy for the Security Council. In both places reference has been made to the fact that, if we were elected to the Security Council, we would then for a short term be members of both the Security Council and the Economic and Social Council.

In the State Department it was assumed that membership by Canada on both Councils simultaneously would be natural and unobjectionable. Neither was objection raised in the Foreign Office to simultaneous membership, and the United Kingdom authorities do not expect us to resign from the Economic and Social Council if we are elected to the Security Council. It was suggested, however, that we might be pressed by the Australians to resign from the Economic and Social Council in order to make our place available for them.

It is not yet certain, of course, that the Australians will expect us to resign from the Economic and Social Council in their favour, if we are elected to the Security Council, but I see no reason why we should contemplate doing so. We have already [14]Le document précédent./The preceding document.

withdrawn once in order to give place to the Australians and I do not see why they should expect us to do so again, and neither do I see why we should give countenance to the view that none but the Great Powers should sit on more than one Council.[15]

I am sending a similar note to the Prime Minister.

L.B. P[EARSON]

354. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le chef de la Première direction politique au conseiller à l'ambassade en France

Head, First Political Division, to Counsellor, Embassy in France

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, August 25, 1947

Dear Charles [Ritchie]:

I have your letter of August 20th† and I shall do my best to keep you fully posted in regard to Canadian candidature for the Security Council. A telegram, similar to the one which you received in Paris was sent to all other Canadian missions abroad and the replies are now coming in. For the most part they are most encouraging and I should think we could count on the full support of both the United Kingdom and the United States. We have not yet received any indication in regard to the intentions of India, nor are we sure whether New Zealand may be a candidate for Australia's place.

Some time within the next few days we shall be having an analysis of the replies made and I will let you know the result.

The names of the delegation will probably be announced within the next two or three days. We are abandoning, temporarily at least, the old principle of multi-party delegations and this year the delegates and alternates will be either members of the Government or their parliamentary supporters or officials. There will be a new category of parliamentary advisers which will include members of the Opposition Parties. This change will be made so that Opposition Leaders will not be asked to accept responsibility for the Government's policy at the General Assembly and the announcement will be made to that effect. I must say that, personally, I am glad of this change because it always seemed to me that the multi-party delegation was not fully consistent with our constitutional system. On the other hand, we may have some difficulty in trying to find appropriate occupations for these parliamentary advisers when they reach New York. The list will include, by the way, Mr. Low[16] of the Social Credit Party.

[15]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree. St. L[aurent]

Yours sincerely,
R.G. RIDDELL

355. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Le chargé d'affaires en Tchécoslovaquie
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Chargé d'Affaires in Czechoslovakia
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Prague, August 27, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

I can add a few lines to our telegram No. 47† of August 20 about Canada's candidature for election to the Security Council. I was on an official visit to Slovakia at the time, and the call at the Foreign Ministry was made by Mr. McCordick.[17]

I saw Masaryk, the Foreign Minister, yesterday, and he said that he would be glad to give Canada's candidature any little push that was within his power. He went on to remark that some countries seem to go out of their way to look for trouble and embarrassment. He himself had no intention of seeking membership on the Security Council for Czechoslovakia, which would be a prolonged series of headaches. It would be bad enough if such greatness were thrust unwillingly on his country. "Imagine what fun it would be," he said, "to sit there and hold up your hand whenever the Russians asked you to."

I think that if left to themselves the Czechoslovaks would gladly support Canada's election to the Security Council. Should the U.S.S.R. be opposed, however, it would be reasonable to anticipate the evaporation of Czechoslovak support. It will be surprising if the Soviet authorities give any indication of their views until the serious campaigning gets under way in the wide-open spaces of Lake Success and the smoke-filled rooms of Manhattan.

A copy of this letter has been sent to Moscow.

Yours sincerely,
R.M. MACDONNELL

[16]Solon Low, chef national du Parti du Crédit social et leader en Chambre.
Solon Low, national leader, Social Credit Party, and leader in House of Commons.
[17]J.A. McCordick, deuxième secrétaire, légation en Tchécoslovaquie.
J.A. McCordick, Second Secretary, Legation in Czechoslovakia.

356. CH/Vol. 2104

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1394 Ottawa, September 1, 1947

SECRET

Following for Holmes from Riddell, Begins: Elections to United Nations Councils. We have been considering in the Department the policy to be adopted by the Canadian delegation in respect to filling of vacancies on United Nations Councils and have come to the following tentative conclusions.

2. Security Council: (A) Canada to replace Australia. (B) To replace Brazil we shall probably have no effective alternative to accepting the nominee put forward by the Latin American Republics unless the nomination is a completely unsatisfactory one. (C) The Ukraine might be supported to replace Poland. Consideration is being given to the other two possible candidates Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. Czechoslovak member of Economic and Social Council has indicated to us that Czechoslovakia does not desire membership which would impose on her embarrassment of publicly and continuously adopting the Soviet line. This seems to us a reasonable view and we would not wish to force Czechoslovakia into position that would crystalize her position as a Soviet satellite. Yugoslavia in view of its activities in the Balkan dispute and in the light of its censure by the majority of the Security Council does not appear to be a suitable candidate. Some thought has been given to supporting a possible move by non-satellite countries to elect a non-satellite successor to Poland. This however would probably only provoke the USSR into further efforts to safeguard its position in United Nations without materially altering position in Security Council.

3. Economic and Social Council: We might support for re-election India, Czechoslovakia, the USSR and the United Kingdom. To replace Cuba we might consider nominee of the Latin American Republics if country put forward were reasonable one. To replace Norway, Sweden might be a suitable choice.

4. Trusteeship Council: To fill the two vacancies consideration is being given to Denmark which has had experience in Colonial administration. Perhaps Pakistan should be considered as representing one of the large regional groups not now represented.

5. You may wish to make use of this information in conversations with Foreign Office but should indicate its tentative and unofficial character. We should be grateful for comments. Ends.

357. CH/Vol. 2104

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Secretary of State for External Affairs to High Commissioner in United Kingdom

TELEGRAM 1417 Ottawa, September 5, 1947

SECRET

Following for Pearson, Begins: The High Commissioner for Australia called to ask me if we would be prepared to support Australia for election to the Economic and Social Council. He also hinted that we might be prepared to resign in favour of Australia.

2. I said that we would be quite happy to support Australia for Economic and Social Council but that we would not consider withdrawing ourselves before the end of our term. We should not like to see precedent established that no States other than Big Five should be members of more than one Council, nor would we wish to see view prevail that one seat should be passed around amongst members of the Commonwealth. We are intending therefore to stay out our term in the Economic and Social Council even though elected to the Security Council.

358. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum for Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], September 8, 1947

CANADIAN CANDIDACY FOR SECURITY COUNCIL

All the members of the United Nations with the exception of the Ukraine and Byelorussia have been notified that Canada will be a candidate for election to the Security Council and that we would welcome sympathetic consideration of our candidacy. No pledge of support has been requested as we are unwilling to give reciprocal undertakings. This notification has been made in one of the following ways: directly through our missions abroad, through the Heads of foreign delegations in New York, through the Canadian Embassy in Washington and, in three instances, through Heads of foreign missions in Ottawa.

2. As of Sunday, September 7th, the following information has been received indicating support or otherwise:

(a) Brazil, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, France, Greece, Mexico, Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom and the United States have given indications that they will support our election. Especially interesting is the information dated September 5th from Chile that Canada's name has been "added" to a list of special countries which Chile will support for election.

(b) Cuba, India, New Zealand, Norway and Sweden have promised sympathetic consideration with Norway the most enthusiastic of this group.

(c) The U.S.S.R. has undertaken to draw to the attention of the Soviet Delegation the fact that we are standing for election.

C.M. DRURY

359. W.L.M.K./Vol. 343

Communiqué de presse du ministère des Affaires extérieures

Press Release by Department of External Affairs

No. 43 Ottawa, October 1, 1947

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

TEXT OF A STATEMENT BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE LOUIS S. ST. LAURENT ON THE OCCASION OF THE ELECTION OF CANADA TO THE SECURITY COUNCIL OF THE UNITED NATIONS

Canada's election to the Security Council of the United Nations confronts the Government and people of Canada with new and grave responsibilities. During the years 1948 and 1949, the Government will be faced, as never before, with the necessity of making decisions on the major questions affecting the peace and security of the world. Many of these questions will arise from situations having their origins far from our shores. At first glance these might not appear to affect directly the interests of the Canadian people. In so far, however, as these far away events are factors in world security, they are of first importance to the future of this country.

2. During our tenure of office on the Council we shall be obliged to play our part in trying to settle international disputes many of which are complicated by differences between the Great Powers. One has only to read the front page of any newspaper to-day to realize the magnitude of the job to which we are about to put our hands.

3. Canada will be one of the eleven states on which will rest the main responsibility for overcoming the obstacles on the road to a just and lasting peace. We shall have to stand up and be counted before the eyes of a hopeful world.

4. A year ago the Canadian Government made known to its fellow Members of the United Nations the cardinal principle which it considered should determine the actions of a member of the Security Council. We maintained that each member should exercise its rights and responsibilities not in its own special national interests, but for the good of the United Nations as a whole, and the peoples of the world the United Nations represents. The States which yesterday elected Canada on a first ballot knew that this was our conception of the duty of a member of the most important executive organ of the United Nations. To the utmost of our ability and in full consciousness of the weaknesses of the machinery with which we will have to deal, Canada undertakes to live up to this principle and to try to justify this trust.

5. Under the terms of the Charter, the Security Council is organized so as to be able to function continuously. Each member is, therefore, to be represented at all times at the headquarters of the United Nations. This will involve the appointment by the Canadian Government of a permanent representative living in New York. The experience of other non-permanent members of the Council has shown that our representative will need the assistance of at least six experienced officers of the Department of External Affairs, together with an adequate clerical staff. At the same time, we shall have to strengthen the Division of my Department which deals with the problems of the United Nations. Reports from Canadian diplomatic missions abroad will become increasingly important and will have to be widened in scope to give us up-to-date information on which to base considered and independent judgments. All this will be an added burden on a Department of Government which is already carrying a heavy load.

6. It is now more important than ever that the people of Canada understand the serious obligations and responsibilities which this country accepted when it signed the Charter of the United Nations. Our election to the Security Council brings us face to face with the heaviest of these responsibilities.

360. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division, to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], October 2, 1947

I was talking to Mr. Pearson this morning on the telephone and he asked me to mention to you a possibility which had occurred to him of a contribution which we might make to resolve the deadlock in New York over the elections to the Security Council.

2. As you know, the Assembly has now had nine ballots on the elections to the Security Council. Canada and Argentina were elected on the first ballot. The voting on the eight subsequent ballots has been restricted to India and the Ukraine; neither of them has been able to secure the necessary two-thirds majority. The voting has fluctuated slightly. The Ukraine vote has varied between 29 and 34 and the Indian vote between 22 and 25. On the ninth ballot the Ukraine obtained 32 votes and India 24.

3. Elections to the Economic and Social Council were completed after four ballots. The states elected were Brazil, the United Kingdom, Denmark, the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, Australia, and Poland. India was eliminated on the second ballot. It got 15 votes on the first ballot and only 10 on the second.

4. I gather from what Mr. Pearson said to me this morning that no way out of the deadlock between the Ukraine and India is opening up in New York.

5. It has, therefore, occurred to Mr. Pearson that we might resolve the deadlock by informing India that we would be willing to resign from the Economic and Social Council in order to permit India to be elected to that Council on condition that India withdraw from the race for the Security Council. This course is not open to the same objections as would have been a commitment, in advance, by us to Australia to resign from the Economic and Social Council if Australia was not one of the six states elected. That would have been open to the objection that it constituted a pre-election deal which we had made in order to get Australian support for our candidacy to the Security Council. It would, moreover, have prevented us from establishing the precedent which we have now established — that a state other than one of the Big Five can be elected to the Security Council even though it is already a member of the Economic and Social Council.

6. The following considerations have occurred to me since speaking to Mr. Pearson. It is clearly in the long-run interest of the United Nations that a Soviet satellite should be elected to the Security Council at this session of the Assembly. However, Mr. Manuilsky[18] would presumably be the representative of the Ukraine on the Security Council and would make confusion in the Council even more confounded than it is at present. Consequently, it would be better if Byelorussia were elected to the Security Council instead of the Ukraine. (The technical difficulty in the way could be overcome by an immediate revision or suspension of the existing rule of procedure which limits the voting to the Ukraine and India.)

7. It might, therefore, be that, if we are willing to make the concession of resigning from the Economic and Social Council in order to solve the deadlock, we might, at least to begin with, try to insist that the state to be elected to the Security Council should be Byelorussia and not the Ukraine. To justify our insistence on this point, we might state frankly to the Soviet Union that it must be as clear to them as to other members of the Assembly that there is a very considerable prejudice in the Assembly against the election of the Ukraine — as witnessed in the failure of Mr. Manuilsky to be elected as Vice-President of the Assembly. The possibility of such an offer being accepted by both India and the Soviet Union is that it gives them both a good deal — India would get a post on the Economic and Social Council and the Soviet Union would get a satellite on the Security Council.[19]

8. I am teletyping Mr. Pearson the text of this memorandum so that he can give you the benefit of his first-hand appreciation of the situation.

ESCOTT REID

[18]D.Z. Manuilsky, chef de la délégation de l'Ukraine à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies.
D.Z. Manuilsky, Head, Delegation of Ukraine to General Assembly of United Nations.

[19]L'Ukraine fut par la suite élue au Conseil de sécurité; le Canada demeura membre du Conseil économique et social jusqu'à la fin de son mandat.
Ukraine was subsequently elected to the Security Council; Canada remained on the Economic and Social Council until the end ot its term.

361. DEA/5475-AS-1-40

Note pour le chef de la Deuxième direction politique
Memorandum for Head, Second Political Division

SECRET [Ottawa], October 3, 1947

I phoned Mr. Sylvestre[20] to find out whether the Minister had seen your memorandum of October 2 attached[21] and whether the Minister had any comments. Mr. St. Laurent then came over the telephone and said that he had no comments to offer. His view, however, is that we should not rush in this matter. He said that he would let matters ride for a while, but we should not take the initiative. If other nations asked our cooperation in this regard it would be different. Mr. St. Laurent added that he would, of course, leave it to the judgment of those who are on the spot to decide how far we should go, but it was his feeling that we should not be first in the field.

In compliance with your request, I have drafted a teletype to Mr. Pearson.† It is attached hereto.

M. CADIEUX

3e PARTIE/PART 3

DEUXIÈME SESSION DE L'ASSEMBLÉE GÉNÉRALE
SECOND SESSION OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

SECTION A

POLITIQUE
POLICY

362. DEA/5475-CG-40

Déclaration pour la gouverne de la délégation à la Deuxième session de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies approuvée par le Cabinet le 11 septembre 1947

Statement Approved by Cabinet on September 11, 1947 for Guidance of Delegation to the Second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations

SECRET [Ottawa, September 11, 1947]

1. General Principles

The government is fully aware of the grave responsibilities which the delegation will carry and of the important decisions which must be taken during this session of [20]G. Sylvestre, cabinet du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures.

G. Sylvestre, Office of Secretary of State for External Affairs.
[21]Le document précédent./The preceding document.

the Assembly. The government is aware, also, that there is a possibility that issues will emerge during the discussions in New York which may destroy the United Nations in the form in which it was conceived and established. Such a deplorable eventuality might arise in one of two ways. Some member state may endeavour to force the Assembly to reach a decision concerning some major question of policy, such as the use of the veto, in such a way as to cause one or more states to withdraw from the United Nations. Alternatively, some members may impede the proceedings of the Assembly to such a point that little will be accomplished, with the result that the United Nations will be discredited, both in the eyes of member governments and the public at large and will collapse through disrepute rather than disruption.

It is the view of the Canadian Government that the time has not yet been reached when any of the issues dividing Members of the United Nations should be pressed to a conclusion which would destroy the organization as it is at present constituted.

Nevertheless, the realities of the situation should be faced, and the Canadian delegation should not hesitate to state, on appropriate occasions, that the inevitable final result of either development, mentioned in the above paragraph, will be the end of the United Nations as a universal international body.

It should be the policy of the Canadian delegation to contribute as much as possible to the constructive work of the Assembly and to assist in offsetting the influence of delegations which seek to stand in the way of its business. It should also endeavour to avoid the premature development of any issue to the point where it is likely to destroy the United Nations or to drive any of its members to withdraw immediately. This is not to say that the delegation should refrain from expressing, clearly and vigorously, its criticism of weaknesses either in the organization of the United Nations or the conduct of its members. It would, nevertheless, be unfortunate if amendments to the Charter or alterations in procedure, however desirable they may be, were obtained at this time only at the expense of defeating the larger purpose of building a universal organization. The time may be approaching when changes may have to be made to the Charter, against the wishes or even against the threat of withdrawal of, say, the U.S.S.R. But that time, it is suggested, has not yet been reached. In short, at this assembly the emphasis should be on warning what may happen rather than on forcing issues to the point where things will happen.

Against the background of these general principles the attitude of the government to certain of the more important items on the Assembly's agenda is as follows:

2. Elections to Offices of the Assembly

The delegation should be guided by the general consideration that ability is an overriding qualification in the selection of any officer of the Assembly, and should use its influence to secure the election of skilful and impartial candidates.

3. Treatment of Indians in South Africa

The complaint of the Indian government concerning the treatment of Indians in South Africa will again be a subject of discussion at the General Assembly. On this occasion, the debate will originate with the resolution in regard to this problem carried by the Assembly in December last. It was the Canadian view that the complaint made by the Indian government embodied questions of both fact and law which should not have been decided without proper investigation, and the Canadian delegation therefore supported a resolution which would have referred the dispute to the International Court. This view did not prevail, and the resolution which was finally carried assumed the validity of the Indian case and called upon the two governments to remedy the situation. In the period which has intervened since this motion was carried, the Indian and South African governments have failed to carry out the injunction of the Assembly, and at the forthcoming session, each may present arguments accusing the other of bad faith and obstinacy.

The position of the South African government in regard to the Indian complaint will be even more difficult now than a year ago, for the South African government is placed between a parliament at home which is clearly unwilling to support any measure of compromise, and an Assembly where the Indians can command a majority of votes on the subject, even though the merits of the case have not been impartially investigated. At the forthcoming session, therefore, the delegation should support any effort that is made to bring agreement between the two governments prior to action by the Assembly. If this proves impossible, the delegation should then endeavour to prevent the adoption of a resolution so worded that it will leave the South African government no alternative other than to withdraw from the United Nations. The proposal made previously that the matter be referred to the International Court is still valid and the delegation may wish to support this proposal if it is advanced again by some other delegation. It will, however, be difficult to secure the adoption now of a plan which has already been rejected, and it would be preferable if action could be taken, either in the Assembly or by the two states concerned, that would remove the subject finally from the agenda. The present deplorable situation in India may make the delegation from that country less intransigent on this issue than it otherwise would be.

4. The Palestine Question

The report of the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine will also require the careful attention of your delegation. The government has not yet had the opportunity to examine this report, nor to ascertain the views of other governments most directly concerned. It will probably be necessary, therefore, for the delegation to seek instructions on this subject as the discussions develop at the General Assembly. The delegation need not feel committed, in these discussions, to the recommendation made in either the majority or minority reports of the Special Committee on Palestine, in spite of the fact that the former is signed by the Canadian member of the Committee, since it was clearly understood that Mr. Justice Rand would not be instructed or advised by the Canadian government as to the policies he should advocate on the Committee.[22] The delegation should, of course,

[22]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document :
The following was typed on this copy of the document:
(The Cabinet felt, however, that the delegation would undoubtedly have in mind the fact that a distinguished member of the Supreme Court of Canada had arrived at certain conclusions after careful consideration of the issues involved.)

give support to any proposals which appear to it likely to bring about a solution to the Palestine problem, provided that there is reasonable evidence that they can be put into effect. It is obvious, however, that nothing will be gained by the adoption of recommendations, no matter how great their merit, which are resisted by either Jews or Arabs, unless provision is made to overcome this opposition.

5. The Veto

The Canadian government has never been reconciled to the veto provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and its dislike of these provisions has been increased by the manner in which the veto has been used by the permanent members of the Security Council. The delegation should, therefore, lose no opportunity to make known its dislike, both of the veto provisions themselves and, even more, of the manner in which they have been used. It should also give its support to any proposal, which has a reasonable chance of adoption, aimed at qualifying by regulations the use of the veto power or eliminating it by the amendment of the Charter. It should be recognized, however, that there is little possibility at the present time of securing an amendment to the Charter which would materially alter the voting privileges of the Great Powers. Neither is it likely at this stage that any alteration in the procedure of the Security Council will materially affect the unsatisfactory situation which has developed. Demands for the modification of the veto power should not, therefore, be made in terms which can do nothing but discredit further the Security Council if they fail to be adopted.

6. Elections to the Security Council

Three non-permanent members are to be elected to the Security Council, each for a term of three years. The Canadian government has made known its willingness to serve as a member of the Security Council. Reports which have been received indicate that this candidature will be a popular one, and serious opposition to Canada's election is not anticipated. It would be unfortunate, however, if having made known our readiness to serve, we should fail of election, and the delegation should use its best endeavours to prevent such a failure.

If Canada is elected to the Security Council it will be assumed that the place of Australia on that body has been filled by this choice. The other two members which retire are Brazil and Poland. The Latin-American countries will agree amongst themselves as to the state which should replace Brazil, and the delegation should probably accept their choice. In regard to the other non-permanent seat, the government considers that no good purpose would be served by refusing to fill this place with some state acceptable to the Soviet Union. Czechoslovakia has indicated that it would prefer not to stand, and from our own point of view there would be some disadvantage to placing the Czechoslovak government in a position in which it would be forced to stand openly with the Soviet government on many issues concerning which it can now remain silent. The delegation may, therefore, consider it advisable to support the election of some other state from Eastern Europe.

7. Elections to the Trusteeship Council

Preliminary consideration which has been given to this problem would suggest that the delegation might support for elections to two places on the Trusteeship Council, a Scandinavian state, possibly Denmark, and an Asiatic state, possibly India or Pakistan.

8. Elections to the Economic and Social Council

Six members of the Economic and Social Council, the Ukraine, the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, India, Cuba and Norway, will retire at the end of this year, and the suggestion may be made informally that Canada also should retire if it is elected to the Security Council. The delegation should not too readily be persuaded to have Canada withdraw from the Economic and Social Council before the end of its term, whether or not it is elected to any other Council. The delegation should also be prepared to support for re-election to the Economic and Social Council, any of its members which have made an outstanding contribution to the work of that body. On this basis, the delegation may wish to support the re-election of Czechoslovakia and India. The delegation should oppose any suggestion that no states other than Great Powers should be re-elected. The continuation of Czechoslovakia as a member would appear particularly desirable, since the Czechoslovak government has, in the Economic and Social Council, been able to show a measure of independence which is denied to it elsewhere, and also because the Czechoslovak Member of the Council, Dr. Papnek, will probably succeed to the Chairmanship on account of his good record in previous meetings. The delegation should also be prepared to support the re-election of the U.K. and the U.S.S.R. who will retire this year. It should also support the Latin-American nomination for the seat now occupied by Cuba, if that nomination is an acceptable one. Sweden or Denmark could be acceptable candidates for the place from which Norway will retire.

A proposal has been made that the Economic and Social Council should be increased in size from 18 to 24 members, in order that the membership may be more representative. It is the view of the Canadian government that any increase in the size of this Council would affect adversely its efficiency and the delegation should oppose this suggestion.

9. Election of New Members

Resolution for the admission of Pakistan and Yemen to Membership of the United Nations will be put forward, and the Assembly should seek to secure the adoption of this motion with as little discussion as possible. The Assembly should not, however, support any suggestion that Pakistan be admitted to membership automatically as a successor state to India. In any discussion which develops concerning the admission of the members whose application has been rejected by the Security Council, the delegation should state frankly that it regrets what it regards as the irresponsible use of the veto in debarring certain neutral states and also certain former enemy states, and should make known the view of the Canadian government that ability to carry out the obligations of membership should be the primary consideration of determining admission. It should also support any reasonable proposal for increasing the influence of the Assembly in the admission of new members.

10. The Balkan Situation

The United States of America has added to the agenda an item referring to the threats of the political independence of Greece. The Canadian government would welcome any responsible intervention in the Assembly which leads to an improvement in the Balkan situation, and would be prepared to support any reasonable general action upon which the United Nations agreed.

11. Peace Treaty with Italy

A proposal has been made that the United Nations should inaugurate action for the revision of a Peace Treaty with Italy. It is the view of the Canadian government that no good purpose will be served in endeavouring, at the present moment, to alter the terms of this Treaty which, even though the Canadian government does not regard them as entirely satisfactory, have nevertheless been negotiated in the plenary conference of the belligerent powers and have been accepted and ratified by the majority of those powers.

363.

Déclaration[23] du chef de la délégation à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Statement[23] by Chairman, Delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], September 18, 1947

A Canadian statement in the general discussion at the opening of the Assembly should, I think, give an account of our stewardship as a Member of the United Nations, and our view whether the organization is fulfilling the high purposes and noble ideals which inspired its creation.

As to the former, Canada has endeavoured to discharge both its formal and implied obligations as a Member State. Our Parliament has passed legislation necessary for this purpose, including an appropriation of twenty millions of dollars for post-UNRRA international relief. We have also carried out our duty in implementing a resolution of the Assembly which was passed by a substantial majority and was in accord with the Charter, even though we opposed it unsuccessfully when it was introduced.

We do not, of course, feel that we are entitled to any particular credit for the discharge of obligations which we have undertaken, by signing the Charter of the United Nations. I hope that we, and all others, take these obligations seriously. The proof of this, however, in our case, and in the case of other Members, will be found in deeds, not words. So nothing more need be said on this point.

---

[23]Voir Canada, ministère des Affaires extérieures, Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, (Recueil des conférences 1947, N° 1), Ottawa, Imprimeur du Roi, 1948, pp. 182-185. Louis Saint-Laurent était le chef de la délégation.

See Canada, Department of External Affairs, Canada at the United Nations 1947, Conference Series, 1947, No. 1. Ottawa: King's Printer, 1948, pp. 178-80. Louis St. Laurent was Chairman of the Delegation.

The Canadian people also believed that in signing the Charter, they and all other Member States, accepted an obligation to reconcile views and policies concerning national welfare with those concerning the needs of mankind as a whole. In the light of recent developments, it is perhaps not superfluous to reassert this obligation. It is a mandate to guide ourselves by the principle that in the long run each nation can benefit most from those measures which benefit all nations. It is a commitment constantly to scrutinize our domestic and external policies on the national level so that we may be certain of bringing them into harmony with the high purposes to which this organization is dedicated.

My second purpose in speaking is to give you, in a few words, the view of my Government on the present position of our world organization. There is a growing feeling in my country, as in other countries, that the United Nations, because of the experience of the Security Council, is not showing itself equal to the discharge of its primary task of promoting international confidence and ensuring national security. The Economic and Social Council is functioning fairly successfully. The specialist organizations are doing good work. But the Security Council, founded on what is called the unanimity of its permanent members, has done little to strengthen the hopes of those who saw in it the keystone of the structure of peace. It has done much to deepen the fears of those who felt that, with the veto, it could not operate effectively in an international atmosphere of fear and suspicion, where pride is often allowed to take precedence over peace and power over reason.

This veto privilege, attacked and defended with equal vigour, if it continues to be abused, may well destroy the United Nations, because it will destroy confidence in the ability of the Security Council to act internationally, to act effectively, and to act in time. There is no point in deceiving ourselves. Our peoples cannot be expected to accept indefinitely and without alteration, voting procedures and practices which, in the name of unanimity, underline disunity; and which reduce agreement to a lowest common denominator of action that in practice often means inaction. For this reason, the Canadian delegation warmly supports the United States suggestions concerning voting procedure in the Security Council.

Our delegation also supports the United States proposal designed to extend the usefulness of the Assembly. We think that its acceptance would infuse new life and vigour into our whole organization.

In the concentration of attention on the vital role of the Security Council, it should not be forgotten that the Assembly, or a continuing committee of the Assembly, can do many of the things for which the Security Council was intended to take primary responsibility. It can discuss a dispute or situation at open meetings and at small private committee meetings. It can investigate by calling witnesses and by sending out commissions of enquiry. It can publish the findings of its committees as soon as the Security Council ceases to deal with a dispute or situation. The General Assembly can make recommendations and can send these recommendations to the Security Council or to the nations concerned, or to both. The Canadian delegation sees no reason, therefore, why these functions of the Assembly should not be put to greater use for the solution of problems when they are not being solved elsewhere.

The fact remains, however, that these problems must be solved, and that procedures and practices which obstruct such solutions must be changed. This can be done by the voluntary abandonment of these practices; by agreed conventions or understandings which will regulate them; or, if necessary, by amendments to the Charter. We hope that no member of the Security Council will flout clearly expressed world opinion by obstinately preventing change, and thus become responsible for prejudicing, and possibly destroying, the organization which is now man's greatest hope for the future.

Nations, in their search for peace and co-operation, will not, and cannot, accept indefinitely an unaltered Council which was set up to ensure their security, and which, so many feel, has become frozen in futility and divided by dissension. If forced, they may seek greater safety in an association of democratic and peace-loving states willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for a greater measure of national security. Such associations, it has already been pointed out, if consistent with the principles and purposes of the Charter, can be formed within the United Nations. It is to be hoped that such a development will not be necessary. If it is unnecessary, it will be most undesirable. If, however, it is made necessary, it will have to take place. Let us not forget that the provisions of the Charter are a floor under, rather than a ceiling over, the responsibilities of Member States. If some prefer to go even below that floor, others need not be prevented from moving upwards.

Two, or more, apartments in the structure of peace are undoubtedly less desirable than one family of nations dwelling together in amity, undivided by curtains or even more substantial pieces of political furniture. They are, however, to be preferred to the alternative of wholly separate structures.

This, you may say, is defeatism of the worst kind. It is not. It is merely sober realism. It would be folly to deny that certain events of the last twelve months have weakened the position of our organization. It would be folly not to admit that a continuation of this trend may cause it ultimately to collapse.

Our delegation, our Government, and our Canadian people are determined to do everything they can to prevent this tragic development. Our faith and hope still shine, though now through an overcast of anxiety. The work of this Assembly, to which we pledge our contribution, will, we trust, remove that anxiety, justify that faith, and heighten that hope.

SECTION B

COMMISSION INTÉRIMAIRE INTERIM COMMITTEE

364.

Proposition[24] des États-Unis à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Proposal[24] by United States to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], September 26, 1947

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERIM COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly

Conscious of the responsibilities specifically conferred upon it by the Charter in relation to the maintenance of international peace and security (Article 11), the promotion of international co-operation in the political field (Article 13), peaceful adjustment of any matters likely to impair the general welfare and friendly relations among nations (Article 14);

Deeming it necessary for the effective performance of these functions to establish a Committee for study, inquiry and discussion on its behalf, during the period between the adjournment of the present session and the convening of the next regular session of the General Assembly (Article 22);

Recognizing fully the primary responsibility of the Security Council for prompt and effective action for the maintenance of international peace and security (Article 24);

Resolves that

1. An Interim Committee is created composed of all the Members of the United Nations, each Member to have one representative:

2. The Interim Committee shall assist the General Assembly by performing the following duties and functions:

(a) To consider, as it may determine, such situations as may come to its attention within the purview of Article 14, or such questions as are brought before the General Assembly by the Security Council pursuant to Article 11 (2), and to report thereon, with its recommendations to the General Assembly;

(b) To consider and to make recommendations to the General Assembly upon general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and

[24]Voir Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, pp. 217-219.
See Canada at the United Nations 1947, pp. 208-10.

security under Article 11 (1) and to initiate studies and make recommendations for the purpose of promoting international co-operation in the political field under Article 13 (1) (a);

(c) To consider whether occasion may require the calling of a special session of the General Assembly and if it deems that such session is required, to so advise the Secretary-General;

(d) To conduct investigations and appoint commissions of enquiry within the scope of its duties and functions as it may deem useful and necessary;

(e) To study, report and recommend to the Third Regular Session of the General Assembly on the advisability of establishing a Committee of the General Assembly on a permanent basis to perform the duties and functions of the Interim Committee with any changes considered desirable in the light of its experience;

(f) To perform such other functions and duties as the General Assembly may assign to it.

3. In discharging its duties and functions, the Interim Committee shall at all times take cognizance of the responsibilities of the Security Council under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security, and it shall also take duly into account the duties and functions assigned by the General Assembly or by the Security Council to any committee or commission, such as the Atomic Energy Commission, and the Commission for Conventional Armaments.

4. The provisional rules of procedure of the General Assembly shall, so far as applicable, govern the proceedings of the Interim Committee and such sub-committees and commissions as it may set up. The Interim Committee shall elect its Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Rapporteur and such other officers as it may deem necessary. The Interim Committee shall be convened by the Secretary-General within fifteen days following the close of the Second Regular Session of the General Assembly, and it shall continue to serve until the beginning of the Third Regular Session of the General Assembly.

5. The Secretary-General shall enter into suitable arrangements with the appropriate authorities of any Member State in whose territory the Interim Committee or its sub-committees or commissions may wish to sit or to travel. He shall provide necessary facilities and assign appropriate staff as required for the work of the Interim Committee, its sub-committees and commissions.

365. DEA/5475-CP-40

Résumé d'une conclusion du Cabinet

Summary of Cabinet Conclusion

SECRET [Ottawa], October 14, 1947

UNITED NATIONS ASSEMBLY; PROPOSED INTERIM COMMITTEE

The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that the Canadian delegation to the United Nations Assembly proposed to support the U.S. proposal for the establishment of a Special Interim Committee of the Assembly to function on a continuing basis.

The Cabinet, after discussion, noted with approval the Minister's report.

366. DEA/5475-CP-40

Note du chef de la Deuxième direction politique pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, Second Political Division, to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], October 16, 1947

CONTINUING ASSEMBLY VERSUS INTERIM COMMITTEE

I have gathered from conversations with some of our people who have come back from New York that I had not succeeded in making clear, before I left New York, the considerations which had led me to conclude that a Continuing Assembly would better serve the interests of the United Nations than an Interim Committee. I thought it might be useful, therefore, if I were to send to New York a statement of what seem to me to be the main arguments in favour of a Continuing Assembly. I attach a copy of this statement (Delas No. 127, of October 15).†

I am reluctant from this distance to go any further than I have already gone in pressing my views on the Delegation in New York. One possible way out of our difficulties has, however, occurred to me. If you think there is anything in this idea and if you should be speaking to Mr. Pearson by telephone today, you might perhaps wish to pass it on to him.

My tentative suggestion would be that either tomorrow or on Saturday, our representative in the Political Committee might speak along the following lines. He would summarize the arguments advanced by the United States and its supporters in favour of the United States Resolution on an Interim Committee. He would then summarize the arguments of the Soviet group against the United States Resolution. He would then go on to suggest that the purposes of the United States Resolution might possibly be carried out in a way which would not be open to the objections which have been raised by the Soviet group. He would then summarize the Resolution on a Continuing Assembly and introduce that Resolution. He might then argue that it is desirable that the General Assembly should, if at all possible, decide on this important question by a unanimous vote. This might revive the waning hope of the peoples of the world in the ability of the Assembly to play a constructive role, just as last year hopes were revived when the Assembly demonstrated its ability to agree unanimously to the Resolution on Disarmament. He might express the hope that the Canadian Resolution on a Continuing Assembly might lead to a reconciliation of the different views which have been expressed with such vigour in the Committee. If it did not lead to such a reconciliation and if the Members of the Assembly, after a study of our proposal, were not able to come to general agreement on it, but preferred the United States approach, then we suggest that the United States Resolution could be improved. We, therefore, were presenting to the Committee a Resolution amending the United States Resolution as well as our Resolution on the Continuing Assembly.

One advantage of this sort of proposal might be that it would demonstrate our desire to play a conciliatory and constructive role in the Assembly.[25]

ESCOTT REID

367.

Amendement canadien[26] à la proposition des États-Unis à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Canadian Amendment[26] to United States Proposal to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], October 17, 1947

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERIM COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

(1) Sub-paragraph 2 (a) of the U.S. Resolution to be revised to read as follows:

To consider, as it may determine, such situations as may come to its attention within the purview of Article 14 or Article 35 of the Charter, or such questions as are brought before the General Assembly by the Security Council pursuant to Article 11 (2) and to report thereon, with its recommendations to the General Assembly;

(2) The following functions and duties to be added to paragraph 2 of the United States Resolution:

(i) to consider and report to the General Assembly on the implementation of resolutions referred to it by the General Assembly for such consideration and report.

(ii) to give preliminary consideration, as the committee may determine, to any item which has been placed on the provisional agenda of the General Assembly, and to make reports and recommendations to the General Assembly as a result of this consideration.

(3) Sub-paragraph 2 (b) of the United States resolution to be deleted.

---

[25]L'annotation suivante a été dactylographiée sur notre copie du document :
The following was typed on this copy of the document:

As Mr. Pearson is on the spot and has Mr. Reid's teletype No. 1118 Delas 127, I would leave it to him to determine with the other members of our delegation when to speak and what to say. L.S. St. L[aurent]

[26]Voir Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, p.219.
See Canada at the United Nations 1947, p 210.

368.

Déclaration[27] à l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies
Statement[27] to the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], October 18, 1947

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERIM COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

In his opening statement in plenary session,[28] the Chairman of the Canadian delegation stated that he saw no reasons why the functions of the Assembly should not be put to greater use for the solution of problems of peace and security which were not being solved elsewhere. He said, "Our delegation also supports the United States proposal designed to extend the usefulness of the Assembly. We think that its acceptance would infuse new life and vigour into the whole organization." The Canadian delegation has already, therefore, accepted the principle which is embodied in the United States resolution.

We think that the circumstances fully justify an attempt at this time to make greater use of the functions of the Assembly. There are threats to peace and security in the world and to the success of our organization. The character and the tone of debates in this Assembly have unhappily given us no reason to believe that these threats will decrease in the near future. As a secondary power, Canada has special reasons for fixing her hopes for peace and security on the United Nations. Politically we are vulnerable to the shock of international conflict and economically we can be shaken by the instabilities of a disturbed world. Like the people of other secondary states, Canadians look to the United Nations as an instrument through which we can co-operate to remove these dangers and to establish an orderly and peaceful world community. It is clear to all that this instrument is not now adequately performing that function, and that the failure arises principally from the inability of the Security Council to take effective action on the matters which come before it. Into the reason for that failure we do not now need to go. A clue to it was, however, given by certain words heard yesterday from a representative of a permanent member of the Council, "On this matter", he said, "we do not compromise".

It has been said here that the system of collective security provided within the framework of the Security Council is based upon the assumption of the unanimity of the Great Powers, and that nothing should be done here to undermine this principle which is fundamental to the Charter. Our delegation, of course, supports the principle of unanimity as we understood its intention to be when the Charter was drafted. We are all vitally concerned that unanimity should prevail amongst the Great Powers, especially on measures necessary for the maintenance of peace. The fact is, however, that such unanimity does not exist. Indeed its most characteristic [27]Voir ibid., pp. 221-225.

See ibid., pp. 212-5.
[28]Pour la déclaration de Saint-Laurent, voir le document 363.
For the statement by St. Laurent, see Document 363.

feature is its absence. We are in a situation where the unanimity rule has become, in effect, both a rule of dissent, and a guarantee of inaction. We must therefore ask ourselves whether those countries which have waited with patience but with growing uneasiness for effective action on behalf of the United Nations by the Security Council, should continue to stand idly by and see their hopes for peace and security dissolved by the acids of controversy which have been distilled during the discussion in the Security Council of international problems. It seems to us that we must act, or surrender ourselves to perils of negation and frustration which we ourselves cannot influence. There are two things we may do. First, we may continue our efforts to remedy the situation which has arisen in the Security Council in such a way that it will fulfil the functions for which it was designed. We face here, however, the formidable obstacle of the veto which cannot be changed except by amendment to the Charter or by self-denying ordinances by the permanent members. Secondly, we may seek means to expand and strengthen the functions of the Assembly, so that it may stand as a second line of defence when the Security Council has failed.

I have mentioned first this major cause for concern because, like the delegate from Australia, I think we should be quite honest with ourselves in admitting that it is primarily the paralysis which has fallen upon the Security Council that leads us to contemplate the establishment of an Interim Committee of the Assembly. There are, however, other reasons for expanding the functions of the Assembly. In the short space of two years we have brought our organization into full operation and we are now finding that it has even more responsibilities than we had anticipated. Even if the political and security questions which might be discussed in an Interim Committee, are, as we hope, settled elsewhere, there are other urgent matters with which a committee of this nature might usefully occupy itself. Our agendas are crowded and there is evidence that they will be even more crowded in the future. The experience of our own committee is not such as to warrant any exaggerated optimism that the regular session of the Assembly will deal with these additional items with energy and despatch. Furthermore, our agendas will include complicated items which require more careful consideration than can be given within the short space of time at our disposal during a regular session. Even more important is the fact that many of these items require preparatory work by way of study and investigations between sessions to enable delegations to form considered judgments. Finally the full membership of the United Nations should be concerned to know from month to month whether or not the more important recommendations which it has embodied in its resolutions are being observed. In the course of a regular session, the Assembly adopts many resolutions, some of which are of great importance. It would be desirable to have between sessions a committee specifically charged with observing and reporting on the implementation of the most important of these resolutions.

There remains the question: Are we entitled to take action of the kind we contemplate? Is it legal and constitutional? Serious questions have been raised in this connection, and we should not dismiss them lightly. The only limitations which we face are the provisions of Articles 12 and 24. In our opinion and in spite of dogmatic but unsupported statements to the contrary, the U.S. proposal does not contravene either of these Articles. On the contrary, it falls within that provision of the Charter, Article 22, which provides for the establishment of subsidiary organs of the Assembly. Assertions, therefore, that in accepting the principle of the U.S. proposal we are breaking the Charter are without foundation. Their constant repetition does not make them more convincing. The intention at San Francisco was to provide in the Assembly an instrument with the necessary power and flexibility for the performance of the important duties assigned to it.

There are, of course, other ways within the Charter by which the General Assembly could fulfil the continuing responsibilities which we think it should discharge. The General Assembly might, by simple adjustments in the Rules of Procedure, be kept in session throughout the year, meeting as the occasion required. It would be possible also for us to depend on special sessions of the Assembly, and there is the third expedient establishing a committee of the whole Assembly to meet between regular sessions. There are advantages and disadvantages to be found in each of these methods. We have been led to the conclusion, however, that an Interim Committee is the method best suited in the circumstances for developing the functions of the Assembly in the manner which we are contemplating.

The terms of reference to be given to such a committee must be studied carefully. We do not agree entirely with those which have been suggested in the United States resolution and for this reason have submitted (in Document A/C. 1/217) certain amendments to that proposal. It seems to the Canadian delegation that there are important functions which might be performed by an Interim Committee and which are not mentioned in the proposal before us. The United States delegate, himself, in introducing his proposal, referred to the important duties which an Interim Committee might perform in preparing the way for regular session of the General Assembly. He has not, however, made provision for performance of these duties in the resolution which he has presented. It seems to us also that the Interim Committee should consider the extent to which the more important resolutions of the General Assembly are being carried out. We realize that these resolutions are no more than recommendations to member nations. They are, however, expressions of international opinion which must carry great weight. During the experimental year which is proposed, it is probable that the Interim Committee should consider the effect of only such important resolutions as are referred to it by this Assembly. The Committee itself might later consider whether, in the long run, it would be useful for the Assembly to have before it, when it meets, a report on the implementation of its resolutions.

There are also certain parts in the United States resolution which we think might be deleted. The Interim Committee will be both temporary and experimental in character, and we are not satisfied that at this stage it should be asked to assume the very general responsibilities which arise from Article 11 (1) and 13 (1) (B) of the Charter. The instrument which we are proposing to create may well prove so useful that we shall wish to extend its duties in this respect. At first, however, we should like to see excluded from its terms of reference the wide-ranging responsibilities which were suggested by these two Articles. The Canadian delegation is, however, in full agreement with the idea that the terms of reference of the Committee should give it full authority to consider all matters in regard to peace and security which come within the competence of the General Assembly. For this reason we would favour a reference to Article 35 as well as to Article 14 in the terms of reference of the Committee.

Within the areas which I have suggested, we consider that the Interim Committee should be given clearly defined responsibilities. It should have the right to discuss fully any subject which comes on its agenda, to conduct investigations and to make reports and recommendations to the General Assembly, either in regular or special session. We do not think that it should have any other powers, nor do we consider that it should be established at this time for longer than an experimental period of one year. We agree with the United States proposal that it should be a committee of the whole Assembly.

Before I conclude may I support the appeal, or was it a warning, made yesterday by the delegate from France: that this committee should not become a platform for the rehashing of political propaganda of the kind we are becoming all too familiar with in this Assembly. If the Interim Committee were to be used by certain delegations merely for the reading and distortion of press statements by and about individuals, well-known and obscure, or for the endless repetition of groundless assertions that certain individuals are war-mongers and certain peoples straining at the leash to overthrow their free and democratic systems of government, then the committee might become a liability rather than an asset and its discussions as intolerable as they have once or twice threatened to become in this committee.

Mr. Chairman, we are building in the United Nations a structure for international co-operation which must endure. Our hopes depend upon its success. Its weakness lessens the security of each one of us. If the experiment which we are contemplating will have the effect of making the organization more effective, and that is our only purpose in supporting it, it will repay a thousandfold the effort which we shall expend upon it. The Canadian delegation will gladly co-operate in making the experiment in the hope that the instrument we are creating may help speedily to remove the circumstances which make it necessary.

369.

Résolution[29] de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Resolution[29] of the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], November 13, 1947

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INTERIM COMMITTEE OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly

Conscious of the responsibility specifically conferred upon it by the Charter in relation to matters concerning the maintenance of international peace and security

[29]Voir Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, pp. 219-221.
See Canada at the United Nations 1947, pp. 210-12.

(Articles 11 and 35), the promotion of international co-operation in the political field (Article 13) and the peaceful adjustment of any situations likely to impair the general welfare or friendly relations among nations (Article 14);

Deeming it necessary for the effective performance of these duties to establish an Interim Committee to consider and report with its conclusions on such matters to the General Assembly during the period between the closing of the present session and the opening of the next regular session of the General Assembly;

Recognizing fully the primary responsibility of the Security Council for prompt and effective action for the maintenance of international peace and security (Article 24);

Resolves that

1. There shall be established, for the period between the closing of the present session and the opening of the next regular session of the General Assembly, an Interim Committee on which each Member of the General Assembly shall have the right to appoint one representative.

2. The Interim Committee, as a subsidiary organ of the General Assembly established in accordance with Article 22 of the Charter, shall assist the General Assembly in the performance of its functions by discharging the following duties:

(a) To consider and report, with its conclusions, to the General Assembly on such matters as have been referred to it by the General Assembly;

(b) To consider and report with its conclusions to the General Assembly on any dispute or any situation which, in virtue of Articles 11 (2), 14 or 35 of the Charter, has been proposed for inclusion in the agenda of the General Assembly by any Member of the United Nations or brought before the General Assembly by the Security Council, provided the Committee previously determines the matter to be both important and requiring preliminary study. Such determination shall be made by a majority of two-thirds of those present and voting, unless the matter is one referred by the Security Council under Article 11 (2), in which case a simple majority will suffice;

(c) To consider, as it deems useful and advisable, and report with its conclusions to the General Assembly on methods to be adopted to give effect to that part of Article 11 (1) which deals with the general principles of co-operation in the maintenance of international peace and security, and to that part of Article 13 (1) (a) which deals with the promotion of international co-operation in the political field;

(d) To consider, in connection with any matter under discussion by the Interim Committee, whether occasion may require the summoning of a special session of the General Assembly and, if it deems that such session is required so to advise the Secretary-General in order that he may obtain the views of Members thereon;

(e) To conduct investigations and appoint commissions of enquiry within the scope of its duties, as it may deem useful and necessary provided that decisions to conduct such investigations or enquiries shall be made by a two-thirds majority of the members present and voting. An investigation or enquiry elsewhere than at the headquarters of the United Nations shall not be conducted without the consent of the State or States in whose territory it is to take place;

(f) To report to the next regular session of the General Assembly on the advisability of establishing a permanent committee of the General Assembly to perform the duties of the Interim Committee as stated above with any changes considered desirable in the light of experience.

3. In discharging its duties the Interim Committee shall at all times take into account the responsibilities of the Security Council under the Charter for the maintenance of international peace and security as well as the duties assigned by the Charter or by the General Assembly or by the Security Council to other councils or to any committee or commission. The Interim Committee shall not consider any matter of which the Security Council is seized.

4. Subject to paragraphs 2 (b) and 2 (e) above, the Rules of Procedure of the General Assembly shall, so far as they are applicable, govern the proceedings of the Interim Committee and such sub-committees and commissions as it may set up. The Interim Committee shall, however, have authority to adopt such additional rules as it may deem necessary provided that they are not inconsistent with any of the Rules of the General Assembly. The Interim Committee shall be convened by the Secretary-General not later than six weeks following the close of the second regular session of the General Assembly. It shall meet as and when it deems necessary for the conduct of its business.

5. The Secretary-General shall provide the necessary facilities and assign appropriate staff as required for the work of the Interim Committee, its sub-committees and commissions.

SECTION C

PACTE D'ASSISTANCE MUTUELLE DES PAYS DE L'OUEST
WESTERN MUTUAL ASSISTANCE PACT

370. DEA/211-J (S)

Le chef de la Deuxième direction politique
à l'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Head, Second Political Division,
to Ambassador in United States

SECRET Ottawa, October 20, 1947

Dear Hume [Wrong],

I was extremely interested to learn from the fourth paragraph of your message, WA-3249 of October 15th,† that Mr. Hickerson said to you that he was almost convinced that the time had come to seek to give effect to Mr. Hamilton Fish Armstrong's[30] suggestion for a grouping of the more or less like-minded countries inside the United Nations, making use of Article 51 of the Charter.

---

[30]Rédacteur en chef, Foreign Affairs.
Editor, Foreign Affairs.

2. I wonder if Mr. Hickerson has noticed the reference to this possibility in the speech which Mr. St. Laurent made, on September 18th,[31] at the opening of the Second Session of the General Assembly. For your convenience I enclose a copy of the speech on which I have scored in the margin the passage in question.

3. The significance of this statement was not apparently appreciated at the time by the newspapermen who were covering the Assembly. I think, however, that I am right in saying that in making this statement Mr. St. Laurent went further in the direction of Mr. Armstrong's proposal than any other head of delegation.

4. Under cover of despatch No. 2772 of October 20th, I am sending you a copy of a letter of October 17th[32] from the Prime Minister to Sir Alfred Zimmern.[33] In this letter the Prime Minister has been even more specific than Mr. St. Laurent in his reference to the possibility of the states of the Western world entering into a treaty of mutual defence against the Soviet Union.

5. I had touched on this same possibility in the speech which I gave at the Couchiching Conference on August 13th[34] (see marked passages on pages 13 and 14 of the enclosed text of this speech).†

6. The speech was approved by Mr. Pearson before I delivered it, and subsequently Mr. St. Laurent approved of its being published in the printed proceedings of the Couchiching Conference which should be published within the next month.

7. I shall be most interested to learn more about the thinking of Mr. Hickerson and other senior officers in the State Department on this question. I am myself going to take a look at the Geneva protocol.[35]

8. You remember that when it was rejected some one stated "the protocol is not dead; it sleepeth." It would be ironic if the resurrection of the protocol should take place in New York twenty-four years after it was buried in the tomb at Geneva.

9. A treaty of mutual defence would raise numerous problems. It would also solve some. I was, for example, interested to learn the other day from General Strong[36] of the United Kingdom J.I.B. that some of the Scandinavian states are reluctant to give to the United Kingdom all the information which the United Kingdom J.I.B. wants, unless they get in return a guarantee of assistance against aggression. He added that some of the people in the British Navy want to get a treaty of mutual assistance with the Scandinavian countries.

---

[31]Voir le document 363./See Document 363.

[32]Pièce jointe au document.
Enclosure, this document.

[33]Professeur invité, Trinity College, Hartford (Connecticut); ancien conseiller, Commission préparatoire de l'UNESCO.
Visiting Professor, Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; formerly Adviser, Preparatory Commission of UNESCO.

[34]Voir :/See: Escott Reid, Time of Fear and Hope. Toronto: McClelland & Stewart, 1977, pp. 30-2.

[35]Protocole pour le règlement pacifique des différends internationaux (1924).
Protocol for the pacific settlement of international disputes (1924).

[36]Major-général K.W. Strong, directeur général de la Political Intelligence, Foreign Office du Royaume-Uni.
Maj.-Gen. K.W. Strong, Director-General, Political Intelligence, Foreign Office of United Kingdom.

10. Such a treaty might also make easier a solution of the problem of maintaining defences in Greenland. Conceivably, it might also make it easier for us to carry on our present defence arrangements with the United States. These are all ideas which have just occurred to me but I thought I might pass them on to you for what they are worth and for your comments.

11. I am giving a copy of this letter to Mr. Pearson and to Mr. Robertson.

Yours sincerely,
ESCOTT REID

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Lettre du premier ministre

Letter from Prime Minister

Ottawa, October 17, 1947

It was good of you to write me on July 16th† sending me the address which you gave at Hartford on July 4th. Your letter reached me just at the end of the Parliamentary session. I put it aside so that I could reply after I had had an opportunity to give your suggestion careful consideration. Your letter was then unfortunately mislaid and turned up only a few days ago.

I agree with you that the full implications of the transfer of power which has occurred during the last thirty years have not yet been sufficiently realized. The burden which these changes in the distribution of power have thrown on the United States, the United Kingdom, and the rest of the Commonwealth, is a heavy one, especially if the world is going to be divided into two mutually suspicious camps. It would seem to me that if conditions of peace are to be created and maintained, the long-run problem is to find some way by which the two worlds can learn to live together in peace as good neighbours. Meanwhile, it is vital to ensure that there is an overwhelming preponderance of power on the side of those who wish to see peace maintained.

The United Nations can be of great help in maintaining a preponderance of power on the side of peace and in upholding moral values. If the Charter could be improved, the United Nations could be an even more effective instrument.

But the possibility of reforms in the Charter of the United Nations is narrowly limited by the obvious unwillingness of the Soviet Union to agree to substantial reforms since no formal changes in the Charter can be made without Soviet consent.

Therefore, if the United Nations is to be kept in existence as a meeting ground between the two worlds and if, at the same time, a more effective system of international security is desired, are we not forced to the conclusion that we shall have to get that security in some other way than by amendment of the Charter?

Perhaps those members of the United Nations who are willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for greater national security will have to consider whether they should not be prepared to agree to a treaty of mutual defence against any aggressor.

I enclose a copy of the address which the Secretary of State for External Affairs made on September 18th at the opening of the Second Session of the General Assembly of the United Nations. You will see that Mr. St. Laurent touched on this point at the end of his address.

I note that you are expecting to visit Canada this autumn to address some of the Eastern Branches of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs. I had hoped that if you were visiting Ottawa, I would have had an opportunity for a talk with you. However, as you are probably aware, I shall be [illegible] with the Royal Wedding.

With my best wishes to Lady Zimmern and yourself,

W.L. MACKENZIE KING

371. DEA/211-J (S)

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au chef de la Deuxième direction politique

Ambassador in United States
to Head, Second Political Division

SECRET Washington, October 27, 1947

Dear Escott [Reid]:

In reply to your letter of October 20th, I have recently had a brief further discussion with Mr. Hickerson about the possibility of the creation within the United Nations of a grouping of the more or less like-minded countries. He said that he thought it quite likely that the U.S. Government would in time come out in support of such an idea. The time, however, had not yet arrived. It would be premature to bring a proposal of this nature before the present session of the General Assembly. If, however, the Council of Foreign Ministers failed to reach any agreement on the German settlement — and he expected failure — the matter might possibly be raised in the so-called "Little Assembly" before the next regular session of the General Assembly, presumably after some preliminary sounding out of the governments principally concerned.

It is quite evident that the possibilities of this sort of development are being considered by some of the advisers to the Secretary of State, but no decision has been reached and none is likely for a considerable time.

I reminded Mr. Hickerson of the language used by Mr. St. Laurent in his address to the Assembly on September 18th.

In my message WA-3249 of October 15th,† which led you to write to me, I reported the concern of the State Department which had been expressed to me by Mr. Hickerson about the non-committal attitude of many of the smaller countries over the Balkan issue. When I saw him last week I said that I had not been able to think of any new suggestion about what might be done by the U.S. Government to meet this attitude of equivocation or aloofness. What they were up against, I said, was a state of mind and this could not be countered by putting new resolutions before the Assembly. What they had to do was to attempt by all the means at their disposal to emphasize the distinctions in purpose and principles between the actions and motives of the Soviet Government and those of the United States Government. He agreed with this and went on to say that the existence of this desire to keep on the sidelines must be taken into account in considering the suggestion for what I shall call for purposes of brevity a western mutual assistance pact inside the United Nations. The doubtful and timorous governments will regard this as an attempt to put them on the spot. He could not imagine the Scandinavian states at present joining in such a grouping, and he seemed to fear that any proposal of this nature might do more to frighten than to reassure plenty of people in the western world.

You will observe from this letter, I think, that the whole question has not as yet begun to receive precise consideration, but is rather to be regarded as an idea to which they may turn if things continue to go very badly in negotiations with the Russians.

Your sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

372. DEA/211-J (S)

Note pour le haut-commissaire au Royaume-Uni

Memorandum for High Commissioner in United Kingdom

SECRET Ottawa, October 29, 1947

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE UNITED NATIONS DURING THE NEXT YEAR

I had hoped to be able to do a memorandum on this question for inclusion in the set of papers for the Prime Minister. Unfortunately, I have not been able to find time to do this and, in any event, I doubt the necessity since you don't need any assistance from me in order to give the Prime Minister the necessary advice.[37]

2. I would like, however, to set down a few ideas on paper for you. I feel that the main danger over the next twelve months is hasty action on the part of the United States which might have the result of the Soviet group of states seceding from the United Nations. I feel that this further crystallization of the existing political division in the world would be dangerous and unnecessary.

3. It would be dangerous because it would destroy one of the few bridges between the two worlds. It would be unnecessary because the Western world can do everything that it may want to do to organize itself against the Soviet Union, without driving the Soviet Union out of the United Nations.

---

[37]Robertson était à Ottawa et accompagnerait le premier ministre à Londres.
Robertson was in Ottawa and would travel to London with the Prime Minister.

4. I put this argument in necessarily guarded terms in the address which I gave at Couchiching on August 13. I attach a copy of this address.† The relevant passage is contained in the last three pages — the middle of page 12 on.

5. You will see that I put forward the idea which Hamilton Fish Armstrong developed at some length in his "New York Times" magazine article of September 14 — that is the suggestion that the time may have come when we should contemplate a protocol of mutual assistance to supplement the Charter.

6. I also put forward another idea which has not been developed and that is that, if we want to tighten up the economic links between the United Nations of the Western world, we can do so by making the necessary revisions in the constitution of the various specialized agencies.

7. Mr. St. Laurent, in his address of September 18 in New York, indicated that Canada was willing to contemplate entering into a treaty of mutual assistance. I attach a copy of his address with the relevant passage marked.

8. The question is also touched on by the Prime Minister in his letter of October 17 to Zimmern, a copy of which I sent you.

9. As far as the United States is concerned, I think that what we have to keep on doing is emphasizing in every possible way in discussions with them the point so ably put forward by Kennan in his Foreign Affairs article, from which I quote on page 18 of my memorandum of August 30.[38] That is the point that, in dealing with the Russians, we must be patient as well as firm and vigilant; that this policy has nothing to do with threats or blusterings or superfluous gestures of toughness; that we should not by tactless and threatening gestures put the Russians in a position where they cannot afford to yield, even though yielding might be dictated by their own sense of realism; that the Russians are quick to exploit loss of temper and self-control, since they realize that loss of temper and self-control is evidence of weakness on the part of their opponents; that it is "a sine qua non of successful dealing with Russia that the foreign government in question should remain at all times cool and collected and that its demands on Russian policy should be put forward in such a manner as to leave the way open for a compliance not too detrimental to Russian prestige."

10. The main point where I differ from the general thesis of Kennan's article is that I doubt the wisdom of using the term "containment". I do not think it is a question of containing the Russians so much as a question of maintaining against them an overwhelming preponderance of force — military force, economic force, the force that comes from ability to rally allies, the force that comes from a united and informed public opinion. The trouble with the doctrine of containment is that it can give rise to a "Maginot Line" complex. This is dangerous since it may lead people to forget that the enemy is behind the "Line". It is also dangerous because it may give rise to a belief that the Western world cannot afford to give in here and there.

---

[38]Voir le document 226./See Document 226.

373. DEA/211-J (S)

Le consul général à New York
au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Consul General in New York
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TELEGRAM 1756 New York, November 22, 1947

TOP SECRET

ASDEL No. 468. Following for Escott Reid from George Ignatieff, Begins: A number of people during the course of the present session have expressed interest in the reference made in Mr. St. Laurent's speech in the fourth from last paragraph to the idea of "an association of democratic and peace-loving States willing to accept more specific international obligations in return for greater national security," etc. The most interesting talk on this question that I had was with Gladwyn Jebb yesterday. He had seen Hamilton Fish Armstrong, who had mentioned the reference I have cited in Mr. St. Laurent's statement and also your interest in the matter.

2. In view of the frustration arising from the veto in the Security Council and the split between the East and the West, which has become even more apparent during the course of this session, further interest has developed in the possibility of organizing mutual guarantees and collective self-defence measures, if possible, within the framework of the Charter to give signatory states the security which will obviously not be forthcoming from the Security Council in the present circumstances as long as the permanent members fail to reach an agreement enabling Article 43 to be put into effect and, of course, because of the obstruction of the veto.

3. Gladwyn Jebb indicated that the Foreign Office was giving thought to various possible approaches to this question.

4. Any pact of mutual defence or collective guarantees of security envisaged in the "Armstrong Plan" would presumably be based on Article 51. Such guarantees might be (a) of a general nature or (b) of a limited regional nature.

5. If of a general nature, the collective security measures might be based either on a decision of the Security Council or of the General Assembly.

6. If it were based on a decision of the Security Council, provision might be made that in the event of an act of aggression decision to apply measures of collective self-defence would be put into effect by a decision of seven members of the Security Council including, if necessary four of the permanent members. Strong objection would be raised by the Soviet Union, and this approach might be justifiably regarded as a breach of the Charter both of Article 27 and of Chapter VII.

7. On the other hand, Article 51 might be invoked by a recommendation of the Interim Committee to a regular or special session of the General Assembly. This, of course, also would be attacked by the Soviet Union as unconstitutional.

8. On the other hand, a procedure to apply Article 51 either through a decision of the General Assembly or the Security Council would have the advantage of involving the widest commitment in terms of the number of States concerned, and would necessarily include the participation of the United States. In view of the fact that the only possible aggressor on a large-scale involving Article 51 at the present time is the Soviet Union, the participation of the United States in any mutual self-defence scheme would be regarded as essential.

9. A general mutual self-defence scheme, moreover, may necessarily arise in connection with an international atomic energy agreement whereby the discovery of any preparation for atomic warfare may be designated in advance as an act of aggression invoking the inherent right of collective self-defence under Article 51.

10. If, on the other hand, collective self-defence arrangements were put on a more limited regional basis and developed under Chapter VIII there would be the difficulty of defining the region in such a way as to constitute a sufficiently strong group of States which would be capable of taking enforcement action. For instance, Jebb mentioned that if a regional group of this kind were constituted in Europe for the purpose of resisting Soviet aggression which excluded the United States, such a grouping would be regarded by countries likely to invoke guarantees such as Turkey and Greece as being too weak. Indeed a regional grouping on such a limited basis might lead countries like Turkey and Greece to make terms with the Soviet Union rather than associate themselves with such a regional group. Therefore regional arrangements providing for collective self-defence would have necessarily to include the United States if it is to be effective in containing Soviet expansion. Consideration will also need to be given to the manner in which decisions will be taken to put collective self-defence measures into effect. Presumably there would have to be some arrangement for preliminary consideration possibly on the Rio model.

11. I gathered the impression from Jebb that the thinking of the Foreign Office is still pretty sketchy on this question. Various members of the United States delegation have asked us about our thinking in the matter in the light of Mr. St. Laurent's speech. In particular Rusk, who is head of the Division of the State Department dealing with the United Nations, indicated that the State Department is working on some ideas in this connection and Riddell intends to follow this up. Ends.

374. DEA/211-J (S)

Note du chef de la Première direction politique pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Head, First Political Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], December 5, 1947

I attach copy of Teletype WA-3765† of December 3rd which I have received from the Canadian Embassy, Washington, giving an account of the conversation which Hume Wright[39] and I had in the State Department. You will note that paragraph 2 deals with a Mutual Defence Treaty.

2. I gained the impression that, although their thinking was in a very preliminary stage, the United States authorities were already casting about to see if the proposals for a Mutual Defence Treaty could not be brought forward from some source other than themselves. Rusk said that they did not wish the proposal to appear as an anti-Soviet device, and said that they had in mind an international convention to which they hoped the U.S.S.R. might adhere. The more he spoke of the plan, however, the more evident it became that it would be regarded from the outset by the U.S.S.R., and by the rest of the world as well, as an anti-Soviet alliance.

3. My own view would be that we should not in this Department at the present time take any further initiative in regard to the proposal for a Mutual Defence Treaty[40] and that we should confine ourselves to learning as much as possible about the intentions of the United States and the United Kingdom. If the proposal develops, I am doubtful if there is any over-riding advantage to be gained from our being amongst those who initiated it.

R.G. RIDDELL

SECTION D

AFRIQUE DU SUD
SOUTH AFRICA

375. DEA/5600-40

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in United States
to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, April 12, 1947

Dear Mr. Pearson,

Mr. Hickerson expressed to me yesterday the concern felt in the State Department over the treatment which is likely to be accorded to South Africa at the next session of the General Assembly unless they take some steps to give effect to the resolution of the last Assembly on the Indian complaint.[41] He said that so far as they knew there had been no contact whatever between the Indian and South African Governments on this subject since the adoption of the resolution, and at the same time South Africa was proceeding with the incorporation of South West [39]Troisième secrétaire, ambassade aux États-Unis.

Third Secretary, Embassy in United States.

[40]Note marginale :/Marginal note:
I agree. L.B. P[earson]

[41]Voir le volume 12, document 488./See Volume 12, Document 488.

Africa in the Union. The United States Government was not in a position to do much because any pressure exerted by them was almost sure to produce accusations of racial discrimination based on the treatment of negroes in the South. They wondered, therefore, if it would be possible for Canada to talk to the South Africans and to seek to persuade them that it was in their interests at least to go through the motion of opening negotiations with India. He believed that there was no chance that such negotiations would achieve any results, but South Africa would be in a better position at the Assembly after futile negotiations than they would be if they merely ignored the resolution.

I think that there is something in this and I promised to pass the suggestion on to you. Perhaps, if it is felt that we can do some good, the best course would be to have a talk with the South African High Commissioner in Ottawa.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

376. DEA/5600-40

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

[Ottawa], August 2, 1947

Some time ago I received through Mr. Wrong in Washington a suggestion from the State Department that we might take some action before the next meeting of the Assembly to persuade the South Africans to settle their differences with India over the treatment of Indians in South Africa. If no progress has been made towards the settlement of this dispute before the Assembly meets, the South Africans may well receive a very rough treatment, and the situation will be embarrassing to all of us. It was thought possible, therefore, that we might discuss the matter informally with the South African High Commissioner here, and indicate to him our concern in this subject. If we were to do so, it would be necessary, of course, for us to take parallel action with India through our High Commissioner there. We have since learned that the United Kingdom would also be interested to know whether we would be prepared to take this initiative.

I am not sure that we would be wise to intervene in this matter even to the extent of taking the informal action which has been suggested. I thought, however, that I should call the proposal to your attention. I attach a brief memorandum† indicating the present position in regard to this dispute.[42]

L.B. P[EARSON]

---

[42]Notre copie du document porte l'annotation suivante :
The following was written on this copy of the document:
I do not think we should intervene. It would be more impressive, I think, if U.S. [United States] did so. St. L[aurent] 377.

Déclaration[43] à la Première Commission de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Statement[43] to First Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], November 17, 1947

TREATMENT OF INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Chairman, while our delegation has refrained from giving advice to either country whose dispute is now under consideration, this is not because our delegation is lacking in views on how the dispute might be settled. Our principal concern is that these two countries, with which Canada has special ties of association and friendship, should break the deadlock in their dispute and enter, as soon as possible, into direct discussions with a view to arriving at a friendly settlement on all the questions at issue between them.

If the decision of the Assembly is to have this constructive effect, the resolution which embodies it should be composed in such terms as not to imply judgment against one party or the other, especially since the facts and the law in the dispute have not yet been established by an impartial international tribunal.

As we believe that the draft resolution submitted by the Indian delegation is capable of this interpretation and is therefore not likely to serve to break the present deadlock, the Canadian delegation regrets that it cannot support it at least in its present form.

A number of helpful suggestions have been made in this Committee. The Canadian delegation favours the approach suggested both in the joint draft resolution, submitted by the delegations of Belgium, Brazil and Denmark, and in the amendment offered by the delegation of Norway. Both proposals contained a request that both parties enter into direct negotiations to reach an agreement. In addition they also provide that, in the event of failure to reach an agreement in this way, the dispute should be submitted to the International Court of Justice.

The Canadian delegation contended last year, and still maintains the position, that where, as in this case, there is a dispute between the parties as to the law and the facts or at least as to the interpretation given by one party as to the law and the facts, a reference of the case to the International Court of Justice would be entirely appropriate. Moreover, if, as is likely, the Assembly will be called upon to deal with the matter again, it would in our opinion be very desirable, as others have pointed out, that we should deal with this case on the basis of impartially established law and fact rather than upon charges and opinions expressed in debate.

[43]Voir Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, pp. 191-192.
See Canada at the United Nations 1947, pp. 185-6.

The Canadian delegation would hope that the Indian delegation, together with those delegations who have offered amendments to its resolution, might reach agreement on a mutually acceptable text with the authors of the joint resolution submitted by Belgium, Brazil and Denmark. Moreover, we would earnestly hope a resolution could be evolved which would be acceptable both to India and South Africa as the basis for their renewed discussions.

With regard to the draft resolution submitted by Iraq, dealing with the general question is not on the agenda and should be submitted if at all as a separate item.

SECTION E

ESPAGNE
SPAIN

378.

Déclaration[44] à la Première Commission de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Statement[44] to First Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], November 11, 1947

RELATIONS OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS WITH SPAIN

I should like to say a few words in explanation of the vote that the delegation of Canada proposes to pass on these resolutions that are before the Committee.

We feel that we will have to vote in opposition to the resolution of Poland.[45] If we were to select speeches that come closest to representing our point of view, they would be the speeches by the representatives of Pakistan and the Netherlands made this morning.

Briefly stated, the reasons why we feel that we must oppose the Polish resolution are:

First, because nothing in the way of effective sanctions can flow from it. The Security Council cannot apply Article 41 without first determining that there is a threat to the peace under Article 39, and there is no serious allegation of a threat to the peace. It would be very doubtful if any such allegation could be proved if it were made.

---

[44]Voir ibid., pp. 226-227.
See ibid., pp. 216-7.

[45]Elle renouvelait la résolution 39 (I) de l'Assemblée générale de 1946 qui demandait au Conseil de sécurité d'étudier dans un délai d'un mois cette question et de prendre des mesures, conformément à l'Article 41 de la Charte, pour porter remède à la situation.
Reaffirming 1946 General Assembly Resolution 39(I), requesting Security Council consideration in one month, and calling for measures under Article 41 of the Charter to remedy the situation.

Therefore we feel that the resolution, if passed, would be entirely ineffective and could not properly be acted upon. It would be a futile gesture by the United Nations, much as if we were making a face at Franco, making a face across the Atlantic at him. We do not think it is likely that a step of that kind would add to the dignity or the prestige of the United Nations, and we think that it would go some distance in discrediting the United Nations. That is our first reason.

Our second reason for voting against that resolution is because the passing of such a resolution would, we think, be helpful rather than harmful to the Franco regime. We do not want to help Franco in any way. Last year we expressed our abhorrence of the Franco regime. The words which our representative used were these:

We abhor the record and the present policies of the Franco dictatorship.

We earnestly hope that the Spanish people may be able to rid themselves of Franco by peaceful means and establish a democratic, responsible and enlightened administration.

We are not prepared to support at this time outside intervention in Spain which might impede European recovery, or revive in Spain the horrors and sufferings of civil war.

Our delegation sees no reason to change its position as stated last year.

The Canadian people and Government do not favour authoritarian or totalitarian government, whatever may be its political complexion. If we are to spend our time in passing ineffective resolutions, we are afraid that they would simply cause the Spanish people to rally to the support of Franco, instead of bringing the Franco regime into disrepute. That is the reason why we think passing a resolution of this kind would help him rather than hurt him.

Our third reason is that last year we voted against this provision of last year's resolutions with respect to specialized agencies. We did not think it was wise to pass that part of the resolution, and we still are of that opinion. We would not like to vote for a reaffirmation of last year's resolution for that reason. While we abstained in the vote last year, we feel that the reasons, under the present circumstances, for opposing the resolution are so strong that we should vote against it this year.

SECTION F

NOUVEAUX MEMBRES
NEW MEMBERS

379.

Déclaration[46] du très hon. James L. Ilsley
à la Première Commission de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Statement[46] by Rt. Hon. James L. Ilsley
to First Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], November 7, 1947

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

The attitude of the Canadian delegation towards admission of new members to the United Nations is based on Article 4 of the Charter. Applicants should be considered on their merits. Their qualifications should be judged on the principles defined in the Charter. The applicant must be a peace-loving state, it must accept the obligations of the Charter and it must be able and willing to carry out these obligations. This basis of judgment was approved by the General Assembly itself in a resolution of November 19, 1946, which states that each application must be examined on its merits "as measured by the yardstick of the charter in accordance with Article 4". We therefore reject any considerations extraneous to the Charter, such as whether or not the applicant state is in diplomatic relations with certain members of the United Nations.

This delegation also recognizes that a decision of the General Assembly with regard to the admission of any state membership requires under Article 4, a recommendation of the Security Council. I say that after listening carefully to the argument of the representative of Argentina, who contends that the General Assembly can admit new members without a recommendation of the Security Council. We do not think that that is correct. We think that the recommendation of the Security Council required by Article 4 involves a decision to make such a recommendation, and that such decision is governed by the provisions of Article 27 of the Charter and requires the concurrent vote of the permanent members. Whether that legal contention is correct or not, if a state of co-operation is to exist between the General Assembly and the Security Council, the General Assembly should certainly secure the recommendation of the Security Council before attempting to admit new members itself. The question arises: What is the Assembly to do about applications for admission of states which fail to secure the necessary approval in the Security Council?

---

[46]Voir Le Canada et les Nations Unies 1947, pp. 228-230.
See Canada at the United Nations 1947, pp. 217-9.

Confronted by this situation, we could take up each rejected application and consider its qualifications in the light of the criteria established in Article 4 and come to a decision in the Assembly recommending that the Security Council re-examine the applications of those states which have been favourably considered by the General Assembly. We feel, however, that there is no use in adopting this procedure if the conclusions which we reach here in the Assembly are to be judged in the Security Council and altered on the basis of an entirely different set of considerations. I think that we might very well reach agreement by an overwhelming majority that the Security Council was not justified in rejecting the application of certain states which have applied for membership. Indeed, this delegation would favour the admission of a number of new states, and I think that the Assembly might well find itself in agreement on quite a comprehensive list. As matters stand, however, we may be certain that no matter how impressive a majority may be recorded here in the Assembly, some or all of the applicants we may favour will continue to be vetoed in the Security Council.

Now we recognize, Mr. Chairman, that there is a real difficulty in determining in some cases as to whether in fact an applicant qualifies under the criteria of Article 4, particularly whether the applicant can be regarded as "able and willing to carry out" the obligations of the Charter. This difficulty exists even if the most objective judgment is applied in determining each case. Discussions in the Security Council as well as in this Committee at the last session, as well as today, amply demonstrate that such a difficulty exists. But surely this is exactly where the discussion of individual applications in the Assembly is particularly relevant in making a proper determination of whether a state is eligible for membership under Article 4 or not. Where, after full discussion of the relevant facts, an overwhelming majority of the members of this organization have stated as their judgment that an applicant is a peace-loving state and able and willing to carry out the obligations of the Charter, and should therefore be admitted to membership, this would be a fairly solid basis for a proper determination of the case, a basis, I submit, which would justify favourable consideration being given to an application by the Security Council.

On the other hand, if after a favourable determination with respect to any application by the General Assembly the application is to be vetoed in the Security Council, then, in the opinion of the Canadian delegation, action on the subject of membership by this Committee or the Assembly serves little or no useful purpose. The Canadian delegation therefore believes that consideration of each application rejected by the Security Council on the part of the Assembly can be justified only if all the members of the Security Council will agree not to use their veto to prevent the admission of a state which has been approved by two-thirds of the General Assembly as having qualified under the conditions of Article 4, paragraph 1.

If the permanent members of the Security Council were to give such an assurance, the Canadian delegation would be happy to state its position with regard to each applicant mentioned in the resolutions before us and to participate in a vote in order to record a decision of the Assembly recommending the Security Council to reconsider the particular cases in question. In the absence of such an assurance, the Canadian delegation considers that it would be futile to go through the process once again of expressing opinions on the eligibility of various applicants and unless the discussion brings out more points which we have missed in our consideration of the matter, we would be disposed to abstain from voting.

With regard to the proposal of the Belgian delegation for reference of certain points of law to the court, we should be disposed to support that resolution.

380.

Déclaration[47] du très hon. James L. Ilsley
à la Première Commission de l'Assemblée générale des Nations Unies

Statement[47] by Rt. Hon. James L. Ilsley
to First Committee of the General Assembly of the United Nations

[New York], November 10, 1947

ADMISSION OF NEW MEMBERS

I should like to say a very few words to explain the vote which the Canadian delegation intends to cast on the resolution before us.

As I said in my statement last Friday, our delegation felt that it was somewhat futile to recommend the Security Council to reconsider applications for membership previously rejected in the Council, unless the permanent members would agree not to use their veto to prevent the admission of a state which had been approved by two-thirds of the General Assembly as having qualified under the conditions of Article 4, paragraph 1. In effect if I understand them correctly, four of the permanent members have said that they would waive their right of veto in the Security Council in the matter of admission of new members. This in the view of our delegation, is a significant step forward. In view of the statement of the Soviet delegate expressing willingness to consult with his colleagues on this matter, we can only hope that ultimately there will be unanimity between the permanent members on this point.

Our delegation believes that the Assembly is perfectly within its rights in expressing its opinion on the individual applications for membership and in making requests on recommendations to the Security Council. Of the various resolutions on individual applications which have been submitted, we believe that those submitted by Australia most correctly interpret the rights and duties of the Assembly under the Charter. In the absence of an assurance from all five of the permanent members that they will not exercise their veto, we still retain our doubts as to the usefulness of requesting the Security Council to reconsider individual applications. But we feel that an abstention on our part might be interpreted as meaning that our delegation is not in favour of the admission of the members concerned. Our delegation is most definitely in favour of a favourable consideration of the applications covered by the Australian resolutions, viz., Eire, Finland, Italy, Portugal and Transjordan. In particular we would draw attention to what we regard as the completely

[47]Voir ibid., pp. 230-231.
See ibid., p. 219.

